[12] Idem A. Muciano. pr. Cum responso viri prudentissimi Papiniani, quod precibus insertum est, praeceptionis legatum et omissa parte hereditatis vindicari posse declaratur, intellegis desiderio tuo iuxta iuris formam esse consultum. 1. Verba vero responsi haec sunt: Filiae mater praedium ita legavit: 'praecipito sumito extra partem hereditatis': cum hereditati matris filia renuntiasset, nihilo minus eam recte legatum vindicare visum est.

PP. constitutio V id. Iul. Sabino II et Venusto conss.

[13] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. Severae. Proprias tuas res legari vel fideicommitti tibi non potuisse manifestum est.

PP. XV k. Mai. Maximo II et Aquilino conss.

the rules of his jurisdiction (iurisdictionis forma), the legacies to be paid out, with a guarantee (cautio) given that he or she (the legatee) is going to refund them if the heir is evicted from the estate, even though in other situations there is a place for a cautio when legacies are paid out in the absence of a dispute.

Posted February 7, in the consulship of Maximus, for the second time, and Aelianus (223).

[10] The same Augustus to Ingenua. When someone has bequeathed someone else's property, whether as a legacy or trust, if, certainly, he did so knowingly, it can be claimed by the person granted the legacy or trust. But if the giver thought it was his or her own property, the bequest is valid only if it was given to a person closely related, such as a wife or other such person, to whom the giver would leave a legacy, even in the knowledge that the property was not his or her own.[260]

Posted January 28, in the consulship of Albinus and Maximus (227).

[11] The same Augustus to Albinianus. A daughter does not have an action on legacy if her father later, while still living, gave her as dowry those items he had left to her in his will.

Posted March 3, in the consulship of Pompeianus and Pelignus (231).

[12] Emperor G*ORDIAN* Augustus to Mucianus.[261] pr. Since the response (responsum) of the most learned man Papinian, which is cited in your petition, states that a preferential legacy (per praeceptionem) can be claimed even when the legatee does not enter upon his or her share of the inheritance, you understand that your request is provided for consistently with the legal rules (iuris forma). 1. The wording of the responsum is in fact as follows: "A mother left a property as a legacy to her daughter in the following way: 'Go ahead and take [the property] as a preferential legacy apart from your share of the inheritance.' Although the daughter rejected the mother's inheritance it was nonetheless decided that she rightly claimed the legacy."

The constitution was posted July 11, in the consulship of Sabinus, for the second time, and Venustus (240).

[13] Emperors D*IOCLETIAN and* M*AXIMIAN Augusti to Severa.* It is clear that your own property could not be bequeathed to you as a legacy or as a trust.

Posted April 17, in the consulship of Maximus, for the second time, and Aquilinus (286).

260 Blume: "Another's property might be given as a legacy. In such event, the heir was compelled to purchase the property and deliver it, or pay the legatee the value thereof."

261 On the basis of the date, Haloander assigns the text to Gordian instead of Alexander, as the manuscripts prefer.

[14] Idem AA. Tatiano. Monumenta quidem legari non posse manifestum est, ius autem mortuum inferendi legare nemo prohibetur.
PP. II k. Sept. Maximo II et Aquilino conss.

[15] Idem AA. Terentio. pr. Si universae facultates, quas pater vester reliquit, debito fiscali aut privato absumuntur, nihil ex his, quae testamento eius adscripta sunt, valere potest. 1. Quod si deducto debito in relictis bonis superfluum est, libertates impediri iuris ratio non permittit, quando etiam legata nec non fideicommissa salva lege Falcidia praestanda sunt.
PP. III k. Oct. ipsis IIII et III AA. conss.

[16] Idem AA. et CC. Scyllae. Creditor, si a debitore suo rem, quam pignoris nomine susceperat, legatum sibi contendit, etiam debito ab heredibus eius oblato, quominus restituat, defendi potest.
S. XVIII k. Febr. Sirmi CC. conss.

[17] Idem AA. et CC. Eutychiano. Datum legatum adimi tam pure quam sub condicione, non libertis tantum, sed etiam ingenuis placuit.
D. III non. Mart. CC. conss.

[18] Idem AA. et CC. Iustino. Ex legato nominis, actionibus ab his qui successerunt non mandatis, directas quidem actiones legatarius habere non potest, utilibus autem suo nomine experietur.
D. VI id. Dec. CC. conss.

[19] Idem AA. et CC. Niconi. Non tantum duum mensuum, sed etiam minoris temporis maritus uxori testamento scriptus succedit, nec legata vel fideicommissa seu donationes temporis huius angustia capi prohibet.
D. V id. Dec. Nicomediae CC. conss.

[20] Idem AA. et CC. Eutychiano. Uxor patrui tui si testata decesserit, res tuas tantum usum fructum earum habens legare non potuit.
D. VII k. Ian. CC. conss.

[14] The same Augusti to Tatianus. It is clear that tombs, in fact, cannot be bequeathed as legacies, but no one is prevented from bequeathing as a legacy the right of burying a dead person therein.

Posted August 31, in the consulship of Maximus, for the second time, and Aquilinus (286).

[15] The same Augusti to Terentius. pr. If all of the material resources that your father left to you are consumed by debts to the Treasury or to private persons, none of those things he wrote in his will can be valid. 1. But if after the deduction of debts something is left over in the property that remains, legal principles (iuris ratio) do not allow manumissions to be hindered, since even legacies and trusts are to be paid out, provided the lex Falcidia is respected (with one-quarter reserved for the heir).

Posted September 29, in the consulship of the Augusti, for the fourth and third times, respectively (290).

[16] The same Augusti and the Caesars to Scylla. If a creditor claims that an item which he had received as a pledge from his debtor was given to him as a legacy by the same, even if the latter's heirs pay off the debt, he can defend a suit against restitution.

Written January 15, at Sirmium, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[17] The same Augusti and Caesars to Eutychianus. It is an accepted principle that a legacy, whether made unconditionally or conditionally, can be withdrawn, not only from freedpersons but also from the free-born.

Given March 5, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[18] The same Augusti and Caesars to Justin. In connection with the legacy of a debt, when the heirs have not mandated (i.e., assigned) the actions, the legatee cannot sue on direct actions, certainly, but will proceed under his own name on the basis of analogous (utiles) ones.

Given December 8, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[19] The same Augusti and Caesars to Nico. A husband who has been married not quite two months, or even less time, succeeds to his wife when he has been named heir in her will. Nor does the brevity of this period of time (i.e., of the marriage) prevent him from taking legacies, trusts, or gifts.

Given December 9, at Nicomedia, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[20] The same Augusti and Caesars to Eutychianus. The wife of your paternal uncle, if she dies having made a will, could not give your property as a legacy since she had only a usufruct over it.

Given December 26, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[21] Imp. Constantinus A. ad populum. In legatis vel fideicommissis verborum necessaria non sit observantia, ita ut nihil prorsus intersit, quis talem voluntatem verborum casus exceperit aut quis loquendi usus effuderit.

D. k. Febr. Constantio II et Constante conss.

[22] Imp. Iustinianus A. Menae pp. In annalibus legatis vel fideicommissis, quae testator non solum certae personae, sed etiam eius heredibus praestari voluit, eorum exactionem omnibus heredibus et heredum heredibus conservari pro voluntate testatoris praecipimus.

D. III id. Dec. Constantinopoli dn. Iustiniano A. pp. II cons.

[23] Idem A. Iuliano pp. pr. Cum quaestio talis de significatione verborum animos veterum movit, si quis cuidam agrum puta Cornelianum vel alium quendam in solidum legaverit, deinde alii partem eius dimidiam, quantam portionem primus, quantam secundus legatarius consequitur (simili dubitatione et in hereditate et in fideicommissis habita), cumque computationes multae introducebantur et multis ratiocinatoribus dignae: nos huiusmodi computationes quasi superfluas et contrarias voluntati testatorum omnes esse sopiendas censemus.

1. Cum enim manifestissimum est eum, qui ab initio duodecim uncias rei cuidam reliquit, alii autem postea sex, recessisse quidem a priore voluntate, voluisse autem minui eam sex unciis, cum alii eas obtulit, et praesens casus exitum apertissimum inveniet. 1a. Si quis itaque vel agrum vel hereditatem reliquerit, primo quidem in totum, secundo autem in partem dimidiam, utrumque in sex uncias esse vel dominum rei legatae vel heredem. 1b. Et si primo re tota relicta tertiam partem secundo reliquerit, secundum praedictum modum octo quidem uncias vel agri vel hereditatis apud primum remanere, tertiam autem partem vel quattuor uncias ad secundum migrare.

1c. Et sic in omnibus statuendum est, id est in hereditatibus vel legatis vel fideicommissis: vestigia enim voluntatis testatoris non aliter nisi per huiusmodi viam aestimanda sunt.

[21][262] Emperor Constantine Augustus to the people. In making legacies or trusts respect for the usage of words shall not be necessary, so that it makes absolutely no difference what verbal contingency expresses the wish or what style of language sets this forth.

Given February 1, in the consulship of Constantius, for the second time, and Constans (339).[263]

[22] Emperor Justinian Augustus to Menas, Praetorian Prefect. We instruct regarding annuities linked to legacies or trusts that what the testator wished be paid not only to a certain person, but also to his or her heirs shall so be paid, according to the wishes of the testator, to all heirs and the heirs of the heirs.

Given December 11, in the consulship of Our Lord Justinian, Ever Augustus, for the second time (528).

[23] The same Augustus to Julian, Praetorian Prefect. pr. Such a controversy stirred the spirits of the ancient jurists (veteres) over the meaning of words: if someone left as a legacy to one person an entire farm, for example, the Cornelian or some other, and leaves to another person half of it, how much does the first legatee receive and how much the second? A similar hesitation arose with both inheritances and trusts. Many calculations were brought to bear worthy of numerous accountants. We lay down that all such calculations shall be extinguished on the ground that they are all unnecessary and contrary to the wishes of the testator.

1. For since it is very clear that he who has from the beginning left all (twelve-twelfths) of the property to one person, but has left half (six-twelfths) later to another, has, in fact, changed his mind and instead wants the whole to be diminished by one-half (six-twelfths) because he has offered as much to another person, even the present situation will find a very clear solution. 1a. So if someone leaves a farm or an inheritance as a whole to the first person, for example, but to the second (only) half, he shall leave each party one-half as an owner of the property bequeathed in the form of a legacy or as an heir. 1b. And if having left the whole to the first person, the testator then leaves one-third to the second, according to the method just explained two-thirds, to be sure, of the farm or inheritance shall remain with the first party but a third – or four-twelfths – shall pass over to the second.

1c. And this is how it shall be decided in all (such) matters, that is, in regard to inheritances, legacies, and trusts. For the traces of the testator's wishes are not to be appraised except in such a way as this.

[262] Combine with C. 6.9.9 (Laodicea) and the constitutions mentioned there.

[263] The constitutions cited in the previous note give the more persuasive date of 320 (Seeck has January 31, 320); in 339 Constantius would be the issuing emperor. The Projet Volterra has January 31, 320, for the date and the location as Serdica. See the note on C. 6.9.9.

2. Sed et aliam disceptationem iuris antiqui non absimilem constitutam decidere nobis humanum esse apparuit. agitabatur enim, si quis agrum Cornelianum vel forte alium vel quandam rem cuidam legaverit et postea iterum vel saepius ei eandem rem per legatum vel fideicommissum dederit, post talia autem verba testamenti Sempronio eundem agrum vel aliam rem legaverit, ut saepius quidem Titii fuisset mentio, semel autem Sempronii, quid statuendum est, et quid iuris sit, si coniunctim an separatim eis relinquatur, sive in legato hoc consistat sive in hereditate?

2a. Huiusmodi igitur decidentes antiquam controversiam sancimus, cuicumque fuerit vel hereditas vel ager in memoratis casibus sive coniunctim sive soli sive saepius eidem relictus, aequa lance et hereditatem et agrum et aliam quamcumque rem dividi et ad dimidiam partem unumquemque vocari, nisi specialiter expresserit et dixerit testator tantas quidem partes velle unum, tantas autem alterum habere. in omnibus etenim testatoris voluntatem, quae legitima est, dominari censemus.

D. xv k. Dec. Lampadio et Oreste vv. cc. conss.

[24] Idem A. Iohanni pp. pr. Cum quidam suum filium familias impuberem exheredatum fecit aliis heredibus scriptis, eidem autem pupillo alium substitutum reliquit, maximam scilicet ostendens ad filium suum adfectionem, cui nihil quidem emolumenti reliquit, sed post exheredationis iniuriam etiam substitutionem ei addidit et a substituto legatum reliquit, quaerebatur, si huiusmodi legatum vel fideicommissum potest valere.

1. Sed et si legatum eidem exheredato filio pater reliquerit et substituerit ei exheredato facto aliquem extraneum, iterum certabatur, si saltem per eundem modum fideicommissum potest relinquere.

2. Cum igitur antiquitas quidem haec diverse tractare maluit, nobis autem huiusmodi iurgia supervacua esse videntur, sancimus nullo legato nullo fideicommisso huiusmodi substitutum qui exheredato

2. But it also seemed to us consistent with humane sympathy (humanum) to put an end to another, not dissimilar, controversy of the ancient law (ius antiquum). For it used to be debated, if someone left the Cornelian farm, or perhaps some other farm or any given object to a certain person as a legacy and later (i.e., in the same will) gave the same thing once or several times as a legacy or a trust to the same person, but following such wording in the will the testator bequeathed as legacy to Sempronius the farm or other item, so that several times, in fact, there was mention of Titius, but (only) once of Sempronius – what shall be decided? And what is the operative legal principle: was it left to them jointly or separately, and was it left as a legacy or as an inheritance?

2a. Therefore, settling this ancient debate, We order that to whomever the inheritance or farm in the aforementioned cases has been left, whether jointly or to (each) person alone (i.e., separately) or to the same person several times, the inheritance, farm, or whatever item it is shall be divided equally and each party shall be eligible for one-half, unless the testator has particularly set forth and declared that he wished one party to have, to be sure, such a proportion and the other party to have such a proportion. For in all things We lay down that the wishes of the testator, insofar as they are lawful, shall rule.

Given November 17, in the consulship of the viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestes (530).

[24][264] The same Augustus to John, Praetorian Prefect. pr. A certain man disinherited his minor son-in-power, naming others as heirs. But he appointed a substitute for the same minor ward, showing, of course, the greatest affection for his own son, to whom he left no material benefits at all, but hard upon the insult of the disinheritance he added a substitution into the bargain and ordered the substitute to pay a legacy. It used to be debated whether such a legacy or trust could be valid.

1. But even if the father disinherited his son, left him a legacy, and appointed some non-relative as a substitute, again it used to be disputed if even in this way he could leave (i.e. order the substitute to pay) a trust.

2. So, although the ancients, to be sure, preferred to differ in treating this matter, such quarrels seem to Us, however, beside the point. We ordain that a such a substitute appointed in place of a disinherited minor ward shall not be pupillo datus est praegravari, nec si ipsam rem quam pupillo legavit a substituto eius vel legare vel fideicommittere voluit.

[264] Combine with C. 6.42.31.

D. 11 k. Mai. Constantinopoli post consulatum Lampadii et Orestis vv. cc.

[25] Idem A. Iohanni pp. pr. Si legatarius celaverit testamentum et postea hoc in lucem emerserit, an possit legatum sibi derelictum is qui celaverit ex eo testamento vindicare, dubitabatur. 1. Quod omnimodo inhibendum esse censemus, ut non accipiat fructum suae calliditatis, qui heredem voluit hereditate defraudare: sed huiusmodi legatum illi quidem auferatur, maneat autem quasi pro non scripto apud heredem, ut, qui alii nocendum esse existimavit, ipse suam sentiat iacturam, quemadmodum, si legatarius, cui propter tutelam gerendam aliquid derelictum sit, non subierit tutelam, ei quidem legatum aufertur, pupillo autem adsignatur, cui ille utilis esse noluit.

D. k. Nov. Constantinopoli post consulatum Lampadii et Orestis vv. cc.

[26] Idem A. Iohanni pp. pr. Illud, quod de legatis vel fideicommissis temporalibus utpote irritis a legum conditoribus definitum est, emendare prospeximus sancientes et talem legatorum vel fideicommissorum speciem valere et firmitatem habere. 1. Cum enim iam constitutum est fieri posse temporales donationes et contractus, consequens est etiam legata vel fideicommissa, quae ad tempus relicta sunt, ad eandem similitudinem confirmari: post completum videlicet tempus ad heredem isdem legatis vel fideicommissis remeantibus, necessitatem habente legatario vel fideicommissario cautionem in personam heredis exponere, ut post transactum tempus res non culpa eius deterior facta restituatur.

burdened by any legacy or by any trust, not even if the testator wished that the substitute pay as a legacy or trust the very thing which he gave as a legacy to the minor ward.[265]

Given April 30, at Constantinople, in the post-consulate of the viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestes (531).

[25] The same Augustus to John, Praetorian Prefect. pr. If a legatee conceals a will and this afterwards comes to light, there used to be hesitation over whether a person can claim a legacy left to him in a will that he had hidden. 1. We ordain that this shall be completely prevented, so that the person who wished to cheat the heir of his inheritance shall not reap the fruits of his craftiness. Instead such a legacy shall, assuredly, be taken from him, while it shall remain with the heir as though not written into the will, so that the person who thought some harm should befall another shall himself feel his own loss, just as if a legatee to whom something has been left to manage a tutelage does not take up the tutelage, the legacy is taken from him of course, but assigned to the minor ward, to whom he did not wish to be of service.

Given November 1, at Constantinople, in the post-consulate of the viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestes (531).

[26] The same Augustus to John, Praetorian Prefect. pr. That holding laid down by the founders of the laws (conditores legum; the jurists) concerning temporary legacies and trusts, namely, that they were invalid, We have contemplated improving by ordaining that even such a category of legacies and trusts shall be valid and have force. 1. For since it has already been held (in a constitution) that temporary gifts and contracts can be made,[266] it is logical that also legacies or trusts that have been left for a period of time be confirmed on the basis of analogy. Obviously after the time-period has finished the same legacies and trusts shall pass back to the heir, and the legatee or trust-beneficiary shall have the obligation of offering a guarantee (cautio) to the heir to the effect that after the time-period has passed the property shall be returned without suffering material damage through his fault (culpa).

[265] Blume: "The father made a pupillary substitution. This was in effect making a will for the minor, providing that should the minor die before the age of puberty, some other person should be his heir, so as to inherit all the property which such minor should have. This as we have seen was permissible. But the further question arose whether the testator could also provide that such substitute (if the minor died) should pay a legacy or trust to someone else. This right was denied under the rule that he could not provide for a legacy or trust out of property which he did not give himself ... And the same rule is here applied even in case the testator gave a legacy to the son, because disinherisons [sic] were not favored or aided in any way, although such requirement might have been made in case of legacy left to a stranger."

[266] See perhaps C. 8.54.2.

D. xv k. Nov. Constantinopoli post consulatum Lampadii et Orestis vv. cc. anno secundo.

XXXVIII De Verborum Et Rerum Significatione

[1] Imp. Antoninus A. Antipatrae. pr. Praediis instructis legatis, quamvis ex fructibus oleum et vinum in eodem fundo habuerit, tamen si id venale fuit, item ea, quae ad tempus propter incursionem latronum tutelae causa in praedium translata sunt, legato non cedere iuris auctoribus placuit. 1. Vinum vero, quod in apothecis fuit, si ideo illic habuit, ut, cum in praedium venisset mater familias, eo uteretur, legato cedere ignorare non debes.

PP. vi id. Aug. Antonino A. iiii et Balbino conss.

[2] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. et CC. Rufino. pr. Fundo 'sicut instructus est' legato sive per fideicommissum relicto vilicum hominesque et omnia, quae vel, ut ipse pater familias, cum ibi ageret, vel fundus esset instructus, non temporis causa habuit in eo, relicta esse iuris auctoritate definitum est: ea etiam, quae tam fructuum colligendorum quam servandorum. 1. Item pecora stercorandi vel pascendi causa ibi constituta, ut fructus de his capiantur vel ut fundus sit instructior, fideicommisso cedere certi iuris est.

D. non. Oct. Sirmi AA. conss.

[3] Imp. Iustinianus A. Iuliano pp. Sancimus cautionis nomine vel ἀσφαλείας non esse fideiussoris dationem interpretandam, nisi hoc specialiter vel in Graecis vel in Latinis verbis scriptum fuerit: nisi enim vel generaliter de satisdatione vel de fideiussione specialiter sit nominatum, cautione vel cautela vel ἀσφαλείᾳ minime fideiussionem, sed nudam promissionem significari.

D. k. Mart. Constantinopoli post consulatum Lampadii et Orestis vv. cc.

Given October 18, at Constantinople, in the second post-consulate of viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestes (532).

Thirty-Eighth Title The Meaning of Words and Things[267]

[1] Emperor ANTONINUS Augustus to Antipatra. pr. It has been a principle accepted by the jurists (iuris auctores) that when properties equipped for cultivation (praedia instructa) are bequeathed as legacies, although (the testator) had oil and wine among the fruits on that same farm, nevertheless, if these items were for sale, they, as well as those things that were temporarily brought onto the property for safekeeping against the depredations of bandits, did not form part of the legacy. 1. But if he had wine in storage there so that when the lady of the household (mater familias) came to the farm she might make use of it, you ought not to be unaware that this forms part of the legacy.

Posted August 8, in the consulship of Antoninus Augustus, for the fourth time, and Balbinus (213).

[2] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti and the Caesars to Rufinus. pr. When a farm has been left "just as it is equipped" as a legacy or trust it is established by the authority of law (iuris auctoritas) that included in the bequest are the farm manager (vilicus), the slave staff, and everything which either the owner (paterfamilias) when he was on-site had (for his personal use) or (what) he had so that the farm was (suitably) equipped, not what he had there on a temporary basis – also those things which serve the purpose of gathering as well as preserving its fruits. 1. Likewise, it is a fixed principle of law (certum ius) that herd animals introduced there for the purpose of providing manure or grazing the pastures, in order that income (fructus) be realized from them or that the farm be better equipped (for cultivation), form part of the trust.

Given October 7, at Sirmium, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[3] Emperor JUSTINIAN Augustus to Julian, Praetorian Prefect. We lay down that the words "cautio" and "asphaleia" shall not be understood to mean the giving of a surety, unless that (meaning) is specifically stated in Greek or in Latin. For unless there is either a general or a specific mention of a guarantee (satisdatio) or a surety (fideiussio), "cautio," "cautela," and "asphaleia" shall not at all mean "surety" but "simple promise."

Given March 1,[268] at Constantinople, in the post-consulate of the viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestes (531).

[267] See D. 50.16.

[268] The precise day is disputed: possibly February 20, 531; so Lounghis et al.

[4] Idem A. Iohanni pp. pr. Cum quidam sic vel institutionem vel legatum vel fideicommissum vel libertatem vel tutelam scripsisset: 'ille vel ille heres mihi esto' vel 'illi aut illi do lego' vel 'dari volo', vel 'illum aut illum liberum' vel 'tutorem esse volo' vel 'iubeo', dubitabatur, utrumne inutilis sit huiusmodi institutio et legatum et fideicommissum et libertas et tutoris datio, an occupantis melior condicio sit, an ambo in huiusmodi lucra vel munia vocentur et an secundum aliquem ordinem admittantur, an uterque omnimodo, cum alii primum in institutionibus quasi institutum admitti, secundum quasi substitutum, alii in fideicommissis posteriorem solum accepturum fideicommissum existimaverunt, quasi recentiore voluntate testatoris utentem. 1. Et si quis eorum altercationes singillatim exponere maluerit, nihil prohibet non leve libri volumen extendere, ut sic explicari possit tanta auctorum varietas, cum non solum iuris auctores, sed etiam ipsae principales constitutiones, quas ipsi auctores rettulerunt, inter se variasse videntur.

1a. Melius itaque nobis visum est omni huiusmodi verbositate explosa coniunctionem 'aut' pro 'et' accipi, ut videatur copulativo modo esse prolata et magis sit παραδιάζευξις, ut et primam personam inducat et secundam non repellat. 1b. Quemadmodum enim verbi gratia in interdicto quod vi aut clam 'aut' coniunctio pro 'et' apertissime posita est, ita et in omnibus huiusmodi casibus sive institutionum sive legatorum sive fideicommissorum vel libertatum seu tutelarum hoc esse intellegendum, et ambo veniant aequa lance ad hereditatem, ambo legata similiter accipiant, fideicommissum in utrumque dividatur, libertas utrumque capiat, tutoris ambo fungantur officio.

1c. Sic nemo defraudetur a commodo testatoris, sic maior providentia pupillis inferatur, ne, dum dubitatur, apud quem debet esse tutela, in medio res pupillorum depereant. sed haec quidem sancimus, cum in personas huiusmodi proferatur scriptura.

2. Sin autem una quidem est persona, res autem ita derelictae: 'illam aut illam rem illi do lego', vel 'per fideicommissum relinquo', tunc secundum veteres regulas et antiquas definitiones vetustatis iura

[4] The same Augustus to John, Praetorian Prefect. pr. When a certain testator had appointed an heir, given a legacy or a trust, or provided for a manumission or a guardianship in the following (disjunctive) manner: "This or that person shall be my heir," "I give and bequeath as a legacy to this or that person" – or "I wish to be given" – "to this or that person," or "I wish this or that person to be free" or "to be tutor," there used to be hesitation over whether such an appointment of an heir, bequest of a legacy or trust, grant of manumission, or appointment of a tutor was invalid, whether the claim of the (prior) occupant was superior, whether both were eligible for such benefits and duties and whether they were admitted according to some order, or both enjoyed an absolutely equal claim. Some (jurists) thought that regarding appointments of heirs the first person named should be eligible as the appointed heir, and the second as his or her substitute, while others thought that regarding trusts only the last named would receive the trust on the ground that this reflected a more recent expression of wishes on the part of the testator. 1. And if someone preferred to set forth their disputes (on this subject) separately, nothing would prevent him from composing a book of no small size, so that in this way such a great diversity of expert opinions could be set forth, since not only the jurists (iuris auctores) but also the very imperial constitutions which the jurists themselves report seem to differ from one another.

1a. It seemed better to Us, therefore, to eliminate all such excess verbiage and to understand the conjunction "or" (aut) as "and" (et) so that it be deemed to have been extended in a copulative manner and act more as a conjunctive disjunctive (paradiazeuxis), with the result that it both validates the first person and does not exclude the second. 1b. For just as, for example, in the interdict "by force or stealth" (quod vi aut clam) the conjunction "or" (aut) has been very clearly substituted for "and" (et), so also in all such cases of appointments of heirs, legacies, trusts, manumissions, and tutelages, this shall be understood, and both parties shall come on an equal basis to the inheritance, both shall accept legacies on a similar basis, a trust shall be divided between the two, both shall be manumitted, and both shall discharge the duty of tutor.

1c. In this way, no one shall be wrongly deprived of the benefaction of the testator; in this way, greater oversight shall be provided for minor wards, so that the property of minor wards not suffer in the meantime, while there is hesitation over who ought to be assigned the tutelage. But We ordain these things, certainly, (only) when such a document is brought forth regarding multiple persons.

2. But if, however, there is, to be sure, (only) one person, but property has been left in the following way: "I give and bequeath as a legacy this or that thing to that person" or "I bequeath through a trust (this or that thing)," then, maneant incorrupta, nulla innovatione eis ex hac constitutione introducenda. 3. Quod etiam in contractibus locum habere censemus.

D. prid. k. Mai. Constantinopoli post consulatum Lampadii et Orestis vv. cc.

[5] Idem A. Iohanni pp. pr. Suggestioni Illyricianae advocationis respondentes decernimus familiae nomen talem habere vigorem: parentes et liberos omnesque propinquos et substantiam, libertos etiam et patronos nec non servos per hanc appellationem significari.

1. Et si quis per suum elogium fideicommissum familiae suae reliquerit, nulla speciali adiectione super quibusdam certis personis facta, non solum propinquos, sed etiam his deficientibus generum et nurum. et hos enim nobis humanum esse videtur ad fideicommissum vocari, ita videlicet, si matrimonium morte filii vel filiae fuerit dissolutum. nullo etenim modo possint gener vel nurus filiis viventibus ad tale fideicommissum vocari, cum hi procul dubio eos antecedant: et hoc videlicet gradatim fieri, ut post eos liberti veniant.

2. Hoc eodem valente, et si quis rem immobilem cuidam legaverit vel fideicommiserit eamque alienari prohibuerit adiciens, ut, si hoc fideicommissarius praeterierit, familiae suae res adquiratur.

3. In aliis autem casibus nomen familiae pro substantia oportet intellegi, quia et servi et aliae res in patrimonio uniuscuiusque esse putantur.

D. xv k. Nov. Constantinopoli post consulatum Lampadii et Orestis vv. cc. anno secundo.

XXXVIIII Si Omissa Sit Causa Testamenti

[1] Impp. Severus et Antoninus AA. Ianuariae. Si in fraudem legatorum transmissam hereditatem ad substitutum probatura es, utilis actio adversus eum, cum quo fraudis consilium participatum est, competit. plane si pecunia accepta omisit aditionem, legata et fideicommissa praestare cogitur.

in accordance with ancient principles and long-standing rules, the legal principles of antiquity (vetustatis iura) shall remain intact, and no change shall be introduced for them from this constitution. 3. We ordain that this also shall apply for contracts.

Given April 30, at Constantinople, in the post-consulate of the viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestes (531).

[5] The same Augustus to John, Praetorian Prefect. pr. By way of response to the policy proposal (suggestio) of the Society of Advocates of Illyricum, We decree that the word "familia" shall have the following force: by this term shall be meant ascendants, descendants, all close relatives, (household) property, freedpersons, patrons, as well as slaves.

1. And if someone leaves a trust in his will to his "familia," making no particular mention of certain stated persons, (it embraces) not only close relatives but also, in the absence of these, a son- and daughter-in-law. For We deem it consistent with humane sympathy (humanum) that even these shall be eligible for the trust, under the condition, obviously, that the marriage is ended by the death of the son or daughter (to whom they were married). For in no way can a son- or daughter-in-law be eligible for such a trust while (biological) children are still living, since it is far from doubtful that the latter take priority over them. And clearly this shall occur in degrees, so that after them freedpersons shall have a claim.

2. This same rule holds, even if someone bequeaths immovable property to a certain person as a legacy or trust, forbidding its alienation and adding that if the trust-beneficiary violates this prohibition the property accrues to his familia.

3. In other situations, however, the word familia ought to be understood as "(household) property," because both slaves and other property are considered to be in each person's estate.

Given October 18, at Constantinople, in the second post-consulate of the viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestes (532).

Thirty-Ninth Title If a Will's Purpose Was Not Heeded[269]

[1] Emperors SEVERUS and ANTONINUS Augusti to Januaria. If you are going to show that an inheritance has been made over to a substitute heir in order to defraud (those eligible for) legacies, you have an analogous (utilis) action against the person (the substitute) who colluded in the scam (fraus). Plainly, if the heir took money and neglected to enter upon the inheritance, he is compelled to pay out the legacies and trusts.

[269] See D. 29.4.

Accepta k. Oct. Dextro II et Prisco conss.

[2] Imp. Philippus A. et Philippus C. Victoriae. pr. Eum, qui, cum testamento posset obtinere hereditatem, ab intestato ius successionis voluit amplecti, libertatibus eodem testamento datis obesse non posse iam pridem placuit. 1. Quod si, cum neque adiri ex testamento hereditas neque bonorum possessio peti possit, iudicium defuncti non usurpabitur, sed ad irritum iuris ratione vocatum est, petitio relictorum nullo iure procedit. 2. Sin vero iure facto testamento cessante herede scripto alter ab intestato adiit hereditatem, neque libertates neque legata ex testamento posse praestari manifestum est.

PP. k. Ian. Philippo A. et Titiano conss.

[3] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. et CC. Apro et Piae. Si Proculina patri vestro, cuius estis heredes, testamento quid reliquit et scripti iure secundum eius iudicium vel omissa causa testamenti successerunt ab intestato, aditus competens iudex, quatenus legis Falcidiae modus patitur, vobis relicta restitui iubebit.

D. XV k. Ian. Sirmi AA. conss.

XXXX De Indicta Viduitate et de Lege Iulia Miscella Tollenda

[1] Imp. Gordianus A. Bono. Legatum alii sub condicione sic relictum, si uxor nuptui se post mortem mariti non collocaverit, contractis nuptiis condicione deficit ideoque peti legatum nequaquam potest.

PP. XIII k. Aug. Gordiano A. II et Pompeiano conss.

[2] Imp. Iustinianus A. Iuliano pp. pr. Ambiguitates legis Iuliae miscellae generali lege tollentes nullum concedimus fieri iuramentum

Received October 1, in the consulship of Dexter, for the second time, and Priscus (196).[270]

[2] Emperor PHILIP Augustus and PHILIP Caesar to Victoria. pr. It has for a long time been settled law that the person who could have inherited under a will but preferred to embrace his right of intestate succession cannot block the manumissions granted in the same will. 1. But if, when (the heir) can neither enter upon the inheritance nor apply for bonorum possessio (from the Praetor), the decedent's will is not being disrespected but has been declared invalid on a legal principle (iuris ratio), a claim for bequests has no basis in law to go forward. 2. But if, however, the will was properly made from a legal perspective, (and) the named heir fails to take the inheritance and another person has entered upon the inheritance on intestacy, it is clear that neither can the manumissions be performed nor the legacies paid in accordance with the terms of the will.

Posted January 1, in the consulship of Philip Augustus and Titianus (245).

[3] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti and the Caesars to Aper and Pia. If Proculina left something in a will to your father, whose heirs you are, and her lawfully named heirs either inherited in accordance with the terms of the will or on intestacy, having disregarded the will's purpose, the appropriate judge, once approached, will order, insofar as the calculation of the lex Falcidia permits, what has been bequeathed to you to be turned over to you.

Given December 18, at Sirmium, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

Fortieth Title Coerced Widowhood and the Repeal of the Lex Julia Miscella[271]

[1] Emperor GORDIAN Augustus to Bonus. When a legacy was left to another person on condition that the testator's wife not remarry after the death of her husband, if she should remarry the condition fails and on that account the legacy can in no way be claimed.

Posted July 20, in the consulship of Gordian Augustus, for the second time, and Pompeianus (241).

[2] Emperor JUSTINIAN Augustus to Julian, Praetorian Prefect. pr. By way of removing the obscurities of the lex Iulia Miscella with a general law (generalis

[270] The year is uncertain: possibly 225.

[271] The "Lex Julia of Varied Content" is Justinian's way of referring here to the Augustan marriage legislation, in particular, the lex Julia de maritandis ordinibus, which (among other things) allowed a spouse, typically a wife, to take a legacy left to her by a husband on condition that she did not remarry, provided that she did in fact remarry within a year and swore an oath that her motive for doing so was to bear children. If she did not marry within a year she could receive the legacy by offering the cautio Muciana (next note).

secundum praedictam legem, sed penitus ea cum Muciana cautione super hac causa quiescente licere mulieribus, etiam maritorum suorum interminatione spreta, quae viduitatem eis indicit, et non dato sacramento procreandae subolis gratia, tamen ad secundas migrare nuptias, poena huiusmodi cessante, sive habeat liberos, sive non, et percipere ea, quae maritus dereliquit (quorum omnium manifestissimum est dominium minime eas liberis existentibus habere usu fructu tantummodo apud eas manente et ad liberos prioris tori proprietate eorum deferenda secundum ea, quae de secundis nuptiis lucrisque ex his mulieribus statuta sunt), ne ex necessitate legis et sacramento colorato periurium committatur.

1. Cum enim mulieres ad hoc natura progenuit, ut partus ederent, et maxima eis cupiditas in hoc constituta est, quare scientes prudentesque periurium committi patimur? 2. Tale igitur iuramentum conquiescat et lex Iulia miscella cedat cum Muciana cautione super hoc introducta, a re publica separata. augeri etenim magis nostram rem publicam et multis hominibus progenitis frequentari quam impiis periuriis adfici volumus, cum satis esse inhumanum videtur per leges, quae periuria puniunt, viam periuriis aperiri.

D. x k. Mart. Constantinopoli post consulatum Lampadii et Orestis vv. cc.

[3] Idem A. Iohanni pp. pr. Legem Iuliam miscellam quemadmodum in feminis sustulimus, ita et in masculis esse sublatam pertinere quidem ad sensum nostrae legis, quam super hoc promulgavimus, non est incertum. 1. Ne tamen quaedam ambiguitas simplices animos moveat, etiam expressim sancimus legem Iuliam miscellam et senatus consulta, quae circa eam facta sunt, nec non Mucianam cautionem, quae super talibus nuptiis introducta est, non solum in feminis, sed etiam in masculis cessare.

2. Sed quia apud Ulpianum in libris Sabinianis invenimus quaedam verba, quae effugiunt legis miscellae observationem, ne quis et lex), We allow no oath to take place in accordance with the aforesaid statute, but (declare) utterly invalid this law together with the cautio Muciana related to it.[272] We permit women to move on all the same to a subsequent marriage, even as they scorn the threat, which enjoins widowhood upon them, leveled by their husbands, and refuse the oath about their purpose being to bear children. Such a penalty shall be without force whether they have children or not. They shall also be permitted to take the property their husbands bequeathed to them, so that they do not commit perjury under the compulsion of the statute and through a specious oath. If there are surviving children it is very clear that (the women) shall not at all have the ownership of all this property, but only the usufruct of it, while ownership shall devolve to the children of the prior marriage, according to what has been enacted concerning subsequent marriages and the benefits connected with these accruing to women.

1. For since nature has produced women for the purpose of giving birth to children and they have been instilled with a very great desire to this end, why should We knowingly and advisedly permit perjury to be committed? 2. So let such an oath fall silent, and let the lex Julia Miscella together with the cautio Muciana devised in connection with it give way, banished from Our community. For We have a greater wish that Our community be increased by and filled with many persons born here than that it be afflicted with wicked perjuries, since it seems fairly inconsistent with humane sympathy that the road to perjury be paved with laws that (ostensibly) punish acts of perjury.

Given February 20, at Constantinople, in the post-consulate of the viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestes (531).

[3] The same Augustus to John, Praetorian Prefect. pr. It is not uncertain that, just as We have abolished the lex Julia Miscella regarding women, so its repeal also assuredly concerns men with respect to the intent of the law that We passed on this subject.[273] 1. All the same, so that a certain confusion not overtake the minds of the simple, We even expressly ordain that the lex Julia Miscella, the senatorial decrees passed pursuant to it, as well as the cautio Muciana, which was introduced in connection with such marriages, shall be void not only for females, but also for males.

2. But in Ulpian's commentary on Sabinus We find certain phrases that evade compliance (observatio) with the lex Miscella. For this reason, so that no one [272] The cautio Muciana ("Mucian guarantee") was introduced by the late Republican jurist Q. Mucius Scaevola as a means of allowing a legatee to receive a bequest on a negative condition, that is, that she not do something. Predating the Augustan marriage legislation (a point evidently misunderstood by Justinian), it was adapted to its purpose so that by offering the cautio a widow who did not remarry within a year (see previous note) could still receive a bequest from her husband conditioned on her remaining a widow.

[273] C. 6.40.2.

ea sublata esse putaverit, sancimus, cum huiusmodi verbis mulieribus aliquid relinquatur: 'si vidua erit' vel 'cum vidua erit' vel 'quotiens vidua erit', vel e contrario maribus: 'si amiserint uxores' vel 'quando ad caelibatum pervenerint', non vetari ea vindicare vel legitimo modo sumere, quae eis derelicta sunt. neque enim ut permaneant vel feminae in viduitate vel masculi in caelibatu relictum esse videtur, ut locum vel ante nostram legem habeat lex Iulia miscella, quae iam perempta est: sed cum primum hoc evenerit, ilico competat talibus personis eius quod relictum est persecutio, quia sub condicione relictum esse videtur, sive semel sive in annos singulos haec liberalitas fuerit conscripta, quasi pro solacio suae tristitiae.

D. k. Nov. Constantinopoli post consulatum Lampadii et Orestis vv. cc.

XXXXI De His Quae Poenae Nomine in Testamento vel Codicillis Relinquuntur

[1] Imp. Iustinianus A. Menae pp. pr. Supervacuam observationem veterum legum, per quam voluntates testatorum ad effectum duci impediebantur, amputamus praecipientes nullum valere, dicendo poenae nomine quaedam esse relicta vel adempta in supremis testantium voluntatibus, ea infirmare, sed licere testanti pro implenda sua voluntate vel pecunias dari praecipere vel aliam pecuniariam poenam inferre quibus voluerit, tam in adimendis hereditatibus vel legatis vel fideicommissis vel libertatibus quam in praecipiendo ad alias personas ea transferri ab eo, cui relicta ab initio sunt, vel aliquid aliis ab eo dari, si minus dispositionibus suis heres vel legatarius vel libertate donatus paruerit. 1. Quod si aliquid facere vel legibus interdictum vel alias probrosum vel etiam impossibile iussus aliquis eorum fuerit, tunc sine ullo damno etiam neglecto testatoris praecepto servabitur.

D. k. Ian. Constantinopoli dn. Iustiniano A. pp. II cons.

thinks that these holdings too have been abolished, We lay down that when something is left to women with such words as "if she will be a widow," "when she will be a widow," or "whenever she will be a widow," or, on the other hand, to men, "if they lose their wives" or "when they become single," it shall not be forbidden to them to claim as their own or to take in a lawful manner that which has been left to them. For the bequest is deemed to have been made not so that women remain widows or men remain unmarried, nor did the lex Julia Miscella, which is now utterly abolished, apply here even before the passage of Our law. Instead, as soon as (the condition) is fulfilled, a claim shall immediately lie for such persons for what was left as a bequest to them. This is (precisely) because it is construed to have been left under a condition, whether the act of generosity in question was written in the form of a single payout or as an annuity, as though it were left as a consolation for the (recipient's) loss.

Given November 1, at Constantinople, in the post-consulate of the viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestes (531).

Forty-First Title Bequests Made in a Will or Codicils as Punishment[274]

[1][275] Emperor JUSTINIAN Augustus to Menas, Praetorian Prefect. pr. We abolish the useless rule of the old laws (veteres leges) through which the wishes of testators were being hindered from being rendered effective, by laying down that the rule disallowing things that have been left or taken away in wills as a form of penalty shall be invalid.[276] Instead, it shall be permitted for a testator in pursuance of his or her wishes either to instruct that money be given or to impose another monetary penalty on whomever he or she wishes, taking away inheritances, legacies, trusts, or manumissions as much as directing that such things be transferred to others from the initial recipient, or that, if the heir, the legatee, or the manumitted slave fails to live up to the testator's instructions, something be given by that person to others. 1. But if any one of these persons is ordered to do something forbidden by the laws (leges), otherwise disgraceful, or even impossible, then without any loss (the bequest) will be preserved for the recipient even if he or she ignores the instruction of the testator.

Given January 1,[277] in the consulship of Our Lord Justinian, Ever Augustus, for the second time (528).

[274] See D. 34.6.

[275] Combine with C. 3.28.30, 6.23.24.

[276] Blume: "A legacy, trust or gift of an inheritance was considered as having been given for the benefit and the honor of the donee. If not so given it was considered contrary to the nature thereof, and therefore void. Hence formerly the gift, revocation and transference of legacies by way of penalty was void."

[277] The month is uncertain: either January or June. Lounghis et al. prefer June 1, 528.

XXXXII De Fideicommissis

[1] Imp. Antoninus A. Demetrio. Si probaveris Demetrium petisse de matre heredeque sua, ut tibi alimenta menstrua et vestiarium annuum praestaret, eamque secutam voluntatem filii sui per multum temporis, id est non minus in tali causa triennio, ea praestitisse: ut in futurum quoque ea praestentur et, si qua in praeteritum praestita non sunt, exsolvantur, impetrabis.

PP. XVII k. Sept. duobus Aspris conss.

[2] Idem A. Eupatrio. Etsi inutiliter fideicommissum relictum est, tamen si heredes comperta voluntate defuncti praedia ex causa fideicommissi avo tuo praestiterunt, frustra ab heredibus de ea re quaestio tibi movetur, cum non ex ea sola scriptura, sed ex conscientia relicti fideicommissi satis defuncti voluntati factum esse videatur.

PP. VI k. Aug. Laeto II et Cereale conss.

[3] Idem A. Rufino. Cum secundum voluntatem defunctae Chrysidem puellam ab heredibus manumissam eamque, priusquam ei restitueretur hereditas, intestatam vita functam proponas, ad manumissores eius successio pertinet. qui si adierint eius hereditatem, confusis actionibus fideicommisso sunt liberati.

PP. V id. Dec. Laeto II et Cereale conss.

[4] Imp. Alexander A. Victorino. Voluntas patris prohibentis liberos fundos extra familiam vendere vel pignori dare fratrem sorori donare prohibuisse non videtur.

PP. V k. Iul. Maximo II et Aeliano conss.

[5] Idem A. Reginae. Si frater tuus, posteaquam patri heres extitit, pubes iam sine liberis decessit, ex pupillari substitutione tibi hereditas eius delata non est. sed si verbis fideicommissi aliqua parte testamenti confirmata est, fideicommissum ab heredibus petere non prohiberis.

PP. XV k. Febr. Iuliano et Crispino conss.

Forty-Second Title Testamentary Trusts (Fideicommissa)[278]

[1]Emperor Antoninus Augustus to Demetrius. If you show that Demetrius asked his mother and heir that she provide you with support (alimenta) on a monthly basis and a yearly allowance for clothing, and that she, in respecting her son's last wishes for a lengthy period of time, that is, in this case not less than three years, did provide these things, you will succeed both in being provided with such also in the future and in being paid for anything not provided in the past.

Posted August 16, in the consulship of the two Aspri (212).

[2] The same Augustus to Eupatrius. Even if a trust was bequeathed invalidly, all the same, if the heirs, upon learning of the decedent's wishes, have turned over properties to your grandfather in line with the terms of the trust, it is useless for them to sue you over this, since the wishes of the decedent seem to have been fairly well complied with in a manner not pursuant to the document alone but to a recognition that a trust had been bequeathed.

Posted July 27, in the consulship of Laetus, for the second time, and Cerealis (215).

[3] The same Augustus to Rufinus. Since you allege that the girl Chrysis has been manumitted by the heirs of the decedent according to the latter's wishes and that she, before the inheritance was turned over to her, died intestate, the rights of succession belong to her manumitters. If they enter upon it, they are freed from the obligation imposed by the trust through a merger of rights of action (i.e., those they held as patrons of the decedent and executors of the trust).

Posted December 9, in the consulship of Laetus, for the second time, and Cerealis (215).

[4] Emperor Alexander Augustus to Victorinus. The last wishes of the father forbidding his children from selling farms outside the agnatic kin (familia) or giving them as a pledge is not deemed as having forbidden a brother from giving them to his sister as a gift.

Posted June 27, in the consulship of Maximus, for the second time, and Aelianus (223).

[5] The same Augustus to Regina. If your brother, after he became heir to your father, died as an adult at law without children, the inheritance has not passed to you as his pupillary substitute (substitute to a minor ward). But if in some part of the will this arrangement was confirmed by the words of a trust, you are not prevented from claiming the trust from the heirs.

Posted January 18, in the consulship of Julian and Crispinus (224).

[278] See D. 30–32; Inst. 2.23 and 24.

[6] Idem A. Nilo. pr. Praedia obligata per legatum vel fideicommissum relicta heres luere debet, maxime cum testator condicionem eorum non ignoravit aut, si scisset, legaturus tibi aliud, quod non minus esset, fuisset. 1. Sin vero a creditore distracta sunt, pretium heres exsolvere cogetur, nisi contraria defuncti voluntas ab herede ostendatur.

PP. XVI k. Mart. Iuliano et Crispino conss.

[7] Idem A. Septimo. Voluntatis defuncti quaestio in aestimatione iudicis est.

PP. XV k. Mart. Fusco II et Dextro conss.

[8] Idem A. Mascello. Qui fideicommissariam libertatem meruit, legata seu fideicommissa a defuncto sibi data suo iure persequitur.

PP. XV k. Iun. Fusco II et Dextro conss.

[9] Imp. Gordianus A. Paulinae. Ab eo, qui neque legatum neque fideicommissum neque hereditatem vel mortis causa donationem accepit, nihil per fideicommissum relinqui potest.

PP. XVII k. Oct. Pio et Pontiano conss.

[10] Idem A. Firmo. Verbum 'volo' licet desit, tamen quia additum perfectum sensum facit, pro adiecto habendum est.

PP. III id. Dec. Gordiano A. et Aviola conss.

[11] Idem A. Papiniano. Quotiens ab omnibus, qui alienatione facta ad fideicommissi petitionem adspirare possint, venditio celebratur aut quibusdam vendentibus alii consenserint, auctoritas contractus convelli nequaquam potest.

PP. II k. Ian. Gordiano A. II et Pompeiano conss.

[12] Imp. Philippus A. et Philippus C. Rufino. Post mortem suam rogatam restituere hereditatem defuncti iudicio et antequam fati munus

[6] The same Augustus to Nilus. pr. The heir ought to pay the lien against encumbered properties when these are bequeathed by legacy or trust, especially when the testator was not unaware of their status or, if he had known about it, he would have given you something else of no lesser value as a legacy. 1. But if, however, they have been alienated by the creditor, the heir will be compelled to pay their value, unless a contrary wish of the decedent is shown by the heir.

Posted February 14, in the consulship of Julian and Crispinus (224).

[7] The same Augustus to Septimus. A dispute over the wishes of a decedent lies in the discretion of the judge.

Posted February 15, in the consulship of Fuscus, for the second time, and Dexter (225).

[8] The same Augustus to Mascellus. Someone who has gained manumission through a trust claims by his own right legacies or trusts left to him by the decedent.

Posted May 18,[279] in the consulship of Fuscus, for the second time, and Dexter (225).

[9] Emperor Gordian Augustus to Paulina. No one can be charged with a trust who has received neither a legacy, trust, inheritance, or gift in contemplation of death (mortis causa).

Posted September 15, in the consulship of Pius and Pontianus (238).

[10] The same Augustus to Firmus. Although the verb "I wish" (volo) is missing, nevertheless, since once added it makes perfect sense (of the words in the will), it must be considered as though it had been included.

Posted December 11, in the consulship of Gordianus Augustus and Aviola (239).

[11] The same Augustus to Papinianus. Whenever a sale is made by all those who, once the property is alienated, are able to entertain the prospect of a claim to a trust, or others have given their consent to certain persons selling (the property), the validity of the (sale) contract cannot at all be broken.

Posted December 31, in the consulship of Gordian Augustus, for the second time, and Pompeianus (241).

[12] Emperor Philip Augustus and Philip Caesar to Rufinus. It is an accepted point of law (exploratum ius) that when one is required, by the will of a impleat posse satisfacere (id est restituere hereditatem) quarta parte vel retenta vel omissa, si voluerit, explorati iuris est.

[279] The precise date is uncertain: the alternative is June 15.

PP. id. Oct. Peregrino et Aemiliano conss.

[13] Idem A. et C. Sempronio. Quotiens principali loco heres institutus testatori succedit, legata seu fideicommissa a substituto data posci iure non possunt.

PP. VIII k. Mart. Praesente et Albino conss.

[14] Impp. Valerianus et Gallienus AA. Falconi. pr. Ea, quam frater tuus instituerat, sive quaesita sive non quaesita hereditate decesserit, cum tamen simpliciter, antequam duodecimum annum aetatis implesset, verbis precativis testamento facto nonnullos ei voluerit substitutos, nihil prohibet fideicommissum peti vel ab ipsius heredibus, qui bona intestati tenent. 1. Tunc enim locum habet, quod regulariter traditur ea quae in testamento relinquuntur, si ex testamento non adeatur hereditas, non valere, cum verbis relicta directis adiri potuit hereditas, non cum illa ipsa sic data est, ut esset etiam ab intestato successoribus postulanda. 2. Quod rescripsimus sequentes adseverationem tuam, quasi scripta heres non fuerit iure adoptata. alioquin si in familia relicta heres facta decessit, et consequenter ipsius heredes petitioni fideicommissi respondere coguntur.

PP. XIIII k. Sept. Valeriano III et Gallieno II AA. conss.

[15] Idem AA. Philocrati. Quamvis simpliciter te ac fratrem tuum aliquis instituerit heredes eiusque hereditatis commodum pater ex tua fratrisque persona pro portionibus vestris potestatis ratione quaesierit, tamen quia inferioribus verbis testamenti vos sui iuris facere testator curavit, intellegi potest restituendi hereditatis commodi fideicommisso patrem obstrictum esse.

PP. VI id. Oct. Romae Maximo II et Glabrione conss.

decedent, to turn over an inheritance after one's death, this (i.e., turning over one's inheritance) can, even before one's death, be accomplished either with or without subtraction of the (Falcidian) fourth, as one wishes.

Posted October 15, in the consulship of Peregrinus and Aemilianus (244).

[13] The same Augustus and Caesar to Sempronius. Whenever an heir appointed in the first degree succeeds to a testator, legacies and trusts assigned to be given by a substitute heir cannot be legally claimed.

Posted February 22, in the consulship of Praesens and Albinus (246).

[14] Emperors VALERIAN and GALLIENUS Augusti to Falco. pr. She whom your brother had appointed as heir died after either having claimed or not claimed the inheritance. But he (your brother), having made his will, expressed the wish unconditionally, by a trust directive (precariis verbis) that some persons be substituted for her (as heirs) before she turned 12. Nothing prevents the trust from being claimed even from those heirs of his who hold the property on intestacy.[280] 1. For the general rule that what is bequeathed in a will is not valid if the inheritance is not entered upon in accordance with the terms of the will holds then, when the inheritance, bequeathed with straightforward language, could have been entered upon, not when it was given in such a way that it is to be claimed even from the heirs on intestacy. 2. But We composed this reply assuming the truth of your assertion that the named heir had not been legally adopted. Otherwise, if having been made an heir she died as a member of your brother's agnatic kinship group (familia), as a logical consequence her own heirs also (in this case) are compelled to respond to a claim for the trust.

Posted August 19, in the consulship of Valerian, for the third time, and Gallienus, for the second time, Augusti (255).

[15] The same Augusti to Philocrates. Although someone appointed you and your brother unconditionally as heirs, and your father acquired the benefit of that inheritance through the two of you, in full measure, by reason of his paternal power (potestas), nevertheless, because the testator in a later part of the will provided that you both should be rendered sui iuris (i.e., emancipated), it can be understood that your father was bound by a trust to turn over the benefit of the inheritance (to you).

Posted October 10, at Rome, in the consulship of Maximus, for the second time, and Glabrio (256).

[280] It seems preferable to understand the word ipsius to refer to Falco's brother, so that his heirs on intestacy are meant. This assumes that the girl had not accepted the inheritance. If she had, presumably this would be a reference to her heirs on intestacy. To avoid the ambiguity, Krüger proposes the reading vel ab his.

[16] Imppp. Carus Carinus et Numerianus AAA. Isidorae. pr. Cum virum prudentissimum Papinianum respondisse non ignoramus etiam legata huiusmodi fideicommisso contineri, id est ubi heres rogatus fuerat, quidquid ex hereditate pervenerit, post mortem restituere, animadvertis etiam praeceptionis compendium testatoris verbis comprehensum esse. 1. Sane quoniam in fideicommissis voluntas magis quam verba plerumque intuenda sunt, si quas pro rei veritate praeterea probationes habes ad commendandam hanc patris voluntatem, quam fuisse adseveras, apud praesidem experiri non vetaris.

PP. prid. id. Nov. Caro et Carino AA. conss.

[17] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. Fortunato. Si creditoris voluntas iure subnixa liberari te debito volentis doceri potest, et antequam sollemniter tibi liberatio a successore praestetur, exceptionem tibi ex voluntate descendentem competere manifestum est.

PP. XII k. Mai. Maximo II et Aquilino conss.

[18] Idem AA. Apolausto. Cum necessitatem reddendae rationis defunctus remittendam tibi esse petierit, manifesti iuris est voluntatem defuncti immotam esse debere.

PP. id. Mart. ipsis IIII et III AA. conss.

[19] Idem AA. Ampliato. Clari et aperti iuris est in fideicommissis posteriores voluntates esse firmiores.

PP. VIII id. Sept. ipsis IIII et III AA. conss.

[20] Idem AA. Iuliano. Etiam a pupillorum tutoribus velut ab ipsis relicta fideicommissa debentur.

[16] Emperors CARUS, CARINUS, and NUMERIANUS Augusti to Isidora. pr. Since We are not unaware that the very learned man Papinian in a response to a legal enquiry stated that even legacies were included in a trust of this kind, that is, when the heir is required to turn over whatever he or she receives from an inheritance after his or her death, you see that the benefit also of a preferential legacy is embraced by the words of the testator. 1. Indeed, because as a general principle in the case of trusts the wishes of the testator are to be given greater weight than his words, if you have any further evidence as to the truth of the matter, for the purpose of establishing your father's intentions, as you allege them to have been, you are not forbidden from putting the matter before the provincial governor.

Posted November 12, in the consulship of Carus and Carinus, Augusti (283).

[17] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti to Fortunatus. It is clear that if a legally valid expression of the last wishes of your (decedent) creditor can be shown to have intended that you be freed from your debt, even before his heir provides you with a formal release an affirmative defense (exceptio) lies for you in accordance with testator's wishes.

Posted April 20, in the consulship of Maximus, for the second time, and Aquilinus (286).

[18] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti to Apolaustus. Since the decedent requested that you be freed from the necessity of providing an accounting, it is a clear point of law (manifestum ius) that the wishes of the decedent must be maintained.

Posted March 15, in the consulship of the Augusti, for the fourth and the third time, respectively (290).

[19] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti to Ampliatus. It is a clear and transparent point of law (clarum et apertum ius) that in trusts subsequent expressions of (decedent's) wishes are more valid (than earlier ones).

Posted September 6,[281] in the consulship of the Augusti, for the fourth and the third time, respectively (290).

[20][282] The same Augusti to Julian. Trusts ought to be paid that have been bequeathed also by the tutores of minor wards, just as by the wards themselves.

[281] The precise day is uncertain: the alternative is September 11.
[282] = (in part, with minor changes) C. 4.1.5.

PP. III non. Dec. ipsis IIII et III AA. conss.

[21] Idem AA. et CC. Tiberio. Si in persona patris tui, cui te successisse proponis, fideicommissi dies utiliter cessit, licet tempore quo fuerat datum necdum te natum probetur, uxorem patrui, quem contendis patri tuo rogatum, si sine liberis decesserit, ab avo relicta restituere, si ei successit, de fideicommisso convenire debes. nam si patrui etiam hereditas tibi quaesita est, non de fideicommisso quaerendum, sed hereditas ab ea vindicanda est.

D. VI id. Febr. AA. conss.

[22] Idem AA. et CC. Planciano. Et in epistula vel brevi libello vel sine scriptura, immo etiam nutu fideicommissum relinqui posse adhibitis testibus nulla dubitatio est.

D. id. April. Byzantii AA. conss.

[23] Idem AA. et CC. Stratonico. Si veritas vel sollemnitas iuris deest nec amplexus parentis voluntatem relicta dedisti vel transactionis causa stipulantibus promisisti negotiumque integrum est, ad solutionem urgueri non potes.

D. V k. Febr. AA. conss.

[24] Idem AA. et CC. Menestrato. Instrumenta praediorum per fideicommissum relictorum, quae ad probationem originis eorum pertinent, heredes praestare necesse non habent: tamen cautionem praestare debent, quod, si opus fuerit legatario seu fideicommissario, ipsa, si habent, proferant.

D. k. Dec. Sirmi AA. conss.

[25] Idem AA. et CC. Iulianae. Heredum etiam res proprias per fideicommissum relinqui posse non ambigitur.

D. II k. Mart. CC. conss.

Posted December 3, in the consulship of the Augusti, for the fourth and the third time, respectively (290).

[21] The same Augusti and the Caesars to Tiberius. If the time for a trust-payment has effectively arrived in the person of your father, whose heir you claim to be, although it is shown that at the time the trust was given you were not yet born, you ought to sue the wife of your paternal uncle over the trust, if she became his heir, since you claim (the uncle) was required by your grandfather to turn over the bequest in question to your father if he died without children. For if you are also heir to your uncle, no claim is to be made on the trust, but the inheritance shall be claimed from her.

Given February 8, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[22] The same Augusti and Caesars to Plancianus. There is no doubt that by enlisting witnesses a trust can be bequeathed in a letter, in a brief memorandum, or without a document, or rather even with (just) a nod.

Given April 13, at Byzantium, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[23] The same Augusti and Caesars to Stratonicus. If the truth and the formalities required by law are lacking, and having embraced the declared wishes of your ascendant male relative (parens) you have not paid the bequests or for the sake of a settlement made stipulations, and the matter stands as it was, you cannot be pressed to make payment.[283]

Given January 28,[284] in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[24] The same Augusti and Caesars to Menestratus. Heirs are not obligated to furnish documents showing the title of properties left as a trust, but they ought to provide a guaranty (cautio) to the effect that, if they have such documents, they shall produce them should the legatee or trust-beneficiary have need of them.

Given December 1 (?), at Sirmium, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[25] The same Augusti and Caesars to Juliana. There is no doubt that even the property of the heirs can be given as a trust.

Given February 28, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[283] Blume: "If the reason therefor was absent – that is to say, if the document under which a bequest was claimed was forged, or did not in fact contain the bequests, none were owing thereunder. It was somewhat different if the proper solemnity in the execution of the document was absent; for if, in such case, recognition to the bequests was given by the party charged therewith, he was thereafter bound to carry out the bequests."

[284] The precise month is uncertain: January or August.

[26] Idem AA. et CC. Gaiano. Ex repudiatione fideicommissi doli mali exceptio iusta causa intercedente tunc opponitur, quando ipse, cui fideicommissum relictum est, repudiatione usus fuerit. unde cum hoc non te, sed patrem fecisse adseveras, qui tibi nocere non potuit, nihil tibi obesse potest.

D. II id. April. Sirmi CC. conss.

[27] Idem AA. et CC. Olympiadi. Fideicommissum eius qui reliquerat paenitentia probata successores numquam praestare compelluntur.

D. V k. Oct. Viminacii CC. conss.

[28] Idem AA. et CC. Gaio. Ex fideicommisso sub condicione sine libertate servis propriis inutiliter dato libertas peti non potest.

D. XV k. Nov. trans mare[xii] CC. conss.

[29] Idem AA. et CC. Achilleo. Ex testamento, quod iure non valet, nec fideicommissum quidem, si non intestato quoque succedentes rogati probentur, peti potest.

D. VIII id. Dec. CC. conss.

[30] Imp. Iustinianus A. Demostheni pp. Cum acutissimi ingenii vir et merito ante alios excellens Papinianus in suis statuit responsis, si quis filium suum heredem instituit et restitutionis post mortem oneri subegit, non aliter hoc videri disposuisse, nisi cum filius eius sine subole vitam reliquerit: nos huiusmodi sensum merito mirati plenissimum ei donamus eventum, ut, si quis haec disposuerit, non tantum filium heredem instituens, sed etiam filiam, vel ab initio nepotem vel neptem, pronepotem vel proneptem vel aliam deinceps posteritatem, et eam restitutionis post obitum gravamini subiugaverit, non aliter hoc sensisse videatur, nisi hi qui restitutione onerati sunt sine filiis vel filiabus vel nepotibus vel pronepotibus fuerint defuncti, ne videatur testator alienas successiones propriis anteponere.

Recitata septimo in novo consistorio palatii Iustiniani. d. III k. Nov. Decio vc. cons.

[xii] Transmariscae

[26] The same Augusti and Caesars to Gaianus. Rejection of a trust is countered with an affirmative defense of fraud (exceptio doli mali) for a good reason when the party to whom the trust was left is the one who rejects it. So since you claim that not you but your father did this, and since his action could not harm you, it cannot at all be held against you.

Given April 12, at Sirmium, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[27][285] The same Augusti and Caesars to Olympias. When the person who left a trust is shown to have changed his or her mind, the heirs are never compelled to pay it.

Given September 27, at Viminacium, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[28] The same Augusti and Caesars to Gaius. Manumission cannot be claimed pursuant to a trust ineffectually given to one's own slaves upon the condition "without manumission."

Given October 18, at Transmarisca, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[29][286] The same Augusti and Caesars to Achilleus. Not even a trust can be claimed pursuant to a will that is legally invalid, unless also the heirs on intestacy are shown to have been required to pay it.

Given December 6, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[30] Emperor JUSTINIAN Augustus to Demosthenes, Praetorian Prefect. Since Papinian, a man of the sharpest intellect who rightly surpasses all others, held in his work on Replies[287] that if someone appointed his own son as heir and imposed on him the burden of turning over the inheritance after his death, he is deemed as having made this disposition only for the case that his son died without offspring. We, in just admiration of such an opinion, give it a very full application, so that if anyone makes these dispositions appointing not only a son as heir, but also a daughter or a grandson or granddaughter in the first degree, a great-grandson or great-granddaughter and so on with other descendants, and he imposes on them the burden of turning over the inheritance after death, he shall be deemed as having made this disposition only for the case that those burdened with the obligation to turn over the property die without sons, daughters, grandchildren, or great-grandchildren, so that the testator not be considered as preferring the rights of strangers to succeed to him over those of his own descendants.

Recited seven times October 30, in the New Consistory of the Palace of Justinian, in the consulship of the vir clarissimus Decius (529).

[285] Combine with C. 8.53.23.
[286] Combine with C. 2.4.36(?), 6.23.14.
[287] See C. 6.25.7.1; Pap. D. 35.1.102.

[31] Idem A. Iohanni pp. pr. Quidam filium suum a sacris paternis remisit et postea testamento condito eum praeteriit nullo ei penitus relicto, aliis heredibus derelictis, ipsum autem, quem neque heredem neque exheredatum fecit, fideicommisso praegravavit. quaerebatur, si utile est huiusmodi fideicommissum. 1. Tota igitur antiqua dubietate super hoc explosa nobis in hoc casu placuit, ut emancipatus utpote iniuria a patre adflictus non compellatur fideicommissum a sua persona relictum praestare. 2. Quod etiam in aliis personis, quas exheredari necesse est, locum habere censemus.

D. prid. k. Mart. Constantinopoli post consulatum Lampadii et Orestis vv. cc.

[32] Idem A. Iohanni pp. pr. Quaestionem ex facto emergentem resecantes et voluntati defunctorum prospicientes sancimus, si sine scriptura et praesentia testium fideicommisso derelicto fideicommissarius elegerit iuramentum heredis vel forsitan legatarii vel fideicommissarii, quotiens ab eo relictum est fideicommissum, sive universitatis sive speciale, necesse habere heredem vel legatarium vel fideicommissarium prius iureiurando de calumnia praestito vel sacramentum subire et omni inquietudine sese relaxare vel, si recusandum existimaverit sacramentum aut certam quantitatem manifestare fideicommissario derelictam noluerit, si forsitan maiorem fideicommissarius expetat, omnimodo exactioni fideicommissi subiacere et eum ad satisfactionem compelli, cum ipse sibi iudex et testis invenitur, cuius religio et fides a fideicommissario electa est, nullis testibus nullisque aliis adventiciis probationibus requisitis, sed sive quinque sint testes vel minores vel nemo, causam per illius sacramentum vel dandum vel recusandum suam habere tam firmitatem quam exactionem, sive pater sit, qui fideicommissum dederit, sive extraneus, ut aequitatis ratio communiter in omnes procedat.

1. Cum enim res per testium sollemnitatem ostenditur, tunc et numerus testium et nimia subtilitas requirenda est. lex etenim, ne quid falsitatis incurrat per duos forte testes compositum, maiorem

[31][288] The same Augustus to John, Praetorian Prefect. pr. A certain person emancipated his son and afterwards when making his will passed him over, leaving nothing at all to him. Though he left others as his heirs, the son himself, however, whom he had neither named as heir nor disinherited, he burdened with a trust. It used to be debated whether such a trust was valid. 1. So by eliminating all ancient hesitation over this matter We have decided in this case that the emancipated son, inasmuch as he has been afflicted with an affront by his father, shall not be compelled to pay the trust that has been left to him to pay. 2. We lay down that this rule also applies in the case of other persons whom it is necessary to disinherit (in order to exclude them under a will).

Given February 28, at Constantinople, in the post-consulate of the viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestes (531).

[32] The same Augustus to John, Praetorian Prefect. pr. In resolving a dispute arising out of a situation of fact and looking out for the last wishes of decedents, We lay down that if a trust has been left in the absence of documents and witnesses and the beneficiary chooses to request an oath of the heir or perhaps of a legatee or of (another) trust beneficiary, whenever the trust has been left to (one of) the latter to pay out, whether it is for the entire inheritance or a particular thing, it shall be necessary for the heir, legatee, or trust-beneficiary, after an oath on malicious prosecution shall first be sworn (by the complainant), to take the oath (that there is no trust) and free himself from all anxiety or, if he thinks the oath should be refused or declines to inform the beneficiary as to the precise amount that was left in the trust, should the latter happen to claim a higher amount, he shall be entirely liable to pay the trust and shall be compelled to satisfy the claim. This is because he is discovered to be his own judge and witness whose scruples and honesty were appealed to by the beneficiary. No witnesses and no other, extraordinary evidence are required, but whether there are five witnesses, fewer, or none at all, whether his father was the one who gave the trust or an outsider, (We decree) that the case shall have – through the swearing or declining to swear an oath on the part of that one (under accusation) – its own foundation as much as a basis for payment, so that the principle of fairness shall operate in common for everyone.

1. For when the matter (i.e., the existence of the trust) is shown through the formality of witnesses, then both the number of witnesses and an extraordinary level of complexity (of procedure) is to be required. For the law, in order that numerum testium expostulat, ut per ampliores homines perfectissima veritas reveletur.

[288] Combine with C. 6.37.24. Lounghis et al. date to April 30, 531.

2. Cum autem is, qui quid ex voluntate defuncti lucratur, et maxime ipse heres, cui summa auctoritas totius causae commissa est, dicere compellitur veritatem per sacramenti religionem, qualis locus testibus relinquatur vel quemadmodum ad extraneam fidem decurratur, propria et indubitata relicta? cum et in leges respeximus, quae iustis dispositionibus testatorum omnimodo heredes oboedire compellunt et sic strictius causam exigunt, ut etiam amittere lucrum hereditatis sanciant eos, qui testatoribus suis minime paruerunt.

D. v k. Dec. Constantinopoli post consulatum Lampadii et Orestis. vv. cc.

XXXXIII Communia de Legatis et Fideicommissis et de in Rem Missione Tollenda

[1] Imp. Iustinianus A. Demostheni pp. pr. Cum ii, qui legatis vel fideicommissis honorati sunt, personalem plerumque actionem habere noscuntur, quis vel vindicationis vel sinendi modo aliorumque generum legatorum subtilitatem prono animo admittet, quam posteritas optimis rationibus usa nec facile suscepit nec inextricabiles circuitus laudavit? quis in rem missionis scrupulosis utatur ambagibus?

1. Rectius igitur esse censemus in rem quidem missionem penitus aboleri, omnibus vero tam legatariis quam fideicommissariis unam naturam imponere et non solum personalem actionem praestare, sed etiam in rem, quatenus eis liceat easdem res, vel per quodcumque genus legati vel per fideicommissum fuerint derelictae, vindicare in rem actione instituenda, et insuper utilem Servianam (id est hypothecariam) super his quae fuerint derelicta in res mortui praestare. 2. Cum enim hoc iam iure nostro increbuit licere testatori hypothecam rerum suarum in testamento quibus voluerit dare, et iterum novellae constitutiones in multis casibus et tacitas hypothecas induxerunt, non ab re est etiam nos in something false is not contrived by two casual witnesses, demands a greater number of them, so that through a greater number of persons the most consummate truth shall be brought to light.

2. But when a party who benefits in some way from the last wishes of the decedent and especially the heir himself, to whom supreme authority in the entire matter has been entrusted, is compelled to speak the truth through reverence for an oath, what place shall be left for witnesses, or how shall recourse be had to external proof, when his (the testator's) own undoubted proof was left behind? This is because We have also had regard for the laws which compel heirs to respect in every way the proper dispositions of testators, and so demand this outcome in a rather narrow fashion, so that they even ordain that those who have not at all complied with their testators' wishes shall lose the benefit of their inheritance.

Given November 27,[289] at Constantinople, in the post-consulate of the viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestes (531).

Forty-Third Title Common Rules on Legacies and Trusts, and the Abolition of the Authorization to Seize Property

[1] Emperor JUSTINIAN Augustus to Demosthenes, Praetorian Prefect. pr. Since those who have been honored with legacies and trusts are generally recognized to have the right of a personal action (i.e., an action in personam), who will embrace with an eager spirit the complexities of the legacies per vindicationem or sinendi modo and the other kinds,[290] which more recent times have, for excellent reasons, neither easily adopted nor praised for their impenetrable entanglements? Who shall make use of the oversubtle circumlocutions of the authorization to seize property (missio in rem)?

1. Therefore We ordain that it is more correct entirely to abolish the authorization to seize property, to be sure, to impose one form on all, in fact, legatees and trust-beneficiaries alike, and not only to provide a personal action, but also one in rem, to the extent that it shall be permitted for them to claim ownership of the same items, no matter in what form of legacy or trust they were bequeathed, by bringing an action in rem, and to provide moreover an analogous actio Serviana (that is, an action on a hypothec) regarding those things that were bequeathed to them by the decedent. 2. For since it has already become common in Our law (ius nostrum) to allow a testator to give a hypothec (hypotheca) of his property in his will to those whom he wishes, and again, recent constitutions (novellae constitutiones) have introduced even implied

[289] The precise day is uncertain: possibly November 17.

[290] Classical law knew several different types of legacies, of which two are named here; for a fuller list, see Gaius, 2.192–223. Blume: "Justinian, by the present law, not only abolished the distinctions between the different kinds of legacy known to the former law, but he also provided that there should be no difference between legacies and trusts of single things."

praesenti casu hypothecariam donare, quae et nullo verbo praecedente possit ab ipsa lege induci. 3. Si enim testator ideo legata vel fideicommissa dereliquit, ut omnimodo personae ab eo honoratae ea percipiant, apparet ex eius voluntate etiam praefatas actiones contra res testatoris esse instituendas, ut omnibus modis voluntati eius satisfiat, et praecipue cum talia sint legata vel fideicommissa, quae piis actibus sunt deputata.

4. Et haec disponimus, non tantum si ab herede fuerit legatum derelictum vel fideicommissum, sed et si a legatario vel fideicommissario vel alia persona, quam gravare fideicommisso possumus, fideicommissum cuidam relinquatur. cum enim non aliter valeat, nisi aliquid lucri offerat ei a quo derelictum est, nihil est grave etiam adversus eum non tantum personalem, sed etiam in rem et hypothecariam extendere actionem in rebus, quas a testatore consecutus est.

5. In omnibus autem huiusmodi casibus in tantum et hypothecaria unumquemque conveniri volumus, in quantum personalis actio adversus eum competit, et hypothecam esse non ipsius heredis vel alterius personae quae gravata est fideicommisso rerum, sed tantummodo earum, quae a testatore ad eum pervenerint.

D. XV k. Oct. Chalcedone Decio vc. cons.

[2] Idem A. Iuliano pp. pr. Omne verbum significans testatoris legitimum sensum legare vel fideicommittere volentis utile atque validum est, sive directis verbis, quale est 'iubeo' forte, sive precariis utetur testator, quale est 'rogo' 'volo' 'mando' 'fideicommitto', sive iuramentum posuerit, cum et hoc nobis audientibus ventilatum est, testatore quidem dicente 'ἐνορκῶ', partibus autem huiusmodi verbum huc atque illuc lacerantibus. 1. Sit igitur secundum quod diximus ex omni parte verborum non inefficax voluntas secundum verba legantis vel fideicommittentis et omnia, quae naturaliter insunt legatis, ea et fideicommissis inhaerere intellegantur et e contrario, quidquid fideicommittitur, hoc intellegatur esse legatum, et si quid tale est, quod non habet natura legatorum, hoc ei ex fideicommissis accommodetur, et sit omnibus perfectus eventus, ex omnibus nascantur in rem actiones, ex omnibus hypothecariae, ex omnibus personales.

hypothecs in many situations, it is not beside the point that We too in the instant case grant an action on the hypothec, since this too can be introduced by the statute itself, with no word (that is, agreement) preceding (between individuals). 3. For if the testator bequeathed legacies or trusts for this reason, that the persons honored by them actually receive them, it seems consonant with his wishes that even the aforesaid actions against the property of the testator ought to be granted, so that in every way his wishes be met, and this particularly when there are legacies or trusts of such a nature as to be devoted to projects of a religious nature.

4. And We make these dispositions not only in case an heir has been left a legacy or a trust to pay out, but also in case a trust has been bequeathed to a certain person to be paid by a legatee or a trust-beneficiary, or by another person on whom We can impose the duty to pay out a trust. For since that can only be valid when some benefit is offered to him by the person making the bequest, it is not a heavy burden to extend even against him not only the personal action, but also the actions in rem and on the hypothec regarding that property he obtained from the testator.

5. But in all such situations We wish each person to be sued for as much under the action on the hypothec as he is liable on the personal action, and that the hypothec falls not on the property of the heir himself or another person burdened with a trust, but only on the property which comes to him from the testator.

Given September 17, at Chalcedon, in the consulship of the vir clarissimus Decius (529).

[2] The same Augustus to Julian, Praetorian Prefect. pr. Every word giving a lawful meaning used by a testator wishing to leave a legacy or a trust is effective and valid, whether he employs straightforward terms, such as perhaps "I order," or a trust directive such as "I ask," "I wish," "I commend," or "I entrust," or he inserts an oath, since even this has been aired in Our hearing, when a testator says, for example, "I swear" (enorkō) but the parties involved distort such a term in every direction. 1. Let the wishes of the testator, then, pursuant to what We have said, not be rendered without effect in every part of the language he uses, consistent with the wording employed by a person making a legacy or a trust, and all those things that are naturally found in legacies shall be understood also to form part of trusts, and vice-versa, whatever is given as a trust shall be understood to be have been given as a legacy. And if there is any such thing that a legacy by its nature does not contain, this shall be appropriated for it from trusts, and there shall be for all an exquisite outcome, as from all of them actions in rem shall arise, from all of them actions on the hypothec, from all of them personal actions.

2. Ubi autem aliquid contrarium in legatis et fideicommissis eveniat, hoc fideicommisso quasi humaniori adgregetur et secundum eius dirimatur naturam.

3. Et nemo moriens putet suam legitimam voluntatem reprobari, sed nostro semper utetur adiutorio, et quemadmodum viventibus providimus, ita et morientibus prospiciatur: et si specialiter legati tantummodo faciat testator mentionem, hoc et legatum et fideicommissum intellegatur, et si fidei heredis vel legatarii aliquid committatur, hoc et legatum esse videatur. nos enim non verbis, sed ipsis rebus leges imponimus.

D. x k. Mart. Constantinopoli post consulatum Lampadii et Orestis vv. cc.

[3] Idem A. Iohanni pp. pr. Si duobus vel tribus hominibus vel pluribus forte optio servi vel alterius rei relicta fuerit, vel si uni quidem legatario optio servi vel alterius rei relicta est, ipse autem moriens plures sibi reliquerit heredes, dubitabatur inter veteres, si inter legatarios vel heredes legatarii fuerit certatum et alter alterum servum vel aliam rem eligere velit, quid sit statuendum. 1. Sancimus itaque in omnibus huiusmodi casibus rei iudicem fortunam esse, sortem etenim inter altercantes adhibendam, ut, quem sors praetulerit, is quidem habeat potestatem eligendi, ceteris autem aestimationem praestet contingentium eis partium: id est in servis quidem et ancillis maioribus decem annis, si sine arte sint, viginti solidis aestimandis, minoribus videlicet decem annis non amplius quam decem solidis computandis: sin autem artifices sunt, usque ad triginta solidos aestimatione eorum procedente, sive masculi sive feminae sunt, exceptis notariis et medicis utriusque sexus, cum notarios quinquaginta solidis aestimari volumus, medicos autem et obstetrices sexaginta: eunuchis minoribus quidem decem annis usque ad triginta solidos valentibus, maioribus vero usque ad quinquaginta, sin autem artifices sint, usque ad septuaginta.

1a. Sed et si quis optionem servi vel alterius rei reliquerit non ipsi legatario, sed quem Titius forte elegerit, Titius autem vel noluerit eligere vel morte fuerit praeventus, et in hac specie dubitabatur apud veteres, quid statuendum sit, utrumne legatum expirat, an aliquid inducitur ei adiutorium, ut viri boni arbitratu procedat electio. 1b. Censemus itaque, si intra annale tempus ille qui eligere iussus est hoc facere supersederit vel

2. When however some contradiction occurs in legacies or trusts, it shall be assimilated to (the rules for) trust, on the ground that this is more consistent with humane sympathy and it shall be resolved according to its nature.

3. And let no dying person imagine that his lawful last wishes shall be rejected, but will always make use of Our assistance. And just as We have provided for the living, so there shall also be a concern for the interests of the dying. And if a testator makes particular mention only of a legacy, this shall be understood as both a legacy and a trust, while if he entrusts something to an heir or a legatee this shall be regarded as a legacy as well. For We impose laws not on words, but on reality itself.

Given February 20, at Constantinople, in the post-consulate of the viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestes (531).

[3] The same Augustus to John, Praetorian Prefect. pr. If the choice of a slave or of other property happened to be left to two, three, or more persons, or if the election of a slave or of other property was left just to a single legatee, but he died and left behind several heirs, it was debated among the ancients (veteres), if a dispute arose among the legatees or the heirs of the legatee and each wished to choose a different slave or different property, what should be decided. 1. We therefore lay down that in all such situations chance shall be the judge of the matter. For lots shall be drawn among the disputants and whoever the lot selects shall have, to be sure, the power of choosing, but he shall pay the others the value of the proportions of the property accruing to them. That is, in the case of male slaves, certainly, and female slaves older than 10 years, if unskilled, they shall be appraised at 20 solidi, while for those less than 10 years old clearly not more than 10 solidi shall be calculated. But if, however, they possess a skill, the appraisal of their worth shall extend up to 30 solidi, whether they are male or female, with the exception of notaries and physicians of either sex. This is because We wish notaries to be appraised at 50 solidi, but physicians and midwives at 60. As for eunuchs, if they are less than 10 years old, indeed, they shall be worth up to 30 solidi, older ones in fact up to 50; but if, however, they possess a skill, up to 70.

1a. But even if someone bequeaths the election of a slave or some other property not to the legatee himself, but (leaves) the choice to Titius, and Titius either declines to choose or is prevented from doing so by death, in this kind of situation there also was hesitation among the ancients (veteres) as to what should be decided: whether the legacy was extinguished or some form of assistance was provided to it, (i.e.) that the election might go ahead by the standards of an upright man (bonus vir). 1b. We therefore ordain that if within the space of a year the one who was ordered to make the election has failed to do so, minime potuerit vel quandocumque decesserit, ipsi legatario videri esse datam electionem, ita tamen, ut non optimum ex servis vel aliis rebus quicquam eligat, sed mediae aestimationis, ne, dum legatarium satis esse fovendum existimamus, heredis commoda defraudentur.

2. Sed quia nostra maiestas per multos casus legatariis et fideicommissariis prospexit et actiones tam personales quam in rem et hypothecarias dedimus et in rem missionis tenebrosissimus error abolitus est, et ad hanc legem pervenimus. 2a. Nemo itaque ea, quae per legatum vel pure vel sub certo die relicta sunt vel quae restitui aliis disposita sunt vel substitutione posita, secundum veterem dispositionem putet esse in posterum alienanda vel pignoris vel hypothecae titulo adsignanda vel mancipia manumittenda, sed sciat, quod hoc quod alienum est non ei liceat utpote sui patrimonii existens alieno iuri applicare, quia satis absurdum est et inrationabile rem, quam in suis bonis pure non possidet, eam ad alios posse transferre vel hypothecae pignorisve nomine obligare vel manumittere et alienam spem decipere.

3. Sin autem sub condicione vel sub incerta die fuerit relictum legatum vel fideicommissum universitatis vel speciale vel substitutione vel restitutione, melius quidem faciat, et si in his casibus caveat ab omni venditione vel hypotheca, ne se gravioribus oneribus evictionis nomine supponat. 3a. Sin autem avaritiae cupidine propter spem condicionis minime implendae ad venditionem vel hypothecam prosiluerit, sciat, quod condicione impleta ab initio causa in irritum devocetur et sic intellegenda est, quasi nec scripta nec penitus fuerat celebrata, ut nec usucapio nec longi temporis praescriptio contra legatarium vel fideicommissarium procedat. 3b. Quod similiter censemus in huiusmodi legatis, quae sive pure sive sub die certo sive sub condicione sive sub incerta die relicta sint: sed in his omnibus casibus legatario quidem vel fideicommissario omnis licentia pateat rem vindicare et sibi adsignare, nullo obstaculo ei a detentatoribus opponendo.

4. Emptor autem sciens rei gravamen adversus venditorem actionem habeat tantummodo ad restitutionem pretii, neque dupli stipulatione could not at all do so, or has at some point passed away, that the choice shall be deemed to have been given to the legatee himself, with this proviso all the same, that he not choose the best slave or the best property, but that of medium value, so that, although We believe that the legatee is to be sufficiently provided for, the heirs not be cheated of their benefits.

2. And because Our Majesty has in many situations looked out for the interests of legatees and trust beneficiaries and We have provided them with personal actions as well as actions in rem and on the hypothec – and the very shady folly of the authorization to seize property (missio in possessionem) has been abolished – We arrive even at this law. 2a. So let no heir think that in the future property which has been bequeathed unconditionally, at a specified date, under orders to be turned over to others, or subject to a substitution (of himself), is to be alienated, encumbered by a pledge or hypothec, or – if slaves – manumitted, pursuant to the old rules (vetus dispositio). Let him know instead that he shall not be permitted to convert to the legally protected uses of another that which does not belong to him, as though it were his own property. This is because it would be fairly absurd and unreasonable that he be able to transfer, encumber by hypothec or pledge, or manumit property that he does not own unconditionally, and so cheat others of their hopes.

3. But if, however, a legacy or a trust either of the entire inheritance or of a particular item has been left under a condition or at an uncertain point in time, or under an arrangement for a substitute or under an instruction to turn it over to another, he would do better, to be sure, even in these situations to avoid every possibility of sale or hypothec, so as not to subject himself to even heavier burdens under the heading of eviction. 3a. But if, however, out of the passion of greed he leaps forward to a sale or a hypothec, in the hope that the condition would not at all be fulfilled, let him know that once the condition is fulfilled his action shall be counted as invalid from the start and that it must be understood as not having been put into writing and not at all having been done, so that neither usucapion nor long-time prescription shall be effective against the legatee or the trust-beneficiary. 3b. We lay down that this shall apply in a similar fashion to such legacies which are left either unconditionally, (or) subject to a specified date, a condition, or an uncertain period of time. But in all of these situations every possibility shall lie for the legatee, to be sure, or the trust-beneficiary to claim ownership of the property and to have it made over to him, and no obstacle shall be opposed to him by those with physical control over it.

4. A purchaser, moreover, who knows of the burden on the property shall have an action for restitution of the price only against the seller, and neither the stipulation for double the price (in case of eviction) nor a claim for the neque melioratione locum habente, cum sufficiat ei saltem pro pretio, quod sciens dedit pro aliena re, sibi satisfieri: creditori nihilo minus pigneraticia contraria actione adversus debitorem competente, ut ex omni parte omnique studio id, quod semper properamus, ad effectum perducatur, ut ultima elogia defunctorum legitimum finem sortiantur: bonae fidei procul dubio emptoribus integra iura et nullo modo ex hac constitutione deminuta contra venditores habentibus.

D. k. Sept. Constantinopoli post consulatum Lampadii et Orestis vv. cc.

XXXXIIII De Falsa Causa Adiecta Legato vel Fideicommisso

[1] Imp. Antoninus A Septimio. Verba testamenti, quae inseruisti, aut solutam pecuniam debitam testatori declarant aut voluntatem eius liberare volentis debitorem manifeste ostendunt. et ideo aut peti quod solutum est non potest aut ex causa fideicommissi, ut debitor liberaretur, agendum est, nisi liquido probari possit eum non liberari debitorem voluisse, sed errore lapsum solutam sibi pecuniam existimasse.

PP. VII k. Mart. Antonino A. IIII et Balbino conss.

[2] Imp. Alexander A. Faustinae. Etiam si veritas debiti non subest, falsa demonstratio non perimit legatum et ex testamento eius quoque nomine competit actio.

PP. VII id. Nov. Alexandro A. cons.

[3] Idem A. Verinae. pr. Si non designata certa quantitate dotem tibi legavit maritus, sed quodcumque ad eum dotis nomine pervenisset perventurumve esset, et id ex testamento petis, necessaria probatio est numeratae pecuniae. 1. Quod si quantitatem expressit, debetur et si in dotem datum non est, quasi aliud legatum, non eo iure, quo dos fungitur.

PP. non. Mai. Maximo II et Aeliano conss.

value of improvements shall be operative, since it shall be enough for him to be satisfied just with the price that he knowingly tendered for property belonging to a third party. The reverse action on the pledge shall nonetheless lie for the creditor against his debtor, so that, with all zeal and in every particular, that which We are ever quick in implementing be brought to its (desired) effect, so that the last wishes of decedents shall achieve their ends as a matter of law. It is far from doubtful that the rights of purchasers in good faith against their sellers shall remain unimpaired and in no way be diminished by this constitution.

Given September 1, at Constantinople, in the post-consulate of the viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestes (531).

Forty-Fourth Title An Untrue Reason Cited for a Legacy or Trust[291]

[1] Emperor ANTONINUS Augustus to Septimius. The wording of the will, which you have included (in your petition), either states that money owed to the testator had been paid or shows clearly his wish to be that of a person wanting to release the debtor. And on that account either what has been paid cannot be claimed or the suit must be on the trust, in order that the debtor be released, unless it can be clearly proved that the testator did not want the debtor to be released, but having fallen into a mistake thought that the money had been paid to him.

Posted February 23, in the consulship of Antoninus Augustus, for the fourth time, and Balbinus (213).

[2] Emperor ALEXANDER Augustus to Faustina. Even if a debt does not in fact exist, a false statement that it does exist does not invalidate a legacy and an action lies also under this heading in accordance with the terms of the will.

Posted November 7, in the consulship of Alexander Augustus (222).

[3] The same Augustus to Verina. pr. If your husband left your dowry as a legacy to you without having indicated a precise value for it, and instead (bequeathed) whatever had come or was going to come to him under the title of dowry, and you claim this in accordance with the terms of the will, it is necessary to show the amount of the money paid out to him. 1. But if he articulated a precise amount, this is owed (to you) even if it was not given as dowry, just as any other legacy and not with the rights that attach to the dowry.

Posted May 7, in the consulship of Maximus, for the second time, and Aelianus (223).

[291] See D. 35.1.

[4] Imp. Gordianus A. Alexandro. Si dotem, ut proponis, defuncta in matrimonio uxore tua patri eius reddidisti, vel etiam ea non reddita testamenti verbis, ut adseveras, munitus es, quibus recepisse dotem universam quondam socer tuus significavit, ne hoc nomine conveniaris, sollicite agere non debes, cum aut soluta dote nulla supersit actio aut non reddita adversus petentem iuxta defuncti voluntatem parata sit exceptio.

PP. XV k. Iun. Sabino II et Venusto conss.

[5] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. et CC. Severae. Refert largiter, dotem reddi maritus tibi, an quae instrumento dotali conscripta sunt, legati seu precariis verbis statuit, quippe superiore quidem casu datum probanti repeti tantum, posteriore vero nihil nocente falsa demonstratione significatum instrumento postulari possit.

S. XIIII k. Dec. CC. conss.

XXXXV De His Quae Sub Modo Legata vel Fideicommissa Relinquuntur

[1] Imp. Antoninus A. Saturninae. In legatis quidem et fideicommissis etiam modus adscriptus pro condicione observatur. sed si per te non stat, quominus voluntati testatoris pareas, sed per eum, cui nubere iussa es, quominus id quod tibi relictum est retineas, non oberit.

PP. V k. Ian. Gentiano et Basso conss.

[2] Imp. Gordianus A. Ammonio. pr. Ex his verbis: 'Titio decem millia vel insulam relinquo, ita ut quinque millia ex his vel eandem insulam Mevio restituat', licet antea neque legati neque fideicommissi petitio nascebatur, tamen in libertate a divo Severo hoc admissum est. 1. Sed in pecuniariis causis voluntatis tuendae gratia non immerito recipiendum est, ut etiam ex huiusmodi verbis, sive ad condicionem sive ad modum respiciunt, sive ad dandum vel faciendum aliquid, fideicommissi actio

[4] Emperor GORDIAN Augustus to Alexander. If, as you allege, your wife died during the marriage and you returned the dowry to her father, or even if you did not return it and you are, as you assert, protected by the words of the will in which your father-in-law indicated that he had at one point received back the entire dowry, you ought not to be concerned that you will be sued in this connection. This is because, if the dowry has been returned, no action remains, and, if it has not been returned, you have an affirmative defense (exceptio) against the claimant pursuant to the wishes of the decedent

Posted May 18, in the consulship of Sabinus, for the second time, and Venustus (240).

[5][292] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti and the Caesars to Severa. It makes a great deal of difference whether your husband decided that you be left, as a legacy or by trust directive (precariis verbis), the actual amount received as dowry or the amount written in the dowry document, since in the former situation, to be sure, you can only recover what you show to have been given, while in the latter, on the other hand, since an erroneous description (falsa demonstratio) is no obstacle, you can make a judicial request for the amount indicated in the document.

Written November 18, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

Forty-Fifth Title Property Bequeathed as a Legacy or a Trust Subject to a Duty (Sub Modo)[293]

[1] Emperor ANTONINUS Augustus to Saturnina. Even the duty (modus) written into legacies, to be sure, and trusts is treated like a condition. But if it is not your fault that you do not comply with the testator's wishes, but that of the man you were instructed to marry, this will not prevent you from keeping that which was bequeathed to you.

Posted December 28, in the consulship of Gentianus and Bassus (211).

[2] Emperor GORDIAN Augustus to Ammonius. pr. Through these words "I leave to Titius ten thousand or an apartment block (insula) provided that he turn over five thousand or the same apartment block to Maevius," although previously a claim used to arise neither on a legacy nor a trust, nevertheless one was allowed by the deified Severus in the case of a manumission.[294] 1. But in civil cases, for the sake of safeguarding the last wishes (of the decedent), the rule not unjustly must be accepted that even from such wording, whether it is omnifariam nascatur, videlicet in condicionibus post exitum earum. 2. Sin vero legato aut fideicommisso relicto testator legatarium seu fideicommissarium prohibuerit heredem suum vel alium quendam debitum exigere, habet debitor adversus legatarium seu fideicommissarium agentem usque ad quantitatem relicti fideicommissi sive legati exceptionem.

[292] Cf. C. 4.30.12
[293] See D. 35.1.
[294] This law, evidently in the form of a decretum, is not preserved.

PP. VI id. Aug. Sabino II et Venusto conss.

XXXXVI De Condicionibus Insertis Tam Legatis Quam Fideicommissis et Libertatibus

[1] Impp. Severus et Antoninus AA. Claudiae. Cum testatorem fideicommissum Trallianis ab eo, quem pro parte heredem instituerat, ita reliquisse proponas, si sine liberis institutus diem obisset, isque nepotem, quem ex filia susceperat, heredem instituerat, condicionem adscriptam fideicommisso defecisse manifestum est, nisi alia defuncti voluntas evidenter probabitur.

PP. non. Dec. Laterano et Rufino conss.

[2] Idem AA. Gallicano. pr. Cum patrem familias fideicommissi nomine, quod in diem certam reliquit, ita cavere praecepisse proponas, si a marito non divertisset, iurisdictionis originem perinde servari aequum est, ac si nihil super ea re scriptum fuisset. 1. Nec exemplum legati vel hereditatis, in quibus condicio divortii nonnumquam remitti solet, huic rei comparandum est, cum absurdum sit ideo perpetui edicti neglegi formam, quia patris sui voluntati non obtemperatur.

PP. Antiochiae XI k. Aug. Antonino A. II et Geta II conss.

related to a condition or a duty (modus), whether this is for giving or for doing something, the action on the trust shall arise in all circumstances, obviously in the case of conditions upon their fulfillment. 2. But if, however, a testator, after leaving a legacy or a trust, forbids the legatee or the beneficiary of the trust to claim a debt from the heir or from anyone else, the debtor has an affirmative defense (exceptio) against a legatee or trust-beneficiary suing for this up to the value of the legacy or trust.

Posted August 8, in the consulship of Sabinus, for the second time, and Venustus (240).

Forty-Sixth Title Conditions Placed on Legacies, Trusts, and Manumissions[295]

[1] Emperors SEVERUS and ANTONINUS Augusti to Claudia. Since you state the testator left a trust which the person whom he had appointed heir to part of the estate was to pay to the town of Tralles "if the appointed person died without children," and the latter appointed as heir his grandson through his daughter, it is clear that the condition written into the trust has failed, unless the wishes of the decedent are shown clearly to have been otherwise.

Posted December 5, in the consulship of Lateranus and Rufinus (197).

[2] The same Augusti to Gallicanus. pr. Since you state that a pater familias had instructed that under a trust designed to be effective on a certain date his daughter shall provide a guarantee (cautio) if she had not (already) divorced her husband, it is fair that the Praetorian Edict (iurisdictionis origo) be respected as though nothing had been written about this matter (i.e., the divorce). 1. Nor is to be compared to this situation the parallel of a legacy or a trust in which the fulfillment of a condition regarding a divorce is sometimes accustomed to be remitted, since it would be absurd that the rules of the Perpetual Edict (perpetui edicti forma) be neglected on this account, because she does not comply with her father's wishes.[296]

Posted July 22, at Antioch, in the consulship of Antoninus Augustus, for the second time, and Geta, for the second time (205).[297]

[295] See D. 35.1.

[296] Blume: "A condition affixed to inheritances etc. which required the beneficiary to get a divorce was deemed to be against good morals and void ... In the case above, [the daughter] did not comply with her father's desire as to the divorce and still wanted to be relieved from giving the bond. The law, however, required such bond, and hence the situation was as though the father had not mentioned the subject at all."

[297] So Krüger, but Geta's first consulship was in 205, his second in 208, while Caracalla's second was in 205, his third in 208.

[3] Imp. Antoninus A. Aurelio militi. Si ea condicione Auluzanus legata testamento praestari voluit, si cum focaria sua matreque eius moraretur, et per eum stetit, quominus voluntati testatoris pareret, cum sponte scripturae testamenti non obtemperaverit, ad petitionem non admittitur.

PP. VI id. Iul. Laeto II et Cereale conss.

[4] Imp. Alexander A. Liciniae. Legatum sive fideicommissum a patruo tuo relictum tibi sub condicione, si filio eius nupsisses, cum mortuo filio, priusquam matrimonium cum eo contraheres, condicio defecerit, nulla ratione tibi deberi existimas.

PP. k. Dec. Alexandro A. II et Marcello conss.

[5] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. et CC. Faustino. pr. Si uxorem tuam tempore nuptiarum in patria potestate fuisse monstretur, fideicommissi commodum ei relicti, cum nupserit, nullo alio diem eius cedere prohibente patri quaesitum non ambigitur. 1. Quod si a patre ante nuptias emancipata fuerit ac postea decesserit, superstite patre et marito ac liberis actionem fideicommissi sibi competentem ad heredes suos transmisit.

S. VI k. Febr. Sirmi CC. conss.

[6] Imp. Iustinianus A. Iohanni pp. pr. Cum quidam testamento condito libertatem suo servo dereliquit sub condicione, si suo heredi certum numerum solidorum praestet vel aliam quandam speciem vel vicarium servum, ille autem servus non in eodem loco constitutus, ubi etiam heres fuerat, herili testamento cognito properabat ad heredem cum ipso, quod iussus erat dare heredi, sed in medio latronum vel hostium incursione peremptum est quod portabat: quaerebatur inter antiquos, si praepeditur libertas, quia hoc dare servus non potest propter memoratum fortuitum casum. 1. Itaque veterum dubietate quiescente nobis placuit, ut et libertas omnimodo competat et commodum, quod heredi

[3] Emperor ANTONINUS Augustus to Aurelius, a soldier. If Auluzanus wished that the legacies bequeathed in his will be paid on condition that he (the recipient) reside with his concubine and her mother, and it was his doing that he did not respect the wishes of the testator, since he did not comply with the wording of the will of his own accord, he is not permitted to make a claim.

Posted July 10, in the consulship of Laetus, for the second time, and Cerealis (215).

[4] Emperor ALEXANDER Augustus to Licinia. When a legacy or a trust was left to you by your paternal uncle on the condition that you marry his son, since the son died before you married him, the condition has failed, and you have no reason to think that legacy or trust is owed to you.

Posted December 1, in the consulship of Alexander Augustus and Marcellus (226).[298]

[5] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti and the Caesars to Faustinus. pr. There is no doubt that, if it should be shown that your wife was in a father's power (patria potestas) at the time of your marriage, the benefit of a trust left to her "when she married" accrued to her father if no other reason prevented its becoming due at that time. 1. But if she had been emancipated by her father before marriage and subsequently died, leaving as survivors a father, husband, and children, she has passed on to her heirs the action on the trust for which she was eligible.

Written January 27, at Sirmium, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[6][299] Emperor JUSTINIAN Augustus to John, Praetorian Prefect. pr. A certain person in writing his will bequeathed manumission for his slave on the condition that he pay a fixed number of gold coins (solidi) to his heir, or (that he pay) some other specific item or a slave of a slave (vicarius). But since the slave was not in the same place as the heir, upon learning of the contents of his master's will he was hastening to the heir with the very thing he had been ordered to give to him, but en route what he was carrying was lost during an attack by bandits or enemies. It was debated among the ancients (antiqui) whether the manumission was blocked, because the slave was unable to give this thing (to the heir) owing to the aforementioned chance circumstances. 1. And so, as the hesitation of the ancients (veteres) subsides, We have decided both that the [298] Blume: "A supervening impossibility, as in this rescript, made the gift void, except in case of manumission and except when the fulfillment of the condition was defeated by the want of cooperation of another, whose cooperation was necessary – as where such other refused to marry the legatee."

[299] Combine with C. 6.27.5.

vel extraneo relinquitur, non abstrahatur. 2. Ex quacumque igitur causa impediatur, sive per heredem sive per eum, cui dare aliquid iussus est, sive per fortuitos casus, in libertatem quidem ipse omnimodo perveniat, nisi ipse servus noluit adimplere condicionem: obnoxius tamen constituatur post libertatem heredi vel ei cui dare iussus est, nisi et ipse oblatas pecunias non suscepit (quod enim semel repudiatum est ab eo, redintegrari minime concedimus), quatenus hoc quod dare iussus est omnimodo adimplere compellatur vel in ipso mancipio, si extat, vel in aestimatione eius non amplius quam in quindecim solidos imputanda, vel in alia re, si et ipsa appareat, vel si non existat, vera eius aestimatione praestanda.

D. prid. k. Mai. Constantinopoli post consulatum Lampadii et Orestis vv. cc. anno secundo.

[7] Idem A. Iohanni pp. pr. Si plures personae unam condicionem implere fuerint iussae, apud Ulpianum dubitabatur, utrumne omnes simul eandem facere debent, an singuli quasi soli implere eam compelluntur. 1. Videtur autem nobis unumquemque necessitatem habere condicionem implere et pro portione sibi contingente accipere, quidquid ex hoc commodum est, ut hi quidem, qui compleverint iussa, ad lucrum vocentur, qui autem neglexerint, sibi imputent, si ab huiusmodi commodo repellentur.

D. III k. Aug. Constantinopoli post consulatum Lampadii et Orestis vv. cc.

[8] …

XXXXVII De Usuris et Fructibus Legatorum vel Fideicommissorum

[1] Impp. Severus et Antoninus AA. Maximo. Legatorum seu fideicommissorum usuras ex eo tempore, quo lis contestata est, exigi posse manifestum est. sed et fructus rerum et mercedes servorum, qui ex testamento debentur, similiter praestari solent.

Proposita prid. k. Aug. Anullino et Frontone conss.

manumission shall be entirely valid and that the benefit which was bequeathed to the heir or to an outsider shall not be taken away. 2. For whatever reason, then, the (slave) was blocked, whether by the heir, by someone (else) to whom he was ordered to give something, or by chance circumstances, he himself, to be sure, shall absolutely arrive at manumission, except if the slave himself refused to fulfill the condition. Nevertheless, after manumission he shall be made liable to the heir or to the person to whom he was ordered to give something, unless even the latter himself did not accept the money when it was offered to him – for once he has rejected this We do not allow it to be claimed anew – to the extent that he shall be compelled to fulfill entirely that which he was ordered to give, either in terms of the slave (of a slave), if he is alive, or in terms of monetary value, which is not to be reckoned as more than 15 solidi, or in terms of the other object, if that is available, or, if not, by having to pay its true value.

Given April 30, at Constantinople, in the second post-consulate of the viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestes (532).[300]

[7] The same Augustus to John, Praetorian Prefect. pr. If more than one person has been ordered to fulfill a single condition, Ulpian hesitated as to whether all of them ought to do the same thing at the same time, or individuals are compelled to do this as though acting on their own (i.e., as though each was the only one obligated by the condition). 1. But it seems to Us that each is obliged to fulfill the condition and receive the share of the benefit due respectively to him. So those, at any rate, who carry out the instructions shall be eligible for this gain, but those who neglect them shall have only themselves to blame for being denied such a benefit.

Given July 30,[301] at Constantinople, in the post-consulate of the viri clarissimi Lampadius and Oreste (531).

[8] <A Greek constitution appears to have fallen out.>

Forty-Seventh Title Interest and Income from Legacies and Trusts

[1] Emperors S*EVERUS and* A*NTONINUS Augusti to Maximus.* It is clear that interest on legacies or trusts can be claimed from the time of joinder of issue (litis contestatio). But income (fructus) from property and the earnings of slaves that are owed in accordance with the terms of a will are also usually paid in a similar fashion.

Posted July 31, in the consulship of Anullinus and Fronto (199).

[300] The date is in fact 531, as Haloander and Krüger have shown.
[301] The precise day is uncertain: the alternative is July 29 (preferred by Lounghis et al.).

[2] Imp. Antoninus A. libertis Cassiani. pr. Adversus eos, qui sub obtentu legis Falcidiae legata morantur, notissimum est iuris auxilium. 1. Si igitur proposita stipulatione cavere cum satisdatione potestis vos restituturos, quanto amplius quam per eam legem licet acceperitis, iudex qui fideicommissis ius dicit solida vobis legata praestari iubebit. 2. Quod si satisdationem implere non poteritis, arbitro dato diem vobis praefiniet, intra quem altera parte cessante partibus suis fungetur. et si constiterit legi Falcidiae locum non esse, et usuras et fructus post litem contestatam percipietis.

PP. XVI k. Iun. duobus Aspris conss.

[3] Imp. Alexander A. Paterno. Si homines certi per fideicommissum tibi relicti fuerunt, post moram periculo debitoris fideicommissi fuerunt.

Proposita XII k. April. Iuliano et Crispino conss.

[4] Imp. Gordianus A. Dionysio. In legatis et fideicommissis fructus post litis contestationem, non ex die mortis sequuntur, sive in rem sive in personam agatur.

PP. non. Sept. Gordiano A. et Aviola conss.

XXXXVIII De Incertis Personis

[1] [Αὐτοκράτωρ Ἰουστινιανὸς Α.]. pr. ... Incertus ... 1. Καὶ ὅτι καλῶς γράφει ὁ θέλων οἱονδήποτε πόστουμον κληρονόμον· οὐ μὴν ἀλλὰ καὶ ληγάτον καὶ φιδικόμμισσον αὐτῷ καταλιμπάνει, ἐὰν δηλονότι οὐκ ἐκωλύετο αὐτοῦ κληρονομεῖν ἢ εἰ ἦν ἐν φύσει.

2. Καὶ ὅτι οὐ συγχωρεῖ κληρονόμους γράφεσθαι ἀφανεῖς, εἰ μὴ ἄρα κυοφορούμενος εἴη· ἐπὶ γὰρ τούτου τὴν τοῦ ὀνόματος αὐτοῦ χρείαν ἀναπληροῖ ἡ γαστὴρ ἡ τοῦτον φέρουσα καὶ ὁ πατήρ.

3. Καὶ περὶ τῶν πρὸς ἅπαξ τοῖς συγγενέσι καταλιμπανομένων καθ' ὁμάδα φιδικομμίσσων ἢ ληγάτων, εἰ μὴ ἐν ἑκατέρῳ καιρῷ (τυχὸν τῆς τελευτῆς) εὑρεθείη τις συγγενής, ἀλλὰ ἐν μόνῳ τῷ καιρῷ τῆς τελευτῆς ἐπιτεχθῇ

[2] Emperor ANTONINUS Augustus to the freedpersons of Cassianus. pr. The legal remedy (iuris auxilium) against those who delay paying legacies on the pretext of respecting the lex Falcidia is very well known.[302] 1. If, then, you are able to furnish a guarantee in the form of a stipulation together with a surety to the effect that you will return any amount that you receive in excess of what this statute permits, the judge with jurisdiction over trusts will order that the legacies be paid to you in their entirety. 2. But if you are not able to provide a surety, an arbitrator will be appointed who will set a date for you at whose expiry, if your opponents fail to comply, he will discharge his responsibility. And if it is determined that the lex Falcidia does not apply, you will receive both income and interest accruing in the wake of joinder of issue.

Posted May 17, in the consulship of the two Aspri (212).

[3] Emperor ALEXANDER Augustus to Paternus. If certain slaves were left to you as a trust, and their delivery is delayed, they are held at the risk of the one who owes the trust.

Posted March 21, in the consulship of Julian and Crispinus (224).

[4] Emperor GORDIAN Augustus to Dionysius. The income from legacies and trusts is paid from the time of joinder of issue, not from that of death, whether the suit is in rem or in personam.

Posted September 5, in the consulship of Gordianus Augustus and Aviola (239).

Forty-Eighth Title Uncertain Persons

[1][303] [Emperor JUSTINIAN Augustus] ... pr. An uncertain person ...[304] 1. (The constitution) also (states) that he is entitled to name whomever he wishes as a posthumous heir.[305] There is absolutely no doubt that he can also leave him either a legacy or a trust, unless it is plain that he was forbidden to inherit from him whether he was conceived or is already born.

2. And (it says) that it is not permitted to name uncertain heirs unless, after all, such heir is in the womb. For in this case the womb that bears him – as does his father – fills the need for a name.

3. And (it) concerns trusts and legacies that have been left, in a lump sum, to cognates (blood relatives) as a group, when at neither time – for example, at the time of the testator's death[306] – a blood relative is among the living, but just at [302] The lex Falcidia (40 BCE) ordained that one-quarter of an inheritance had to be reserved for the heir(s).

[303] 1–9, 11–14, 17–29 derive from Basilika 44.18.29. Krüger shows that this law of Justinian was in fact the only constitution in this title: see Nomoc. 2.1; Inst. 2.20.27.

[304] See Parat. ad Const. 2 and 3. A summary of this constitution is restored from a number of sources, including the sixth-century Nomocanon XIV Titulorum and Bas. 44.18.29.

[305] See Inst. 2.20.28; 3.9 pr.

[306] Blume: "Or ... at the time of executing the testament."

ἢ ἐγκυμονῆται. 4. Ἢ ἐὰν τοῖς ἐν καιρῷ διαθήκης συγγενέσι καταλείψῃ, ἐπιτεχθῶσι δὲ ἕτεροι, περὶ ὧν ἐν τῷ διατίθεσθαι οὐκ ἐνεθυμήθη. 5. Καὶ εἰ ὁ διαθέμενος πᾶσι τοῖς συγγενέσιν αὐτοῦ καταλείψει, πῶς οὐ κατὰ βαθμὸν οὐδὲ κατὰ τάξιν δεῖ καλεῖσθαι τοὺς συγγενεῖς, ἀλλὰ πάντας. 6. Καὶ εἰ εἴποι τοῖς ἐξ ἀδιαθέτου καλουμένοις συγγενέσι δοθῆναι, τίνες καλοῦνται.

7. Καὶ περὶ τοῦ, ἐάν τις τοῖς ἰδίοις ἀπελευθέροις ληγατεύσῃ, τίνες τὰ ληγάτα λαμβάνουσι. 8. Καὶ εἰ γενικῶς ληγατεύσας πᾶσι τοῖς ἀπελευθέροις ἐν τῇ διαθήκῃ ἰδικὸν ἕτερόν τι καταλείψῃ πρεσβεῖον τοῖς ἐν τῇ διαθήκῃ αὐτοῦ ἐλευθερωθεῖσιν ἢ ἐν κωδικέλλοις ἢ καὶ ἀγράφως, τι γίνεται.

9. Καὶ περὶ τοῦ, εἰ τῇ φαμιλίᾳ καταλειφθῇ πρεσβεῖον, μὴ ὑπόντων συγγενῶν ἢ γαμβροῦ ἢ νύμφης, πῶς καλοῦνται οἱ ἀπελεύθεροι.

10. Ἐάν τις ἢ τῇ ἱερᾷ συγκλήτῳ ἢ βουλευτηρίῳ πόλεως ἢ τάξει ὑπηρετουμένῃ ταῖς μεγάλαις ἀρχαῖς ἢ ταῖς ἐν ἐπαρχίαις ἢ τῷ τῶν ἰατρῶν ἢ διδασκάλων ἢ συνηγόρων σωματείῳ ἢ τοῖς στρατιώταις ἢ ὁμοτέχνοις ἢ τοῖς κληρικοῖς ἢ ἁπλῶς οἱῳδήποτε μὴ ἀπηγορευμένῳ σωματείῳ καταλείψῃ τι, ἔρρωται τὸ καταλειφθέν· καὶ εἰ μὲν ἁπλῶς τοῦ συστήματος ἢ τάγματος μνημονεύσει, πάντες ἀπαιτοῦσιν οἱ ἐν τῷ καιρῷ τῆς τελευτῆς αὐτοῦ εὑρισκόμενοι ἐν τῷ συλλόγῳ καὶ πρὸς τὸν ἀριθμὸν τῶν ποσώπων αὐτὸ διαιροῦνται, εἰ μὴ ἄρα ὁ διαθέμενος ἕκαστον αὐτῶν ῥητόν τι λαβεῖν διετάξατο, μηδενὸς περιεργαζομένου κατὰ τὴν παλαιὰν διάταξιν, εἰ ἀπὸ κέρτας ἀδμινιστρατίονος ἦν τὸ πρόσωπον ἢ μή.

11. Καὶ περὶ διαθεμένου κελεύσαντος ἐκ προτελευτῆς τοῦ τιμηθέντος τοῖς παισὶν αὐτοῦ ἢ ἐγγόνοις ἢ προεγγόνοις ἢ καὶ συγγενέσι δοθῆναι τὸ καταλειφθέν.

12. Καὶ εἰ μόνων υἱῶν μνημονεύσειε, πῶς αἱ θυγατέρες οὐδὲν ὠφελοῦνται. καὶ περὶ τοῦ, εἰ γενικῶς ὁ διατιθέμενος εἴποι προτελευτῶντος αὐτοῦ τοὺς ἐξ αὐτοῦ λαμβάνειν τὸ καταλειφθέν, πῶς τότε καὶ υἱοὺς καὶ θυγατέρας καὶ ἐγγόνους, καὶ ἐγγόνας καὶ προεγγόνους καὶ προεγγόνας καλεῖσθαι.

13. Καὶ εἰ ῥητῶς ἐπαγάγῃ τοὺς ἐξ αὐτοῦ προελθόντας καὶ τοὺς ἐφεξῆς λαμβάνειν, τίνες ἀπαιτεῖν δύνανται τὸ καταλειφθέν. 14. Τὸ αὐτὸ καὶ περὶ συγγενῶν. καὶ ταῦτα μὲν περὶ τῶν πρὸς ἅπαξ καταλιμπανομένων.

the point of his death was either on the cusp of being born or still in the womb. 4. Or if, at the time of the writing of the will, something is left to the blood relatives, but then others are born, of whom the testator has not taken account in his writing of the will. 5. And if the testator leaves something to all of his blood relatives they ought to be eligible not according to degree of relationship or in any particular order, but all of them equally. 6. And if he states that the inheritance should be given to those blood relatives eligible on intestacy (the constitution lays down) which ones are in fact eligible.

7. And concerning the situation in which someone leaves legacies to his freed-persons (it determines) which ones receive the legacies. 8. And if someone has made a general legacy to all of his freed-persons in his will but then leaves some other particular item as a bequest to those manumitted in the will, in codicils or even orally (it determines) what happens.

9. And concerning the situation in which a bequest is left to the household (familia) and there are no blood relatives, son-in-law, or daughter-in-law, the freedpersons shall be eligible.

10.[307] If someone bequeaths something to the Blessed Senate, to the council of his hometown, to an administrative staff which serves high-ranking officials (in the capital) or in the provinces, to an association of physicians, instructors, or trial attorneys, to soldiers, to workmen in the same trade, to clergy, or simply to any association that is not prohibited, the bequest shall be valid. And if anyone simply mentions a professional association or a legion, all those who are found to be in its number at the time of the testator's death shall make a claim and divide it up in proportion to the number of persons, unless perhaps the testator has assigned each one of them to take something fixed. Nor shall anyone be concerned, pursuant to the ancient constitution (palaia diataxis), if a person hails from a certain administrative staff or not.

11. And (the constitution provides for the situation) concerning the testator who, if his beneficiary predeceases him, orders what was bequeathed to him to be turned over to his surviving children, grandchildren, great-grandchildren, or blood relatives.

12. If mention is made only of sons, this does not benefit daughters. And concerning the situation in which the testator orders generally that if the beneficiary predeceases him his surviving offspring shall receive the bequest, (it ordains that) then sons, daughters, grandsons, granddaughters, great-grandsons and great-granddaughters shall be eligible.

13. And if he adds in particular that his offspring and their descendants shall receive something, (it provides as to) who can claim the bequest. 14. The same [307] §10 is found in Nomoc. 2.1.

15. Ἐὰν δὲ ἐνιαυσιαῖα ἢ κατὰ μῆνα ἢ καθ' ἡμέραν καταλείψῃ τοῖς ἰδίοις συγγενέσιν ὁ διαθέμενος, εἰ μὲν μηδὲν πλέον εἴπῃ, μόνοις τοῖς ἐν τῷ καιρῷ τῆς τελευτῆς αὐτοῦ συγγενέσιν ἕως ὅτε περίεισι δίδοσθαι τὸ καταλελειμμένον, ὥσπερ εἰ καὶ μὴ συγγενέσιν, ἀλλὰ τοῖς ἔκ τινος συστήματος ἢ τάγματος ἢ σωματείου κατέλειψε ταῦτα τὰ ἐνιαυσιαῖα ἢ μηνιαῖα ἢ ἡμερήσια ληγάτα· καὶ τότε γὰρ οἱ περιόντες μόνοι κατὰ τὸν καιρὸν τῆς τελευτῆς αὐτοῦ καλοῦνται καὶ ἐξ ἰσότητος διαιροῦνται τὸ καταλελειμμένον. 16. Εἰ δὲ συγγενέσι τις καταλιμπάνων ἐνιαυσιαῖα ἢ μηνιαῖα ἢ ἡμερήσια ληγάτα ἐπάγει καὶ τοῖς ἐξ αὐτῶν ταῦτα δίδοσθαι, εἰ προσθείη εἰς τὸ διηνεκές, διηνεκῆ τὴν δόσιν εἶναι καὶ μηδέποτε παύεσθαι. 17. Τὸ αὐτὸ καὶ ἐπὶ συνηγόροις κρατεῖ καὶ διδασκάλοις καὶ στρατιώταις.

18. Καὶ εἰ μηδαμοῦ τὸ διηνεκῶς εἴπῃ, ἀλλὰ τοῖς αὐτῶν βουληθείη δίδοσθαι. 19. Καὶ πότε μέχρι τρίτης διαδοχῆς τὸ γένος ἢ τάγμα καλεῖται πρὸς τὴν τοῦ καταλειφθέντος ἀπαίτησιν. 20. Καὶ εἰ ἀπελευθέροις ληγατεύσει, μὴ προσθήσει δὲ καὶ τοῖς ἐξ αὐτῶν ἢ προσθήσει. 21. Καὶ περὶ τοῦ, εἰ τελευτήσει ἐπὶ πάντων τῶν θεμάτων εἷς ἐξ αὐτῶν, τί γίνεται. 22. Κἂν διορίσηται, τί χρὴ λαμβάνειν ἕκαστον, ἢ μή, ἀλλὰ πᾶσιν ἅμα μίαν ποσότητα καταλείψῃ κελεύσας διηνεκῶς δίδοσθαι τὸ καταλειφθέν. 23. Καὶ εἰ μὴ προσθήσει τὸ διηνεκῶς δίδοσθαι.

24. Καὶ ὅτι ἀπελεύθερος ἀπελευθέρου οὐδέποτε πρὸς τὸ τοιοῦτον καλεῖται ληγάτον, εἰ μὴ ῥητῶς ὁ διαθέμενος τοῦτο παρεκελεύσατο.

25. Καὶ εἰ ἑκάστῳ τῶν πολιτῶν ῥητὴν ποσότητα κελεύσει διανέμεσθαι, τί γίνεται καὶ πῶς ῥυθμίζεται.

26. Καὶ περὶ τῶν διηνεκῶς ἀπαιτουμένων, καταλιμπανομένων δὲ ἐκκλησίαις, ξενῶσι ἢ πτωχείοις ἢ εὐαγέσιν οἴκοις ἢ τῷ κοινῷ τοῦ κλήρου παντὸς ἢ εἰς αἰχμαλώτων λύσιν ἢ αὐτοῖς τοῖς πτωχοῖς ἢ αἰχμαλώτοις.

27. Καὶ περὶ τοῦ, ἐάν τις εἴπῃ κληρονόμον αὐτοῦ γενέσθαι τὸν πρῶτον γινόμενον ὕπατον μετὰ τελευτὴν αὐτοῦ ἢ τὸν ἐρχόμενον εἰς τὸν τάφον αὐτοῦ ἢ τὸν ἐκδιδόντα τὴν θυγατέρα αὐτοῦ τῷ ἰδίῳ υἱῷ ἢ τὸν ἐπιγαμβρεύοντα αὐτῷ ἢ ἕτερόν τι τούτοις παραπλήσιον, πῶς ἀνυπόστατός ἐστι πανταχόθεν ἡ τοιαύτη ἔνστασις διὰ τὸ μὴ φέρεσθαι also holds for blood relatives. And the same for property that has been left in a lump sum.

15.[308] But if the testator leaves to his own blood relatives legacies to be paid on a yearly, monthly, or daily basis, if he says nothing more, the bequest shall be given only to those blood relatives who are living at the time of his death, in the same manner if he leaves legacies to be paid out on a yearly, monthly, or daily basis not to his blood relatives, but to the members of a professional association, legion, or (any other) association. For then too only those living at the time of his death shall be eligible and shall share in the bequest on an equal basis. 16. But if someone, in leaving to his blood relatives legacies to be paid on a yearly, monthly, or daily basis, orders that they shall be given also to their offspring, and adds that this shall be in perpetuity, the bequest shall be valid in perpetuity and shall never end. 17. The same point holds also for trial attorneys, instructors, and soldiers.

18. (The same is true) even if the testator at no point specifies "in perpetuity," but wishes (the bequest) to be given to their offspring. 19. And (the constitution lays down) when the blood-line or legion is eligible up to the third generation to claim the bequest. 20. (The same holds) also if he leaves a legacy to his freed-persons, whether or not he adds "also to their offspring." 21. The constitution lays down) concerning the situation in which, in all of these cases, what happens regarding "the offspring" if one of them dies. 22. And (it lays down what happens) if he determines what each one ought to take, or not, but he leaves one amount to all together, ordering the bequest to be given in perpetuity. 23. And (it lays down what happens) if he does not add that the bequest is to be given in perpetuity.

24. And (it lays down) that a freed-person of a freed-person shall never be eligible for such a legacy, unless the testator specially ordered this.

25. And if he orders a specific amount to be distributed to each of the citizens, (it lays down) what happens and how it is counted out.

26.[309] And (it lays down what happens) concerning claims made about property left in perpetuity to churches, guest-houses for pilgrims, poor-houses, religious institutions, the whole of a clerical order, for the ransoming of captives, or to the poor or captives themselves.

27. And (the constitution lays down) concerning the situation in which someone declares that his heir shall be the first person to become Consul after his death, the first to come to his tomb, the first who gives his daughter in marriage to the testator's son, the first who becomes the testator's son-in-law, or something else similar to these, that such an appointment of an heir shall be κύριον ὄνομα τοῦ κληρονόμου. ἀλλ' οὐδὲ ληγάτον τοιούτοις προσώποις καταλιμπανόμενον ἰσχύει.

[308] §§15 and 16 are found in Nomoc. 2.1.
[309] See Nomoc. 2.1.

28. Καὶ ὅτι ἐπίτροπος ἀφανέσιν οὐ δύναται δοθῆναι.

29. Καὶ ὅτι τὸ τοῖς πτωχοῖς καταλιμπανόμενον μὴ νομιζέσθω ἄδηλον.

XXXXVIIII Ad Senatus Consultum Trebellianum

[1] Impp. Severus et Antoninus AA. Probo. Si ex senatus consulto partem quartam hereditatis retinuisti et dodrantem fideicommissi restituisti, quod creditoribus hereditariis pro novem unciis praestiteris, a fideicommissario petere potes.

PP. xv k. April. Laterano et Rufino conss.

[2] Imp. Philippus A. et Philippus C. Iuliano. Ad eum, cui ex Trebelliano senatus consulto pars hereditatis restituitur, successionis onera seu legatorum praestationem pro competenti portione spectare indubitati iuris est.

PP. XVIII k. Nov. Peregrino et Aemiliano conss.

[3] Imppp. Carus Carinus et Numerianus AAA. Zotico. Si per fideicommissum hereditas rei publicae relicta est, ex Trebelliano senatus consulto, quod ab intestato quoque locum habet, quartae partis et fructus eius vobis restitutio competit.

Sine die et consule.

[4] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. et CC. Quintiano. Non iustam te gerere sollicitudinem per fideicommissum relictae portionis hereditatis perspicimus verentem, ne fructum amittas relicti fideicommissi, quoniam avia testatoris ex parte scripta heres et tibi rogata restituere calliditate ac fraude repudiavit, ut ad alium nepotem eundemque coheredem devolvatur portio, a quo tibi nominatim non fuerat fideicommissum relictum, et coacta suspectam hereditatem adire, priusquam pro herede gereret, rebus sit humanis exempta: cum invalid in every way because the actual name of the heir is not given. But not even a legacy left to such persons shall be valid.

28.[310] And (the constitution lays down) that a tutor cannot be given to uncertain persons.

29. And (the constitution lays down) that what is left to the poor shall not be deemed uncertain (i.e., as left to uncertain persons).

(528–529).

Forty-Ninth Title The Senatus Consultum Trebellianum[311]

[1] Emperors SEVERUS and ANTONINUS Augusti to Probus. If you kept a fourth part of the inheritance in accordance with the decree of the Senate and turned over three-quarters as a trust, you can claim from the trust-beneficiary what you paid to the creditors of the estate that was due on that three-fourths.

Posted March 18, in the consulship of Lateranus and Rufinus (197).

[2] Emperor PHILIP Augustus and PHILIP Caesar to Julian. It is undoubted law (indubitatum ius) that payment of the debts and legacies associated with an inheritance is the responsibility, in line with the appropriate share, of the person to whom a part of this is turned over, pursuant to the SC Trebellianum.

Posted October 15,[312] in the consulship of Peregrinus and Aemilianus (244).

[3] Emperors CARUS, CARINUS, and NUMERIAN Augusti to Zoticus. If an inheritance has been left to a town in the form of a trust, you have a claim that a one-quarter share, as well as the income (fructus) deriving from it, be turned over to you pursuant to the SC Trebellianum, which applies even on intestacy.

Without day and year.

[4][313] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti and the Caesars to Quintianus. We discern that you are needlessly concerned over the portion of an inheritance left to you as a trust, since you are worried that you will lose the benefit (fructus) from the trust bequeathed to you, because the grandmother of the testator, having been named part-heir and having been requested to turn over (the trust) to you, craftily and fraudulently rejected (her portion) so that it would pass to another grandson, her co-heir, who had not been specifically ordered to pay the trust to you: and when compelled to enter upon

[310] See Inst. 2.2.0.27.

[311] See D. 36.1. The SC Trebellianum, passed in 56 CE, regulated trusts requiring an heir to turn over an estate to a third party.

[312] The precise day is uncertain: the alternative is October 20.

[313] Combine with C. 6.26.6.

divo Antonino parenti nostro deberi etiam a substitutis fideicommissum contemplatione iudicii testatoris quasi tacite ab his repetitum iam dudum placuerit. neque enim quartae retentionem, quam illa quae repudiaverit hereditatem, adire coacta suspectam retinere non potuit, timere debes.

S. VI id. Iul. Philippopoli AA. conss.

[5] Idem AA. et CC. Verissimo. pr. Et sine scriptura per fideicommissum hereditas recte relinquitur. 1. Igitur si te uxor tua et privignum suum in discrimine mortis constituta designavit velle successionem obtinere, usque ad dodrantem eius voluntatem ratam servari convenit, cum intestato ei succedentes de restituendo fideicommisso conventos ultra quartam (aere alieno deducto), quam penes eos sententia senatus consulti relinqui praecepit, tantum obtinere posse praestiterit.

S. V k. Mai. Sirmi CC. conss.

[6] Imp. Zeno A. Dioscuro pp. pr. Iubemus, quotiens pater vel mater, filio seu filiis, filia seu filiabus ex aequis partibus vel inaequis heredibus institutis, invicem seu simpliciter quosdam ex his aut quendam rogaverit, qui prior sine liberis decesserit, portionem hereditatis suae superstiti seu superstitibus restituere, ut modis omnibus retenta quarta pro auctoritate Trebelliani senatus consulti, non per imputationem redituum, licet hoc testator rogaverit vel iusserit, sed in ipsis rebus hereditariis, dodrans restituatur. 1. Idemque in retinenda legis Falcidiae portione obtinere iubemus, et si pater vel mater filio seu filia institutis (sicut supra dictum est) heredibus rogaverit eos easve nepotibus vel neptibus, pronepotibus vel proneptibus suis ac deinceps restituere hereditatem.

1a. In supra dictis autem casibus fideicommissorum servandorum satisdationem cessare iubemus, si non specialiter eandem satisdationem testator exigi disposuerit et cum pater vel mater secundis existimant nuptiis non abstinendum: in his etenim duobus casibus, id est the inheritance (she claimed was) suspect (of insolvency), but before she took action as heir, she died. (Your concerns are groundless) because Our predecessor (parens) the deified Antoninus (Septimius Severus) long ago decided that a trust was owed even by substitute heirs because out of regard for the wishes of the testator it was claimed from them as if implicitly ordered.[314] Nor ought you to be concerned over the retention of the one-fourth share, which she who had rejected the inheritance, once compelled to enter upon it could not retain, since (she claimed it was) suspect.

Written July 10, at Philippopolis, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[5] The same Augusti and Caesars to Verissimus. pr. Even without a written document an inheritance is validly bequeathed in the form of a trust. 1. Therefore if your wife indicated at the time of her death that she wanted you and her stepson to receive the inheritance, it is a settled principle that her wishes shall be confirmed and respected up to the limit of three-quarters, since she brought it about that her intestate successors, responsible for turning over the trust beyond the one-quarter, after deduction of debts, that the rule of the senatorial decree instructs shall be left to them, could only retain so much.

Written April 27, at Sirmium, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[6] Emperor Zeno Augustus to Dioscurus, Praetorian Prefect. pr. We ordain that, whenever a father or mother has appointed a son or sons, a daughter or daughters heirs for equal or unequal shares and asks certain ones or one among them in turn or unconditionally, should they predecease the others without children of their own, to turn over his or her share of the inheritance to the surviving sibling(s), the one-quarter shall be in every way held back in accordance with authoritative the rule of the SC Trebellianum without the accrual of income, even if the testator asked or ordered this, but regarding the very property of the inheritance three-quarters shall be turned over. 1. We order the same to hold in keeping back the portion (i.e., one-fourth) of the lex Falcidia, also if the father or mother has appointed a son or daughter as heir (just as is said above) and asks them to turn over the inheritance to their grandsons or granddaughters, great-grandsons or great-granddaughters, and so on.

1a. In the above-mentioned situations however We order that no security (satisdatio) need be given for the purpose of preserving the trusts,[315] unless the testator has specifically instructed that said security be demanded and when the father or mother believes that they should not refrain from a new marriage.

[314] This law, actually a rescript of Severus and Caracalla, does not survive, but is cited at Ulp. D. 30.74.

[315] Blume: "Security was ordinarily required in such cases to insure the fulfillment of the trust, unless the testator directed the contrary."

cum testator specialiter satisdari voluerit vel cum secundis se pater vel mater matrimoniis iunxerint, necesse est, ut eadem satisdatio pro legum ordine praebeatur.

2. Sin autem is, qui fideicommissaria restitutione gravatus est, uno filio superstite vel nepote ex filio seu ex filia nato vel pronepote vel postumo relicto decesserit, non videtur extitisse condicio et ideo deficit fideicommissi petitio.

3. Illud etiam admonemus ea, quae de Falcidiae portione non per reditus, sed per ipsas res hereditarias retinenda et de satisdatione fideicommissorum (sicut supra dictum est) concedenda diximus, non ulterius quam in his personis et casibus, quorum superius mentio facta est, oportere produci.

PP. k. Sept. Constantinopoli Eusebio cons.

[7] Imp. Iustinianus A. Iohanni pp. pr. Sancimus licentiam esse etiam soli tutori recte fieri fideicommissi nomine universitatis restitutionem, quod pupillo relictum est, et sine onere fideiussionis, ubi tamen pupillus fari non possit vel abesse noscitur, ne, dum nimia subtilitate circa res utimur pupillares, ipsa subtilitas ad perniciem eorum revertatur.

1. Idemque iuris esse oportet, et si furioso fideicommissaria debeatur hereditas, ut restitutio curatori eius soli, nomine scilicet furiosi, celebretur. quis enim sensus, quae vox certa furioso esse intellegitur, cum in utroque casu restituentes plenissimam consequantur ex nostra lege securitatem? 1a. Hoc eodem observando, et si ipsi pupilli vel furiosi restitutione gravati sunt.

1b. Cum autem aliquis hereditatem restituere iussus est et dolo malo vel post litem contestatam vel antea sese contumaciter celaverit, vel si suppositus fideicommissariae restitutioni, antequam restitueret hereditatem, ab hac luce subtractus est nullo herede vel successore existente, vel si fideicommissarius, cui restituta est ex Trebelliano hereditas, alii per fideicommissum restituere iussus fuerit res hereditarias: quemadmodum actionum translatio celebretur in tribus istis casibus, apud veteres dubitabatur: et Domitius Ulpianus constituendum esse super his putavit. 1c. Sancimus itaque, ut, sive per contumaciam afuerit is, cui restitutio imposita est, sive morte praeventus nullo relicto successore

For in these two situations, that is, when the testator specifically wishes security be given or when the father or mother enters a subsequent marriage, it is necessary that this security be given in accordance with statutory rules.

2. But if, however, he who has become burdened with the responsibility of turning over the trust dies leaving behind a surviving child, grandchild through a son or a daughter, a great-grandchild, or a posthumous child, the condition is deemed to remain unfulfilled and so the claim on the trust fails.

3. We also make the point that what We have said as to the need to retain for the Falcidian portion not the income but only the property of the inheritance itself, and the need to disallow the giving of security for trusts (as is said above), ought not to be applied any further than in regard to those persons and situations of which mention is made above.

Posted September 1, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Eusebius (489).

[7] Emperor Justinian Augustus to John, Praetorian Prefect. pr. We ordain that it shall be permitted lawfully to turn over even to a tutor alone an entire inheritance left in the form of a trust, which has been bequeathed to a minor ward, even without the burden of a surety (fideiussio), provided nevertheless the ward is not (yet) capable of speech or is known to be abroad. The point is that, while we make too much use of complex rules regarding the property of minor wards, this very complexity not redound to their detriment.

1. And the same rule ought to hold even if the inheritance in the form of a trust is left to a lunatic (furiosus), that it be turned over to his curator alone, obviously in the name of the lunatic. For what form of comprehension, what sure sense is to be ascribed to a lunatic, when in both situations those making the transfer enjoy a very full protection under Our law? 1a. This same rule shall be observed, even if the minor wards or lunatics have themselves been burdened with the (obligation to make the) transfer.

1b. When, moreover, anyone who has been ordered to turn over an inheritance either after or before joinder of issue obstinately, or through deceit (dolus malus), conceals himself, if he who was obligated to turn over the trust, before he transferred the inheritance, has died, leaving no heir or successor on intestacy, or if the trust-beneficiary to whom the inheritance has been turned over pursuant to the SC Trebellianum has himself been ordered to turn over to another person as a trust the property in the inheritance, in what way the transfer of actions would take place in these three situations was the object of discussion among the ancients (veteres). And Domitius Ulpianus thought that imperial legislation was required on these subjects. 1c. So We lay down that whether the person under an obligation to make the transfer is absent through fuerit, sive a primo fideicommissario in secundum translatio celebrari iussa est, ipso iure utiles actiones transferantur.

D. x k. Nov. Constantinopoli Lampadio et Oreste vv. cc. conss.

[8] Idem A. Iohanni pp. pr. Quidam testamento condito iussit heredem omnem hereditatem quam ei dereliquit alii restituere, speciale autem fideicommissum alteri adscripsit. et quaerebatur, specialis fideicommissarius id quod ei derelictum est a quo consequi debeat, utrumne ab herede, ut post retentionem eius alias res universitatis fideicommissarius accipiat, an una cum aliis rebus oporteat et hoc generali fideicommissario adgregari, ut ipse speciali fideicommissario hoc tradat, sive in rebus sive in pecuniis sit fideicommissum. 1. Sancimus itaque totam quidem substantiam secundum senatus consulti Trebelliani auctoritatem restitui generali fideicommissario, illum autem speciali fideicommissario id quod ei derelictum est dependere.

D. xv k. Nov. Constantinopoli post consulatum Lampadii et Orestis vv. cc. anno secundo.

L Ad Legem Falcidiam

[1] Impp. Severus et Antoninus AA. Prisco. Scire debes omissa Falcidia, quo pleniorem fidem portionis restituendae exhiberes, non videri plus debito solutum esse.

obstinacy, has died with no successor surviving, or a transfer has been ordered to take place from one trust-beneficiary to another, by the very operation of law analogous actions (utiles actiones) shall be transferred.[316]

Given October 23, at Constantinople, in the consulship of the viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestes (530).[317]

[8] Emperor JUSTINIAN Augustus to John, Praetorian Prefect. pr. A certain person made a will and ordered that his heir turn over to another the entire inheritance that he had left to him, but added a particular provision for a trust for yet another person. And it used to be asked from whom the beneficiary of the particular trust ought to receive that which had been bequeathed to him, whether from the heir, so that after its deduction the beneficiary of the general trust receive the other property, or, no matter if the particular trust should consist of property or of cash, this too ought to be bundled together with that other property for the beneficiary of the general trust, so that he himself hand it over to the beneficiary of the particular trust. 1. So We ordain that the entire estate, in fact, in accordance with the authoritative rule of the SC Trebellianum, shall be turned over to the beneficiary of the general trust, but that he shall pay out to the beneficiary of the particular trust that which has been bequeathed to the latter.

Given October 18, at Constantinople, in the second post-consulate of the viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestes (532).

Fiftieth Title On the Lex Falcidia[318]

[1] Emperors SEVERUS and ANTONINUS Augusti to Priscus. You ought to know that, having omitted (your claim to) the (one-fourth share provided by the lex) Falcidia, to the extent that you display a fuller faith in restoring the portion

[316] Blume: "A trust might at times be detrimental rather than beneficial for the cestui que trust [i.e., the beneficiary], because of the debts that might be against it. It was therefore doubted whether the guardian of a child unable to speak or absent, or a curator for an insane person, was able to accept the trust for such child or insane person. The doubt was resolved in favor of the proposition, for the reason, as Justinian says, not to give such power would often be detrimental to the ward. The parties required to deliver such trust were accordingly authorized in such cases to turn it over to the guardian or curator, and were, upon such delivery, lawfully released from their obligation."

[317] The date is uncertain: possibly October 18, 531 (or 532). Lounghis et al. give October 18, 531.

[318] See D. 35.2; Inst. 2.22. The lex Falcidia, enacted in 40 BCE, required that the heirs receive at least one-fourth of the estate of the testator, or that each individual heir receive one-fourth of his or her share. If more was bequeathed in legacies and trusts, such bequests were reduced proportionally so that the heirs would still receive the quarter share of the estate.

PP. III id. Mai. Laterano et Rufino conss.

[2] Idem AA. Sanctiano. Falcidiae rationem adversus omnes pro modo legatorum et fideicommissorum locum habere certi et explorati iuris est.

PP. k. Iul. Laterano et Rufino conss.

[3] Imp. Alexander A. Hermagorae. Etiamsi tacitum fideicommissum heredem administrasse apparuerit, legata tamen seu fideicommissa, quae testamento relicta sunt, praestanda esse ambigi non oportet, ad eum videlicet modum, quem lex Falcidia patitur, cum quartam, quae aufertur heredi, qui contra legem fidem suam obtulit, legatariis proficere non placuit.

PP. id. Oct. Alexandro A. cons.

[4] Idem A. Philetiano. Et in legatis principi datis legem Falcidiam locum habere merito divo Hadriano placuit.

PP. V k. Ian. Alexandro A. cons.

[5] Idem A. Samosatae. Si mortis causa immodicas donationes in sororem tuam matrem contulisse probare potes, legis Falcidiae ratione secundum constitutionem divi Severi avi mei uti potes.

PP. XV k. Nov. Maximo II et Aeliano conss.

[6] Idem A. Secundinae. In ponenda ratione legis Falcidiae omne aes alienum deducitur, etiam quod ipsi heredi mortis tempore debitum fuerit, quamvis aditione hereditatis confusae sint actiones. 1. Omnia autem legata, quamvis in operibus publicis conficiendis statuisque ponendis data sint, ad contributionem dodrantis pro rata suae cuiusque quantitatis revocantur. 2. Nec si quid ultro solidum heres praestiterit aut perfecerit, legitimae computationi praeiudicatur.

(bequeathed as legacies), no more than what was owed is deemed to have been paid.[319]

Posted March 13, in the consulship of Lateranus and Rufinus (197).

[2] The same Augusti to Sanctianus. It is certain and established law that the Falcidian portion applies against everyone in proportion to their legacies and trusts (fideicommissa).

Posted July 1, in the consulship of Lateranus and Rufinus (197).

[3] Emperor ALEXANDER Augustus to Hermagoras. Even if it appears that the heir has paid out a tacit trust,[320] still it must not be doubted that the legacies or trusts that have been left in the will must be provided, but up to the amount that the lex Falcidia allows, since it has been decided that the fourth share, which is taken away from the heir who offered his faith in violation of the law, does not benefit the legatees.[321]

Posted October 15, in the consulship of Alexander Augustus (222).

[4] The same Augustus to Philetianus. It has been rightly decided by the deified Hadrian that the lex Falcidia applies even for legacies given to the Emperor.

Posted December 28, in the consulship of Alexander Augustus (222).

[5] The same Augustus to Samosata. If you can prove that your mother provided your sister excessive gifts in contemplation of her death, you can use the rule of the lex Falcidia in accordance with a constitution of the deified Severus, my grandfather.

Posted October 18, in the consulship of Maximus, for the second time, and Aelianus (223).

[6] The same Augustus to Secundina. pr. In applying the rule of the lex Falcidia, all debt is deducted, even what is owed to the heir himself at the time of death, although the rights of action when the inheritance is entered are merged. 1. All legacies, however, although they may have been given for building public works or erecting statues, are recalled for the three-fourths limit in proportion to each one's amount. 2. Nor is the lawful computation prejudiced if the heir has offered or performed anything completely of his own accord.

[319] As Blume points out, the heir has followed the instructions of the will and paid legacies in excess of three-fourths of the estate, or of his or her share of the estate. This payment cannot be called back. The mechanism for reducing the legacies came when the heir was sued for the legacies: the heir could oppose a defense, the exceptio legis Falcidiae.

[320] A tacit trust was an agreement between the testator and the heir to provide a legacy to a person not capable of receiving it; such a trust was legally void.

[321] In some circumstances, as Blume points out, the portion taken from the heir was confiscated by the Treasury.

S. v k. Ian. Maximo II et Aeliano conss.

[7] Idem A. Pomponio. In testamento quidem militis ius legis Falcidiae cessat. sed ea, quae ad vos pertinentia defunctus tenuit, bonorum eius videri minime possunt et ideo recte rationem eorum ut aeris alieni haberi desiderabitis.

PP. k. Mai. Alexandro II et Marcello conss.

[8] Idem A. Aurelio. pr. Irritum quidem propterea testamentum fratris tui esse non potest, quod ex causa fideicommissi obligatus fuit, ut, si sine liberis prior decederet, paternam tibi hereditatem redderet. 1. Sed licet te heredem scripserit, in ponenda tamen legatorum ratione, quibus te oneratum esse suggeris, fideicommissum debitum aeris alieni loco deduci oportet insuperque in residuo legis Falcidiae beneficium vindicabis.

PP. id. Sept. Maximo II et Paterno conss.

[9] Imp. Gordianus A. Mestriano. Error facti quartae ex causa fideicommissi non retentae repetitionem non impedit. is autem, qui sciens se posse retinere universum restituit, condictionem non habet: quin etiam, si ius ignoraverit, cessat repetitio.

PP. XV k. Nov. Pio et Pontiano conss.

[10] Idem A. Diogenio. Quamquam pater tuus fratrem tuum rogaverit, ut, si sine liberis diem suum fungeretur, portionem hereditatis tibi restitueret, tamen intestato eodem diem suum functo id, quod beneficio legis Falcidiae habere potuit, ad successorem intestati pertinere ideoque non immerito sororem tuam, quae simul tecum ab intestato ei successit, emolumenti quod retineri potuit portionem sibi vindicare manifestum est.

PP. V id. Nov. Gordiano A. II et Pompeiano conss.

[11] Idem A. Maximae. Si, ut adlegas, pater tuus eam portionem, ex qua te fecit heredem, fratribus tuis restituere iussit certisque speciebus pro Falcidia praecepit esse contentam, auxilium legis Falcidiae, quod imploras, apud suum iudicem non prohiberis flagitare.

PP. VII k. Nov. Arriano et Papo conss.

Written December 28, in the consulship of Maximus, for the second time, and Aelianus (223).

[7] The same Augustus to Pomponius. In a soldier's will the principle of the lex Falcidia is inapplicable. But those things belonging to you (plural) that the decedent held cannot be seen as his part of his estate, and for that reason you will correctly desire that they be reckoned as a debt.

Posted May 1, in the consulship of Alexander, for the second time, and Marcellus (226).

[8] The same Augustus to Aurelius. pr. Your brother's will cannot be invalid for the reason that he was obligated on the basis of a trust to restore his inheritance from his father to you if he died first without children. 1. But although he named you as heir, in the calculation of the legacies with which you state that you have been burdened, a trust that he owed must be deducted as a debt, and in addition you will claim the benefit of the lex Falcidia for the rest.

Posted September 13, in the consulship of Maximus, for the second time, and Paternus (233).

[9] Emperor Gordian Augustus to Mestrianus. An error of fact does not impede seeking back the fourth not retained on the basis of a trust. However, a person who turned over the whole property although knowing he could retain it does not have a claim for restitution. Indeed, if he did not know the law, his (right to) reclaim is not applicable.

Posted October 18, in the consulship of Pius and Pontianus (238).

[10] The same Augustus to Diogenius. Although your father asked your brother to restore his share of the inheritance to you if he should finish his days without children, nevertheless, when the same person died intestate, it is manifest that what he could have had by the benefit of the lex Falcidia goes to his successor on intestacy, and that for that reason your sister, who along with you has succeeded him on intestacy, does not wrongly claim for herself the portion of the gain that could have been retained.

Posted November 9, in the consulship of Gordian Augustus, for the second time, and Pompeianus (241).

[11] The same Augustus to Maxima. If, as you allege, your father ordered you to turn over to your brothers the share of which he made you heir and instructed that you be content with certain items (species) as the Falcidian share, you are not prohibited from demanding before their (suum) judge the aid that you implore from the lex Falcidia.

Posted October 26, in the consulship of Arrianus and Papus (243).

[12] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. Iustino. In donationibus inter virum et uxorem factis legem Falcidiam habere locum, quando fideicommissi partibus funguntur, nonnullis iuris placitis comprehensum est.

PP. XVI k. Iul. ipsis AA. IIII et III conss.

[13] Idem AA. et CC. Zetho. pr. Si ea, cuius filium tuum servum significas, ex iudicio defuncti, quem dicis fideicommissariam libertatem ei reliquisse, aliquid consecuta est, ad restituendam fideicommissariam libertatem non immerito obnoxia constituta debet urgueri. 1. Nam fideicommissum ei relictum usque ad eum modum potest petere, quod deducto pretio servorum, quos fuerat rogata manumittere, relictorum substantia patitur.

S. V k. Mai. Heracliae AA. conss.

[14] Idem AA. et CC. Faustinae. Licet adieris patris hereditatem et confusione pro parte qua eidem successeris extinguatur actio, quam tibi competere eo, quod ex administratione tutelae multa eum debuisse contendis, pro residuis tamen partibus coheredes convenire non prohiberis et fundum a te relictum eatenus, quod deducta quarta residui substantia patitur, praestare necesse habes.

D. VI k. Oct. Viminacii AA. conss.

[15] Idem AA. et CC. Pomponio. Si praediorum dotis apud te iure remanentis instrumenta verbis precariis vel testamento vel codicillis uxor tibi dari mandavit, eius iudicium successores implere compellentur, cum instrumentis praediorum domino relictis Falcidiae nulla potest intervenire quaestio.

Supposita XVI k. Febr. Sirmi CC. conss.

[16] Idem AA. et CC. Diomedi. Successores legata vel fideicommissa, si aes alienum hereditarium defuncti substantiae fines occupaverit, Falcidiae legis iussio peti, item Trebelliani senatus consulti praeceptum exigi non concedit.

[12] Emperors Diocletian and Maximian to Justin. It has been understood in several legal decisions that the lex Falcidia applies in gifts made between a husband and wife, when they fulfill the function of a trust.

Posted June 16, in the consulship of the Augusti themselves, for the fourth time and for the third time, respectively (290).

[13] The same Augusti and the Caesars to Zethus. pr. If that woman, of whom you indicate your son is a slave, has gained something as a result of the judgment of the deceased, who you say left him liberty in a trust (fideicomissaria libertas), not incorrectly should she, having been established as liable to do this, be urged to provide the liberty requested in the trust. 1. For he can seek the trust left to her to the extent that the value of the remaining property allows it after deducting the price for the slaves whom she was asked to manumit (consistent with the lex Falcidia).

Written May 11, at Heraclea, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[14] The same Augusti and Caesars to Faustina. Although you have entered upon your share of your father's inheritance and the right of action, which you contend is available to you for the reason that he owed you a great deal as the result of his administration of your tutorship, is extinguished as a result of its merging with the share for which you have succeeded that person, even so you are not prohibited from suing the co-heirs for the remaining shares, and you are required to turn over the farm you were charged to provide to the extent that the value of the remaining inheritance allows after deducting the (Falcidian) fourth part.

Given September 27,[322] at Viminacium, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[15] The same Augusti and Caesars to Pomponius. If your wife ordered the documents of estates belonging to a dowry lawfully remaining with you to be given to you by a trust directive (precariis verbis), or in a will or codicil, her successors will be compelled to implement her decision, since no question of the lex Falcidia can intervene when the documents of estates have been left to their owner.

Submitted[323] January 17, at Sirmium, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[16] The same Augusti and Caesars to Diomedes. An order based on the lex Falcidia does not allow heirs to be petitioned for legacies or trusts, if debt has occupied the limits of the deceased's property, nor does the precept of the SC Trebellianum[324] allow them to be exacted.

[322] Mommsen emends the date to August 27, 293. Connolly suggests 294 instead.

[323] In this and other texts, Krüger replaces supposita in the manuscripts with scripta, "written."

[324] The SC Trebellianum of 56 CE applied the same rules as applied under the civil law to enforce obligations connected with inheritances received through trusts.

S. XVI k. Febr. Sirmi CC. conss.

[17] Idem AA. et CC. Gaio. A coheredibus relicta legata, quatenus modus lege Falcidia praestitutus patitur, posse petere certissimi iuris est.
Supposita v k. Nov. Anchiali CC. conss.

[18] Imp. Iustinianus A. Iohanni pp. pr. Si quis quadringentorum forte solidorum habens substantiam iusserit heredem non aliter adire hereditatem, nisi prius trecentos octuaginta solidos cuidam persolvat vel aliam quantitatem, quae diminuere Falcidiae rationem potest, sancimus heredem, si adierit, legis Falcidiae beneficio sustentatum repleri quidem quod ad Falcidiam deest, et prius eo dato vel retento (sive una datio est, quae celebrari disposita fuerit, sive in multas dividitur personas) praefatae legis immutilatum habere beneficium. 1. Si enim, cum mortis causa donatio procedat et haec modum legis Falcidiae excedat, heres post aditionem repetit eam pecuniam, quae ultra modum Falcidiae corporaliter quidem data est, lege autem in patrimonio testatoris permansit, quare non in praesenti casu et viventibus et morientibus providemus, et eorum ultima elogia conservantes et commodum hereditarium non minuentes?
D. k. Nov. Constantinopoli post consulatum Lampadii et Orestis vv. cc.

[19] Idem A. Iohanni pp. Cum certum sit heredem, qui plenam fidem testatori exhibet, in solidum legata dependentem non posse postea rationem legis praetendentem Falcidiae repetitione uti, quia videtur voluntatem testatoris sequi, iubemus hoc simili modo firmum haberi, et si cautionem super integra legatorum solutione fecerit: quod veteribus legibus in ambiguitatem deductum est. in utroque etenim casu, id est sive solverit sive super hoc cautionem fecerit, aequitatis ratio similia suadere videtur.
D. XV k. Nov. Constantinopoli post consulatum Lampadii et Orestis vv. cc. anno secundo.

Submitted January 17, at Sirmium, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[17] The same Augusti and Caesars to Gaius. It is most certainly the law that one can seek legacies left to be paid by co-heirs to the extent that the limit established by the lex Falcidia allows.

Submitted October 28, at Anchialus, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[18] Emperor Justinian Augustus to John, Praetorian Prefect. pr. If anyone having property of say 400 solidi orders that the heir enter the inheritance only if he previously pays 380 solidi to some person, or another amount that can reduce the calculation of the Falcidian share, We ordain that the heir, if he enters upon the inheritance, being sustained by the benefit of the lex Falcidia, be recompensed as to what is missing for the Falcidian share, and, when this amount has been first given or retained – whether it is one transfer that has been ordered to be performed, or whether it is divided among many persons – he have the benefit of the aforementioned law undiminished. 1. For if, when a gift in anticipation of death should proceed and this exceed the limit of the lex Falcidia, the heir, after entering upon the inheritance, seeks the money back that has been physically given in excess of the limit of the lex Falcidia but has by law remained in the testator's patrimony, why do We not in the present case provide for both the living and the dead, both preserving the latter group's last pronouncements and not diminishing the advantage of the inheritance?

Given November 1, at Constantinople, in the post-consulate of the viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestes (531).

[19] The same Augustus to John, Praetorian Prefect. Because it is certain that the heir who exhibits complete faithfulness to the testator by paying out the legacies in their entirety is not afterwards able to use the right in the lex Falcidia to seek them back by asserting the principle of the law, since he is seen as following the will of the testator, We order that this be considered firm in a similar manner if he has provided a written promise (cautio) for the entire payment of the legacies; in the old laws this has been ambiguous. For in each case, that is, whether he pays or provides a promise for this, a consideration of fairness seems to persuade similar solutions.

Given November 1, at Constantinople, in the second post-consulate of the viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestes (532).

LI De Caducis Tollendis

[1] Imp. Iustinianus A. senatui urbis Constantinopolitanae et urbis Romae. pr. Et nomen et materiam caducorum ex bellis ortam et auctam civilibus, quae in se populus Romanus movebat, necessarium duximus, patres conscripti, in pacificis nostri imperii temporibus ab orbe Romano recludere, ut, quod belli calamitas introduxit, hoc pacis lenitas sopiret. 1. Et quemadmodum in multis capitulis lex Papia ab anterioribus principibus emendata fuit et per desuetudinem abolita, ita et a nobis circa caducorum observationem invidiosum suum amittat vigorem, qui et ipsis prudentissimis viris displicuit, multas invenientibus vias, per quas caducum ne fieret. 1a. Sed et ipsis testamentorum conditoribus sic gravissima caducorum observatio visa est, ut et substitutiones introducerent, ne fiant caduca et, si facta sint, apud certas personas recurrere disponerent, vias recludentes, quas lex Papia posuit in caducis: quod et nos fieri concedimus. 1b. Et cum lex Papia ius antiquum, quod ante eam in omnibus simpliciter versabatur, suis machinationibus et angustiis circumcludens solis parentibus et liberis testatoris usque ad tertium gradum, si scripti fuerant heredes, suum imponere iugum erubuit ius antiquum intactum eis conservans, nos omnibus nostris subiectis sine differentia personarum concedimus. 1c. Cum igitur materiam et exordium caducorum lex Papia ab aditionibus, quae circa defunctorum hereditates procedebant, sumpsit et ideo non a morte testatoris, sed ab apertura tabularum dies cedere legatorum senatus consulta, quae circa legem Papiam introducta sunt, concesserunt, ut, quod in medio deficiat, hoc caducum fiat, primum hoc corrigentes et antiquum statum renovantes sancimus omnes habere licentiam a morte testatoris adire hereditates similique modo legatorum vel fideicommissorum pure vel in diem relictorum diem a morte testatoris cedere.

2. Et cum triplici modo ea, quae in ultimis elogiis relinquuntur, contingebat deficere, consentaneum est et tempora eorum et nomina

Fifty-First Title Abolishing Escheated Property[325]

[1] Emperor JUSTINIAN Augustus to the Senate of the City of Constantinople and of the City of Rome. pr. We have considered it necessary, Conscript Fathers, to close off from the Roman world, in the peaceful times of Our empire, both the name and the substance of escheated property, which has arisen and been increased as a result of the civil wars that the Roman people waged against itself, so that the gentleness of peace might assuage what the calamity of war has introduced. 1. And just as the lex Papia[326] was amended in many chapters by previous emperors and abolished from desuetude, in the same way, in connection with the procedure for escheated property (caduca) it should, as a result of Our efforts, lose its invidious vigor, which was not approved of by even the wisest men themselves, who found many ways to avoid property becoming (or being classified as) escheated. 1a. But even to the very writers of wills the procedure for escheated property has been seen to be so profoundly severe that they both include substitutions (for heirs), so that property not become escheated, and, if it has became so, make dispositions for it to return to certain persons, closing off the paths that the lex Papia established in the case of escheated property, which We also allow to happen. 1b. And since the lex Papia, though hemming in with its technicalities (machinationes) and restrictions the ancient law, which before it functioned simply in all matters, blushed to impose its yoke only regarding the ascendants and descendants of the testator up to the third degree, if they had been named as heirs, preserving the ancient law intact for them, We concede it (i.e., the ancient law) to all Our subjects without distinguishing among persons. 1c. Therefore since the lex Papia took its material and beginning of escheated property from the entering that proceeded in connection with the inheritances of the deceased, and, for that reason, the decrees of the Senate, which were introduced concerning the lex Papia, allowed (the time for) legacies to become due (to be calculated) not from the death of the testator, but from the opening of the will, so that, what might be flawed in the meantime might become escheated, first to correct this and to renew the ancient legal regime We ordain that everyone have permission to enter inheritances from (the time of) the death of the testator, and in a similar fashion that legacies or trusts left unconditionally (pure) or for a definite date (in diem) become due from the death of the testator.

2. And since it happened that what is left in final dispositions failed in three ways, it is proper (consentaneum) to make manifest their times and names, so [325] This law concerns the status of property bequeathed to people who either were no longer alive at the time of the opening of the will or were not legally entitled to receive it, such as unmarried men and women, who, under the lex Papia Poppaea of 9 CE were prohibited from receiving bequests unless they married within 100 days; see Ulpian, Tit. 17.1.

[326] The lex Iulia de maritandis ordinibus (18 BCE), later emended by the lex Papia Poppaea, established penalties in inheritance rights for people who did not marry and/or have children.

manifeste exponere, ut, quod vel tollitur vel reformatur, non sit incognitum. 2a. Ea enim vel his relinquebantur, qui in rerum natura tunc temporis, cum condebantur extrema elogia, non fuerant, forte hoc ignorantibus testatoribus, et ea pro non scripto esse leges existimabant: vel vivo testatore is, qui aliquid ex testamento habuit, post testamentum ab hac luce subtrahebatur, vel ipsum relictum expirabat, forte quadam condicione, sub qua relictum erat, deficiente, quod veteres appellabant in causa caduci: vel mortuo iam testatore hoc quod relictum est deficiebat, quod aperta voce caducum nuncupabatur.

3. In primo itaque ordine, ubi pro non scriptis efficiebantur ea, quae personis iam ante testamentum mortuis testator donasset, statutum fuerat, ut ea omnia maneant apud eos, a quibus fuerant derelicta, nisi vacuatis vel substitutus suppositus vel coniunctus fuerat adgregatus: tunc enim non deficiebant, sed ad illos perveniebant, nullo gravamine nisi perraro in hoc pro non scripto superveniente. 3a. Quod et nostra maiestas quasi antiquae benevolentiae consentaneum et naturali ratione subnixum intactum atque illibatum praecipit custodiri in omne aevum valiturum.

4. Pro secundo vero ordine, in quo ea vertuntur, quae in causa caduci fieri contingebat, vetus ius corrigentes sancimus ea, quae ita evenerint, simili quidem modo manere apud eos, a quibus sunt derelicta, heredes forte vel legatarios vel alios, qui fideicommisso gravari possunt, nisi et in hunc casum vel substitutus vel coniunctus eos antecedat: sed omnes personas, quibus lucrum per hunc ordinem defertur, eas etiam gravamen quod ab initio fuerat complexum omnimodo sentire, sive in dando sit constitutum sive in quibusdam faciendis vel in modo vel condicionis implendae gratia vel alia quacumque via excogitatum. neque enim ferendus est is, qui lucrum quidem amplectitur, onus autem ei adnexum contemnit.

5. In novissimo autem articulo, ubi proprie caduca fiebant, secundum quod praediximus, et clausis tabulis tam existere heredes quam posse adire, sive ex parte sint sive ex asse instituti, censemus et dies legatorum et fideicommissorum secundum quod praediximus a morte defuncti cedere: hereditatem etenim, nisi fuerit adita, transmitti nec veteres concedebant nec nos patimur, exceptis videlicet liberorum personis, de quibus Theodosiana lex super huiusmodi causis inducta loquitur: his that what is removed or reformulated not be unknown. 2a. The laws deemed that those things be treated as not written that were left to those persons who had not been in the nature of things (alive) at that time when the final dispositions were being established, without the testators' perhaps knowing this; or that person, who, when the testator was alive, had something from the will, but after the will (was written), was withdrawn from the light; or the very thing that had been left became invalid, perhaps with some condition failing under which it had been left, which the ancient jurists termed "in the category of escheated property" (in causa caduci); or, when the testator was already dead, what was left was invalid (i.e., there were no eligible recipients), which was called escheated in plain terms (aperta voce).

3. And so in the first category, when those things were treated as if not written that the testator had given to persons dead before the will (was written), it had been established that all these things remain with those people who had been directed to pay them (a quibus fuerant derelicta), unless a substitute had been provided for the persons who were missing (vacuatis) or a co-recipient had been joined; for then they were not failing, but were passing to those people, with only a quite rare impediment arising to treat this as not written. 3a. Our Majesty instructs that this too be maintained intact and uncompromised, as it is consistent with ancient benevolence and supported by natural reason, to remain valid into every age.

4. But for the second category, in which those things are involved that happened to be in the category of escheated property, to correct the old law We ordain that what winds up in this situation remain similarly with those people directed to pay them, whether perhaps heirs, legatees, or others who can be burdened with a trust, unless either a substitute or co-recipient should have precedence over them in this circumstance. But all persons to whom a gain (lucrum) is brought through this category should perceive in every way the burden that had been included from the beginning, whether this was constituted in giving, performing some actions, in a duty (modus), or devised to fulfill some purpose (condicio) or in any other way. Nor is the person to be tolerated who embraces the gain but scorns the burden connected with it.

5. However, in the last case, in which property actually becomes escheated, We decree that while the wills remain closed the heirs can exist and be able to enter the inheritance, whether they have been appointed to part of it or to the entire estate, and that the due date for legacies and trusts proceed from the death of the deceased, in accordance with what We have pronounced. But neither the ancient jurists permitted nor do We allow the inheritance, unless it has been entered, to be transmitted, except clearly in the case of the persons of nihilo minus, quae super his, qui deliberantes ab hac luce migrant, a nobis constituta sunt, in suo robore mansuris.

6. Libertatibus procul dubio et post praesentem sanctionem propter sui naturam, quae aditionem heredis expectat, ab adita hereditate una cum aliis, quae servis in testamento manumissis vel aliis legatis relicta sunt, competentibus. 6a. Excepto etiam usu fructu, qui sui natura ad heredes legatarii transmitti non patitur et neque a morte testatoris neque ab adita hereditate, quantum ad transmissionem, dies eius cedit. 6b. Sed haec quidem omnia in his observari sancimus secundum praefatam dispositionem, quae pure vel in diem certum relicta fuerint.

7. Sin autem aliquid sub condicione relinquatur vel casuali vel potestativa vel mixta, quarum eventus ex fortuna vel ex honoratae personae voluntate vel ex utroque pendeat, vel sub incerta die, expectare oportet condicionis eventum, sub qua fuerit derelictum, vel diem, ut tunc cedat, cum vel condicio impleatur vel dies incertus extiterit. quod si in medio is, qui ex testamento lucrum sortitus est, decedat vel eo superstite condicio defecerit, hoc, quod ideo non praevaluit, manere disponimus simili modo apud eos, a quibus relictum est, nisi et hic vel substitutus relictum accipiat vel coniunctus sive heres sive legatarius hoc sibi adquirat, cum certi iuris sit et in institutionibus et legatis et fideicommissis et mortis causa donationibus posse substitui.

8. Sed ut manifestetur, pro qua parte manere oportet hoc, quod fuerit defectum, apud eos, ex quibus sit derelictum, sancimus, si quidem ad heredes lucrum perveniat, pro parte hereditaria fieri eius distributionem, cum et ab ipsis simili modo, si valuisset, praestaretur, nisi nominatim ab uno vel ex certis heredibus fuerat relictum: tunc enim, quemadmodum solus vel soli praestabant, ita et lucrum sentiant. 8a. Sin autem legatarii vel fideicommissarii sint vel mortis causa donatione honorati vel alia forte persona, quae fideicommisso praegravari potest, et hoc evanescat, manere hoc apud enumeratas personas sancimus pro virili omnimodo portione, id est pro numero personarum.

children, about whom the Theodosian law,[327] which was introduced concerning such cases, speaks. The measures that have been established by Us concerning those persons who migrate from this light while deliberating (whether or not to accept an inheritance), will no less remain in force.

6. Awards of liberty become valid without doubt even after the present ordinance on account of their nature, which awaits entering (of the inheritance) by the heir, together with, from the time of the entering upon the inheritance, the other things that have been left to slaves manumitted in the will or left as legacies to others. 6a. An exception is made for usufruct, which by its own nature does not allow itself to be transmitted to the heirs of the legatee and becomes due (dies eius cedit), as far as its transmittal is concerned, neither from the testator's death nor from the entering into of the inheritance. 6b. But We ordain that all of these provisions be observed in accordance with the aforesaid disposition in those things that have been bequeathed unconditionally or for a definite time.

7. If, however, something should be left under a condition, either one depending on chance or power (potestativa) or a mixture of both, the outcome of which depends on fortune or on the will of the person honored or on both, or to become due on an uncertain day, one must await the outcome of the condition under which the bequest was made or the day, that it might then become due when either the condition should be fulfilled or the uncertain day should emerge. But if in the mean time the person should die who has acquired a gain from the will, or if while he is alive the condition fails, We dispose that what for that reason did not prevail shall remain in a similar manner with those who were charged to pay it, unless indeed this person or the substitute should accept the bequest, or a joint beneficiary (coniunctus), whether heir or a legatee, should acquire this for himself, since it is certain law that substitutions can be made in the appointment of heirs, in legacies, in trusts, and in gifts in anticipation of death.

8. But so that it might be made clear in what portion what had failed must remain with those who were charged to pay, We ordain, if indeed gain should accrue to the heirs, its distribution should take place in accordance with shares of the inheritance, since it was to be provided in a similar manner, if it had been valid, by these very people, unless it had been charged specifically to one or to certain heirs; for in that situation, an individual or individuals would feel the gain in the same measure as they used to provide it by themselves. 8a. But if there are legatees or trustees or people honored by a gift in anticipation of death or perhaps another person who can be burdened by a trust, and this disappears, We ordain that this remain with the enumerated persons completely in accordance with their full portion (pro virili omnimodo portione), that is, in accordance with the number of the persons.

[327] C. 6.52.1.

9. Ne autem hoc, quod non ineleganter summi ingenii vir Ulpianus in hac parte cum omni subtilitate disposuit, praetereatur, nostra sanctione hoc apertius inducimus. 9a. Cum enim iam statuimus haec cum suis oneribus ad eum qui lucretur pervenire, sancimus, si quidem condicio vel aliud gravamen in dando sit constitutum, hoc omnimodo lucrantes pro modo lucri agnoscere. 9b. Sin autem in faciendo aliquid impositum est, si quidem hoc et per alium impleri possit, simili modo et a lucrante agnosci, puta si honorata persona iubeatur insulam vel monumentum vel aliud tale suis sumptibus facere vel heredi vel legatario vel alii forte, quem testator voluerit, vel rem ab herede testatoris emere vel locationem vel fideiussionem subire, et si quid huiusmodi facti simile sit: nihil etenim refert, sive per eum, de quo testator locutus est, sive per alium eiusdem lucri successorem adimpleatur. 9c. Sin vero talis est verborum conceptio et facti natura, ut quod relictum est ab alio adimpleri non possit, tunc, etsi lucrum ad aliquem pervenerit, non tamen et gravamen sequi, quia hoc neque ipsa natura concedit neque testator voluerit. quid enim, si iusserit eum in locum certum abire vel liberalibus studiis imbui vel domum suis manibus extruere vel pingere vel uxorem ducere? Quae omnia testatoris voluntas in ipsius solius persona intellegitur conclusisse, cui et suam munificentiam relinquebat. 9d. In omnibus videlicet hoc obtinente, ut pro simili parte et lucrum sentiant et gravamen, ubi hoc possit procedere, subeant. 9e. Et hoc locum habere omni quidem modo in his, quae in causa caduci vel caduca secundum quod supra dictum est fiebant: in pro non scriptis autem non omnibus, sed quibusdam, quia eorum quaedam, etsi talia sunt, tamen cum suo onere veniebant, quae et nos in novi iuris compositione specialiter enumerari iussimus, ne quis veteris iuris prolixitatem quasi rebus necessariam vel pro eorum revolvat scientia.

10. His ita definitis, cum in superiore parte nostrae sanctionis in plurimis locis coniuncti fecimus mentionem, necessarium esse duximus omnem inspectionem huiusmodi articuli latius et cum subtiliore tractatu dirimere, ut sit omnibus et hoc apertissime constitutum. 10a. Non enim tantum coniunctivo modo quaedam relinquuntur, sed etiam disiunctivo. in his itaque, si quidem coheredes sunt omnes coniunctim vel omnes disiunctim et vel instituti vel substituti, hoc, quod fuerit quoquo modo vacuatum, si in parte hereditatis vel partibus consistat,

9. Lest, however, something be passed over which Ulpian, a man of the highest genius, not inelegantly arranged with all subtlety in this connection, by Our sanction We introduce this more openly. 9a. For since We have already established that these things with their burdens pass to the person who gains, We ordain, that if there is a condition or another obligation (gravamen) has been constituted in giving, those who gain must acknowledge this in proportion to their gain. 9b. If, however, something has been imposed in performing, if this can also be fulfilled through another, it shall be acknowledged by the one who gains, say if the person honored should be ordered to build a block of apartments (insula) or a tomb or some other such thing at his own expense for the heir or a legatee or perhaps another person whom the testator wishes, or to purchase an item from the heir of the testator or to undertake a lease or a suretyship, or if there should be anything similar to such an act; for it does not make any difference whether it should be fulfilled through the person about whom the testator spoke or another who is successor to the same gain. 9c. But if the composition of the words and the nature of the fact are of such a kind that what has been charged cannot be fulfilled by another, then, even if the gain passes to someone, even so the burden does not also follow, since the nature (of the matter) itself does not allow this and the testator did not wish it. For what if he ordered him to go away to a certain place or to be imbued with liberal studies or to build a house with his own hands or to paint or to take a wife? The testator's will is understood to have confined all of these things solely in the person of the very one to whom he also was bequeathing his munificence. 9d. But in all situations the specific rule obtains that they both feel the gain and undergo the burden in similar proportions, when this should be able to proceed. 9e. And this applies in every way in these cases that become the equivalent of escheated property or escheated property proper in accordance with what was said above: however, (this does) not (apply) in all those situations treated as if they had not been written, but in some, since certain of them, even if they are of such a kind, nevertheless would come with their own burden. We have ordered these to be enumerated specifically in the new arrangement of the law, lest anyone reintroduce the prolixity of the old law as though necessary in practice or consistent with his knowledge of these things.

10. Having made such definitions, since in the earlier part of Our sanction We have made mention in several places of a joint beneficiary (coniunctus), We have considered it necessary to distinguish more broadly and with a subtler treatment every theory of this category, so that this be as openly established as possible for everyone. 10a. For some things are bequeathed not only in a joint manner, but also in a divided one (disiunctivo). Thus in these cases, if the co-heirs have all been appointed or substituted jointly or separately, what has lapsed (vacuatum) in any way, if it should consist in a share or shares of the aliis coheredibus cum suo gravamine pro hereditaria parte, etiamsi iam defuncti sunt, adquiratur. 10b. Et hoc et nolentibus ipso iure adcrescat, si suas portiones iam agnoverint, cum sit absurdum eiusdem hereditatis partem quidem agnoscere, partem vero respuere, secundum quod et in divinis nostri numinis decisionibus statutum est. 10c. Sin vero quidam ex heredibus institutis vel substitutis permixti sunt et alii coniunctim alii disiunctim nuncupati sunt, si quidem ex coniunctis aliquis deficiat, hoc omnimodo ad solos coniunctos cum suo veniat onere, id est pro parte hereditatis, quae ad eos pervenit. 10d. Sin autem ex his, qui disiunctim scripti sunt, aliquis evanescat, hoc non ad solos disiunctos, sed ad omnes tam coniunctos quam disiunctos similiter cum suo onere pro portione hereditatis perveniat. 10e. Haec ita tam varie, quia coniuncti quidem propter unitatem sermonis quasi in unum corpus redacti sunt et partem coniunctorum sibi heredum quasi suam praeoccupant, disiuncti vero ab ipso testatoris sermone apertissime sunt discreti et suum quidem habent, alienum autem non soli appetunt, sed cum omnibus suis coheredibus accipiunt. et haec in heredibus tantummodo statuenda sunt.

11. Ubi autem legatarii vel fideicommissarii duo forte vel plures sunt, quibus aliquid relictum sit, si quidem coniunctim hoc relinquatur et omnes veniant ad legatum, pro sua portione quisque hoc habeat. 11a. Sin vero pars quaedam ex his deficiat, eam omnibus, si habere maluerint, pro virili portione cum omni suo onere adcrescere vel, si omnes noluerint, tunc apud eos remanere, a quibus derelictum est: cum vero quidam voluerint, quidam noluerint, volentibus solummodo id totum accedere. 11b. Sin autem disiunctim fuerit relictum, si quidem omnes hoc accipere et potuerint et maluerint, suam quisque partem pro virili portione accipiat et non sibi blandiantur, ut unus quidem rem, alii autem singuli solidam eius rei aestimationem accipere desiderent, cum huiusmodi legatariorum avaritiam antiquitas varia mente suscepit, in uno tantummodo genere legati eam accipiens, in aliis respuendam esse existimans, nos autem omnimodo repellimus, unam omnibus naturam legatis et fideicommissis imponentes et antiquam dissonantiam in unam trahentes concordiam. 11c. Haec autem ita fieri sancimus, nisi testator apertissime et expressim disposuerit, ut uni quidem res solida, aliis autem aestimatio rei singulis in solidum praestetur. 11d. Sin vero non omnes legatarii, quibus separatim res relicta sit, in eius adquisitionem concurrant, sed unus forte eam accipiat, haec solida eius sit, quia sermo testatoris omnibus prima facie solidum adsignare videtur, aliis inheritance, shall be acquired for the other co-heirs with its burden in proportion to their share of the inheritance, even if they are already deceased. 10b. And by operation of law this shall accrue to them even if they are unwilling, if they have already acknowledged their portions, since it is absurd to acknowledge one part of an inheritance but to scorn another, in accordance with what also is established in the divine decisions of Our Divine Majesty.[328] 10c. But if some of those who are appointed or substituted as heirs are mixed and some have been named jointly and others separately (disiunctim), if someone from the joint heirs should be lacking, this (i.e., this person's share) shall in every case come with its burden only to the other joint heirs, that is, in proportion to the share of the inheritance that passes to them. 10d. But if someone of those who have been named separately should disappear, this shall pass not only to the heirs named separately, but to all the heirs, both the joint ones as well as the separate ones in a similar manner along with its burden in proportion to the share of the inheritance. 10e. These quite varying dispositions exist, since the joint heirs have been brought together as if into one body on account of the unity of language and they take up the share of their joint heirs as if it were their own, while the separate heirs have been most openly distinguished by the testator's very words and have their own property but do not by themselves seek the property belonging to others, but they receive it with all their co-heirs. And these measures are to be established only for heirs.

11. When, however, there are by chance two or more legatees or trust beneficiaries to whom something has been bequeathed, if this should be bequeathed jointly and all come to the legacy, each one shall have this in accordance with his share. 11a. But if some share from these should lapse, it accrues to all, if they prefer to have it, in a full share with its burden, or, if all of them refuse it, then it remains with those who have been directed to pay it. But if some want it and others do not, the entire thing passes only to those wanting it. 11b. But if the bequest has been made separately, if all are able to and prefer to accept this, each one shall accept his share in a full portion and not fancy that one might desire to receive the property, but others individually its entire appraised value, since antiquity treated the avarice of such legatees with varying attitudes, accepting it in just one type of legacy, but in others judging that it is to be scorned. We, however, reject it altogether, imposing one nature on all legacies and trusts and bringing the ancient dissonance into a single concord. 11c. We ordain that these rules abide, unless the testator most openly and expressly provides that one person be provided the property in its entirety and the others individually (their share of the) full appraised value of the property. 11d. But if not all the legatees to whom property has been bequeathed individually concur in acquiring it

[328] C. 6.30.20.

supervenientibus partem a priore abstrahentibus, ut ex aliorum quidem concursu prioris legatum minuatur, sin vero nemo alius veniat vel venire potuerit, tunc non vacuatur pars quae defecit nec alii adcrescit, ut eius qui primus accepit legatum augere videatur, sed apud ipsum qui habet solida res maneat nullius concursu deminuta. 11e. Et ideo si onus fuerit in personam eius, apud quem remanet legatum, adscriptum, hoc omnimodo adimpleat, ut voluntati testatoris pareatur. 11f. Sin autem ad deficientis personam onus fuerit collatum, hoc non sentiat is, qui non alienum, sed suum legatum imminutum habet. 11g. Et varietatis non in occulto sit ratio, cum ideo videtur testator disiunctim haec reliquisse, ut unusquisque suum onus, non alienum agnoscat. nam si contrarium volebat, nulla erat difficultas coniunctim ea disponere.

12. Quae autem antiquis legibus dicta sunt de his quae ut indignis auferuntur, et nos simili modo intacta servamus, sive in nostrum fiscum sive in alias personas perveniant. 13. Cum autem in superiore parte legis non aditam hereditatem minime quibusdam personis[xiii] ad heredes transmitti disposuimus, necesse est, si quis solidam hereditatem non adierit, hanc, si quidem habeat substitutum, ad eum, si voluerit et potuerit, pervenire. quod si hoc non sit, vel ab intestato successores eam accipiant vel, si nulli sint vel accipere nolunt vel aliquo modo non capiant, tunc ad nostrum aerarium devolvatur.

14. Haec autem omnia locum habere censemus tam in testamentis sive scriptis sive sine scriptis habitis quam in codicillis et omni ultimo elogio vel si quid ab intestato fuerit derelictum nec non in mortis causa donationibus. 14a. Tantum etenim nobis superest clementiae, quod scientes etiam fiscum nostrum ultimum ad caducorum vindicationem vocari, tamen nec illi pepercimus nec Augustum privilegium exercemus, sed quod communiter omnibus prodest, hoc rei privatae nostrae utilitati praeferendum esse censemus, nostrum esse proprium subiectorum commodum imperialiter existimantes.

15. Locum autem huic legi constituimus in his defunctorum elogiis, quae posthac composita fuerint: anteriores etenim casus suo Marte

xiii <exceptis>

(i.e., the lapsed portion), but one perhaps should accept it, the entire property shall be his, since the testator's words are seen, prima facie, to assign it in its entirety to everyone, as others supervene and take part from a previous legatee, so that the legacy of a prior legatee is diminished by the addition (concursus) of others. But if no one else should come or can come (to accept the lapsed portion of the legacy or trust), then the share that has lapsed is not vacated, nor does it accrue to another, so that the portion of the person who first accepted the legacy increase, but the property in its entirety should remain with the very person who has it undiminished by the introduction of anyone else. 11e. And for that reason if the burden is ascribed to the person of the one with whom the legacy remains, he shall fulfill this completely so that the wish of the testator be obeyed. 11f. But if the burden has passed to the person of one whose right has lapsed, that person shall not feel it who does not have another's legacy, but his own undiminished. 11g. And the reason for the variation should not be hidden, since the testator is seen to have bequeathed these things separately for this reason, that each one acknowledge his own burden and not that of another. For if he wanted the contrary, there was no difficulty in making joint dispositions.

12. As to those provisions that are mentioned in the ancient laws concerning those things that are taken away from beneficiaries because they are deemed unworthy, We also maintain them untouched in a similar fashion, whether they should come to Our Treasury or to other persons. 13. Since, however, in an earlier part of the law (section 5) We have disposed that an inheritance not entered is not transmitted to the heirs, with the exception of certain persons, it is necessary, if someone does not enter an inheritance in its entirety, that this pass to a substitute, if he indeed has one, if he wishes and is able (to enter the inheritance). But if this should not be the case, either the heirs on intestacy shall receive it, or, if there should be no heirs or if they are unwilling to accept it or in some way should not receive, then it shall devolve to Our Treasury (aerarium).

14. We decree that these measures apply both in the case of wills, whether written or produced without writing, and in codicils and in every final expression (elogium), or if something has been bequeathed by an intestate person, as well as in gifts in anticipation of death. 14a. For We have such an abundance of clemency, because, although We know that Our Treasury is in the final instance called to claim escheated property, even so We have not spared it and do not exercise Our August privilege, but We decree that what benefits everyone in common is preferable to the interest of Our Privy Purse, judging, in Our imperial power, that the benefit of Our subjects is Our own affair.

15. However, We establish a place for this law in those expressions (elogia) of deceased persons that are composed henceforth; We allow earlier cases to be disposed on their own strength. 16. We have considered that all these discurrere concedimus. 16. Haec omnia ad vos, patres conscripti, duximus esse sancienda, ut nemini maneat incognitus nostrae benivolentiae labor, sed edictis ex sollemnitate a nostris magistratibus propositis omnibus innotescat.

D. k. Iun. Constantinopoli dn. Iustiniano pp. A. IIII et Paulino vc. conss.

LII De His Qui Ante Apertas Tabulas Hereditates Transmittunt

[1] Impp. Theodosius et Valentinianus AA. Hormisdae pp. Per hanc iubemus sanctionem in posterum filios seu filias, nepotes aut neptes, pronepotes aut proneptes a patre vel a matre, avo vel avia, proavo vel proavia scriptos heredes, licet non sint invicem substituti, seu cum extraneis seu soli sint instituti et ante apertas tabulas defuncti, sive se noverint scriptos heredes sive ignoraverint, in liberos suos, cuiuscumque sint sexus vel gradus, derelictam sibi hereditariam portionem posse transmittere memoratasque personas, si tamen hereditatem non recusant, nulla huiusmodi praescriptione obstante sibi tamquam debitam vindicare: quod scilicet etiam super legatis seu fideicommissis a patre vel matre, avo vel avia, proavo vel proavia derelictis locum habet: si quidem perindignum est fortuitas ob causas vel casus humanos nepotes aut neptes, pronepotes aut proneptes avita vel proavita successione fraudari aliosque adversus avitum vel proavitum desiderium vel institutum insperato legati commodo vel hereditatis gaudere. habeant vero solacium tristitiae suae, quibus est merito consulendum.

D. III non. April. post consulatum Protogenis et Asterii.

LIII Quando Dies Legati vel Fideicommissi Cedit

[1] Impp. Severus et Antoninus AA. Agrippae. Si competenti iudici annua legata vel fideicommissa tibi relicta probaveris, ab initio cuiusque anni exigendi ea habebis facultatem.

things must be ordained before you, Conscript Fathers, so that the labor of Our benevolence not be unknown to anyone, but so that it become known to everyone in the edicts formally published by Our magistrates.

Given June 1, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Our Lord Justinian, Ever Augustus, (Consul) for the fourth time, and the vir clarissimus Paulinus (534).

Fifty-Second Title Those Who Transmit Inheritances before the Opening of the Will

[1] Emperors THEODOSIUS and VALENTINIAN Augusti to Hormisdas, Praetorian Prefect. Through this ordinance We command that, in the future, sons or daughters, grandsons or granddaughters, or great-grandsons or great-granddaughters, by the father or mother, the grandfather or grandmother, or the great-grandfather or great-grandmother, who have been named as heirs, although they have not been substituted for one another, whether they have been appointed either with external heirs or by themselves, can, even before the opening of the will of the deceased, whether or not they know that they were named as heirs, transmit the portion of an inheritance left to themselves to their children, of whichever sex or degree they are, and that the aforementioned persons, as long as they do not refuse the inheritance — no prescription preventing them — shall claim it for themselves as if owed. This measure also applies to legacies and trusts left by the father or mother, grandfather or grandmother, or the great-grandfather or great-grandmother, if indeed (si quidem) it is quite unworthy that grandsons or granddaughters, or great-grandsons or great-granddaughters be deprived of their succession to the estate of a grandparent or great-grandparent because of chance causes or human tragedies, and that others against the wishes or arrangement of the grandparent or great-grandparent rejoice in the unexpected benefit of a legacy or inheritance. Indeed those whose interests deservedly are to be consulted should have a solace for their sadness.

Given April 3, in the post-consulate of Protogenes and Asterius (450).

Fifty-Third Title When a Legacy or Trust Falls Due[329]

[1] Emperors SEVERUS and ANTONINUS Augusti to Agrippa. If you prove to the appropriate judge that annuities have been left to you as legacies or trusts (fideicommissa), you will have the right (facultas) to exact them at the beginning of each year.

[329] See D. 36.2.

Supposita III k. Iun. Saturnino et Gallo conss.

[2] Idem AA. Prisco. Agrum pluribus relictum nominatim animadvertimus et cautum, ut ad eum qui supervixisset res pertineret. quicumque igitur is fuit, ad heredem suum dominium transmisit nec tali fideicommisso adstringitur.

PP. XV k. Aug. Cilone et Libone conss.

[3] Idem AA. Aeliae. Si Pontianilla pervenit ad eam aetatem, cui legatum aut fideicommissum delatum erat, petitionem ad heredes transmisit, licet ante decesserit, quam consequeretur legatum vel fideicommissum.

PP. V k. Aug. Cilone et Libone conss.

[4] Idem AA. Ammiae. Cum uxori usus fructus fundi legatur et eius proprietas, cum liberos habuerit, nato filio statim proprietatis legati dies cedit nec quicquam obest, si is decedat.

PP. k. Aug. Antonino A. III et Geta item IIII conss.

[5] Imp. Alexander A. Maximo. pr. Ex his verbis: 'do lego Aeliae Severinae filiae et Secundae decem, quae legata accipere debebit, cum ad legitimum statum pervenerit', non condicio fideicommisso vel legato inserta, sed petitio in tempus legitimae aetatis dilata videtur. 1. Et ideo si Aelia Severina filia testatoris, cui legatum relictum est, die legati cedente vita functa est, ad heredem suum actionem transmisit, scilicet ut eo tempore solutio fiat, quo Severina, si rebus humanis subtracta non fuisset, vicesimum quintum annum aetatis impleret. 2. Non coeptum enim annum, sed impletum, si de emolumento relicti fideicommissi tractetur, expectandum esse prudentibus placuit.

PP. XIII k. Ian. Alexandro A. II et Marcello conss.

[6] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. et CC. Eusebio. Si fideicommissum ab intestato fuerit sorori tuae relictum codicillis et, posteaquam dies fideicommissi cessit, ignorans fideicommissum decessit, actionem

Submitted[330] May 30, in the consulship of Saturninus and Gallus (198).

[2] The same Augusti to Priscus. We note that a farm was left to several people by name and that it was promised that the property go to the one who had survived (i.e., the last survivor). Therefore whoever this was has transmitted ownership to his heir and is not bound by such a trust.

Posted July 18, in the consulship of Cilo and Libo (204).

[3] The same Augusti to Aelia. If Pontianilla has reached that age at which a legacy or trust had been provided, she has transmitted the claim to her heirs, although she died before she gained the legacy or trust.

Posted July 28, in the consulship of Cilo and Libo (204).

[4] The same Augusti to Ammia. Since the usufruct of a farm is bequeathed in legacy to a wife as well as its ownership, when she has children, the legacy of its ownership becomes due immediately when a son is born and there is no obstacle if he should die.

Posted August 1, in the consulship of Antoninus Augustus, for the third time, and also Geta, for the third time (208).[331]

[5] Emperor ALEXANDER Augustus to Maximus. pr. From these words, "I give and bequeath to Aelia Severina my daughter and to Secunda[332] ten, which legacy she will be obliged to accept when she reaches lawful status," a condition is not deemed to be inserted into the trust or legacy, but the claim to be delayed until the time of her lawful age. 1. And for that reason if Aelia Severina, the testator's daughter, to whom the legacy was left, has died on the day when the legacy falls due, she has transmitted her claim to her heir, that is to say, that the payment occur at that time when Severina, if she had not been removed from human affairs, would complete her twenty-fifth year of life. 2. It was decided by the authorities (prudentes) that the beginning of the year was not to be awaited, but its completion, if it was a question of a payment for a trust that has been left.

Posted December 20, in the consulship of Alexander Augustus, for the second time, and Marcellus (226).

[6][333] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti and the Caesars to Eusebius. If a trust was left on intestacy to your sister in codicils and, after the

[330] Krüger: "Written."
[331] In 208 Geta was Consul for the second time.
[332] Mommsen conjectures "... my daughter from Secunda" (filiae e Secunda).
[333] Combine with C. 2.3.21, 6.30.7, which have the place as Thirallus.

huiusmodi adquiri potuisse dissimulare non potueris, salva scilicet ab intestato succedenti quarta portione.

Supposita k. Mai. Trallis AA. conss.

LIIII Ut in Possessionem Legatorum vel Fideicommissorum Servandorum Causa Mittatur et Quando Satisdari Debet

[1] Divus Pius Salvio. Quoniam nihil actor amplius postulat, quam ut fideicommissi nomine satisdetur, non debet is qui iuri dicendo praeest subtiliter cognoscere, debetur nec ne fideicommissum, sed tantum decernere, ut satisdetur.

Sine die et consule.

[2] Divus Marcus Stratonicae. Ipsis rerum experimentis cognovimus ad publicam utilitatem pertinere, ut satisdationes, quae voluntatis defunctorum tuendae gratia in legatis, item fideicommissis inductae sunt, eorundem voluntate remitti possint. quocumque enim indicio voluntatis cautio legati seu fideicommissi remitti potest.

Sine die et consule.

[3] Impp. Severus et Antoninus AA. Symphoro. Si, postquam servandi legati seu fideicommissi gratia in possessionem inductus es, pignoris obligatio aut venditio ab herede intervenit, praecedere causam tuam, quam iure praetorio velut pignus habuisti, manifestum est.

PP. XI k. Dec. Dextro et Prisco conss.

[4] Idem AA. Protagorae. pr. Cum Artemidoram patri pupillorum tuorum heredem extitisse proponas, quamvis, ut fideicommissam hereditatem his cum moreretur restitueret, petita sit, nullam tamen adversus debitores hereditarios habent pupilli tui actionem. 1. Plane ut satis fideicommissorum Artemidora det, si modo testator id fieri non prohibuerit, apud suum iudicem conveni.

PP. III k. Iul. Laeto II et Cereale conss.

[5] Imp. Alexander A. Paulinae. Qui legati sive fideicommissi causa in possessionem mittuntur, non proprietatem nanciscuntur, sed ius trust fell due, she died unaware of it, you could not hide that a claim for such (a trust) could have been acquired, of course without prejudice to the fourth share for the one succeeding on intestacy.

Submitted May 1, at Tralles, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

Fifty-Fourth Title That One Be Sent in Possession To Preserve Legacies or Trusts, and When Security Should be Given[334]

[1] The Deified (ANTONINUS) PIUS to Salvius. Since the plaintiff is not asking anything more than that security be given for a trust, the person who is in charge of pronouncing judgment should not investigate subtly whether a trust is owed or not, but simply determine that security be given.

Without day and consul.

[2] The Deified MARCUS to Stratonica. We have learned by our very experience of affairs that it is a matter of public utility that security that has been provided in legacies as well as in trusts in order to protect the wish of the deceased can be remitted by the wish of the same persons. For by any indication of a wish the guarantee (cautio) for a legacy or a trust can be remitted.

Without day and consul.

[3] Emperors SEVERUS and ANTONINUS Augusti to Symphorus. If, after you have been brought into possession (of the inherited property) in order to preserve a legacy or a trust, the obligating of a pledge or a sale by the heir intervenes, it is manifest that your claim takes precedence, which under Praetorian law you have as a sort of pledge.

Posted November 21, in the consulship of Dexter and Priscus (196).

[4] The same Augusti[335] to Protagoras. pr. Since you propose that Artemidora is the heir of the father of your wards, although she has been asked in a trust to restore the inheritance to them when she dies, even so your wards have no claim against debtors of the estate. 1. Of course, sue Artemidora before her judge so that she provide security for the trusts, as long as the testator did not prohibit this from happening.

Posted June 29, in the consulship of Laetus, for the second time, and Cerealis (215).

[5] Emperor ALEXANDER Augustus to Paulina. Those who are sent in possession for the sake of a legacy or trust do not acquire ownership but a right of pledge.

[334] See D. 36.3.4. Under certain circumstances the beneficiary of a legacy or trust could be put into possession of the inherited property to enforce payment (Blume).

[335] The emperor should be Antoninus Augustus (Caracalla).

pignoris. ut autem et post acceptum pignus satisfiat defuncti voluntati, competens iudex te adeunte providebit.

PP. III id. Aug. Iuliano et Crispino conss.

[6] Idem A. Donato. Certa est forma iurisdictionis, qua fideicommissi servandi causa in possessionem rerum, quae in causa hereditaria sunt aut dolo malo esse desierint, is, cui legati vel fideicommissi nomine satis non datur, mittitur vel in proprias res heredis, si fideicommisso satis non fit post sex menses, quam peti coeperit, secundum divi Antonini patris mei constitutionem.

PP. VI id. Ian. Fusco II et Dextro conss.

[7] Idem A. Proculiano. Scire debetis fideicommissi quidem et legati satisdationem remitti posse divum Marcum et divum Commodum constituisse: ut autem boni viri arbitratu is, cui usus fructus relictus est, utatur fruatur, minime satisdationem remitti testamento posse.

PP. X k. Mart. Fusco II et Dextro conss.

[8] Idem AA. et CC. Iulio et Zenodoro. Contra eos sive successores eorum, qui rem publicam administrantes per officii necessitatem civitati sub condicione relicti fideicommissi satis accipere debuerunt, quanti rei publicae interest satis acceptum non esse, dirigendam certum est actionem.

Supposita VII k. Mart. CC. conss.

LV De Suis et Legitimis Liberis et ex Filia Nepotibus ab Intestato Venientibus

[1] Impp. Severus et Antoninus AA. Crispinae. Si fratri tuo legitima heres esse potes, centum dierum praefinitione non excluderis ad adquirendam hereditatem.

However, the appropriate judge will, when you approach him, see to it that the wish of the deceased be complied with after the acceptance of the pledge.

Posted August 11, in the consulship of Julian and Crispinus (224).

[6] The same Augustus to Donatus. There is a certain rule of jurisdiction by which the person to whom security is not provided for a legacy or trust is sent, in order to preserve a trust, into possession of items of property that are part of the estate or have ceased to exist because of deliberate misconduct, or into the property belonging to the heir, if security is not provided for a trust six months after it was initially sought, in accordance with the constitution[336] of the deified Antoninus (Caracalla) my father.

Posted January 8, in the consulship of Fuscus, for the second time, and Dexter (225).

[7] The same Augustus to Proculianus. You (plural) ought to know that the deified Marcus[337] and the deified Commodus ruled in constitutions that the security for a trust and a legacy can be remitted. However, you should also know that the provision of security so that the person to whom a usufruct has been bequeathed use and enjoy (the property) by the standards of an upright man cannot be remitted in a will.

Posted February 20, in the consulship of Fuscus, for the second time, and Dexter (225).

[8][338] The same Augusti and Caesars to Julius and Zenodorus. It is certain that an action for the municipality's interest that the sureties were not taken should be directed against those who, while administering the municipality through the requirement of their office, ought to have accepted security to guarantee a trust left (to the municipality), or against their successors.

Submitted February 23, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

Fifty-Fifth Title Sui Heredes, Legitimate Children, and Grandchildren from a Daughter Succeeding on Intestacy[339]

[1][340] Emperors Severus and Antoninus Augusti to Crispina. If you can be the statutory heir (by the civil law) to your brother, you are not excluded by the prescription of 100 days to acquire the inheritance.[341]

[336] D. 36.4.5.16.
[337] 2 above.
[338] = C. 11.31.2, where the emperors are Diocletian and Maximian, and the addressees are Julius and Zenodorus, and where the action against the administrators' successors is omitted. The date in that text is November 25.
[339] See D. 38.16.
[340] Combine with C. 6.9.2, where the addressee is Crispinus.
[341] As Blume points out, a prescription of 100 days to acquire an inheritance was established for heirs granted succession under Praetorian law.

PP. III non. Nov. Antonino A. II et Geta II conss.

[2] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. Aviae. Nepotes ex diversis filiis varii numeri avo succedentes ab intestato non virilibus portionibus, sed ex stirpibus succedunt.

S. III k. Mart. Hadrianopoli ipsis AA. IIII et III conss.

[3] Idem AA. et CC. Frontoni. Ut intestato defuncto filius ac nepos ex alio, qui mortis eius tempore in rebus humanis non invenitur, manentes in sacris pariter succedant, evidenter lege duodecim tabularum cavetur. quod et honorarii iuris observatio sequitur.

S. XV k. Iul. AA. conss.

[4] Idem AA. et CC. Marcellae. Intestato defuncto postumum suum heredem quam sororem licet consanguineam haberi potiorem ordo successionum lege duodecim tabularum factus nimis evidenter demonstrat.

S. VI id. Dec. AA. conss.

[5] Idem AA. et CC. Appiano. Si te parens, in cuius fuisti potestate, sollemniter in adoptionem dedit, cum filiis naturalibus adoptivi patris ante vel post quaesitis defuncto intestato succedere potes.

D. VI k. Ian. Sirmi AA. conss.

[6] Idem AA. et CC. Posidonio. Ex libera conceptus et servo velut spurius habetur nec ut decurionis filius, quamvis pater eius naturalis manumissus et natalibus suis restitutus hunc fuit adeptus honorem, defendi potest.

Supposita VI id. Febr. CC. conss.

Posted November 3, in the consulship of Antoninus Augustus, for the second time, and Geta, for the second time (205).

[2] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti to Avia. Grandchildren from different sons succeeding their grandfather on intestacy in varying numbers do not succeed with equal portions, but in accordance with the shares due their fathers (ex stirpibus).[342]

Written February 27, at Adrianople, in the consulship of the Augusti themselves, for the fourth time and for the third time, respectively (290).

[3] The same Augusti and the Caesars to Fronto. It is clearly provided for in the law of the Twelve Tables that a son of the deceased and a grandson from another son, who at the time of his (the father's) death is not found in human affairs (i.e., is no longer alive), when they remain in the household (manentes in sacris, i.e., under the power of the paterfamilias), succeed equally on intestacy. The observance of Praetorian law (ius honorarium) follows this rule.

Written June 17, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[4] The same Augusti and Caesars to Marcella. The order of succession provided for in the law of the Twelve Tables quite obviously demonstrates that, when a man dies intestate, a posthumous suus heres is considered to have a stronger claim (to the inheritance) than a sister, even though she is from the same blood.

Written December 8, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[5] The same Augusti and Caesars to Appianus. If your male ascendant, in whose power you were, has formally given you in adoption, you can succeed with the natural children of your adoptive father, born either before or after (your adoption), when he dies intestate.

Given December 27, at Sirmium, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).[343]

[6] The same Augusti and Caesars to Posidonius. A son conceived from a free woman and a slave man is considered illegitimate and cannot be defended as the son of a decurion, even though his natural father, having been manumitted and restored to his birth rights (natalibus suis restitutus), has gained this office.

Submitted February 8, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).[344]

[342] Thus, a son would gain an entire share, whereas the children of a deceased son would divide that son's hypothetical share.

[343] An alternative date is February 24, 294.

[344] An alternative dating formula reads "given February 10."

[7] Idem AA. et CC. Aemilianae. Filium habere suum libertus in potestate non prohibetur, cum ob praeteritum statum ex legitimis nuptiis ingenuorum exemplo filios habere liberto non sit interdictum.

S. XVI k. Mart. Sirmi CC. conss.

[8] Idem AA. et CC. Catoniae. Apud hostes patre defuncto filia communis vobis, quo casu scientia mortis non postulatur, heres extitit sua et ad te transmisit successionem.

S. XII k. Dec. Nicomediae CC. conss.

[9] Imppp. Valentinianus Theodosius et Arcadius AAA. Constantiano pp. Galliarum. pr. Si defunctus cuiuscumque sexus aut numeri reliquerit filios et ex filia diem functa cuiuscumque sexus aut numeri nepotes, eius partis, quam defuncta filia superstes patri inter fratres suos fuisset habitura, duas partes consequantur nepotes ex eadem filia, tertia pars fratribus sororibusve eius quae defuncta est, id est filiis filiabusque eius, de cuius bonis agitur, avunculis scilicet sive materteris eorum, quorum commodo legem sancimus, adcrescat. 1. Haec eadem, quae de avi materni bonis constituimus, de aviae maternae sive etiam paternae simili aequitate sancimus: nisi forte avi ad elogia inurenda impiis nepotibus iusta se motos ratione dixerint et hoc fuerit legibus approbatum. 2. Non solum autem si intestatus avus aviave defecerit, haec nepotibus quae sancimus iura servamus, sed et si avus vel avia, quibus huiusmodi nepotes erunt, testati obierint et praeterierint nepotes aut exheredaverint, easdem et de iniusto avorum testamento et si quae filiae poterant vel de re vel de lite competere actiones nepotibus deferimus secundum iustum nostrae legis modum, quae de parentum inofficiosis testamentis competunt filiis.

D. V k. Mart. Mediolani Timasio et Promoto conss.

[7][345] The same Augusti and Caesars to Aemiliana. A freedman is not prohibited from having a son in his power, since a freedman is not forbidden because of his previous status to have children from lawful marriages on the analogy of free-born persons.

Written February 14, at Sirmium, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[8] The same Augusti and Caesars to Catonia. Your common daughter, when her father has died among the enemy, in which case (actual) knowledge of the death is not demanded, is a sua heres and has transmitted the succession to you (upon her death).

Written November 20, at Nicomedia, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[9][346] Emperors VALENTINIAN, THEODOSIUS, and ARCADIUS Augusti to Constantianus, Praetorian Prefect of the Gauls. pr. If a deceased person left children of either sex or any number and grandchildren from a deceased daughter of either sex or any number, the grandchildren of that same daughter shall gain two-thirds of the share that the deceased daughter would have gained as a survivor of her father along with her siblings (inter fratres), and the third part shall accrue to the brothers or sisters of the one who has died, that is, the sons and the daughters of the man whose property is at issue, namely, the maternal uncles and aunts of those in whose interest We ordain the law. 1. We ordain these same measures that We have established for the property of a maternal grandfather with similar fairness (for the estate) of a maternal grandmother or even a paternal one, unless perhaps the grandfathers say that they were moved by a just reason to burn up their expressions (ad elogia inurenda, to disinherit them) for undutiful grandchildren and this is approved by the laws. 2. We maintain the rights that We have ordained for grandchildren not only if the grandfather or grandmother dies intestate, but also if the grandfather or grandmother who will have such grandchildren dies with a will and passes over the grandchildren or disinherits them. We offer grandchildren the same claims both about an unjust will of the grandparents and if any actions could be available to a daughter either from the property (res) or from a lawsuit, in accordance with the just method of Our law, which is available concerning the undutiful wills of parents.[347]

Given February 25, at Milan, in the consulship of Timasius and Promotus (389).

[345] = C. 8.46.8 (differently worded), where the date is April 16; Mommsen prefers this for the present constitution.

[346] = C.Th. 5.1.4, with some variations of wording, from which some of this text has been restored.

[347] The querella inofficiosi testamenti, or the complaint of an undutiful will, was available to certain heirs if they received less than one-fourth of what they would have received on intestacy.

[10] Impp. Honorius et Theodosius AA. Maximo. pp. Ubi aviarum successio morte interveniente discutitur, capitis deminutio materna quaerenda non est. tunc enim in huiusmodi hereditatibus filiorum status aut persona spectatur, quotiens de eius bonis, qui potestatem familiae potuit habere, tractatur.

D. v k. Oct. Ravennae Theodosio A. VIIII et Constantio III conss.

[11] Impp. Theodosius et Valentinianus AA. ad senatum urbis Romae. Si matre superstite filius vel filia, qui moritur, filios dereliquerit, omnimodo patri suo matrive ipso iure succedant. quod sine dubio et de pronepotibus observandum esse censemus.

D. VIII id. Nov. Ravennae Theodosio XII et Valentiniano II AA. conss.

[12] Imp. Iustinianus A. Menae pp. Quotiens aliquis vel aliqua intestatus vel intestata mortuus vel mortua fuerit nepotibus vel pronepotibus cuiuscumque sexus vel deinceps aliis descendentibus derelictis, quibus unde liberi bonorum possessio minime competit, et insuper ex latere quibuscumque agnatis, minime possint idem agnati quartam partem hereditatis mortuae personae sibi vindicare, sed soli descendentes ad mortui successionem vocentur. quod tantum in futuris, non etiam praeteritis negotiis servari decernimus.

D. k. Iul. Constantinopoli dn. Iustiniano A. pp. II cons.

LVI Ad Senatus Consultum Tertullianum

[1] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. Vivianae. Licet liberi matribus ab intestato ita demum per se heredes existant, si fari possint, tamen

[10][348] Emperors HONORIUS and THEODOSIUS Augusti to Maximus, Praetorian Prefect. When the succession to grandmothers is audited after a death has occurred, the change of status (capitis deminutio) of the mother is not to be investigated. For in such inheritances the status or person of the children is examined only when question arises about the property of a person who could have had power over the family.

Given September 27, at Ravenna, in the consulship of Theodosius Augustus, for the ninth time, and Constantius, for the third time (420).

[11][349] Emperors THEODOSIUS and VALENTINIAN Augusti to the Senate of the City of Rome. If a son or daughter who dies with a surviving mother leaves behind children, by the very operation of the law they shall by all means succeed their father or mother. We decree that this is to be observed without doubt also in the case of great-grandchildren.

Given November 7, at Ravenna, in the consulship of Theodosius, for the twelfth time, and Valentinian, for the second time, Augusti (426).[350]

[12][351] Emperor JUSTINIAN Augustus to Menas, Praetorian Prefect. Whenever some man or woman dies intestate leaving behind grandchildren or great-grandchildren of either sex, or other descendants in turn to whom possession of the estate (bonorum possessio) under the (Praetorian) category "whence children" (unde liberi) does not apply,[352] and in addition collateral agnatic relatives, the same agnates shall not be able to claim for themselves the fourth part of the inheritance of the dead person, but only the descendants shall be called to the succession of the decedent. We determine that this be maintained only in future cases, but not in past ones.

Given July 1, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Our Lord Justinian, Ever Augustus, (Consul) for the second time (528).

Fifty-Sixth Title On the Senatus Consultum Tertullianum[353]

[1] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti to Viviana. Although children by themselves may be heirs to their mother on intestacy only if they are [348] = C.Th. 5.1.6, in which the recipient is the City Prefect. Seeck gives September 27, 420.

[349] = C.Th. 5.1.8, with some differences in wording; combine with C. 6.30.18, 6.56.5, 6.60.3, 6.61.1, 8.55.9; C.Th. 4.1.1, 8.18.10; and perhaps also C. 1.14.2 and 3, 1.19.7, 1.22.5; C.Th. 1.4.3.

[350] The date is restored from C. Th. 5.1.8, instead of November 6 in the edition of Haloander.

[351] Combine with C. 6.56.7, 8.58.2, which have June 1 as the date; this is preferred here by Lounghis et al.

[352] On the Praetorian edict Unde liberi, see C. 6.14.

[353] See D. 38.17; Inst. 3.3. The Hadrianic SC Tertullianum provided that a woman with the ius liberorum (a free woman with three children or a freedwoman with four children) could inherit from her children on intestacy after the children's sui heredes, their father, and their brothers and sisters from the same father.

matres liberis, etiamsi infantes naturae concesserint, posse succedere nulla dubitatio est.

PP. x k. April. Tiberiano et Dione conss.

[2] Idem AA. et CC. Rhesae. In successionem filii vel filiae communis sine liberis et fratribus vel sororibus morientis pater manumissor, quia ei sit vetus ius servatum, matri praefertur.

S. VI id. Dec. CC. conss.

[3] Imp. Constantinus A. Catullino proconsuli Africae. Matres, quae puberes amiserunt filios, licet impuberibus eis tutores non petierunt, praescriptione non petiti tutoris ad excludendam eorum successionem minime debere praescribi certum est.

D. VI k. Aug. Constantino A. IIII et Licinio IIII conss.

[4] Imppp. Gratianus Valentinianus et Theodosius AAA. Eutropio pp. pr. Si qua mulier nequaquam religionem priori viro, ex quo filios seu filias non habet, nuptiarum festinatione praestiterit, ex iure quidem notissimo sit infamis, nisi huiusmodi maculam imperiale beneficium ei remittat. 1. Sin autem ei filii erunt seu filiae et impetraverit indulgentiam, infamiae abolitionem permittimus et ceterarum poenarum antiquationem, si facultatum omnium, quae fuerint tempore nuptiarum, medietatem filio filiaeve, filiis seu filiabus donaverit, quos habebat ex viro priore susceptos, pure scilicet et omni donationis sollemnitate completa nec retento quidem usu fructu. 2. Quem quidem semissem si duobus filiis seu filiabus pluribusve donaverit et sorte fatali unus vel una, seu alius vel alia ex isdem intestatus vel intestata obierit, semper ad superstites fratres vel sorores volumus pertinere. 3. Sin autem universae vel universi intestati diem obierint durae fortunae ad matrem solacia ex integro revertantur, ita scilicet, ut hunc semissem, quem filiis seu able to talk,[354] nevertheless there is no doubt that mothers can succeed their children, even if they have yielded to nature (i.e., died) while infants.

Posted March 23, in the consulship of Tiberianus and Dio (291).

[2][355] The same Augusti to Rhesa. In the succession to a common son or daughter dying without children and brothers or sisters, the father who manumitted (i.e., emancipated the child), since the ancient right has been maintained for him, is preferred to the mother.

Written December 8, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[3] Emperor CONSTANTINE Augustus to Catullinus Proconsul of Africa.[356] It is certain that mothers, who have lost children over the age of puberty, although they did not seek tutores for them when they were under age, ought not to be prevented (from inheriting from them), under the prescription for excluding their succession for not seeking a tutor.

Given July 27, in the consulship of Constantine Augustus, for the fourth time, and Licinius, for the fourth time (315).[357]

[4][358] Emperors GRATIAN, VALENTINIAN, AND THEODOSIUS Augusti to Eutropius, Praetorian Prefect. pr. If, in her haste to remarry, any woman utterly fails to provide proper respect (religio) for her previous husband, from whom she does not have sons or daughters, she shall be infamous[359] in accordance with most well-known law, unless an imperial benefit should remit this stain for her. 1. If, however, she has sons or daughters and gains an indulgence, We permit the abolition of her infamy and the annulment of the other punishments if she gives half of all the property that she had at the time of her marriage to her son or daughter or her sons or daughters that she had born from her previous husband, that is to say, unconditionally and having completed every formality of a donation, and not even retaining a usufruct. 2. If she gives this half to two or more sons or daughters and one son or another or one daughter or another from these passes away intestate, We want it always to go to the surviving brothers or sisters. 3. If, however, all of the sons or daughters pass away intestate, the solace of her harsh fortune shall revert to the mother in its entirety in such a way that she herself take again separately this half, which

[354] Blume: "if the children were infants, the inheritance had to be accepted by a father or guardian."

[355] Perhaps combine with C. 8.44.29, whose addressee is Rhesus.

[356] Catullinus, attested in other laws, was proconsul of Africa 315–318.

[357] The consular date is restored by Krüger; Haloander's edition has 354. Seeck gives July 27, 318.

[358] pr. = C. 5.9.2; perhaps combine with C. 5.1.3, and other texts, which would have the date as June 17.

[359] The term infamis designates persons involved in disgraced professions as well as certain people who have suffered legal disabilities as a result of criminal convictions.

filiabus donaverat, intestato diem filiis seu filiabus obeuntibus rursus ipsa separatim ab ultimi filii vel filiae hereditate praesumat.

PP. xv k. Ian. Gratiano v et Theodosio AA. conss.

[5] Impp. Theodosius et Valentinianus AA. ad senatum urbis Romae. pr. Mater, quae defuncto filio filiave sine liberis ex testamento vel ab intestato succedit, si matrimonium secundum post mortem filii vel filiae non contraxerit, omnia filii morte delata pleno iure conquirat. 1. Sin vero alterius elegerit coniugium mariti, extrinsecus quidem quaesita filio filiaeve simili firmitate possideat, rerum vero paternarum defuncti solo usu fructu humanitatis contemplatione potiatur, proprietatem sorori et fratribus transmissura defuncti.

D. VIII id. Nov. Ravennae Theodosio XII et Valentiniano II AA. conss.

[6] Idem AA. Florentio pp. Omnem matri sive ab intestato sive iure substitutionis, si filius impubes moritur, denegandam volumus successionem, si ea legitima liberorum tutela suscepta ad secundas contra sacramentum praestitum adspiraverit nuptias, antequam ei tutorem alium fecerit ordinari eique quod debetur ex ratione tutelae gestae persolverit.

D. VI id. Iul. Constantinopoli Theodosio A. XVII et Festo conss.

[7] Imp. Iustinianus A. Menae pp. pr. Si quis vel si qua matre superstite et fratre vel legitimo vel sola cognationis iura habente intestatus vel intestata decesserit, non excludi a filii successione matrem, sed una cum fratre mortui vel mortuae, si superstes vel filius vel privignus ipsius sit, ad eam pervenire ad similitudinem sororum mortui vel mortuae: ita tamen, ut, si quidem solae sorores agnatae vel cognatae et mater defuncti vel defunctae supersint, pro veterum legum tenore dimidiam quidem mater, alteram vero dimidiam partem omnes sorores habeant: sin vero matre superstite et fratre vel fratribus solis vel etiam cum sororibus she had given to her sons or daughters, from the inheritance of the last son or daughter, when her sons or daughters pass away intestate.

Posted December 18, in the consulship of Gratian, for the fifth time, and Theodosius, Augusti (380).

[5][360] Emperors THEODOSIUS and VALENTINIAN Augusti to the Senate of the City of Rome. pr. A mother who, in accordance with a will or on intestacy, succeeds a deceased son or daughter without children, if she has not contracted a second marriage after the death of her son or daughter, should claim everything acquired at the death of her child in full right. 1. But if she chooses a marriage with another husband, she should possess property gained independently by her son or daughter with a similar firmness, but she should, in the contemplation of the human lot, only gain possession of a usufruct over the decedent's property inherited from the father, so as to transmit the ownership to the sister and brothers of the decedent.

Given November 7, at Ravenna, in the consulship of Theodosius, for the twelfth time, and Valentinian, for the second time, Augusti (426).

[6] [361] The same Augusti to Florentius, Praetorian Prefect. We wish all succession to be denied to a mother, whether on intestacy or by right of substitution, if her minor (impubes) son dies, if she, after undertaking the tutelage by law of her children, aspires to a second marriage against the oath she has given,[362] before she has provided for the appointment of another tutor for him (the son) and pays him what he is owed on the basis of the performance of the tutelage.

Given July 10, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Theodosius Augustus, for the seventeenth time, and Festus (439).

[7][363] Emperor JUSTINIAN Augustus to Menas, Praetorian Prefect. pr. If some man or woman dies intestate with a surviving mother and brother, either a successor under the (civil) law or only having the rights of a cognate relationship, the mother is not excluded from the succession to her child, but, along with the brother of the dead man or woman, if the survivor is either her son or stepson, she comes to this like the sisters of the dead man or woman, but under the condition that, if only agnatic or cognate sisters and the mother of the decedent man or woman survive, in accordance with the provision of the old law

[360] = C.Th. 5.1.8 (with some differences in wording), from which the address to the Senate of the City of Rome is restored; combine with C. 6.55.11 and other passages mentioned in the note that text.

[361] = Nov. Theod. 11 and C. 8.14.6; combine with C. 6.58.10.

[362] Blume: see C. 6.35.2.

[363] Combine with C. 6.55.12 (with the date July 1), 8.58.2.

intestatus quis vel intestata moriatur, in capita distribuatur eius hereditas nec liceat matri occasione sororum mortui vel mortuae ampliorem partem sibi vindicare, quam rata portio capitum exigit: patruo scilicet mortui vel mortuae eius[xiv] filio vel nepote nullum ius ad eius hereditatem matre herede existente habentibus nec ex veteribus legibus vel ex constitutionibus partem matris minui. 1. Sin autem defuncta persona non solum matrem et fratres et sorores superstites habeat, sed etiam patrem, si quidem sui iuris decessit, quia patris persona interveniens matris iura superare videtur, omnibus pio animo providentes sancimus fratres quidem et sorores mortuae personae ad successionem proprietatis solos pro virili parte vocari, patri autem et matri usus fructus totius successionis besse*m* competere aequa lance inter patrem et matrem dividendum, reliqua parte usus fructus apud fratres et sorores remanente. 2. Sin vero defuncta persona in sacris patris constituta decesserit, pater quidem usum fructum, quem et vivente filio habebat, detineat donec vivat incorruptum, mater autem, quia hunc usum fructum habere vivente patre non potest totum apud patrem constitutum, una cum fratribus defunctae personae ad proprietatem vocetur, scilicet cum sororibus sola in dimidiam, cum fratribus vel promiscui generis secundum supra scriptam distributionem in virilem portionem. 3. Omnibus videlicet, quae de mulieribus ad secundas nuptias migrantibus sancita sunt, in suo statu durantibus.

D. k. Iun. Constantinopoli dn. Iustiniano A. pp. II cons.

LVII Ad Senatus Consultum Orfitianum

[1] Imp. Alexander A. Evangelo. Si intestatae mulieris consanguinei existant et mater et filia, ad solam filiam ex senatus consulto Orfitiano hereditas pertinet.

PP. XV k. Febr. Fusco II et Dextro conss.

xiv eiusve

the mother have one-half, and all the sisters the other half. But if some man or woman should die intestate with a surviving mother and only a brother or brothers or even with sisters, his (or her) inheritance is to be distributed by persons (in capita), nor is the mother to be permitted, on the opportunity of there being sisters of the deceased man or woman, to claim a larger share for herself than the proportional share of the persons demands. Certainly neither the paternal uncle of the dead man or woman nor his son or grandson have any right to the inheritance of that person when there is a surviving mother who is heir, nor is the mother's share diminished either in accordance with the old law or the constitutions (of emperors). 1. If, however, the deceased person should have not only a mother, brothers, and sisters as survivors, but also a father, if he (or she) has died while sui iuris, since the intervention of the person of the father is deemed to prevail over the rights of the mother, to provide for everyone with a pious spirit We ordain that the brothers and sisters of the deceased person are alone called to the succession of ownership with full shares, but that the father and mother gain the usufruct of two-thirds of the entire succession, to be divided equally between the father and mother, while the remaining part of the usufruct remains with the brothers and sisters. 2. But if the deceased person has died while established in the father's power (in sacris), the father shall hold onto the usufruct undiminished that he had while the son was alive as long as he should live, while the mother, since she cannot have the usufruct while the father is alive as it is entirely established with him, shall be called along with the brothers of the deceased person to ownership, that is to say, with the sisters alone into a one-half share (of the ownership), and if the siblings are of both genders in accordance with the distribution written above into a full share. 3. All the measures that have been ordained concerning women migrating to second marriages remain in effect.

Given June 1, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Our Lord Justinian, Ever Augustus, (Consul) for the second time (528).

Fifty-Seventh Title On the Senatus Consultum Orfitianum[364]

[1] Emperor Alexander Augustus to Evangelus. If an intestate woman has siblings from the same father as well as a mother and a daughter, in accordance with the SC Orfitianum the inheritance goes to the daughter alone.

Posted January 18, in the consulship of Fuscus, for the second time, and Dexter (225).

[364] See D. 38.17, Just. Inst. 3.4. The SC Orfitianum of 178 CE gave children the right to succeed their mother in preference to her other relations, including her brothers and sisters.

[2] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. et CC. Metrodorae. pr. Non pro numero superstitum mortis matris tempore, sed succedentium materna scinditur hereditas. 1. Quapropter si mater vestra te et uno fratre emancipatis, duobus autem aliis in patria positis potestate superstitibus diem functa est et hi, qui in potestate patris fuerant, priusquam maternam hereditatem sibi quaererent, rebus humanis exempti sunt, inter duos tantum viriles non ambigitur factas portiones.

S. VII k. April. Sirmi AA. conss.

[3] Idem AA. et CC. Iulianae. Matri intestatae defunctae secundum Orfitianum senatus consultum citra bonorum possessionem filia pro herede gerendo succedere non prohibetur.

S. XII k. Nov. AA. conss.

[4] Imppp. Gratianus Valentinianus et Theodosius AAA. ad Hilarianum pp. Quotiens de emancipati filii filiaeve successione tractatur, filiis ex his genitis deferatur intacta pro solido successio neque ulla defunctae patri matrique concedatur intestatae successionis hereditas.

D. XI k. Mart. Mediolani Merobaude II et Saturnino conss.

[5] Imp. Iustinianus A. Demostheni pp. pr. Si qua illustris mulier filium ex iustis nuptiis procreaverit et alterum spurium habuerit, cui pater incertus sit, quemadmodum res maternae ad eos perveniant, sive tantummodo ad liberos iustos sive et ad spurios, dubitabatur. 1. Sancimus itaque, ut neque ex testamento neque ab intestato neque a liberalitate inter vivos habita iustis liberis existentibus aliquid penitus ab illustribus matribus ad spurios perveniat, cum in mulieribus ingenuis et illustribus, quibus castitatis observatio praecipuum debitum est, et nominari spurios satis iniuriosum, satis acerbum et nostris temporibus indignum esse iudicamus et hanc legem ipsi pudicitiae, quam semper colendam

[2] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti and the Caesars to Metrodora. pr. The mother's inheritance is divided not in accordance with the number of survivors at the time of her death, but the number of successors. 1. For this reason, if your (plural) mother passed away with you and one brother emancipated, but two other survivors under the father's power, and the ones who had been in the father's power, before they sought the mother's inheritance for themselves, had been removed from human affairs, there is no doubt that there are only two whole portions (to be divided) between two persons.

Written March 26, at Sirmium, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).[365]

[3] The same Augusti and Caesars to Juliana. In accordance with the SC Orfitianum a daughter acting as heir (pro herede gerendo) without possession of the property[366] is not prohibited from succeeding a deceased intestate mother.

Written October 21, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[4][367] Emperors GRATIAN, VALENTINIAN, and THEODOSIUS Augusti to Hilarianus, Praetorian Prefect. Whenever it is a question of the succession to an emancipated son or daughter, the succession is to be provided to the children born from them intact and in its entirety, and no inheritance to an intestate succession is to be granted to the deceased person's father or mother.

Given February 19, at Milan, in the consulship of Merobaudes, for the second time, and Saturninus (383).[368]

[5][369] Emperor JUSTINIAN Augustus to Demosthenes, Praetorian Prefect. pr. If any woman of illustris rank procreates a son from a proper marriage and has another, illegitimate one, the identity of whose father is uncertain, there was doubt as to the way in which the mother's property would pass to them, whether only to the legitimate children or also to the illegitimate ones. 1. Therefore We ordain that nothing at all should pass from mothers of illustris rank to illegitimate children when there are legitimate children surviving, either by a will or on intestacy, or by generosity carried out between living persons (gifts mortis causa), since in the case of women who are free born and of illustris rank, for [365] Mommsen suggests "in the consulship of the Caesars (294)" for this and the next constitution.

[366] Blume: a child could inherit from a mother by civil law (as modified by the SC Orfitianum), but the possession of the property was something granted by Praetorian law.
[367] = C.Th. 5.1.3, with somewhat different wording, and from which Hilarius as Urban Prefect is restored as addressee. Gothofredus suggests Hypatius as the addressee. Moreover, the C.Th. version, which Krüger prefers, refers to the succession of an emancipated daughter and her children.
[368] The date is restored from the C.Th. version. Haloander's edition has February 15.
[369] Combine with C. 5.27.10.

censemus, merito dedicamus. 2. Sin autem concubina liberae condicionis constituta filium vel filiam ex licita consuetudine ad hominem liberum habita procreaverit, eos etiam cum legitimis liberis ad materna venire bona, quae ea iure legitimo et in suo patrimonio possidet, nulla invidia est.

D. XV k. Oct. Chalcedone Decio vc. cons.

[6] Idem A. Iuliano pp. pr. Quidam ancillae suae per fideicommissum libertatem reliquit, eo autem, a quo libertas relicta est, moram in libertate praestanda faciente peperit ancilla. et esse quidem ingenuum puerum vel puellam, qui post moram nati sunt, omnes veteris iuris auctores consentiunt, dubitabatur autem inter eos, si matri morienti potest succedere. 1. Huiusmodi itaque dubitationem eorum decidentes ulterius eam procedere non patimur, sed sancimus eandem matris progeniem heredem ab intestato posse ei existere, salvo iure legitimo ex auctoritate senatus consulti Orfitiani proli servando et tam matre ex senatus consulto Tertulliano quam prole ex Orfitiano senatus consulto invicem ad suas hereditates venientibus.

D. k. Oct. Constantinopoli Lampadio et Oreste vv. cc. conss.

LVIII De Legitimis Heredibus

[1] Imp. Alexander A. Cassio et Hermionae. In successione titulo consanguinitatis vel in bonorum possessione, quae proximitatis nomine competit, tam fratres quam sorores pari iure esse, licet non eadem matre susceptae sunt, ius certum est. nec huic derogatur, quod amitas vestras ab avo vestro dotatas fuisse proponitis.

PP. non. Mai. Maximo II et Aeliano conss.

whom the observation of chastity is a special obligation, We judge that it is quite injurious for illegitimate children to be named, and also quite bitter and unworthy of Our times, and We justly dedicate this law to that very chastity that We decree is always to be cultivated. 2. If, however, a concubine of free status maintaining a licit relationship with a free man produces a son or daughter, there is no begrudging that they approach the mother's property that she possesses by lawful right and in her patrimony, along with the legitimate children.

Given September 17, at Chalcedon, in the consulship of the vir clarissimus Decius (529).

[6][370] The same Augustus to Julian, Praetorian Prefect. pr. Someone left liberty to his slave woman through a trust, but the slave woman gave birth while the person who was directed to grant liberty delayed in providing it. All the authors of the ancient law agree that the boy or girl who was born after the delay is free-born, but there was doubt among them whether he or she can succeed the mother when she dies. 1. And so cutting out such doubt We do not allow it to proceed any further, but We ordain that the same progeny of the mother can be her heir on intestacy, while maintaining for offspring without compromise the statutory right based on the SC Orfitianum, and with both the mother and the offspring coming in turn to their inheritances on the basis of the SC Tertullianum and the SC Orfitianum, respectively.

Given October 1, at Constantinople, in the consulship of the viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestes (530).

Fifty-Eighth Title Heirs under the Civil Law[371]

[1] Emperor ALEXANDER Augustus to Cassius and Hermione. It is certain law that in succession based on consanguinity (a relationship between siblings with the same father) or on the possession of property, which accrues on the basis of proximity (to the decedent), both brothers and sisters have an equal right, although they have not been born of the same mother. Nor does the fact that you allege that your (plural) paternal aunts received dowries from your grandfather modify this rule.

Posted May 7, in the consulship of Maximus, for the second time, and Aelianus (223).

[370] Combine with C. 7.4.14–16.

[371] See D. 38.16. This section deals with heirs whose rights to succeed were established by the ius civile, going back to the Twelve Tables, as opposed to the modifications in succession rights created by Praetorian law, or ius honorarium. At the end of C. 6, there is a text generally attributed to a Lombard king: "Book 6, Heirs under the Civil Law. The same Augustus and Caesars. Among those who have been born from an illicit or uncertain union, there is no succession or seeking of an inheritance, unless it should be shown by the same people that it was bequeathed or conceded in some way among them."

[2] Idem A. Tatianae et aliis. Si eius, quae vos heredes instituit, patri non quaesistis hereditatem posteaque mortuo patre ac repudiata eius hereditate defunctae successionem agnovistis, ea, quae bonorum sunt defunctae, ab his separari, quae patris vestri fuerunt, praeses provinciae non ignorabit.

PP. VI id. April. Gordiano A. et Aviola conss.

[3] Imp. Decius A. Asclepiodotae. pr. Consanguinitatis iure et feminas ad intestatorum successionem admitti posse explorati iuris est. 1. Proinde cum fratris tui intestato mortui ad te consanguinitatis iure hereditas pertineat, nulla ratione alterius fratris tui filii ad eandem successionem adspirare desiderant: nam et cessante iure agnationis in persona omnium praetorii iuris beneficio ad te potius, quae secundum gradum obtines, hereditas pertinet quam ad fratris tui filios, qui tertio gradu constituti sunt.

PP. II non. Dec. Decio A. et Grato conss.

[4] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. Caecilio. Si aut nullum testamentum nepos patrui tui ordinavit aut intra quattuordecim annos constitutus fecit et agnationis iure successio eius tibi delata est, etiam citra bonorum possessionis subsidium legitimo iure subnixus es.

PP. id. Iul. ipsis AA. IIII et III conss.

[5] Idem AA. et CC. Cyrillae. Ad intestati successionem agnationis iure quam proximitatis venientes haberi potiores certum est.

Supposita XVI k. Iul. Sirmi AA. conss.

[6] Idem AA. et CC. Claudianae. Defuncto, suis extantibus heredibus et abstinentibus vel repudiantibus hereditatem, frater iure consanguinitatis succedere potest.

S. prid. k. Ian. AA. conss.

[2] The same Augustus[372] to Tatiana and others. If you (plural) did not acquire the inheritance of the woman who established you as heirs for the benefit of your father, and afterwards, when the father died and you repudiated his inheritance, you acknowledged the succession to the deceased woman, the provincial governor will not be unaware that the property that belonged to the deceased woman is to be separated from the property that belonged to your father.

Posted April 8, in the consulship of Gordian Augustus and Aviola (239).

[3] Emperor DECIUS Augustus to Asclepiodata. pr. It is established law that under the right of consanguinity women too can be admitted to succession to the intestate. 1. Accordingly since by right of consanguinity the inheritance of your intestate deceased brother belongs to you, by no reason do the sons of your other brother desire to aspire to this same succession. For also since the right of agnatic relationship fails as to everyone's person, by the benefit of Praetorian law the inheritance belongs to you, who are in the second degree (gradus), rather than to the sons of your brother, who have been established in the third degree.

Given December 4, in the consulship of Decius Augustus and Gratus (250).

[4] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti to Caecilius. If the grandson of your paternal uncle did not write a will or did so when he was less than 14 years old, and by right of agnatic relationship his succession has passed to you, you are protected by a lawful right even without the aid of possession of the inheritance (bonorum possessio).[373]

Posted July 15, in the consulship of the Augusti themselves, for the fourth time and for the third time, respectively (290).

[5] The same Augusti and the Caesars to Cyrilla. It is certain that those coming to the succession of an intestate person by right of agnatic relationship are considered ahead of those by cognate relationship (proximitas).

Submitted June 16,[374] at Sirmium, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[6] [375] The same Augusti and Caesars to Claudiana. A brother can succeed a decedent by right of consanguinity although he has sui heredes when they abstain from or repudiate the inheritance.

Written December 31, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[372] The emperor should be Gordian.

[373] Bonorum possessio was a remedy under Praetorian law that granted an estate to heirs not provided for in the ius civile.

[374] Mommsen writes December 17, 293; Krüger substitutes "written" for "submitted."

[375] Combine with C. 6.31.5.

[7] Idem AA. et CC. Ammiano. Patruo ac materterae tertio constitutis gradu non pariter intestati successio defertur, sed patris frater agnationis iure sorori matris anteponitur.

S. XVII k. Mart. Sirmi CC. conss.

[8] Idem AA. et CC. Silano. Si his, de quorum successione agitur, apud hostes defunctis secundum legis Corneliae beneficium iure agnationis adita hereditate vel petita bonorum possessione successisti, substantiam eorum vindicare non prohiberis.

S. non. Iul. Sirmi AA. conss.

[9] Idem AA. et CC. Damagorae. In successione intestatae sororem quam avum maternum haberi potiorem non ambigitur.

S. VI k. Iul. Nicomediae CC. conss.

[10] Impp. Theodosius et Valentinianus AA. Florentio pp. Sciant qui ad successionem vocantur pupilli mortui, si defuncto eius patre tutorem ei secundum leges non petierint intra annum, omnem eis sive ab intestato sive iure substitutionis successionem eius, si impubes moritur, denegandam.

D. VI id. Iul. Constantinopoli Theodosio A. XVII et Festo conss.

[11] Imp. Anastasius A. Constantino pp. Si ab eo, qui ex sacro rescripto secundum nostram constitutionem fieri postulaverit emancipationem liberorum, petitum sit, quatenus ei, qui emancipandus emancipandave est, minime legitima iura per emancipationem extinguantur, eadem iura tam emancipato vel emancipatae contra personas alias hoc modo sibi coniunctas quam aliis itidem contra eum vel eam in hereditatibus vel successionibus et tutelis nec non ceteris serventur intacta.

[7] The same Augusti and Caesars to Ammianus. Succession on intestacy is not passed equally to a paternal uncle and a maternal aunt although both are related in the third degree, but the father's brother is preferred to the mother's sister by right of agnatic relationship.

Given February 13,[376] at Sirmium, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[8] The same Augusti and Caesars to Silanus. If you have succeeded those whose succession is at issue when they have died among the enemy, in accordance with the benefit of the lex Cornelia[377] by right of agnatic relationship, either by entering into the inheritance or by seeking possession of the inheritance, you are not prohibited from claiming their property (substantia).

Written July 7, at Sirmium, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).[378]

[9] The same Augusti to Damagora. There is no doubt that a sister is preferred to a maternal grandfather in the succession to an intestate woman.

Written June 26,[379] at Nicomedia, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[10][380] Emperors THEODOSIUS and VALENTINIAN Augusti to Florentius, Praetorian Prefect. Those who are called to the succession of a deceased minor ward shall know that, if they had not sought a tutor for him within a year of the father's death in accordance with the laws, they are to be denied all succession to him, whether on intestacy or by right of substitution, if the minor child dies.

Given July 10, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Theodosius Augustus, for the seventeenth time, and Festus (439).

[11][381] Emperor ANASTASIUS Augustus to Constantine, Praetorian Prefect. If a person, on the basis of a sacred rescript in accord with Our constitution,[382] has asked for emancipation of his children, and has (further) sought that this emancipation not extinguish the civil law rights of the male or female to be emancipated, (then) the same rights both for the emancipated man or woman are to be maintained intact against other persons related to them in this way as well as for others in turn against him or her in inheritances or successions, and in tutelage as well as in other matters.[383]

[376] Mommsen writes February 14, 294.

[377] The lex Cornelia de captivis (82–79 BCE) treated as valid wills made when prisoners of war died in captivity (Blume: D. 49.15.22.3).

[378] Mommsen writes "in the consulship of the Caesars" (294).

[379] Mommsen writes "December 27, 294" to suit the location.

[380] = Nov. Theod. 11; combine with C. 6.56.6, 8.14.6.

[381] Combine with C. 6.20.18, 8.48.5.

[382] C. 8.48.5.

[383] Some editors have added, apparently based on C. 6.20.18, "tax payments are to be made, however, by these persons in accordance with the provisions made for emancipated persons, whenever such a case emerges, that is to say, when an emancipation has been completed."

D. xv k. Aug. Constantinopoli Probo et Avieno iuniore conss.

[12] Imp. Iustinianus A. Iohanni pp. pr. Si maior quinquagenaria partum ediderit, si debet huiusmodi suboles suo patri sua constitui et hereditatem eius nancisci, a Caesariana advocatione interrogati sumus. 1. Et sancimus, licet mirabilis huiusmodi partus invenitur et raro contingit, nihil tamen eorum, quae probabiliter a natura noscuntur esse producta, respui, sed omne ius, quod ex quacumque lege liberis praestitum est, hoc merum atque immutilatum huiusmodi filiis vel filiabus servari in omnibus successionibus sive ex testamento sive ab intestato. 2. Et summatim non absimiles aliis fiant, quos similes natura effecit, maxime cum et anteriore nostra lege huiusmodi nuptias permisimus, impares eas videri minime concedentes.

D. IIX k. Nov. Constantinopoli post consulatum Lampadii et Orestis vv. cc. anno secundo.

[13] Idem A. Iohanni pp. pr. De emancipatis filiis, qui sacro rescripto patribus impertito hoc a suis genitoribus meruerunt, dubitatum est. cum enim Anastasiana lex iura fratribus legitima noscitur servare, si quis ex his sine testamento et liberis decesserit, utrumne ad fratrem vel sororem eius successio devolvatur an ad superstitem patrem, dubitabatur. 1. Huiusmodi dubitationem compendioso responso duximus esse finiendam ideoque sancimus ad similitudinem maternarum rerum aliarumque, de quibus a nobis iam lex posita est, et huiusmodi hereditatem iure quidem dominii ad fratres vel sorores pervenire in totum, usum fructum autem eius patri totum, sive torum priorem servaverit sive ad secundas migraverit nuptias, adquiri, sive per sacrum oraculum emancipatio procedat sive alio legitimo modo a sacris paternis fuerint absoluti. 2. Cum enim et pater utitur usu fructu et votum eius est ad alios filios suas res pervenire, quapropter, cum ex lege Anastasiana in alium articulum fratribus prospectum est, non a nobis in hac specie plenius eis subvenitur, ut pater habeat usum fructum, fratres autem

Given July 18, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Probus and Avienus the Younger (502).

[12] Emperor JUSTINIAN Augustus to John, Praetorian Prefect. pr. We have been asked by the Society of Advocates (advocatio) of Caesarea whether, if a woman older than fifty has given birth, such an offspring ought to be established as a suus heres to his or her father and gain his inheritance. 1. And We ordain that, although such a birth is found to be miraculous and happens rarely, even so, none of those things that are plausibly known to be produced by nature be scorned, but every right that has been provided for children by any law be maintained unchanged and undiminished for sons or daughters of this type in all successions, whether in accordance with a will or on intestacy. 2. And in sum they should not be dissimilar from others whom nature has made similar, especially since We have permitted such marriages also in Our earlier law,[384] not allowing them to be seen as unequal (to other marriages).

Given October 18, at Constantinople, in the second post-consulate of the viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestes (532).[385]

[13][386] The same Augustus to John, Praetorian Prefect. pr. Doubt has been expressed about emancipated children, who have gained this status from their parents on the basis of rescripts imparted to their fathers. For since the law of Anastasius[387] is known to maintain rights by civil law for siblings, if any of these passes away without a will and children, it was doubted whether his (or her) succession should pass to a brother or sister or to a surviving father. 1. We have considered that such doubt must be curtailed with a succinct response, and for that reason We ordain that, on the analogy of maternal and other property, about which a law has already been promulgated by Us,[388] an inheritance of this sort with right of ownership pass in its entirety to brothers or sisters, but that its usufruct is acquired in its entirety by the father, whether he maintains his earlier marriage bed or migrates to a new marriage, whether the emancipation should proceed through a sacred imperial enactment (oraculum) or whether they are released from the father's power (sacris paternis) by another lawful means. 2. For since the father uses the usufruct and also his wish is that his property reach his other children, for what reason, since on the basis of the law of Anastasius provision has been made for siblings in another rule, are they not more fully helped by Us in this respect, that the father have the usufruct, while the brothers or sisters have ownership over the property

[384] C. 5.4.27.
[385] Krüger writes the date as October 18, 531. The day of the month is corrupt in the manuscripts.
[386] Combine with C. 8.47.11, 8.48.6.
[387] See C. 5.70.5; Inst. 3.5.1
[388] C. 6.59.11.

vel sorores dominium rerum relictarum? 3. Exceptis maternis rebus, in quibus, si ex eadem matre fratres vel sorores sunt, eos solos vocari oportet: sin autem non supersint, tunc ad similitudinem aliarum rerum in totam fraternitatem dominium earum cedere, ut sit apertissimus in omnibus tractatus et non per differentiam personarum vel rerum vacillare noscatur.

D. k. Nov. Constantinopoli post consulatum Lampadii et Orestis vv. cc.

[14] Idem A. Iohanni pp. pr. Lege duodecim tabularum bene Romano generi prospectum est, quae unam consonantiam tam in maribus quam in feminis legitimis et in eorum successionibus nec non libertis observandam esse existimavit, nullo discrimine in successionibus habito, cum natura utrumque corpus edidit, ut maneat suis vicibus immortale et alterum alterius auxilio egeat, ut uno semoto et alterum corrumpatur. 1. Sed posteritas, dum nimia utitur subtilitate, non piam induxit differentiam, sicut Iulius Paulus in ipso principio libri singularis, quem ad senatus consultum Tertullianum fecit, apertissime docuit. 2. Qui enim ferendum est ab intestato successionibus suas quidem filias ad similitudinem masculae subolis in parentis vocari successionem et iterum germanas iure consanguinitatis eandem sibi vindicare praerogativam, deinceps autem legitimas feminarum personas, si iura consanguinitatis non possident, a successione legitima repelli, cum maribus eadem successio pateat? 3. Quare enim patris soror non ad successionem filii fratris sui una cum masculis vocatur, sed aliud ius in amita, aliud in patruis observatur? vel qua ratione fratris filius ad successionem patrui vocatur, germana autem eius ab eadem successione recluditur?

4. Huiusmodi itaque legis antiquae reverentiam et nos anteponi novitati legis censemus et sancimus omnes legitimas personas, id est per virilem sexum descendentes, sive masculini sive feminini generis sint, simili modo ad iura successionis legitimae ad successionem intestatorum vocari secundum gradus sui praerogativam non ideo excludendas, quia consanguinitatis iura secundum germanae observationem non left behind? 3. An exception is made for maternal property, in which, if there are brothers or sisters from the same mother, they alone must be called (to the inheritance). If, however, they should not survive, on the analogy of other property, ownership of it (the maternal property) must pass into the entire fraternity, so that its treatment be completely open in everything and it not be known to vary depending on differences of persons or property.

Given November 1, at Constantinople, in the post-consulate of the viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestes (531).[389]

[14] The same Augustus to John, Praetorian Prefect. pr. The Roman race was well provided for in the law of the Twelve Tables, which judged that a single rule (consonantia) was to be observed both in the case of lawful (agnatic) males and females and in their succession, as well as in the case of freed-persons,[390] with no discrimination maintained in succession, since nature produced each body, so that it remain immortal in its fortunes and one require the aid of the other, so that when one is removed the other is also ruined. 1. But posterity, while it has recourse to excessive subtlety, has not introduced a pious differentiation, as Julius Paulus most clearly showed in the very beginning of the single book that he wrote on the SC Tertullianum. 2. For how is it to be tolerated that in intestate succession one's own daughters (daughters who are sui heredes) are called to succession of their parent on the analogy (in similitudinem) of male offspring and again that sisters, by the right of having the same father (consanguinitas), claim for themselves the same prerogative, but then agnatic female persons (legitimas feminarum personas), if they do not possess the rights from having the same father, are repelled from statutory succession, when the same succession is open to males? 3. For why is the sister of the father not called along with the males to the succession of her brother's son, but one right is observed in the case of a paternal aunt, and another in paternal uncles? Or by what reason is the son of a brother called to the succession of a paternal uncle, but his sister from the same father (germana) is excluded from the same succession?[391]

4. Thus We both decree that the reverence of such an ancient law be preferred to a novel law and ordain that all agnatic (legitimae) persons, that is descendants through the male sex, whether they are of the masculine or feminine gender, be called in a similar fashion to the rights of succession regarding the succession to intestate persons[392] in accordance with the privilege of their degree, not to be excluded for the reason that they do not have the rights of being from the same father (consanguinitas) pursuant to the rule for a sister

[389] Haloander's edition has 532.
[390] Blume translates as "children," emending the manuscripts' libertis with liberis.
[391] The point is that males and females were treated equally as descendants, but not as collaterals.
[392] Krüger deletes "regarding the succession to intestate persons."

habent. 5. Cum enim unius sanguinis iura remanent per virilem sexum incorrupta, quare naturae offendimus et legitimo iuri derogamus? cum et aliam maximam iniuriam res in se continet plerisque quasi vulnus intestinum incognitum. cum enim ad earum mulierum successionem masculi iure agnationis vocantur, quis patiatur earum quidem hereditatem ad eos legitimo iure deferri, ipsas vero neque invicem sibi neque masculis posse eodem iure succedere, sed propter hoc solum puniri, quod feminae natae sunt, et paterno vitio (si hoc vitium est) prolem innocentem gravari?

6. In his igitur casibus legem duodecim tabularum sequentes et novum ius novissimo iure corrigentes etiam unum gradum pietatis intuitu transferri ab iure cognationis in legitimam volumus successionem, ut non solum fratris filius et filia secundum quod iam definivimus ad successionem patrui sui vocentur, sed etiam germanae consanguineae vel sororis uterinae filius et filia soli et non deinceps personae una cum his ad iura avunculi sui perveniant, et mortuo eo, qui patruus quidem est fratris sui filiis, avunculus autem sororis suae suboli, simili modo ab utroque latere succedatur, tamquam si omnes legitimo iure veniant, scilicet ubi frater et soror superstites non sunt. his etenim personis praecedentibus et hereditatem admittentibus ceteri gradus remanent penitus semoti. 7. Illo procul dubio observando, ut successio non ad stirpes, sed in capita dividatur et is gradus in ordinem legitimum transferatur: ceteris omnibus successionibus secundum ius usque ad praesens tempus observatum in suo statu manentibus. 8. Si qui autem casus iam evenerunt, secundum quod pristina iura volebant, eorum fiat distributio.

D. v k. Dec. post consulatum Lampadii et Orestis vv. cc.

[15] Idem A. Iohanni pp. pr. Meminimus antea divinam promulgasse constitutionem, per quam ad vestigia legis duodecim tabularum totam progeniem ex legitima subole descendentem sive masculinam sive femininam legitimo iure hereditatem adipisci sanximus, ut, quemadmodum ipsis a legitimis succeditur, ita et ipsae legitimarum personarum amplectantur successionem. 1. In qua constitutione unum gradum ex cognatis in ius legitimum reduximus, id est germanae filios from the same father. 5. For since the rights of a single blood remain uncorrupted through the male sex, why do We offend nature and compromise an agnatic right? Since the matter contains another very great wrong in itself, the internal wound, as it were, is unknown to most. For when males are called by right of agnatic relationship to the succession of these women, what person would allow their inheritance to pass to them by lawful right, but the women themselves for their part not be able to succeed to the males in turn by the same right, but to be punished for this reason alone, that they were born women, and the innocent offspring to be burdened by their paternal flaw, if this is a flaw?

6. Therefore in these cases, following the law of the Twelve Tables and correcting new law with the newest law, We want, out of regard to piety, one degree to be transferred from the right of cognate relationship to agnatic succession, so that not only the son and daughter of a brother, in accordance with what We have already defined, be called to the succession of their paternal uncle, but also the son and daughter of a sister from the same father or one from the same mother (uterine sister) alone and not their descendants come to the rights of their maternal uncle, and when the one has died who is a paternal uncle to the children of his brother, but a maternal uncle to the offspring of his sister, he be succeeded from each side in a similar manner, as if they all came (to the inheritance) by agnatic right, that is to say, when a brother and sister do not survive. For when these persons take precedence and accept the inheritance, the other degrees remain completely removed. 7. Without doubt this is to be observed, that the succession be divided not by equal shares by generations (ad stirpes), but by persons (in capita) and that this degree be transferred into the order established by law. All other successions remain as they are in accordance with the law observed up to the present time. 8. If, however, any situations have arisen in accordance with what the ancient laws wanted, their distribution should take place.

Given November 27, in the post-consulate of the viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestes (531).

[15] The same Augustus to John, Praetorian Prefect. We remember that we have previously promulgated a divine constitution,[393] through which We have ordained that, in accordance with the footsteps of the law of the Twelve Tables, the entire progeny descending from agnatic (legitima) offspring, whether male or female, acquire the inheritance by agnatic right (legitimo iure), so that, in whatever way they themselves are succeeded by agnatic relatives, so too should they themselves embrace the succession of agnatic persons (legitimarum personarum). 1. In that constitution We restored one degree from the cognate et filias et sororis uterinae filios ac filias: quam constitutionem in suo robore permanere censemus, cum et in nostris institutionibus tenor eius a nobis relatus est. 1a. Sed subtiliore tractatu habito necessarium duximus, et si quid ex praetoria iurisdictione frugi inventum est, et hoc cum perfectissima definitione posito nostras leges ampliari. 1b. Cum igitur praetor filium emancipatum, licet subtili iure capite fuerat deminutus, attamen in patris successione sine ulla deminutione vocare manifestissimus est, non eodem autem iure ad fratrum suorum successionem ab eo vocabatur, sed nec filii eius iure legitimo suis patruis succedebant, necessarium duximus hoc primum corrigere et legem Anastasianam iusto incremento perfectam ostendere, ut emancipatus filius et filia non solum in paternis bonis ad suorum similitudinem succedant, sed etiam in fratrum vel sororum suarum successione, sive omnes emancipati sint sive permixti sui cum emancipatis, aequo iure invicem sibi succedant et non secundum legem Anastasianam parte aliqua deminuta. et haec quidem de filiis emancipatis sancire bellissimum nobis visum est.

[393] 14 above.

2. Sed nec fratrem vel sororem uterinos concedimus in cognationis loco relinqui. cum enim tam proximo gradu sunt, merito eos sine ulla differentia, tamquam si consanguinei fuerant, cum legitimis fratribus et sororibus vocandos esse sancimus, ut secundo gradu constituti et legitima successione digni reperti aliis omnibus, qui sunt ulterioris gradus, licet legitimi sint, praecellant. et haec quidem de secundi gradus successione satis abundeque nobis cum summa utilitate disposita sunt.

3. Cum autem tertio gradui ex transversa linea fuerit locus, ubi patruis et filiis fratrum et sororum locum antiquitas dedicavit, una cum illis tam emancipati fratris quam emancipatae sororis filium tantummodo et filiam, sive emancipatos sive suos patribus constitutos, et neminem alium ulterius, nec non fratris uterini et sororis germanae vel uterinae filium et filiam tantummodo ex legitima linea invicem vocari censemus, sicut iam sanximus, ut omnes, qui vel ab antiquo iure vel a nostra liberalitate in legitimorum quidem positi sunt praerogativa, eodem autem relatives into the agnatic right (ius legitimum), that is, the sons and daughters of a sister from the same father, and the sons and daughters of a sister from the same mother. We decree that this constitution remain in its force, since its provisions have been related in Our Institutes.[394] 1a. But upon a more careful consideration, We have deemed it necessary that Our laws be improved with a most perfect definition of anything useful (frugi) that has been found from the Praetorian Edict. 1b. Since, therefore, although an emancipated child had been changed in status by a subtle legal principle, the Praetor nevertheless is most manifest in calling him in the father's succession without any change in status, still he was not called by him with the same right to the succession of his brothers, but his children (filii) by statutory right did not succeed their paternal uncles, We have considered it necessary to correct this first and to show the law of Anastasius[395] brought to completion by a just amplification, so that an emancipated son and daughter not only succeed in the father's property on an analogy with sui heredes, but that they also succeed one another in turn with equal right in the succession of their brothers or sisters, whether all are emancipated or sui heredes are mixed in with emancipated children, without some part diminished in accordance with the law of Anastasius. It has seemed to Us most seemly to make these ordinances in connection with emancipated children (filii).

2. But We do not allow a brother and sister born from the same mother to be left in the place of cognates. For since they are in the same degree of proximity, We ordain that they rightly must be called, without any difference, with agnate (legitimi) brothers and sisters, as if they had been from the same father, so that, established in the second degree and found worthy of statutory succession, they precede all others who are of a remoter degree, although they might be statutory heirs. These dispositions have been made quite generously (abunde) and with the highest utility by Us about succession in the second degree.

3. Since, however, there is a place for the third degree from a collateral line, where antiquity dedicated a place for paternal uncles and children of brothers and sisters, We decree that along with them only the son and daughter of an emancipated brother and of an emancipated sister be called reciprocally, whether they themselves have been established as emancipated or are sui heredes to their fathers, and no other person further, as well as only the son and daughter of a brother from the same mother and a sister from the same father or mother as long as they are from the agnatic line, just as we have already ordained,[396] so that all who by ancient law or by Our generosity have been placed in the privileged category of statutory heirs (in legitimorum tertio gradu sunt, simili iure vocentur. 3a. Successionis videlicet iure et in hac parte servando, ut, si qui ex secundo gradu vocati renuntiaverint hereditati et noluerint eam adire nullusque alius sit in secundo gradu, qui succedere et potest et vult, tunc hi, quos praesenti lege enumeravimus ex tertio gradu, in locum recusantium succedant. 3b. Illo etiam observando, ut successio non ad stirpes, sed in capita dividatur: ceteris omnibus successionibus secundum ius usque ad praesens tempus observatum procedentibus et nullo ex cognatis supra memoratos gradus ad iuris agnaticii formam redigendo, sed suum ordinem suamque proximitatem tenente incorruptam.

[394] Just., Inst. 3.2.4.
[395] See C. 5.70.5.
[396] C. 6.48.14.6.

4. Quas autem personas ex iure cognationis in legitimas successiones transveximus, eas et tutelae gravamini vicissim supponimus, scilicet si et masculi sint et perfectae aetatis secundum nostrae constitutionis tenorem, ut non solum lucrum sentiant, sed etiam gravamini subiugentur. 5. Si qui autem casus iam evenerunt et per iudicialem sententiam vel amicalem transactionem sopiti sunt, nullam sentiant ex hac lege retractationem.

D. id. Oct. Constantinopoli dn. Iustiniano A. pp. IIII et Paulino vc. conss.

LVIIII Communia de Successionibus

[1] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. et CC. Varianae. Scire debuisti fratre emancipato potiorem eam quae in familia mansit in alterius emancipati bonis non haberi, sed eos pariter, si sollemniter petierint bonorum possessionem, succedere.

S. xv k. Iun. Sirmi CC. conss.

[2] Idem AA. et CC. Apollinario. Si pater tuus propiori sobrino tuo agnato constituto et intestato defuncto iure civili adita hereditate, vel hoc ab initio non interveniente sive capitis deminutione perempto sollemniter bonorum possessione admissa successit ac tibi patris tui

... praerogativa), but are in the same third degree, be called by a similar right. 3a. Of course the right of succession is to be maintained in this respect, that, if any from the second degree should be called and renounce the inheritance and be unwilling to enter it, and there should be no one else in the second degree who is both able and willing to succeed, then those whom We have enumerated in the present law from the third degree shall succeed in the place of those refusing. 3b. This is also to be observed, that the succession be divided not by generations but by persons; all other successions proceed in accordance with the law observed up to the present time, and no one from the cognate relatives beyond the degrees listed above is to be admitted (redigendo) to the rule of agnatic right, but holds onto his own rank and his own proximity unchanged.

4. We also subject to the burden of tutelage for their part the persons whom We have transferred from the right of cognate relationship into statutory successions, that is to say if they are males and are of full age in accordance with the provisions of Our constitution, so that they not only realize the gain, but that they also be subjected to the burden. 5. If, however, cases have even already arisen and have been put to rest through the verdict of a judge or a friendly settlement, they shall not undergo any reconsideration as a result of this law.

Given October 15, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Our Lord Justinian, Ever Augustus, (Consul) for the fourth time, and the vir clarissimus Paulinus (534).

Fifty-Ninth Title Common Issues Concerning Successions

[1][397] Emperors Diocletian and Maximian Augusti and the Caesars to Variana. You ought to have known that the woman (eam) who remained in the agnatic kinship group (familia) is not considered to have a stronger claim than an emancipated brother to the property of another emancipated brother, but that both succeed equally, if they formally seek the possession of the property (bonorum possessio).

Written May 18, at Sirmium, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[2] The same Augusti and Caesars to Apollinarius. If your father succeeded your first cousin once removed, established as an agnate and dying intestate, having approached the inheritance on the basis of the civil law, or when this quaesita hereditas est, adire praesidem provinciae debes ac tutorem eius de tutela convenire.

[397] From the date, c. 1 should be placed after c. 5 in this title.

D. XIIII k. Iun. Veronae AA. conss.

[3] Idem AA. et CC. Ulpianae. Vitrico privigni successionem intestati civili vel honorario iure non deberi certissimum est.

S. XV k. Mart. Sirmi CC. conss.

[4] Idem AA. et CC. Aurelio Asterio. Servus successores habere non potest.

D. non. April. CC. conss.

[5] Idem AA. et CC. Iustinae. pr. Amitae, cui successisse filios suos proponis, hereditatem tuo nomine non recte petis. 1. Sed quoniam hos etiam intestatos diem functos adseveras, si quidem hi, quos privignos eiusdem amitae dicis, eorum consanguinei fuerint fratres, tam agnationis quam cognationis iure secundo gradu constitutos tibi praeferri non ambigitur. nam si amitini tui alio etiam patre nati numquam eorum matri privigni sunt, admisisse te bonorum possessionem probans eorum vindica successionem.

S. XII k. Mart. CC. conss.

[6] Idem AA. et CC. Publiciano. Avunculo priori, qui est in tertio gradu, quam consobrino, qui sequentem occupat, deferri successionem intestati certi iuris est.

Suppos. k. Oct. CC. conss.

[7] Idem AA. et CC. Nicolao. Adfinitatis iure nulla successio promittitur.

D. prid. non. Oct. CC. conss.

from the beginning did not happen or was prevented by a change in status (emancipation of the cousin), after gaining possession of the property in the customary way (by being admitted to the inheritance through Praetorian law), and your father's inheritance has been acquired for you, you ought to approach the provincial governor and sue his (the cousin's) tutor on his tutelage.

Given May 19, at Verona,[398] in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[3] The same Augusti and Caesars to Ulpiana. It is most certain that succession is not owed to a stepfather of an intestate stepson either by civil law or Praetorian law (ius honorarium).

Written February 15, at Sirmium, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[4][399] The same Augusti and Caesars to Aurelius Asterius. A slave cannot have successors.

Given April 5, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[5] The same Augusti and Caesars to Justina. pr. You are not correct in seeking in your own name the inheritance of your paternal aunt, to whom you claim her children succeeded. 1. But since you aver that they also have passed away intestate, if indeed those ones who you say are the stepsons of the same aunt were their brothers by the same father, there is no doubt that they, established in the second degree, are preferred to you both by right of agnatic and cognate relationship. For if your cousins were born from another father and are never[400] stepsons of their mother, by proving that you have gained possession of the property, claim their succession.

Written February 18,[401] in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[6] The same Augusti and Caesars to Publicianus. It is certain law that intestate succession is passed (deferri) to a maternal uncle, who is in the third degree, before a cousin, who occupies the following one.

Submitted[402] October 1, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[7] The same Augusti and Caesars to Nicolaus. No succession is promised by right of a relationship by marriage (adfinitas).

Given October 6, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[398] More plausibly Beroea (Mommsen). The date is probably June 15, 293; compare C. 5.24.1.

[399] Combine with C. 3.31.8 and 7.16.27, which have March 30, 294, as the date (so Mommsen for this constitution), as well as Consultatio 6.18, from which Aurelius is restored, and which also includes Sirmium as the place.

[400] Mommsen writes "and these are not stepsons ..."

[401] Mommsen writes April 20, 294.

[402] Krüger writes "written."

[8] Idem AA. et CC. Iustae. Antequam scriptus cuiuscumque portionis capax repudiet hereditatem vel alia ratione quaerendae facultatem amittat, ei qui testamentum reliquit intestato nemo succedit. igitur perspicis, quod testamentariae successionis spe durante intestati bona defuncti non recte vindicentur.

S. VI id. Mart. Retiariae CC. conss.

[9] Idem AA. et CC. Sopatro. Ancillae dominus liberi hominis, cum quo contubernium haec habuit, per hanc commixtionem successionem vindicare non potest.

S. XV k. Ian. Nicomediae CC. conss.

[10] Idem AA. et CC. Danuvio. Nutritoribus hoc nomine nec civili nec honorario iure defertur hereditas.

S. VI k. Ian. CC. conss.

[11] Imp. Iustinianus A. Demostheni pp. pr. Sancimus, quemadmodum de his rebus, quae liberis in sacris constitutis ex occasione maritali adquisitae sunt, certus ordo destinatus est, ut, si quis ex his ab hac luce fuerit subtractus, pars eius, quam lucratus est, ad eius liberos vel nepotes vel pronepotes concedat, quibus non extantibus ad fratres suos ex eodem matrimonio progenitos vel, si etiam non supersint, ad fratres ex aliis nuptiis procreatos, cumque nemo eorum fuerit relictus, tunc ad patrem perveniat: ita et de his, quae materna linea per quascumque occasiones vel inter vivos vel per ultimas dispositiones vel ab intestato descendunt, similis ordo servetur, primo in filii vel filiae successione posteritate eius vocanda eaque non inventa fraterno consortio eiusdem vel alieni matrimonii secundum praedictum ordinem arcessito, tunc ad ultimum locum pater a legibus conclametur et sui filii non gratam hereditatem relictam, sed triste lucrum sibi lugeat adquisitum. 1. In omnibus videlicet casibus, in superstite subole liberorum et fratribus adhuc viventibus, qui ad hereditatem defuncti patrem antecedunt, usu fructu rerum, quarum dominium ad eos pervenit, apud parentes remansuro.

D. XVI k. Oct. Chalcedone Decio vc. cons.

[8] The same Augusti and Caesars to Justa. Before a person capable (of receiving the inheritance) who is named as heir to any portion refuses the inheritance or loses the right to gain it by another means, no one succeeds on intestacy to the person who left the will. Therefore you see that while a hope for succession on the basis of the will endures, the property of the intestate decedent will not rightly be claimed.

Written March 10,[403] at Retiaria, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[9][404] The same Augusti and Caesars to Sopater. The owner of a slave woman cannot claim succession to a free man with whom she maintained a domestic partnership (contubernium) on the basis of this relationship (commixtio).

Written December 18, at Nicomedia, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[10] The same Augusti and Caesars to Danuvius. Neither by civil law nor by Praetorian law does an inheritance pass (defertur) to childminders on this account.

Written December 27, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[11] Emperor JUSTINIAN Augustus to Demosthenes, Praetorian Prefect. pr. In whatever way a certain order has been established about the property that has been acquired for children in power (in sacris, under the father's power) on the occasion of a marriage, We ordain that, if any of these (children) is withdrawn from this light, his part that he has gained is to pass to his children, grandchildren, or great-grandchildren, and if there are not any of these, to his siblings (fratres) born from the same marriage, but if there are not any of these, to siblings born from other marriages. And when none of these is left, then it is to come to the father, so that a similar order be maintained as with that property that passes on the mother's line through any occasions, either (through gifts) between the living, or through final dispositions, or on intestacy: first, that one's posterity is to be called in the succession of a son or daughter; and if this is not found, the collective brothers and sisters are summoned, whether of the same or a different marriage, according to the aforementioned order; then the father is to be called by the laws in the final place, and he might mourn that a welcome inheritance of his child has not been left him, but that he has acquired a doleful gain. 1. Certainly in all cases, when there are surviving offspring of the children and (also) siblings still living, who come to the inheritance of the deceased earlier than the father, the usufruct over the property, the ownership of which passes to them, will remain with their male ascendants (parentes).

Given September 17, at Chalcedon, in the consulship of the vir clarissimus Decius (529).

[403] Mommsen writes October 10, 294.
[404] Combine with C. 3.32.28.

LX De Bonis Maternis et Materni Generis

[1] Imp. Constantinus A. consulibus tribunis plebis senatui salutem. pr. Res, quae ex matris successione fuerint ad filios devolutae, ita sint in parentum potestate, ut fruendi dumtaxat habeant facultatem, dominio videlicet earum ad liberos pertinente. 1. Parentes autem, penes quos maternarum rerum utendi fruendique tantum potestas est, omnem debent tuendae rei diligentiam adhibere et quod iure filiis debetur in examine per se vel per procuratorem poscere et sumptus ex fructibus impigre facere et litem inferentibus resistere atque ita omnia agere, tamquam solidum perfectumque dominium et personam gerant legitimam, ita ut, si quando rem alienare voluerint, emptor vel is cui res donatur observet, ne quam partem earum rerum, quas alienari prohibitum est, sciens accipiat vel ignorans.

2. Docere enim pater debet proprii iuris eam rem esse, quam donat aut distrahit: et emptori, si velit, fideiussorem licebit accipere, quia nullam poterit praescriptionem opponere filiis quandoque rem suam vindicantibus.

D. XV k. Aug. Aquileia. recitata apud Vettium Rufinum pu. in senatu non. Sept. Constantino A. V et Licinio C. conss.

[2] Impp. Arcadius et Honorius AA. Florentino pu. Quidquid avus avia, proavus proavia ex materna linea venientes nepoti nepti pronepoti pronepti testamento fideicommisso legato donatione vel alio quolibet titulo largitionis vel etiam intestati successione contulerint, pater filio filiaeve integra illibataque custodiat, ut vendere donare relinquere alteri obligare, sicut nec materna bona, non possit usu fructu dumtaxat ad eum pertinente, ita ut, quemadmodum ipse super his licentiam totius potestatis amittit, defuncto eo filio filiaeve praecipua computentur nec ab illis, qui ex patre sunt coheredes, vindicentur.

D. id. Oct. Mediolani Olybrio et Probino conss.

Sixtieth Title Property of the Mother and of the Mother's Family

[1][405] Emperor CONSTANTINE Augustus sends greetings to the Consuls, Praetors, Tribunes of the Plebs, and the Senate. pr. Property that has devolved to children from succession to their mother should remain in the power of male ascendants (parentes), such that they only have the right (facultas) of enjoying it, with the ownership over it belonging to the children. 1. However, the male ascendants, who only have the power to use and enjoy maternal property, are obliged to apply every care in maintaining it, and, either themselves or through a procurator, demand at a trial what by law is owed to the children and defray expenses diligently from the fruits, resist those bringing lawsuits, and take every action as if they wielded undivided and complete ownership and represented a lawful person (personam legitimam), so that, if they ever want to alienate property, the buyer or the person to whom the property is being given as a gift take care that he not knowingly or unknowingly accept a part of that property the alienation of which has been prohibited.

2. For the father is obliged to indicate that the property that he is donating or alienating is in his own private right. The buyer, for his part, if he should wish, will be allowed to accept a guarantor, since he will be able to oppose no prescription (of time) to children at any time claiming their property.

Given July 18, at Aquileia, and recited before Vettius Rufinus, City Prefect, in the Senate, September 5, in the consulship of Constantine Augustus, for the fifth time, and Licinius Caesar (319).[406]

[2][407] Emperors ARCADIUS and HONORIUS Augusti to Florentius, Praetorian Prefect. Whatever a grandfather or a grandmother, and great-grandfather or great-grandmother coming from the mother's side has provided a grandson or a granddaughter, or a great-grandson or great-granddaughter in a will, trust, legacy, gift, or any other category of generosity, or even by succession on intestacy, the father shall maintain it whole and uncompromised for his son or daughter, such that he not be able to sell, give as a gift, bequeath, or obligate it to another, just as with property not from the mother's side, with the usufruct alone belonging to him, so that, just as he himself loses discretion for his entire power over this property), when he dies, it should accrue to the son or daughter and it is not to be claimed by those who are co-heirs of the father (ex patre).

Given October 15, at Milan, in the consulship of Olybrius and Probinus (395).

[405] = C.Th. 8.18.1, with different wording.

[406] Seeck, following Krüger, gives July 18, 315 (Const. A. IIII et Licinio IIII).

[407] = C.Th. 8.18.7.

[3] Impp. Theodosius et Valentinianus AA. ad senatum urbis Romae. pr. Si viva matre emancipati sunt filii et postea mater decesserit, quoniam omni commodo destituitur pater nec retinet usum fructum, viriles ei inter filios, sive unus seu plures sunt, usus fructus tribuimus portiones. 1. Si vero mulier moriens alios ex filiis emancipatos a patre, alios in patria potestate dimiserit, in casu dispari utitur maritus defunctae beneficio, quod casui utrique praescripsimus, id est circa eorum quidem portionem, quos adhuc in sacris retinet, usum fructum ex legum auctoritate retinebit et praemium delatae, cum volet, emancipationis accipiet, in eorum vero parte, quos exisse de potestate viva matre constiterit, usum fructum virilis inter eos portionis secundum praescripta percipiet.

2. In nepotibus etiam vel neptibus hoc observandum esse censemus, ut maritus, qui uxore mortua, non extantibus filiis, cum solis nepotibus vel neptibus ex hac lege ad emolumentum vocandus est, si unus vel una pluresve nepotes ex filio uno vel pluribus, qui in potestate defecerunt, procreati sunt, hoc iure utatur, quod de filiis constitutum est. 2a. Nam licet hoc novum praesens lex constituat in nepotes, non est tamen ab re, ut in hoc casu deteriores esse nepotibus filii non sinantur. 2b. Habeat igitur avus veniens cum nepotibus in potestate durantibus usum fructum bonorum omnium, quae ex defunctae aviae successione delata sunt. 2c. Cum vero his quoque libertatem emancipatione largitur, similiter et ab ipsis, sicut de filiis constitutum est, praemium manumissionis accipiat, vel si ex pluribus alteros manumittit alteros retinet, ex parte manumissorum legitimum praemium, ex parte vero in potestate manentium retineat usum fructum.

3. Quod si nepotes sint neptesve aut ex emancipato filio aut ex filia procreati aut ab ipso avia vivente sacris dimissi, idem avus virilis cum ipsis portionis habeat usum fructum. si vero ex nepotibus neptibusve tempore, quo in aviae successionem vocantur, alii in avi sunt potestate,

[3] [408] Emperors THEODOSIUS and VALENTINIAN Augusti to the Senate of the City of Rome. pr. If children have been emancipated while their mother is alive and afterwards the mother dies, since the father is deprived of every advantage and does not retain the usufruct, We grant him the usufruct over a portion equal to the shares of his children, whether there is one or several. 1. But if a woman when dying leaves behind (dimiserit) some of her children emancipated by their father and others in their father's power, the father uses the benefit of the deceased woman in the disparate case(s) that We have prescribed for each situation, that is, in connection with the portion of the ones whom he still retains in his household (in sacris, in his power), he will retain the usufruct in accordance with the authority of the laws, and, when he wishes, he will receive the reward for providing emancipation, but in the case of the share of those who it is established have departed from his power while the mother is alive, he will gain the usufruct of a portion equal to what they have received in accordance with what has been prescribed.

2. In the case of grandsons or granddaughters, We decree that this be observed, that the husband, who, when his wife has died and there are not any children surviving, is to be called to the gain (emolumentum) with the grandsons and granddaughters alone in accordance with this law, if one or more grandsons or granddaughters, born of one son or more, have died while in (their grandfather's) power,[409] use the rule that was established concerning children. 2a. For although the present law should establish this new provision for grandchildren, it is still not irrelevant that in this case children not be allowed to be worse off than grandchildren. 2b. Therefore the grandfather coming with grandchildren remaining in his power is to have the usufruct over all the property that has been passed (delata) from the succession of the deceased grandmother. 2c. When indeed (he) bestows liberty on these too by emancipation, he should receive the reward for manumission similarly from those very people, just as it has been established concerning children, or, if out of a larger group he manumits some and retains others, from the group of those manumitted he should retain the statutory reward, but from those remaining in his power he should retain the usufruct.

3. But if grandsons or granddaughters have been produced either from an emancipated son or a daughter or have been dismissed by himself from his household (i.e., emancipated) while the grandmother is living, the same

[408] = C.Th. 8.18.9, with some additional wording; combine with C. 6.55.11 (check passages listed there).

[409] It is possible to imagine a situation in which they died in their father's power, if the grandfather had emancipated the father and the children predeceased the father; but this seems a bit of a stretch. See the principium.

id est mariti defunctae, alii sui iuris sint, circa personam quidem eorum, qui in potestate consistunt, et in usu fructu consequendo et in emancipationis praemio conquirendo ratio supra dicta servetur: in his vero, qui sui iuris sunt, facultas capiendi usus fructus virilis inter eos portionis habeatur.

4. Eadem autem et de pronepotibus sexus utriusque sancimus, manente definitione, quae de singulis sancita est, si filii sint pariter ac nepotes.

D. VIII id. Nov. Ravennae Theodosio XII et Valentiniano II AA. conss.

[4] Imp. Leo A. Callicrati pp. per Illyricum. pr. Omnem ambiguitatis confusionem amputantes hac liquida et compendiosa lege sancimus circa usum fructum maternarum rerum nullam esse differentiam, sive in priore matrimonio pater, ex quo filios habuit, permanere voluerit sive novercam filiis superduxerit: legibus, quae de maternis bonis latae sunt, suam habentibus firmitatem. 1. Patres igitur usum fructum maternarum rerum, etiamsi ad secundas migraverint nuptias, sine dubio habere debebunt: nec ullam filiis vel quibuslibet ex persona eorum contra patres improbam vocem accusationemque posse competere.

D. k. Sept. Anthemio A. II cons.

LXI De Bonis, Quae Liberis in Potestate Constitutis ex Matrimonio vel Aliter Adquiruntur, et Eorum Administratione

[1] Impp. Theodosius et Valentinianus AA. ad senatum. Cum venerandae leges vetuerint patribus iure potestatis adquiri, quidquid eorum filiis avus avia proavus proavia a linea materna venientes quocumque titulo contulissent, hoc quoque convenit observari, ut, quidquid vel uxor marito non emancipato vel maritus uxori in potestate positae quocumque grandfather should have the usufruct over a portion equal to what they have received. But if from among the grandsons and granddaughters, at the time in which they are called to the succession of the grandmother, some are in the power of the grandfather, that is of the husband of the deceased woman, and others are sui iuris, the plan described above shall be maintained in connection with the person of those who are in power, both in gaining the usufruct and in acquiring the reward for the emancipation. But as to those who are sui iuris, the right to take the usufruct of a portion equal to what they have received is to be maintained.

4. We make the same ordinance concerning great-grandchildren of either sex, with the definition remaining that has been ordained for each group, if there are children and grandchildren at the same time.

Given November 6, at Ravenna, in the consulship of Theodosius, for the twelfth time, and Valentinian, for the second time, Augusti (426).

[4] Emperor LEO Augustus to Callicrates, Praetorian Prefect for Illyricum. pr. Chopping off every confusion of ambiguity We ordain by this pellucid and concise law that, in regard to the usufruct of maternal property, there is no difference whether the father wanted to remain in the prior marriage (i.e., not remarry) from which he had children, or whether he brought a stepmother for his children; the laws that have been passed concerning maternal property remain in effect. 1. Therefore fathers without doubt ought[410] to have the usufruct over maternal property even if they migrate to second marriages; nor can children or anyone else representing them (ex persona eorum) avail themselves of any wicked words or accusations against their fathers.

Given September 1, in the consulship of Anthemius Augustus, for the second time (468).

Sixty-First Title Property That Is Acquired for Children in Power from Marriage or Otherwise, and Its Management

[1][411] Emperors THEODOSIUS and VALENTINIAN Augusti to the Senate. Since the venerable laws forbade that whatever a grandfather, grandmother, great-grandfather, or great-grandmother who come from the maternal line have conferred on their children under any title, be acquired for the (children's) fathers by the right of their power, it is appropriate that this rule also be observed, that

[410] Mommsen deletes debebunt.

[411] = C.Th. 8.19.1; combine with C. 6.55.11 (and other passages listed there). This constitution extends earlier rules that permit inheritance to proceed despite the recipient being under a father's potestas.

titulo vel iure contulerit seu transmiserit, hoc patri nullatenus adquiratur: atque ideo in eius tantum, cui delatum est, iure durabit.

D. VII id. Nov. Ravennae Theodosio XII et Valentiniano II AA. conss.

[2] Idem AA. Hierio pp. Constitutionis novae capitulum clariore interpretatione sancimus, ut, quae per filios nepotes pronepotes itemque filias neptes proneptes, quamvis in potestate sint, minime adquiri decrevimus a marito vel uxore quocumque titulo collata sive ultima voluntate transmissa, nullus ad id quoque pertinere existimet, quod ab ipso parente datum vel ante nuptias donationis causa pro una ex memoratis personis praestitum fuerat, ut minime ad eum, si casus tulerit, revertatur (prospiciendum est enim, ne hac iniecta formidine parentum circa liberos munificentia retardetur): sed ut his potestatis iure ad parentes reversis cetera, quae ex substantia speciali coniugis ad superstitem devenerunt, quamvis idem in sacris sit, fructu tamen solo atque usu parentibus deputato, dominium ei qui a coniuge vel quae meruit reservetur, parente pro emancipationis etiam beneficio, si voluerit, sicut in maternis rebus vel quae per eandem lineam veniunt, praemium habituro.

D. X k. Mart. Felice et Tauro conss.

[3] Idem AA. Florentio pp. pr. Quod scitis prioribus continetur nec a filia quae in potestate est donationem ante nuptias patri nec a filio dotem adquiri, eo addito confirmamus, ut, defunctis his adhuc in potestate patris, si liberis extantibus moriantur, ad liberos eorum eaedem res iure hereditatis, non ad patres iure peculii transmittantur nec per whatever either a wife has provided or transmitted to an unemancipated husband under any right or title, or a husband has provided to a wife positioned in her father's power, is not at all to be acquired for the father; and for that reason it will remain only in the right of that person upon whom it was conferred.

Given November 7, at Ravenna, in the consulship of Theodosius, for the twelfth time, and Valentinian, for the second time, Augusti (426).

[2][412] The same Augusti to Hierius, Praetorian Prefect. We establish a chapter of a new constitution with a clearer interpretation, that no one should judge as belonging to what We have decreed is not acquired by a husband or wife through sons, grandsons, or great-grandsons, as well as daughters, granddaughters, or great-granddaughters, although they are in (the father's) power, under whatever title it was conferred or transmitted by a final will, that which had been given by the parent himself (as dowry) or as a gift before marriage provided for one of the persons mentioned, so that it not revert to him if a chance (casus) brings it – for care must be taken lest, as a result of the introduction of this fear, parents' munificence toward their children might be thwarted – but that, when this property has reverted to the male ascendants (parentes) by the right of their power, ownership over the other property that has passed to a survivor from the specific property of the spouse be reserved for the man or woman who has gained ownership of it from the spouse, although this same person is in power (in sacris), albeit with the enjoyment and use (usufruct) alone assigned to the male ascendants, while the father will have the reward for the benefit of emancipation, if he wishes, just as in the case of maternal property or what comes through the same line.

Given February 20, in the consulship of Felix and Taurus (428).

[3][413] The same Augusti to Florentius, Praetorian Prefect. pr. We confirm what is contained in previous decrees, that neither a gift before marriage is acquired for the father from a daughter in power nor a dowry from a son, with this addition, that when these persons are deceased while still in the father's power, if they should die with surviving children, the same property should pass to their children by right of inheritance, not to the fathers by right of the peculium, nor of course are they to be acquired for the grandfather through grandchildren. 1. If, however, the same grandson meets his day without children but with both [412] Combine with C. 2.57.2, 5.3.17, 5.4.22, 5.11.6, 6.18.1, 6.24.11, which include Constantinople as the place of promulgation.

nepotes avo videlicet adquirendae. 1. Sin autem idem nepos superstitibus tam patre quam avo paterno diem suum sine liberis obierit, eorum dominium, quae ad ipsum ex matre vel ab eius linea pervenerunt, non ad avum, sed ad patrem eius perveniat: usu fructu videlicet et in huiusmodi casibus avo, dum supererit, servando.

D. VII id. Sept. Constantinopoli Theodosio A. XVII et Festo conss.

[4] Impp. Leo et Anthemius AA. Erythrio pp. pr. Quaecumque res ad filium vel filiam, nepotes sive pronepotes utriusque sexus in potestate constitutos ex priore vel secundo aut tertio seu coniugio numerosiore pervenerint ex dote vel quacumque donatione seu hereditate legato vel fideicommisso, earum usque in diem vitae suae pater vel avus vel proavus usum fructum habeant: easdem res quocumque modo alienandi vel pignoris seu hypothecae iure obligandi facultate eis penitus interdicta, dominio videlicet earum ad filios et nepotes sive pronepotes utriusque sexus permanente, etiamsi ex eodem matrimonio procreati non sint, ex quo eaedem res ad parentes eorum, qui quaeve in potestate sunt, fuerint devolutae. 1. Eo videlicet observando, ut morientium fratrum sororumve portiones, qui quaeve ex eodem matrimonio progeniti vel progenitae sunt, primo quidem ad liberos eorum, ut dictum est, si tamen fuerint, deinde his non extantibus ad superstites tantummodo fratres vel sorores eorum perveniant aut ad superstitem, si ex isdem fratribus sive sororibus unus unave remanserit. 2. Omnibus autem, qui ex eodem coniugio fuerint procreati, defunctis tunc demum ad eos, qui ex alio matrimonio sunt editi, easdem res pro virili parte venire statuimus: nullo autem ex memoratis personis existente parentes eorum eas percipere. 3. Parentibus vero, quorum sub potestate sunt, usum fructum dumtaxat habituris memoratas res iure potestatis alienandi vel obligandi licentiam denegamus, non prohibendis isdem liberis, quandoque sui iuris fuerint, nulla temporali praescriptione obsistente easdem res omnibus modis vindicare, nisi forte, postquam potestate parentium eos contigerit liberari, tantum temporis effluxerit, ut ex continua et inconcussa tenentis possessione eorum excludatur intentio.

D. V k. Mart. Marciano cons.

a surviving father and paternal grandfather, ownership of that property that came to him from the mother or her line should pass not to his grandfather, but to his father. Of course the usufruct in such cases is to be maintained for the grandfather while he survives.

Given September 7, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Theodosius Augustus, for the seventeenth time, and Festus (439).

[4][414] Emperors LEO and ANTHEMIUS Augusti to Erythrius, Praetorian Prefect. pr. Whatever property has passed to a son or daughter, or to grandchildren or great-grandchildren of either sex in power from a first, second, third, or even later marriage, from a dowry or any type of gift, inheritance, legacy, or trust, the father, grandfather, or great-grandfather shall have the usufruct over it until the (last) day of life; but they are completely forbidden the right (facultas) to alienate the same property in any way or to obligate it by right of pledge or hypothec, while the ownership of it plainly remains with the children, grandchildren, or great-grandchildren of either sex, even if they have not been produced from the same marriage from which the same property had passed to the fathers of the persons of either sex who are in power. 1. Certainly this is to be observed, that the portions of dying brothers or sisters who have been produced from the same marriage should first pass to their children, as has been said, but only if there are any; then, if there are not, only to their surviving brothers or sisters, or to the survivor, if one remains from the same brothers or sisters. 2. However, when all who have been produced from the same marriage have deceased, We establish that only then does the same property in a full share (pro virili parte) come to those who have been born from a different marriage, but that, if none of the persons mentioned exists, their fathers take it. 3. But We deny male ascendants under whose power they are, since they will have only the usufruct, permission to alienate or obligate the property mentioned by right of their (the father's) power, while the same children, whenever they are sui iuris, are not to be prohibited from claiming the same property in every way, with no prescription of time blocking them, unless perhaps, after it has befallen them to be freed from the power of their fathers, so much time has flowed by that their assertion (intentio) is excluded by the continuous and unshaken possession of the one holding it (for thirty years).

Given February 26, in the consulship of Marcianus (472).

[413] Pr. = Nov. Theod. 14.1.8; combine with C. 5.9.5.
[414] Combine with C. 5.9.6, 6.20.17.

[5] Idem AA. Nepoti magistro militum Dalmatiae. pr. Non sine ratione de negotio, quod inter matrem familias, cuius vestra suggestio meminit, et germanum eius vertitur, magnitudo tua diversis legibus ex utraque parte prolatis nostram credidit consulendam esse clementiam, cum mulier diversis iuris lectionibus idem intellegi maritum et sponsum niteretur probare, germanus mariti nomen illi soli, qui nuptias contraxerit, recitatione constitutionis divorum retro principum Theodosii et Valentiniani, qua cavetur, quidquid maritus vel uxor in potestate constituti invicem sibi reliquerint, non patri adquiri, sed ad eorum ius pertinere, imponere. 1. Quamvis ergo significatione nominis maritus vel uxor post coeptum matrimonium intellegatur, ex quo videlicet inducta est dubietas, attamen, quia consequens est ambiguas atque legum diversis interpretationibus titubantes causas benigne atque naturalis iuris moderamine temperare, non piget nos in praesenti quoque negotio, de quo sublimitas tua suggessit, aequitati convenientem Iuliani tantae existimationis viri atque disertissimi iuris periti opinionem sequi. qui cum de dotali praedio tractatu proposito idem ius tam de uxore quam de sponsa observare arbitratus sit, licet lex Iulia de uxore tantum loquatur: qua ratione tam sponsaliciam donationem quam hereditatem, quam memoratus sponsus suam sponsam lucrari voluit, non adquiri patri, sed ad eam pervenire benignum esse perspeximus.
D. k. Iun. Leone A. v cons.

[6] Imp. Iustinianus A. Demostheni pp. pr. Cum oportet similem providentiam tam patribus quam liberis deferri, invenimus autem in veteris iuris observatione multas esse res, quae extrinsecus ad filios familias veniunt et minime patribus adquiruntur, quemadmodum in maternis bonis vel quae ex maritali lucro ad eos perveniunt, ita et in his, quae ex aliis causis filiis familias adquiruntur, certam introducimus definitionem. 1. Si quis itaque filius familias vel patris sui vel avi vel proavi

[5] The same Augusti to Nepos, Master of Soldiers in Dalmatia. pr. Not without reason has Your Greatness believed, concerning the business involving the mother of the family (materfamilias) whom Your report (suggestio) mentions and her brother (from the same father), after diverse laws have been cited by either side, that Our Clemency should be consulted, since the woman was attempting to prove that "husband" (maritus) and "fiancé" (sponsus) are understood as the same in different readings of the law, whereas the brother applied[415] the name of husband only to that person who has contracted a marriage, on the basis of the recitation of the constitution of the earlier deified Emperors Theodosius and Valentinian,[416] in which it was provided that whatever a husband or wife in power have left one another reciprocally is not acquired for the father but belongs to their right. 1. Therefore although by the (strict) meaning of the term, a husband or wife is understood after the marriage has begun, as a result of which, apparently, doubt has been introduced, even so, since it is logical to temper in a kindly fashion and with the guidance of natural law cases that are ambiguous and wavering because of different interpretations of the laws, We do not regret also in the present business, about which Your Sublimity has reported, to follow the opinion of Julian, a man of such a great reputation and a most eloquent expert in the law, which is consistent with fairness. Since he decided to observe the same rule concerning a dotal property, when the question was proposed, for both a wife and a fiancée, although the lex Julia only speaks about the wife, We have seen that, by this reasoning, it is kind that both a gift to a fiancée and an inheritance, which the aforementioned husband wanted his fiancée to gain, is not acquired for her father, but belongs to her.

Given June 1, in the consulship of Leo, for the fifth time (473).

[6] Emperor JUSTINIAN Augustus to Demosthenes, Praetorian Prefect. pr. Although similar foresight must be taken for both fathers and children, We find all the same in Our observation of the ancient law that there are many things that come from outside to children in the father's power and are not acquired for fathers, as in maternal property or what comes to them from a marital benefit[417] (lucrum maritale), as well as with those things that are acquired for children in power from other causes, We introduce a precise definition. 1. If any child in power, whether in the power of his father, grandfather, in potestate constitutus aliquid sibi adquisierit non ex eius substantia, cuius in potestate sit, sed ab aliis quibuscumque causis, quae ex liberalitate fortunae vel laboribus suis ad eum perveniant, ea suis parentibus non in plenum, sicut antea erat sancitum, sed usque ad solum usum fructum adquirat, et eorum usus fructus quidem apud patrem vel avum vel proavum, quorum in sacris sit constitutus, permaneat, dominium autem filiis familias inhaereat ad exemplum tam maternarum quam ex nuptialibus causis filiis familias adquisitarum rerum. 1a. Sic etenim et parenti nihil derogabitur usum fructum rerum possidenti et filii non lugebunt, quae ex suis laboribus sibi possessa sunt, ad alios transferenda adspicientes vel extraneos vel ad fratres suos, quod etiam gravius multis esse videtur. 1b. Exceptis castrensibus peculiis, quorum nec usum fructum patrem vel avum vel proavum habere veteres leges concedunt: in his enim nihil novamus, sed vetera iura intacta servamus. eodem observando etiam in his peculiis, quae quasi castrensia peculia ad instar castrensis peculii accesserunt. 1c. Sub hac tamen definitione hunc legis articulum inducimus, ut in successione quidem earum rerum, quae extrinsecus filiis familias adquiruntur, iura eadem observentur, quae in maternis et nuptialibus rebus statuta sunt.

[415] The mansucripts' imponere probably requires emendation.

[416] 1 above.

[417] Materna bona is property inherited from the child's mother. This exception, introduced by Constantine, was gradually extended to other property of non-paternal origin (bona adventicia), including dowry from the child's wife (cf. 4 and 5 above), the maritale lucrum.

2. Non autem hypothecam filii familias adversus res patris viventis adhuc seu iam mortui sperare audeant nec ratiocinia eis super administratione inferre, sed tantummodo alienatione vel hypotheca suo nomine patribus denegata rerum, habeat parens plenissimam potestatem uti fruique his rebus, quae per filios familias secundum praedictum modum adquiruntur. 2a. Et gubernatio earum sit penitus impunita et nullo modo audeat filius familias vel filia vel deinceps personae vetare eum, cuius in potestate sunt, easdem res tenere aut quomodo voluerit gubernare, vel si hoc fecerint, patria potestas in eos exercenda est: sed habeat pater vel aliae personae, quae superius enumeratae sunt, plenissimam potestatem uti frui gubernareque res praedicto modo adquisitas.

2b. Et si quid ex usu earum pater avus vel proavus collegerit, habeat licentiam quemadmodum cupit hoc disponere et in alios heredes transmittere, vel si ex earum rerum fructibus res mobiles vel immobiles vel se moventes comparaverit, eas etiam quomodo voluerit habeat or great-grandfather, acquires something for himself not from the property of the one in whose power he is, but from any other causes, that passes to him as a result of the generosity of fortune or his own labors, he shall acquire these things for his male ascendants not in full, as had been previously ordained, but only up to the usufruct, and the usufruct over these shall remain with the father, grandfather, or great-grandfather in whose power (sacris) he is, but the ownership shall accrue to the children in power, on the analogy of maternal property and property acquired for children in their father's power in connection with marriage. 1a. For in this way nothing will be diminished for the father possessing the usufruct over the property, and children will not grieve from seeing that things that are possessed by them as a result of their own labors are to be transferred to others, either outsiders or their own siblings, which is seen by many as even more burdensome. 1b. An exception is made for military peculia, whose usufruct the ancient laws do not allow the father, grandfather, or great-grandfather to have; for We make no innovation with respect to these, but We maintain the old rights intact. The same is to be observed also in these peculia that have come (to the child) as quasi military peculia on the analogy of a military peculium. 1c. Nevertheless, under this definition We introduce this provision of the law, that, in the succession to that property that is acquired from outside for children in their father's power, the same rights be observed that have been established for maternal and marriage property.

2. Children in their father's power should not dare to hope for a hypothec against the property of the father, whether still living or already dead, nor to subject their management to accounting, with only the alienation of the property or imposing an hypothec on it in their own name denied to fathers. The parent shall have the fullest power to use and enjoy that property that is acquired through children in power in accordance with the aforementioned means. 2a. And their management of it shall be altogether unpunished and in no way shall the son or daughter in the father's power or their successors (deinceps personae) dare to forbid that person, in whose power they are, to hold the same property or to manage it in whatever way he wants, or, if they do this, the father's power is to be exercised against them. But the father or other persons who have been listed above shall have the fullest power to use, enjoy, and manage that property acquired in the aforementioned way.

2b. And if the father, grandfather, or great-grandfather gains something from the use of this property, he shall have the license to dispose of this howsoever he desires and to transmit it to other heirs, or if from the fruits of this property he purchases movable, immovable, or self-moving property, he shall et transmittat et in alios transferat sive extraneos sive liberos suos seu quamlibet personam. 2c. Sin autem res sibi memorato modo adquisitas parens noluerit tenere, sed apud filium vel filiam vel deinceps personas reliquerit, nullam post obitum eius licentiam habeant heredes alii patris avi vel proavi eundem usum vel quod ex hoc ad filios familias pervenit utpote patri debitum sibi vindicare, sed quasi diurna donatione in filium celebranda, qui usum fructum detinuit, quem patrem habere oportuerat, ita causa intellegatur et eundem usum fructum post obitum patris ipse lucretur, parente ius exactionis quasi sibi debitae a filio, qui usum fructum consensu eius possidebat, suae posteritati vel successioni minime transmittente, quatenus in omni pace inter se successio eius permaneat nec altercationis cuiusdam maxime inter fratres oriatur occasio.

3. Cum autem Constantiniana lege cautum erat, si filii familias ab his, qui eos in potestate habent, nexu paterno per emancipationem liberentur, debere patrem tertiam partem bonorum, quae adquiri non solent, quasi remunerationis gratia a filio accipere vel retinere, et ex hac causa iterum pars non minima substantiae liberorum adimebatur, sancimus huiusmodi casu interveniente et emancipatione liberis imposita non tertiam partem dominii rerum minime adquisitarum, sed dimidiam usus fructus apud maiores qui emancipationem donant residere: exceptis et in hoc casu castrensibus et quasi castrensibus tantummodo peculiis, quibus nihil nec ex hac causa diminuitur. sic enim nec liberis cuiuscumque sexus aliquid dominii auferetur et patribus amplioris patrimonii usus fructus adsignabitur. 3a. Hoc obtinente et si in emancipatione sibi parentes hoc minime servaverint: sed nisi specialiter vel in emancipatione huic praemio renuntiaverint vel donatione facta sese et ab huiusmodi beneficio alienaverint et in liberos hoc transtulerint, manere ad eos etiam tacentes ius et beneficium usus fructus retinendi, ut post obitum eorum et usus fructus in omnibus memoratis causis ad eos perveniat, quorum dominium est, scilicet secundum, quod iam diximus, in successionibus eorum omnibus servandis, quae de maternis et nuptialibus bonis consultissimis legibus definita sunt.

4. Sed cum tacitas hypothecas tam veteres leges in quibusdam certis casibus introduxerunt quam nos in maternis ceterisque, quas servare necesse est, et dubitabatur, ex quo hypothecas competere oportet, also have it in whatever way he wants and he shall transmit it and transfer it to others, whether outsiders, or his own children, or any person. 2c. But if the father does not wish to hold property acquired for himself in the manner mentioned, but leaves it with his son or daughter or their successors, other heirs of the father, grandfather, or great-grandfather shall have no license after his death to claim for themselves its use or what has accrued from it to the children in power, like it was owed to the father, but, as if a long-lasting gift were to be conferred on the child who retained the usufruct that the father was supposed to have had, the situation is to be understood in this way and he himself shall gain the same usufruct after the death of the father, with the father not transferring to his posterity or successors the right to exact the usufruct as if owed to himself by the child who on his consent possessed it, to the extent that his successors remain in complete peace among themselves and no occasion for any altercation at all arise among the siblings.

3. Since, however, it had been provided in the law of Constantine[418] that, if children in power (filii familias) should be freed by emancipation from the paternal bond by those who have them in their power, the father ought to receive from the child or retain one-third of the property, which is not customarily acquired (i.e., pass into ownership), as if for remuneration, and as a result of this reason a not insignificant part of the property belonging to the children was taken away a second time (iterum), We ordain that, when such a case occurs and emancipation has been imposed on the children, one-third of the ownership of the property not acquired not remain with the male ascendants who bestow emancipation, but half the usufruct; the only exception is made for military and quasi-military peculia, which are not even diminished on this basis. For in this way no ownership will be taken away from children of either sex and the usufruct of a larger patrimony will be assigned to fathers. 3a. This rule obtains even if in the emancipation the male ascendants have not reserved this for themselves; but unless they either have specifically renounced this reward in the emancipation or when making a gift have alienated themselves from such a benefit and have transferred it to their children, the right and benefit of retaining the usufruct remains with them even when they are silent, so that after their passing the usufruct in all the aforementioned situations accrues to those persons who have the ownership, that is to say, in accordance with what We have already said, in maintaining all the successions to those things that have been defined as maternal and marriage property by the most carefully considered laws.

4. But since the ancient laws have introduced tacit hypothecs in certain specific cases, just as We have in maternal and other property,[419] which must be maintained, and there was doubt from what time the hypothecs must apply, utrumne ab initio an ex eo tempore, ex quo male aliquid gestum est, compendiosa narratione interpretamur initium gerendae vel deserendae administrationis vel observationis esse spectandum et non tempus, ex quo male aliquid fuerit gestum.

[418] C. 6.60.1.

Recitata septimo miliario in novo consistorio palatii dn. Iustiniani. d. III k. Nov. Decio vc. cons.

[7] Idem A. Iuliano pp. pr. Cum multa privilegia imperialibus donationibus iam praestita sunt, dignum incrementum et his offerre nostra dignata est clementia. 1. Si quis igitur a serenissimo principe vel a piissima Augusta sive masculus sive femina donationem sit consecutus vel consecuta sive mobilium sive immobilium seu se moventium rerum, in filiis familias tamen constitutus vel constituta, habeat huiusmodi res omni adquisitione absolutas et nemini eas adquirat neque earum usum fructum pater vel avus vel proavus sibi vindicet, sed ad similitudinem castrensis peculii omnem facultatem in eas filii vel filiae familias habeant. 2. Ut enim imperialis fortuna omnes supereminet alias, ita oportet et principales liberalitates culmen habere praecipuum.

D. proposit. XII k. April. Constantinopoli Lampadio et Oreste vv. cc. conss.

[8] Idem A. Iohanni pp. pr. Cum non solum in maternis rebus, quae filiis familias deferuntur, sed etiam de aliis omnibus, quae adquisitionem effugiunt, et maxime post novellam nostri numinis legem, quae omnia, quae extrinsecus ad filios familias perveniunt et non ex paterna substantia, non esse adquirenda patribus statuit, nisi tantummodo ad usum fructum, variae altercationes exortae sunt et varios eventus variosque continent tractatus et semper in iudiciis versantur, necesse est utiliter et apertissime omnia dirimere.

1. Sancimus itaque in omnibus rebus, quae fugiunt quidem dominii adquisitionem, sed usus fructus tantummodo patri offertur vel aliis parentibus a filio familias cuiuscumque gradus vel sexus, sive pater adire filium familias integrae aetatis compellit et ille reclamandum whether from the outset or from that time when something has been improperly administered, We decide, to explain it in brief, that one must look at the beginning of managing or deserting an administration or supervision, and not at the time when it was administered improperly.

Recited at the seventh milestone in the New Consistory of the Palace of Our Lord Justinian. Given October 30, in the consulship of vir clarissimus Decius (529).

[7] The same Augustus to Julian, Praetorian Prefect. pr. Although many privileges have already been bestowed by means of imperial donations, Our Clemency has deigned to offer an increase even to these. 1. Therefore if anyone, whether male or female, has gained a gift from the Most Serene Emperor or from the Most Pious Augusta, whether of movable, immovable, or self-moving property, but while children in power, he or she shall have such property free from every acquisition (by the paterfamilias) and not acquire it for anyone, and the father, grandfather, or great-grandfather shall not claim the usufruct over it for himself, but, similarly to a military peculium the sons or daughters in power shall have every right (facultas) over it. 2. For as the imperial fortune looms over all other ones, in the same way imperial generosity must have a lofty height.

Given and posted March 21,[420] at Constantinople, in the post-consulate of the viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestes (530).

[8][421] The same Augustus to John, Praetorian Prefect. pr. Since various disputes have arisen not only in connection with maternal property that is conferred on children in (a father's) power, but also with all other property that escapes acquisition (by the paterfamilias), and especially after the new law of Our Imperial Majesty,[422] which established that everything that comes to children in power from outside and not from the father's power is not to be acquired for the father except as to the usufruct alone, and (further since) various disputes have arisen involving differing outcomes and differing considerations, and they are always before the courts, it is necessary to sort everything out usefully and most openly.

1. And so We ordain that in all property that escapes acquisition of ownership (by the paterfamilias), but whose usufruct alone is offered to the father or other male ascendants by the child in power of any degree or sex, whether the father compels the child in power of full age to enter the property and that one

[419] Blume: see C. 5.9.8.
[420] Krüger writes "given March 18." This is adopted by Lounghis et al.
[421] Combine with C. 6.22.11.
[422] 6 above.

existimat, sive filius familias adire cupit et pater in contrarium inclinat, liberam habere licentiam et patrem ipsum sibi adire hereditatem recusante filio et omne sive damnum sive lucrum in suam habere fortunam, nullo ex hoc praeiudicio filio generando: sive e contrario patre recusante filius adire hereditatem voluerit, nullam adquisitionem nec usum fructum patri offerri, sed ipsum filium sibi imputare, si quid ex hoc contigerit: nulla actione neque contra patrem danda, ubi adversus eius voluntatem filius hereditatem vel legatum vel fideicommissum vel aliud quidquid ex quocumque titulo sive donationis sive contractus sibi adquirere maluerit, neque adversus filium simili modo actione extendenda, ubi recusante eo pater sua auctoritate haec sibi vindicet, huiusmodi aditionis tramite ex praesenti lege patri competente. 1a. Sed habeat et pater omnem licentiam et actiones movere et ab aliis pulsari, ubi ad eum totum commodum pervenit, et filius simili modo in agendo et pulsando solus habeat et detrimentum et commodum, necessitate per officium patri imponenda tantummodo filio consentire vel agenti vel fugienti, ne iudicium sine patria voluntate videatur consistere. et haec quidem, si plenae aetatis filius est, qui paternam voluntatem sequi non patitur.

1b. Sin autem in secunda aetate adhuc filius est et hereditate ei delata pater consentire adeunti hereditatem noluerit vel patre volente ipse reclamaverit, si quidem recusaverit filius, licentiam damus patri simili modo hereditatem adire et eam pleno iure habere, his omnibus quae superius diximus locum habentibus. 1c. Sin autem patre recusante filius adire maluerit, damus quidem licentiam ei hoc facere, patre autem nolente res filii gubernare propter causae necessitatem habeat facultatem filius adire competentem iudicem et ex eo petere curatorem hereditati dari, per quem gubernatio rerum in eum delatarum procedat: in utroque casu in integrum restitutionis auxilio minime ei denegando.

2. Similique modo et in milite filio familias, qui recusaverit aditionem hereditatis, quae ei ex castrensibus occasionibus perveniat, patri danda licentia adire hereditatem, ut ad ipsum perveniat pleno iure tam per usum fructum quam per dominium eandem hereditatem possessurum, quasi ipse pater ab initio fuisset heres institutus: eo videlicet subiacente omnibus oneribus hereditariis et omnia commoda habituro et ad filium

judges that he should refuse, or whether the child in power desires to enter it and the father inclines in the opposite direction, the father have full permission to enter the inheritance for himself when the child refuses and to have the entire loss or gain as part of his own fortune, and no prejudice is to be created as a result of this for the child. If, by contrast, the child wishes to enter the inheritance while the father refuses, no acquisition (of ownership) or usufruct is offered to the father, but the child himself counts it for his own if anything befalls him from this. No right of action is to be given against the father, when against his will a child prefers to acquire for himself an inheritance, a legacy, a trust, or any other thing from any title, whether a gift or a contract, nor in a similar manner is any action to be extended against the child, when, despite his refusal, the father claims these things for himself on his own authority, since a path for entering upon (the bequest etc.) is available to the father from the present law. 1a. But the father shall have all permission both to bring actions and to defend himself against others when the entire benefit comes to him, and the child in a similar fashion shall alone have both the loss and gain in bringing an action and in defending against one, with the necessity to be imposed on the father through his duty only to consent to the child's either bringing an action or defending himself against one, so that the judgment not be seen to exist without the father's wish. These rules apply if the child who does not bear following the father's wish is of full age.

1b. If, however, the child is still in the second age (from 14 to 25 for males), and, when an inheritance has been conferred on him, the father is unwilling to consent to his entering it, or, at the father's wish, he himself protests, if indeed the child refuses, We give permission to the father in a similar manner to enter the inheritance and to have it in full right, with all these provisions that We have mentioned above applying. 1c. If, however, despite the father's refusal the child prefers to enter (the inheritance), We certainly give him permission to do this, but when the father is unwilling to manage the property of the child, because of the necessity of the case the son shall have the right to approach a competent judge and ask him that a curator be appointed for the inheritance, through whom the management of the property that has been conferred on him might proceed; in either case the aid of a restoration of rights is not to be denied to him.

2. In a similar manner, in the case of a son in power serving as a soldier who refuses entering into an inheritance that comes to him from his military activities, the father is to be given permission to enter the inheritance, so that it might pass to him in full right, and he will possess the same inheritance, both through the usufruct and through ownership, as if the father himself had been designated as heir from the beginning. Certainly he is subject to all burdens associated with the inheritance, and he will have all the benefits, with no nullo periculo redundante. et haec quidem in his casibus observanda sunt, quibus discordia inter patrem et filium vertitur.

3. Ubi autem in unum voluntas eorum concurrit, et pater usum fructum et filius habeat proprietatem, et in agentibus et in fugientibus pater quidem suscipiat actiones et moveat, cuiuscumque aetatis filius inveniatur, adhibeatur autem etiam filiorum consensus, nisi adhuc in prima sunt aetate constituti vel longe absunt, sumptibus videlicet a patre propter rerum incrementa faciendis. cum enim nuda proprietas apud filium invenitur, ex qua substantia possibile est eum sumptus litis dependere?

4. Sin autem aes alienum ex defuncti persona descendit, cum etiam apud veteres haec esse substantia intellegitur, quae post detractum aes alienum supersederit, habeat pater licentiam ex rebus hereditariis primum quidem mobilibus, sin autem non sufficiunt, et immobilibus sufficientem partem filii nomine venumdare, ut ilico reddatur aes alienum et non usurarum onere praegravetur. 4a. Quod si pater hoc facere supersederit, ipse usuras vel ex reditibus vel ex sua substantia omnimodo dare compelletur.

4b. Sin autem legata vel fideicommissa sive annalia sive semel relicta imminent huiusmodi personis, si quidem tales reditus sunt, qui sufficiunt ad annalia legata, pater ex huiusmodi reditibus haec dependere compelletur. 4c. Sin autem non habet substantia sufficientem reditum ad legatorum vel fideicommissorum praestationem vel minime reditus vel alias accessiones contineat, sint tamen res mobiles vel immobiles, steriles quidem, non tamen inutiles, veluti domus in provinciis pretiosae vel ubicumque posita suburbana, ex quibus huiusmodi legata possunt explicari, licentia dabitur patri sufficientem partem eorum similiter filii nomine vendere et satisfacere legatis.

4d. Hoc procul dubio observando, ut et mancipia ipse usufructuarius aleret et omnia circa usum fructum faceret, quae nullo modo proprietatem possint deteriorem facere, paterna reverentia eum excusante et a ratiociniis et a cautionibus et ab aliis omnibus, quae usufructuarii extranei a legibus exiguntur, secundum nostrae constitutionis tenorem, risk redounding to the son. And these measures are to be observed in cases in which discord between the father and son is involved.

3. When, however, their wishes concur, the father shall have the usufruct and the child the ownership, and in bringing actions and defending against them the father shall take up actions and set them in motion, whatever age the child should be found to be; but the consent of the children should be sought, unless they are in the first age (below puberty) or are far away, with the expenses to be covered by the father on account of (his receiving) the income from the property. For since (only) the bare ownership is located with the child, from what resources is it possible for him to defray the expenses of a lawsuit?

4. If, however, debt passes from the person of the deceased, since even among the ancients what remains after subtracting the debt is understood to be the property (of the inheritance), the father shall have permission to sell in the name of the son a sufficient share from the inherited property, first from the movable property, but if this is not sufficient, also from the immovable property, so that the debt be paid back straightway and not be made heavier with the burden of interest. 4a. But if the father fails to do this, he will in every case be compelled to pay the interest, either from the revenues or from his own property.

4b. If, however, legacies or trusts, whether paid on an annual basis or left once and for all, loom over such persons, if the revenues are of such as kind as to suffice for annual payment of the legacies, the father will be compelled to pay these from such revenues. 4c. If, however, the property does not have sufficient income to provide the legacies or trusts or should not include income or other accretions (accessiones), but there should be movable or immovable property, infertile (steriles, i.e., not providing any income) to be sure, but not unuseful, such as expensive houses in the provinces or suburban estates situated anywhere, from which such legacies can be resolved (explicari), permission will be given to the father to sell a sufficient part of them in the name of the child in a similar manner and satisfy the legacies.

4d. Without doubt this is to be observed, that the usufructuary himself is to provide support for the slaves and to do everything in connection with the usufruct that in no way can make the property worse, while the reverence owed to a father excuses him from rendering accounts and providing written promises, as well as from all other things that are demanded from external usufructuaries by the laws, in accordance with the provisions of Our constitution, which we have already issued concerning such cases.[423] 4e. However, the father must henceforth support the son himself or sons, or daughters, not on account of quam iam super huiusmodi casibus tulimus. 4e. Ipsum autem filium vel filios vel filias et deinceps alere patri necesse est non propter hereditates, sed propter ipsam naturam et leges, quae et parentibus alendos esse liberos imperaverunt et ipsis liberis parentes, si inopia ex utraque parte vertitur.

[423] C. 6. 61.6.2.

5. Sed pater quidem in praedictis tantummodo causis habeat licentiam recte res filiorum familias vendere filii nomine vel, si emptorem non invenerit, supponere, nullo modo licentia concedenda filiis easdem venditiones vel hypothecas retractare: non item licentia parentibus danda extra memoratas causas res, quarum dominium apud eorum posteritatem est, alienare vel pignori vel hypothecae titulo dare, sed si hoc fecerint, scituris, quod necesse est eos in legum laqueos incidere, quibus huiusmodi venditiones vel hypothecae sunt interdictae, exceptis videlicet rebus mobilibus vel immobilibus illis, quae onerosae hereditati sunt vel quocumque modo damnosae, quas sine periculo vendere patri cum paterna pietate licet, ut pretium earum vel in res et causas hereditarias procedat vel filio servetur. 5a. Filiis autem familias in his dumtaxat casibus, in quibus usus fructus apud parentes constitutus est, donec parentes vivunt, nec testari de isdem rebus permittimus, nec citra voluntatem eorum, quorum in potestate sunt, ulla licentia concedenda dominium rei ad eos pertinentis alienare vel hypothecae titulo dare vel pignori adsignare. melius enim est coartare iuveniles calores, ne cupidini dediti tristem exitum sentiant, qui eos post dispersum expectat patrimonium. cum enim, sicut dictum est, parentes alere eos secundum leges compelluntur, quare ad venditionem rerum suarum prosilire desiderant?

6. Ubi autem puerilis aetas patri licentiam praestat etiam sine consensu filii hereditatem nomine eius adire, si hoc fecerit, damus quidem filio in integrum restitutionem, postquam patria fuerit potestate liberatus vel adoleverit, patrem autem oneribus hereditariis, licet nomine filii adiit, modis omnibus illigamus: quare enim talem hereditatem adiit, qualem nec ipse nunc nec filius idoneam sibi esse existimat? 6a. Non autem filio damus licentiam, si in integrum restitutionem petat respuendam esse credens hereditatem, adhuc minoribus curriculis instantibus iterum per aliam restitutionem adire praefatam hereditatem, ne ludibrio leges ei fiant saepius eandem et amplecti et respuere cupienti. si enim quod pater fecit ratum non habuit et propter hoc restitutus est, quomodo ferendus videatur iterum iudicium amplectens, quod et post patris voluntatem contraria adfectione aspernandum esse existimavit?

the inheritances, but on account of nature itself and the laws that have ordered children to be fed by parents and parents by their very children, if poverty is an issue (vertitur) from either side.

5. But the father shall have permission only in the cases named above to sell licitly the property of children in power in the name of the child, or, if he does not find a buyer, to obligate it (supponere, for a loan), while in no way is permission to be conceded to children to rescind the same sales or hypothecs; likewise permission is not to be given to parents outside the aforementioned causes to alienate or give as a pledge or under title of a hypothec property whose ownership is with their posterity. But they will know that, if they do this, they must fall into the snares of the laws by which such sales and hypothecs have been forbidden, except, that is to say, for that movable or immovable property that is burdensome to the inheritance or in any way harmful, which the father is permitted to sell with paternal piety, so that the price for it might become part of the inherited property and interests (in res et causas hereditarias procedat) or be preserved for the child. 5a. We do not permit children in power only in those cases in which the usufruct has been established for male ascendants, to dispute (testari) about the same property, as long as the parents live, nor, against the will of those in whose power they are, is any permission to be conceded them to alienate the ownership of property belonging to them, to give it under the title of a hypothec, or to assign it as a pledge. For it is better to restrict youthful passions, lest surrendering to their desire they feel the sad result that awaits them after the dispersal of their patrimony. For since, as has been said, parents are compelled to support them in accordance with the laws, why do they long to jump headfirst to the sale of their property?

6. When, however, a childish age offers permission to the father even without the child's consent to enter an inheritance in his name, if he does this, We give the child (the right to) restoration of rights, after he is freed from his father's power or grows up, but we bind the father in all ways with the burdens of the inheritance, although he entered into it in the name of the child; for why did he enter an inheritance of such a kind that neither he himself now nor his son judges it suitable for themselves? 6a. We do not, however, give the child permission, if he, believing that the inheritance is to be scorned, should seek a restoration of rights when a lesser passage of years is still present (i.e., while he is still a minor), to enter the aforementioned inheritance through another restoration of rights, lest the laws become a mockery to him who again and again desires to embrace and scorn the same inheritance. For in what way does he seem to be tolerable, when he at a later time embraces the decision which he thought ought to be rejected even in opposition to his father's wishes?

6b. Sin vero pater quidem hereditatem repudiaverit infante filio constituto, ipse autem filius postea vel adhuc in sacris constitutus vel patria potestate liberatus adeundam esse crediderit eandem hereditatem, licentiam damus ei vel, si sui iuris efficiatur, tutoribus vel curatoribus eius hereditatem adire, nullo praeiudicio ex recusatione paterna ei generando: simili modo et in hac parte nulla ei vel tutoribus eius vel curatoribus licentia concedenda contra priorem suam voluntatem in integrum restitutionem petere. 6c. Quae et in legatis et fideicommissis tam specialibus quam per universitatem relictis et in aliis causis, quas supra enumeravimus, similibusque eis observanda sunt.

7. In servis autem, qui filiis familias donantur, sive in constante matrimonio sive ab extraneis sub ea condicione, ut statim eos in libertatem producant, nullum impedimentum paterna faciat auctoritas. qualis enim usus fructus potest ei adquiri, qui momentarius esse ostenditur? si enim in ipso momento necesse habet eum et possidere et libertate donare, in talem hominem qualis usus fructus patri potest adquiri?

D. IIII k. Aug. Constantinopoli post consulatum Lampadii et Orestis vv. cc.

9–11. …

LXII De Hereditatibus Decurionum Naviculariorum Cohortalium Militum et Fabricensium

[1] Imp. Constantinus A. Mastichiano praefecto annonae. Si quis navicularius sine testamento et liberis vel successoribus defunctus sit, hereditatem eius non ad fiscum, sed ad corpus naviculariorum, ex quo fatali sorte subtractus est, deferri praecipimus.

PP. XV k. … Lastronae Constantino A. VII et Constantio C. conss.

6b. But if the father repudiates the inheritance while the child is still an infant, but the child himself afterwards, while still in the household (sacris, the father's power) or after being freed from the father's power, believes he should enter the same inheritance, We give permission to him, or, if he should be made sui iuris, to his tutors or curators, to enter the inheritance, and no prejudice is to be created for him from his father's refusal. In a similar manner, in this connection, no permission is to be conceded to him or to his tutors or curatores to seek a restoration of rights contrary to his earlier wish. 6c. These provisions are also to be observed in legacies and trusts, both those bequeathed specifically and those bequeathed universally (tam specialibus quam per universitatem relictis), as well as in other cases that We have enumerated above.

7. In the case of slaves, however, that are given as gifts to children in power, whether in a continuing marriage or from outsiders under the condition that they (the children in power) bring them immediately into liberty, the father's authority shall create no impediment. For what sort of usufruct can be acquired for him that is shown to be momentary? For what kind of usufruct can be acquired for the father over such a person if in the very instant he must both possess him and bestow liberty on him?

Given July 29, at Constantinople, in the post-consulate of the viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestes (531).[424]

Sixty-Second Title Inheritances of Decurions, Shipowners, Officials Serving the Praetorian Prefecture, and Workers in State Arms Factories

[1] Emperor Constantine Augustus to Mastichianus, Prefect of the Food Supply. If any shipowner has died without a will and without children or successors, We instruct that his inheritance not pass to the Treasury, but to the association of shipowners (corpus naviculariorum), from which he was removed by fatal lot.

Posted on the fifteenth day before the Kalends ... at Lastrona,[425] in the consulship of Constantine Augustus, for the seventh time, and Constantius Caesar (326).[426]

[424] Theodorus, Epitome Novellarum 22.36, cites ch. 11 of this title, indicating the loss of at least three constitutions.

[425] Mommsen emends "June 17, at Verona."

[426] The first Consul may be Constantius. Haloander restored the date as "in the consulship of Constantius Augustus, for the seventh time, and Constan(tiu)s Caesar (for the third)" (354). Seeck gives June 17, 326.

[2] Imp. Constantius A. Bonoso magistro equitum. Universis tam legionibus quam vexillationibus comitatensibus seu cuneis insinuare debebis, ut cognoscant, cum aliquis fuerit rebus humanis exemptus atque intestatus sine legitimo herede decesserit, ad vexillationem, in qua militaverit, res eiusdem necessario pervenire.

D. v id. Mai. Hierapoli Rufino et Eusebio conss.

[3] Idem A. Rufino pp. Si quis cohortali condicione gravatus sine testamento vel quolibet successore ultimum diem obierit, successionem eius non ad fiscum, sed ad ceteros cohortales eiusdem provinciae pertinere iubemus.

D. v k. Ian. Limenio et Catulino conss.

[4] Impp. Theodosius et Valentinianus AA. Florentio pp. Intestatorum curialium bona, si sine herede moriantur, ordinibus patriae eorum adipisci[xv] praecipimus.

D. v id. Mart. Florentio et Dionysio conss.

[5] Idem AA. Aureliano comiti rerum privatarum. pr. Si quis fabricensis sine liberis vel legitimo herede decesserit non condito testamento, eius bona, cuiuscumque summae sint, ad eos pertinere, qui velut creatores decedentium attinentur, qui fisco pro intercepto respondere coguntur. 1. Hoc enim facto contingit, ut et rei publicae ratio salva permaneat et fabricenses collegarum suorum solaciis perfruantur, qui damnis ac detrimentis tenentur obnoxii.

D. prid. non. Nov. Constantinopoli Theodosio A. XVII et Festo conss.

[xv] adscisci

[2] [427] Emperor CONSTANTIUS Augustus to Bonosus, Master of the Cavalry. You will be obliged to communicate to all the legions as well as to all the border detachments and cavalry units (cunei) so that they know, when someone is taken away from human affairs and dies intestate without a lawful heir, that his property must pass to the detachment in which he served

Given May 11, at Hierapolis, in the consulship of Rufinus and Eusebius (347).

[3] The same Augustus to Rufinus, Praetorian Prefect. If someone burdened by the condition of serving on the staff of a Praetorian Prefect (cohortali condicione gravatus) meets his final day without a will and without any successor, We order that his succession belong not to the Treasury, but to the other prefecture officials of the same province.

Given December 28, in the consulship of Limenius and Catulinus (349).

[4] Emperors THEODOSIUS and VALENTINIAN Augusti to Florentius, Praetorian Prefect. We instruct that the property of intestate decurions, if they should die without an heir, be acquired by the orders (councils) of their hometown.

Given March 11, in the consulship of Florentius and Dionysius (429).

[5][428] The same Augusti to Aurelianus, Count of the Privy Purse. pr. If any arms maker dies without children or a legitimate heir without writing a will, his property, of whatever amount it might be, belongs to those persons who are bound as if the electors of the deceased, as they are compelled to respond to the Treasury on behalf of the one taken away. 1. For when this is done it happens both that the interests of the state remain unimpaired and that the arms makers, who are held liable for losses and shortfalls, enjoy the solaces provided by their colleagues.

Given November 4, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Theodosius Augustus, for the sixteenth time, and Festus (439).

[427] = C.Th. 5.6.1.
[428] = Nov. Theod. 6 (with some additional wording), which dates the law to 438; combine with C. 11.11.5.

Liber Septimus

I De Vindicta Libertate et apud Consilium Manumissione

[1] Imp. Antoninus A. Tertio. Eorum, qui apud consilium manumittuntur, post causam ab iudicibus probatam et manumissionem secutam non solet status in dubium vocari, si dicantur falsa demonstratione liberati.

PP. non. Oct. Gentiano et Basso conss.

[2] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. et CC. Sallustio. Nihil civitati Romanae semel praestitae vel addere vel detrahere secundam manumissionem potuisse certissimum est.

D. prid. k. Mai. AA. conss.

[3] Idem AA. et CC. Attiae. Nec mulierem per maritum nec alium per procuratorem vindicta manumittere posse non est ambigui iuris.

[4] Imp. Constantinus A. ad Maximum pu. Apud consilium nostrum vel apud consules praetores praesides magistratusve earum civitatum, quibus huiusmodi ius est, adipisci potest patronorum iudicio sedula servitus libertatem.

II De Testamentaria Manumissione

[1] Impp. Severus et Antoninus AA. Primo. Si codicillos maior viginti annis fecisset, confirmationis tempus libertati non nocere certum est: nec enim potestas iuris, sed iudicii consideratur.

Seventh Book

edited by Noel Lenski

First Title Manumission by Rod and before a Council[1]

[1] Emperor Antoninus to Tertius. The status of those who are manumitted before a council (apud consilium), after the case has been approved by the judges and the manumission has taken place, is not usually called into question should they (later) be said to have been freed upon false grounds.
Posted October 7, in the consulship of Gentianus and Bassus (211).

[2] Emperors Diocletian and Maximian Augusti and the Caesars to Sallustius. It is most certain that a second manumission could not have either added to or subtracted from Roman citizenship once it has been granted.
Given April 30, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[3] The same Augusti and Caesars to Attia. The law is not in doubt that no woman can manumit by the rod (vindicta) through a husband, nor anyone else through a procurator.

[4] Emperor Constantine Augustus to Maximus, City Prefect. A diligent slave may, with the consent of the patron, obtain liberty before Our council or before the Consuls, Praetors, governors or magistrates of those cities that have a right of that kind.
<Without subscription (319–323).[2]>

Second Title Testamentary Manumission[3]

[1] Emperors Severus and Antoninus Augusti to Primus. If a person more than 20 years old should have written codicils, it is certain that the time of [1] This title deals with manumission through an ancient judicial fiction involving application of a vindicta, and its late classical replacement taking place before a magistral consilium.

[2] Valerius Maximus Basilius was Urban Prefect of Rome between 319 and 323. This law was dated by Seeck to January 30, 320.
[3] See D. 40.4.

Proposita.

[2] Idem AA. Phileto. Ex testamento defuncti libertates praestari non possunt hereditate non adita, vel si rei memoria propter crimen quod morte non intercidit damnata est.

[3] Idem AA. Euphrosynae. Libertas testamento data adita hereditate contingit, et si heres scriptus per in integrum restitutionem abstinuerit hereditate, nihil ea res libertati obest.

S. XVII k. Mai. Apro et Maximo conss.

[4] Idem AA. Anchilao. pr. Cum testamento directam libertatem pater tuus sit consecutus, quamvis ei heres extiteris, frustra tamen, rationes quas tempore servitutis gessit ut reddas, compelleris, cum non ea condicione acceperit libertatem. 1. Is autem, cui libertas sive fideicommissaria sive directa, si rationes reddidisset, relicta est, ante reliqua illata et ea, quae malo consilio amota sunt, ad libertatem non potest pervenire: sin autem non debitor ex rationibus fuerit repertus, post aditam hereditatem quasi puram libertatem consequitur.

Proposita VII k. Dec. Laeto II et Cereale conss.

[5] Imp. Alexander A. Quintiano. In fraudem creditorum testamento datae libertates, quamvis debitori heres qui solvendo est extiterit, per legem Aeliam Sentiam non valent.

[6] Imp. Gordianus A. Pisistrato. Si hereditas eius, a quo testamento dicis te esse manumissum, ob aes alienum spernitur ab heredibus, conservandae libertatis gratia non iniusta ratione creditoribus hereditariis satis offerens iudicium testatoris servari tibi postulabis, maxime cum id etiam a divo Marco consultissimo principe sit constitutum: quod in extranea quoque persona observari oportet.

confirmation cannot prejudice the manumission (libertati); for it is not so much the force of the law as it is that of his decision that is considered.

Posted.

[2] The same Augusti to Philetus. Manumissions cannot be granted by the will of a decedent if the inheritance is not entered upon or if the memory of an accused person is condemned because of a criminal charge that did not pass away with his death.

[3] The same Augusti to Euphrosyna. When an inheritance has been entered into, a manumission granted in the testament takes immediate effect; even if the appointed heir subsequently gives up the inheritance through restoration of his rights (restitutio in integrum), that fact does not stand in the way of the manumission.

Written April 15, in the consulship of Aper and Maximus (207).

[4] The same Augusti[4] to Anchilaus. pr. Since your father obtained direct manumission in a testament, although you are his heir, you cannot be compelled to render accounts of the transactions which he managed at the time of his slavery, since he was not granted his liberty upon that condition. 1. But a person to whom manumission is granted, either by way of a trust (fideicommissum) or directly, upon condition that he should render accounts cannot obtain such liberty until he has paid any arrears and has returned anything that has been removed by fraud. But if from an examination of the accounts he is not found to be a debtor, he receives unconditional manumission (pura libertas) after the inheritance has been entered upon.

Posted November 25, in the consulship of Laetus, for the second time, and Cerealis (215).

[5] Emperor ALEXANDER Augustus to Quintianus. If manumissions are made in a testament in defraud of creditors, they are invalid under the Lex Aelia Sentia even if the heir of the debtor is solvent.

[6] Emperor GORDIAN Augustus to Pisistratus. If the inheritance of the testator by whom you say you were testamentarily manumitted is refused by the heirs on account of debts, you ask with just reason, for the sake of preserving liberty, that the will of the testator be executed for your benefit provided you offer satisfaction to the creditors of the inheritance, especially since that was also provided for by the Deified Marcus, wisest of Emperors.[5] This rule should be applied also in case of an external heir.

[4] This ought to read Antoninus (Caracalla) only.

[5] See Inst. 3.11.1.

[7] Idem A. Iustae. Contra voluntatem matris tuae libertatem in eum conferre, quem illa liberum fieri prohibuit, non debes, ne videaris iura pietatis violare.

PP. x k. Febr. Sabino II et Venusto conss.

[8] Imp. Philippus A. et Philippus C. Gemello. Cum testator libertatem tempore nuptiarum filii sui vel filiae servo dari iussit, non tempus praestandae libertati praestituit, sed potius condicioni locum fecit, ut non insecutis nuptiis libertas iure posci non possit.

[9] Imppp. Carus Carinus et Numerianus AAA. Mauro. Servo tuo defunctus, licet te heredem scripsisse proponatur, tamen directam libertatem dare non potuit: iure enim directo libertatem servis alienis dare nemo potest.

PP. VI id. Nov. Caro et Carino conss.

[10] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. et CC. Germano. Directis verbis iure data libertate non sola impositione pilei, sed adita hereditate, si nulla iuris impediat constitutio, liberti constituuntur.

[11] Idem AA. et CC. Laurinae. Si iure non substitit testamentum, in hoc nec libertates (cum non fuisse additum, ut pro codicillis scriptum valeret, proponas) recte datas constabit.

PP. sub die XVI k. April. Sirmi AA. conss.

[12] Idem AA. et CC. Rhizo. pr. Si heredes iure facto testamento sollemniter adierint hereditatem, ex testamento tibi libertas quaesita post colludentibus tam scriptis heredibus quam ab intestato vindicantibus successionem adimi non potuit. 1. Quod si sponte repudiaverunt sibi delatam successionem, omnia quae testamento fuerant scripta defecisse convenit. 2. Si vero, ut vos fraudarent libertate, collusisse eos praeses animadverterit, secundum haec quae divus Pius Antoninus constituit libertatibus consuli providebit.

S. k. Dec. Sirmi AA. conss.

[7] The same Augustus to Justa. You should not, contrary to your mother's wish, confer manumission upon him whom she forbade to be made free, lest you should appear to violate the laws of familial loyalty (pietatis iura).

Posted January 23, in the consulship of Sabinus, for the second time, and Venustus (240).

[8] Emperor PHILIP Augustus and Caesar PHILIP to Gemellus. When the testator ordered manumission to be granted to the slave on the occasion of his son's or daughter's wedding, he did not fix a time for the grant of manumission, but rather established the condition for it; thus, if no marriage takes place, manumission cannot be rightfully demanded.

[9] Emperors CARUS, CARINUS, and NUMERIAN Augusti to Maurus. Though it is stated that he appointed you heir, the decedent could not confer direct manumission on your slave. For no one can give direct manumission to another's slaves.

Posted November 8, in the consulship of Carus and Carinus (283).

[10] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti and the Caesars to Germanus. By law slaves become freedmen through a grant of manumission in direct words not only through the imposition of the cap of liberty (pileus), but also by an acceptance of the inheritance, provided no constitution forbids this.

[11][6] The same Augusti and Caesars to Laurina. It is clear that, if the testament is not in conformity with law, no bequests of liberty made in it will stand even if made properly – for you state that the will contains no provision that it should be valid as a codicil.

Posted under date March 17, at Sirmium, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[12] The same Augusti and Caesars to Rhizus. pr. If heirs under a legally executed testament have entered on the inheritance in the usual form, the manumission granted you under the testament cannot subsequently be taken away by collusion between the appointed heirs and those claiming the estate by intestacy. 1. But if the heirs voluntarily repudiated the estate offered them, then, it is agreed, all written provisions of the testament have failed. 2. But if the governor should learn that they have colluded so as to defraud you of your manumission, he will, according to the decision of the deified Antoninus Pius, take care that your liberty is protected.

Written December 1, at Sirmium, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[6] Combine with C. 2.32.2, which is dated "in the consulship of the Augusti" (294), likely the correct year given that Diocletian is known to have been in Heraclea in March 293.

[13] Idem AA. et CC. Martiali. Statuliberis datam libertatem adimi ab herede non posse certum est: nec alienatio nec usucapio statulibero, quominus existente condicione libertatem consequatur, nocere potest.

[14] Impp. Theodosius et Valentinianus AA. Florentio pp. Directas libertates Graecis verbis liceat in testamentis relinquere, ut ita libertates directae datae videantur, ac si legitimis verbis eas testator dari iussisset.

D. prid. id. Sept. Constantinopoli Theodosio A. XVII et Festo conss.

[15] Imp. Iustinianus A. Iohanni pp. pr. Cum constitutio divi Marci declarat, si quis testamento condito vel sine testamento moriens, ut locus fiat ab intestato successioni, libertates reliquerit, nemo autem adire vult defuncti hereditatem eo, quod suspecta esse videtur, et si fuerint libertates forsitan et sine scriptis fideicommissariae relictae, licere vel cuilibet extraneo vel uni ex servis, qui et ipse libertate donatus est et pro sua periclitatur condicione, adire hereditatem sub hac condicione et satisdatione, quod et creditoribus omnibus satisfaciat et libertates imponat his, quibus voluerit testator, variae dubitationes ex hac constitutione emerserunt.

1. Nam si res hereditariae herede minime invento venierint, an et post venditionem earundem rerum possibile est vel servum vel quemlibet alium adire et recuperare quidem ab emptoribus res, satisfacere autem creditoribus et libertatibus, quaerebatur. 1a. Et licet divus Severus semel rebus venditis hoc non admisit, nobis tamen Ulpiani sententia admonente placuit maxime propter libertates, ne depereant, et post venditionem rerum annale remedium dare divi Marci constitutioni, intra quod et creditoribus omnibus satisfiat et emptores nihil novi patiantur, qui annalem saepe sentiebant rescissionem, et licere servo, qui libertate donatus est, vel alii cuidam extraneo vel ante venditionem rerum vel post venditionem, intra annale tamen tempus, adire hereditatem et res recuperare, prius satisdatione danda, ut tam creditoribus quam libertatibus satisfaciat.

[13] The same Augusti and Caesars to Martialis. It is certain that manumission granted to conditionally freed slaves (statuliberi) cannot be taken away by the heir. Neither alienation nor usucapion are able to prejudice any conditionally manumitted freedman from obtaining manumission as long as the condition is met.

[14][7] Emperors THEODOSIUS and VALENTINIAN Augusti to Florentius, Praetorian Prefect. It is permitted to leave direct manumissions in testaments in the Greek language, such that such bequests shall be considered as direct manumissions just as if the testator had ordered them in legal (Latin) words.

Given September 12, at Constantinople, in the Consulship of Theodosius Augustus, for the seventeenth time, and Festus (439).

[15] Emperor JUSTINIAN Augustus to John, Praetorian Prefect. pr. A constitution of the deified Marcus[8] declares that if a man dies leaving an official testament or dies without one in such a way that intestate succession takes place, and if he should grant manumissions, but no one wants to accept the inheritance of the deceased because it appears to be suspect, and if manumissions have perchance been willed in trust (libertates fideicommissariae) even without any writing, any external heir, or one of the slaves who was himself granted freedom and is in jeopardy now as far as his condition is concerned, is permitted to accept the inheritance upon the condition and upon giving security that he will satisfy all creditors and will grant manumission to those to whom the testator wanted it granted. Nevertheless, various doubts have arisen out of this constitution.

1. For it was asked whether, if the property of the estate were sold upon finding no heir, it is possible for a slave or someone else to enter on the inheritance after such sale, and recover the property sold from the purchasers, upon satisfying creditors and granting manumissions. 1a. And though the deified Severus held that this could not be done after the property had once been sold, We have decided, following the opinion of Ulpian, especially in order that manumissions may not be lost, to order that a remedy of a year after the sale should be added to the provisions of the constitution of the deified Marcus, during which time all the creditors may be satisfied. No new burden is thereby imposed on purchasers, who are often obliged to submit to a rescission within the year. The slave to whom manumission had been granted, or any external heir, may, before the sale or within a year afterward, accept the inheritance and recover the property, first giving security that he will satisfy all creditors as well as complete all manumissions.

[7] = Nov. Theod. 16.1.8. Combine with C. 5.28.8, 6.23.21.
[8] See Inst. 3.11.1.

1b. Sin autem libertatibus quidem omnibus satisfacere quis polliceatur, creditoribus autem non in solidum, sed in partem solvere creditum, illi autem huiusmodi pactionem admiserint, sancimus et in huiusmodi casu consultissimi principis locum habere constitutionem et eum modis omnibus admittendum censemus, maxime cum ex voluntate creditorum hoc interponitur: nolentibus etenim creditoribus admitti talem petitionem nullo concedimus modo.

2. Si vero quidam ex servis libertatem amplexi fuerint, alii autem censuerint esse respuendam, et in hunc casum extendenda est divi Marci oratio et procul dubio et in hac specie audiendus est petitor hereditatis et maneat liberum arbitrium servorum, sive ad libertatem venire volunt sive in servitutem remanere. 2a. Licet enim Romanam civitatem recusare nemini servorum licet, tamen in hoc casu, ne propter quorundam indevotionem alii maneant in servitute, volentibus quidem omnibus servis licere in libertatem pervenire, nolentibus autem quibusdam vel recusantibus spontaneam servitutem imminere oportet et, quem patronum habere noluerint, dominum suum, forsitan et acerbum, sentiant.

3. Sin vero non omnes libertates adimplere pollicitus fuerit, sed certum numerum servorum ex his, qui ad libertatem venire iussi sunt, melius est, si quidem res hereditariae sufficiunt ad implendos creditores, etiam omnibus servis dare libertatem, etsi hoc non pollicitus est. si autem deest in exsolvendis creditoribus, humanius est, ut saltim pauci veniant ad libertatem.

4. Sed hoc quidem antiquis dubitationibus remedium invenimus. bellissimam autem repletionem praefatae constitutioni donantes sancimus: si non unus veniat hereditatis petitor, sed plures, si quidem uno momento uterque vel ampliores, omnibus detur licentia communiter hereditatem adire, prius satisdatione ab omnibus danda, ut creditoribus et libertatibus satisfaciant. 4a. Sin autem per intervalla temporum hoc fiat, qui primus veniat habeat praerogativam, si etiam satisdationem praestare potest: illo enim cessante hoc facere alii gradatim secundum tempora petitionis succedant. et hoc intra annale tempus observetur.

5. Sin autem uno pollicente quosdam liberos facere, non autem totos, alius emerserit satisdationem paratus idoneam praestare, quod omnibus creditoribus et omnibus libertatibus satisfaciat, aequissimum est eum admitti, ut omnes libertates indistincte celebrentur. quod privilegium damus non solum servo, qui libertate donatus est, sed etiam ei, cui nulla libertas relicta est, ut aliquid venustum eveniat, ut per eum,

1b. But if anyone promises to complete all the manumissions and to pay the debts not in full but in part and the creditors consent to this agreement, We ordain that even in such case the constitution of the most wise emperor should apply, and We direct that by all means he should be admitted to the inheritance, especially since that is done by the consent of the creditors; but We permit no such claim to be made if the creditors are unwilling.

2. But if some of the slaves should accept manumission while others think it should be rejected, the legal proposal (oratio) of the deified Marcus shall certainly be extended to this case also, and in such a case the one who claims the inheritance must be heard, but the slaves shall have free choice to accept manumission or remain in servitude. 2a. For although no slave is permitted to reject Roman citizenship, still in such a case, in order that some of the slaves may not remain in servitude on account of the irreverence of others, all of those who are willing may obtain manumission, but those who are unwilling or refuse it shall remain in voluntary slavery, and learn to know the one whom they refused to have as patron as their master, and that perhaps a harsh one.

3. And even if he does not promise to complete all of the manumissions but (only for) a certain number of the slaves from those who were ordered to receive manumission, it is better, if the property of the inheritance suffices to satisfy the creditors, to grant manumission even to all the slaves, although he has not promised this. But if the property is insufficient to pay the creditors, it is more humane that at least a few receive manumission.

4. So far a settlement of ancient doubts. And perfecting the aforesaid constitution still more, We ordain that if there should be not one but several claimants of the inheritance, since two or more may claim it at the same moment, all shall have the right to accept the inheritance jointly, though first they must all give security that they will satisfy creditors and make the manumissions provided for. 4a. But if they claim it at different times, the first one making the claim shall have the first right, provided he can furnish the security; if he fails to do so, the others follow him in right successively, according to the time in which they respectively make their claim. And this shall be done within a year.

5. Moreover, if one of them promises to manumit some of the slaves but not all of them, but another appears ready to give the proper security to satisfy all creditors and make all the required manumissions, the latter should, in justice, receive the inheritance, so that all the manumissions may be granted without distinction. This privilege is extended not only to a slave to whom a bequest of manumission was made, but also to one to whom manumission was not bequeathed, so that the desirable thing may happen when manumission is cui libertas relicta non est, aliis libertas imponatur. 6. Sed si quidem, antequam prior hereditarias res et libertatem accipiat, hoc eveniat, secundo petitori vel tertio vel deinceps ampliores libertates pollicentibus fieri locum censemus. 7. Sin autem iam rebus servo, qui primus petiit hereditatem, datis et libertatibus ab eo quibusdam servis hereditariis impositis quidam alius servus hereditarius vel liber extraneus hoc facere maluerit, licebit quidem ei hoc impetrare et sub maioribus pollicitationibus et satisdationibus hereditatem accipere: sed prior in libertate petitor maneat, licet res ab eo abstrahantur. his omnibus intra annum secundum quod dictum est celebrandis, ex quo prior petitor iudicem adierit.

III De Lege Fufia Caninia Tollenda

[1] Imp. Iustinianus A. Menae pp. Servorum libertates in testamento relictas tam directas quam fideicommissarias ad exemplum inter vivos libertatum indistincte valere censemus, lege Fufia Caninia de cetero cessante nec impediente testantium pro suis servis clementes dispositiones effectui mancipari.

D. k. Iun. Constantinopoli dn. Iustiniano pp. A. II cons.

IIII De Fideicommissariis Libertatibus

[1] Impp. Severus et Antoninus AA. pr. Cum proponas hereditatem eius aditam non esse, a quo tibi fideicommissariam libertatem relictam dicis, et ab intestato alium quam qui scriptus erat hereditatem possedisse, si non a legitimo quoque herede fideicommissaria libertas repetita est, nullo iure praestari eam ab eo qui rogatus non est desideras. 1. Plane si pecunia accepta heredem institutum omisisse hereditatem docueris, libertatem tibi praestare cogetur.

PP. XIII k. Mart. Laterano et Rufino conss.

granted to others through him who did not receive it himself. 6. If these different claims are made before the first claimant receives the property of the inheritance and his manumission, We ordain that preference must be given to the second, third, or other claimant who promises the most manumissions. 7. And even if the property has already been turned over to the first claimant of the estate and he has completed the manumission of some of the estate slaves, but another of the estate slaves or some free external heir prefers to implement this, he shall be permitted to do so and receive the inheritance on the condition that he give promise and guarantee of even more manumissions; but the first claimant shall retain his liberty, although the property is taken from him. All this shall be done within a year from the time that the earlier claimant makes application to the judge.

<Without subscription (531–532).>[9]

Third Title Repeal of the Lex Fufia Caninia[10]

[1] Emperor JUSTINIAN Augustus to Menas, Praetorian Prefect. We ordain that a bequest of manumissions made in a testament, either directly or indirectly by way of trust, shall be just as valid as a manumission bestowed among the living, and the Lex Fufia Caninia shall cease to be valid in the future and shall not prevent indulgent orders by testators, in favor of their slaves, to be carried into effect.

Given June 1, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Our Lord Justinian, Father of his Country, Augustus, for the second time (528).

Fourth Title Manumissions Granted by Trust[11]

[1] Emperors SEVERUS and ANTONINUS Augusti. pr. Since you state that the inheritance of the man who you say left you manumission in a trust (fideicommissum) was not accepted and that someone other than the appointed heir has taken possession of the estate on intestacy, then, if the manumission granted in trust was also not sought from the statutory (legitimus) heir, you ask without right that it should be granted by one who was not directed to give it. 1. Of course, if you prove that the appointed (institutus) heir refrained from accepting the inheritance in exchange for money, he will be compelled to give you freedom.

Posted February 17, in the consulship of Lateranus and Rufinus (197).

[9] Lounghis et al. date to between 531 and 534.
[10] See Inst. 1.7.
[11] See D. 40.5.

[2] Imp. Antoninus A. Valerio. Quamvis codicilli, quibus avunculo defunctae legatus esse videaris, falsi pronuntiati sunt, tamen si ante motam criminis quaestionem iustam libertatem es a legatario consecutus, posterior eventus non infirmat ita datam libertatem. plane secundum divi Hadriani constitutionem datur heredi viginti aureorum repetitio.

D. XVIII k. Aug. eodem Antonino A. ... conss.

[3] Imp. Alexander A. Lucio. Cum libertatem mulieribus sub condicione datam proponas, quid dubium est eos, qui ex his ante impletam eam eduntur, servos nasci et pertinere ad heredes iure dominii? his enim demum succursum est, qui post moram praestandae libertatis progeniti sunt, ut liberi et ingenui viderentur.

[4] Idem A. Arriano. Si voluntate domini in libertate morata est, cui fideicommissaria libertas debita fuerit, secundum senatus consultum et constitutiones ad id pertinentes civis Romana facta ingenuos peperit. sed si numquam ab ea libertas petita est, sibimet imputare debet, cum interea ex ea progeniti servi sint.

[5] Idem A. Dionysio. Minor annis lege definitis nec per fideicommissum libertatem supremis suis relinquere potest nisi his, quorum causam probare potest.

[6] Idem A. Maximo. Deberi etiam alienae ancillae fideicommissariam libertatem placuit: nec deficit hoc debitum, si interim domina, si modo nihil ex iudicio eius, qui quaeve reliquit libertatem, percepit, noluit vendere, quia possit tempore procedente, ubicumque occasio redimendae ancillae fuerit, praestari libertas.

[2] Emperor A*NTONINUS* Augustus to Valerius. Although the codicils in which you appear to have been bequeathed to the uncle of the deceased have been pronounced forged, still if you acquired just freedom from the legatee therein before investigation of this charge was commenced, the subsequent event does not invalidate a manumission thus given. But of course, according to the constitution of the deified Hadrian, the heir has the right to recover 20 gold pieces (aurei).

Given July 15, in the consulship of the same Antoninus Augustus ... (213).[12]

[3] Emperor A*LEXANDER* Augustus to Lucius. Since you state that conditional manumission was given to certain female slaves, can there be any doubt that the offspring born to them before the fulfillment of the condition are born slaves and belong to the heirs by right of ownership (iure dominii)? Relief is granted only to those who are born following delay (mora) in the granting of freedom, making such offspring free and free-born.

<Without subscription (222?).>[13]

[4] The same Augustus to Arrianus. If a female slave, to whom liberty was owed in trust (but was not formally conveyed), lived (morata est) in freedom with the consent of the master, according to the pertinent decree of the senate and constitutions, she became a Roman citizen and bore free-born children. But if she never claimed her liberty, it is her fault that the offspring born in the meantime are slaves.

<Without subscription (222?).>

[5][14] The same Augustus to Dionysius. A minor under the age fixed by law cannot grant through his will a manumission even in a trust except to those toward whom he can be proven to have just cause.

<Without subscription (222?).>

[6] The same Augustus to Maximus. It is agreed that a manumission in trust may be owed even to another person's slave girl. Nor does this obligation lapse if her female owner (domina) refused in the meantime to sell her provided she received nothing under the will of the testator who bequeathed the manumission in trust, since the manumission may be granted in the course of time whenever the occasion for redeeming the slave girl may arise.[15]

[12] The consular date is uncertain; 205 or 208 are also possible. The calendar date is also problematic since xviii k. Aug. calculates to July 15, a date properly rendered id. Iul.

[13] This constitution is subscribed "pp. III k. mai lamp. et horest. vv. cc. ss." (posted April 29 in the consulship of viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestes = 531) in Vercelli, Bibl. Cap. 127. Krüger speculates that the consular date may be in error given the rarity with which Justinianic constitutions are subscribed "posted," and thus that the calendar date may be correct, in which case the consular date may follow that of law 5 from this title.

[14] This constitution seems to combine with C. 2.3.8, which is addressed to Aurelio Dionysio and has the subscription pp. prid. Id. Sept. Alexandro A. Cons., i.e., September 12, 222.

[15] = Inst. 2.24.2.

[7] Idem A. Nicomedi. Hi, quibus per fideicommissum libertas supremis iudiciis relinquitur, eorum liberti efficiuntur, a quibus manumittuntur.
PP. k. April. Fusco et Dextro conss.

[8] Idem A. Eutycheti. Cum proponas fideicommissariam libertatem ita tibi datam, si uxori testatoris placuisset, licet non adeunte[1] hereditatem ad filium solida hereditas pertinere coepit, non refragante tamen uxore testatoris potes petere libertatem.
PP. XV k. Sept. Fusco et Dextro conss.

[9] Idem A. Mercuriali. Fideicommissaria quidem libertas ita tibi relicta, cum testatoris filius ad annum vigensimum quintum pervenisset, non intercidit, licet heredem intra praestitutam aetatem decessisse proponas: tempore quippe, quo, si viveret, praefinitam aetatem impleturus foret, spem libertatis non intercidere vetus placitum est.
PP. k. April. Pompeiano et Peligno conss.

[10] Impp. Valerianus et Gallienus AA. Daphno. pr. Etsi non adscripta libertate testator servum suum tutorem filiis suis dederit, receptum est et libertatis et pupillorum favore, ut per fideicommissum manumisisse eum videatur. 1. Et si non suum proprium, sed alienum servum condicionem eius sciens tutorem adscripserit, aeque fideicommissariam libertatem datam, nisi aliud evidenter defunctum sensisse appareat, prudentibus placuit.
PP. III k. Mart. Saeculare et Donato conss.

[11] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. et CC. Flaviano. pr. Si servus fuisti ac tibi per fideicommissum libertas relicta fuerit, pervides sine manumissione te ad libertatem pervenire non potuisse. 1. Quapropter si verbis precariis constitutus servus libertatem accepisti, adiri praeses provinciae oportet, ut causa cognita, si tibi deberi libertatem perspexerit, ad manumittendum eum qui debet urgueat vel, si latitet, contra latitantem interposito decreto tibi prospiciat.
Sine die et conss.

[12] Idem AA. et CC. Irenaeo. Ex verbo 'commendo' testamento vel codicillis non videri fideicommissariam libertatem relictam auctoritate iuris declaratur.
S. XVII k. Mai. Sirmi CC. conss.

[1] <ea>

[7] The same Augustus to Nicomedes. Those to whom manumission in trust is bequeathed in a last will become the freedmen of those by whom they are manumitted.

Posted April 1, in the consulship of Fuscus and Dexter (225).

[8] The same Augustus to Eutychetes. Since you state that manumission in trust was granted you upon condition that this should meet the approval of the wife of the testator, you may claim your freedom if the wife of the testator does not object, even if she does not accept her part of the inheritance and it all falls entirely to the son.

Posted August 18, in the consulship of Fuscus and Dexter (225).

[9] The same Augustus to Mercurialis. If manumission in trust was left you in such a way that it would take effect when the testator's son reached his twenty-fifth year, such bequest did not fail, though you state that the son died before the time fixed. It was long ago decided that the hope for freedom should not be cut off during the time that, had he lived, he would have arrived at the age fixed.

Posted April 1, in the consulship of Pompeianus and Pelignus (231).

[10][16] Emperors VALERIAN and GALLIENUS Augusti to Daphnus. pr. Although a grant of liberty was not added when the testator appointed his slave as tutor for his sons, it is the accepted opinion that, through partiality for freedom and for minors (et libertatis et pupillorum favore), the testator is considered as having granted manumission in trust. 1. Even if fully aware of his status he appointed not his own slave but another's as guardian, it has been accepted by jurists that he equally granted manumission in trust, unless the deceased would appear clearly to have felt otherwise.

Posted February 27, in the consulship of Saecularis and Donatus (260).

[11] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti and the Caesars to Flavianus. pr. If you were a slave, and manumission was bequeathed to you by way of a trust, you can see that you cannot have attained freedom without manumission. 1. Hence if, while you were a slave, you received manumission by a request in trust (verbis precariis), you should go before the provincial governor, so that he can hold a hearing and, if he finds that freedom is due you, he may compel the party whose duty it is to grant it, or if that person hides, look after your interests by issuing a decree against him.

Without date or consuls.

[12] The same Augusti and Caesars to Irenaeus. It is declared by the authority of law that no manumission in trust is bequeathed by the words "I commend" (commendo) contained in a testament or codicils.

Written April 15, at Sirmium, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[16] Combine with C. 5.28.5.

[13] Idem AA. et CC. Pythagoridae. Si te, donatam ante matrimonium uxori suae, post ei legato relicto manumitti testamento seu codicillis verbis precariis a successoribus voluit, tam hos ad redemptionem et manumissionem quam eam, quae in capiendis relictis defuncti consensit iudicio, teneri tibique fideicommissariam debere libertatem non ambigitur.

S. VII id. Dec. CC. conss.

[14] Imp. Iustinianus A. Iuliano pp. pr. Cum inter veteres dubitabatur, si fideicommissariam libertatem possibile esset relinqui servo, qui adhuc in ventre portaretur et homo fieri speraretur, nos vetus iurgium decidentes libertatis favore censemus et fideicommissariam nec non directam libertatem suam firmitatem habere sive in masculo sive in femina, quae adhuc in ventre vehatur materno, ut cum libertate solem respiciat, etsi mater sua adhuc in servitute constans eum vel eam ediderit. 1. Sin autem plures creati vel creatae sint, sive unius fecit mentionem sive pluraliter nuncupavit, nihilo minus omnes ad libertatem ad prima veniant cunabula, cum in ambiguis sensibus melius est, et maxime in libertate, favore eius humaniorem amplecti sententiam.

D. k. Oct. Constantinopoli Lampadio et Oreste vv. cc. conss.

[15] Idem A. Iuliano pp. Ancillam seu servum, cum fideicommissaria libertas eis relicta sit, sancimus, si mora a debitore libertatis facta fuerit, sententia praesidis eripi ad libertatem et nullo facto aut voluntate ab herede expectanda, sed talem habere eos libertatem, quasi ab ipso testatore directis verbis fuerint libertatem consecuti, cum satis impium atque absurdum est heredes testatoris differre voluntates, maxime cum ad libertatem respiciant.

D. k. Oct. Constantinopoli Lampadio et Oreste vv. cc. conss.

[16] Idem A. Iuliano pp. pr. Si quis in suo testamento rogaverit suum heredem ex liberis ancillae suae quam nominaverit unum quem elegerit ad libertatem perducere et, cum ancilla unum vel plures enixa est, heres neque dum superest in libertatem aliquem adduxerit vel, cum deliberat, quis ad libertatem producendus est, ab hac luce fuerit subtractus: dubitabatur ab antiquis, utrumne omnes an quidam aut nemo ex his [13] The same Augusti and Caesars to Pythagorides. If the testator made a gift of you to his wife before his marriage, and afterwards left a legacy to his wife and also expressed a desire by request in a trust in his testament or codicils that you should be manumitted by his successors, there is no doubt both that the successors are bound to purchase and manumit you and that his wife, who after all consented to his will by accepting what was left to her from the deceased, is also bound and owes you manumission in trust.

Written December 7, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[14][17] Emperor JUSTINIAN Augustus to Julian, Praetorian Prefect. Since it was disputed among the ancients whether manumission in trust could be left to a slave who was still being carried in the mother's womb and was expected to be born, in deciding the ancient dispute We decree, through partiality for liberty (libertatis favore), that manumission in trust and direct manumission granted to a male or female still in the mother's womb shall be valid, so that the child may see the light of day as a free person, although its mother is still in bondage when she gives birth to him or her. 1. And in case birth is given to several children, male or female, then whether mention is made of one child or of more than one, all shall alike be free when entering their first cradle, since it is better in a doubtful case to adopt the most humane construction of the intention, especially when liberty is involved, through partiality for it.

Given October 1, at Constantinople, in the consulship of the viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestes (530).

[15][18] The same Augustus to Julian, Praetorian Prefect. When manumission in trust is bequeathed to a male or female slave and the grant of manumission is delayed by the one who owes it, such slave shall be snatched away into liberty by the order of a judge without waiting for any action or any desire of the heir. These slaves shall have freedom the same as though they received a direct grant of manumission from the testator, since it is impious and absurd that heirs should delay to comply with the testator's wish, particularly in a case involving liberty.

Given October 1, at Constantinople, in the consulship of the viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestes (530).

[16][19] The same Augustus to Julian, Praetorian Prefect. pr. In case a testator in his testament asked his heir to manumit one of the children of a certain female slave, to be selected by the heir, and once the female slave had given birth to one or more children, the heir did not manumit one of them while he still lived, or, while deliberating which child to manumit, he died, it was much disputed among the ancients whether all the children or one or none of them should ad libertatem perveniant. sed veteris quidem iuris altercatio multa sibi super huiusmodi casibus resonavit.

[17] Combine with C. 6.57.6 and 7.4.15.
[18] Combine with C. 6.57.6 and 7.4.14.
[19] Combine with C. 7.4.17 and 7.7.2.

1. Nos autem heredis malignitatem coercentes, si non voluntatem testatoris adimpleverit et mox, cum potuerit, non elegerit unum ex liberis ancillae et eum libertate donaverit, sancimus compelli non solum eum, sed etiam heredes vel successores eius omnes ancillae liberos in libertatem producere. 2. Neque enim hoc contrarium est sententiae testatoris: cum enim omnimodo quendam ex his liberum esse disposuit et non ad certum corpus, sed ad omnes respexit, si non paretur eius voluntati, sine dubio ex sententia testatoris omnes ad libertatem perveniunt.

3. Similemque esse definitionem censemus, et si non ab herede, sed a legatario vel fideicommissario testator rogaverit libertatem imponi. 4. Sic etenim iusto timore heredes vel legatarii vel fideicommissarii perterriti et voluntatem testatoris adimplere procurent et sibi non ex omnium libertate quandam adferri patiantur iacturam. quod si reclamaverint, sibi tale dispendium imputent, non ex nostra lege, sed ex sua lugentes instantia.

D. XV k. Dec. Constantinopoli Lampadio et Oreste vv. cc. conss.

[17] Idem A. Iuliano pp. pr. Cum quidam servum suum ita legavit, ut legatarius libertatem ei imponat, et heres ad huiusmodi legatum improbe versatus servum dare legatario dedignatus est, ut etiam lite pulsetur, et iudex non in ipsum servum, sed in aestimationem litis condemnationem proferat: veteris iuris interpretes dubitabant, ne quid obstaculum libertati ex hac causa procedat et, si placuerit eandem deberi libertatem, a quo danda est utrumne ab herede an a legatario, et si heres imponat libertatem, an legatarius, quod ex pecuniaria condemnatione accepit, firmiter detinet sive totum sive ex parte sive etiam nihil.

1. Talem itaque altercationem resecantes miramur, quare iudex, qui praepositus est in praedicta causa, non omnimodo condemnationem in servum, sed in aestimationem eius fecerat, cum ipsius vitium etiam huiusmodi altercationi praebuit occasionem. 2. Unde si talis quaestio emerserit, nullum quidem iudicem ita esse stultum putamus, ut huiusmodi proferat condemnationem, sed si legatarius immineat, quatenus ei servus restituatur, et post litem contestatam duorum mensum receive freedom. But this ancient legal dispute has had considerable resonance beyond cases of this sort.

1. We, however, in order to keep any evil intention of the heir in check, ordain that if he fails to carry out the testator's wish, and fails as soon as possible to choose one of the children of the female slave and to manumit him or her, he as well as his heirs and successors shall be compelled to give manumission to all the female slave's children. 2. Nor is this contrary to the testator's intention. For since he provided, in a general way, that one of the children should be free, and he made no reference to a particular one but had them all in mind, then if his wish is not carried out, all without a doubt receive freedom in accordance with the testator's will.

3. The same rule shall apply if the testator asked freedom to be given not by the heir but by a legatee or trustee. 4. For thus the heirs, legatees, or trustees will be induced by fear to see to it that the testator's wish is carried out in order not to suffer loss through the manumission of all the slaves. But if they refuse, they may blame themselves for the loss, grieving not because of Our law but because of their own stubbornness.

Given November 17, at Constantinople, in the consulship of the viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestes (530).

[17][20] The same Augustus to Julian, Praetorian Prefect. pr. In case someone bequeathed his slave upon condition that the legatee should manumit him, and the heir acted dishonestly in connection with this legacy and refused to give the slave to the legatee so that he was sued, and the judge gave judgment not for the slave himself but for his value, it was disputed among interpreters of the ancient law whether any obstacle was thereby put in the way of manumission; and if it were determined that he should be manumitted, it was disputed by whom that was to be done, whether by the heir or the legatee; and if by the heir, whether the legatee would retain all or part or none of the money he received through the judgment.

1. In settling such a dispute We are puzzled why a judge presiding in such a case should give judgment for the value instead of directly for the slave, for his failing gave rise to the dispute. 2. Hence if any such case arises, We think no judge will be so stupid as to give a judgment of that kind, but if the legatee insists that the slave be rendered to him and two months elapse after joinder of issue, We ordain that the slave shall immediately be confiscated into liberty spatium effluxerit, censemus ilico ad libertatem eripi servum, et illum quidem liberum esse, heredem autem pro sua indevotione omnes expensas, quas legatarius in litem fecit, in quadruplum ei condemnari, iure patronatus integro legatario servando.

[20] Combine with C. 7.4.16 and 7.7.2.

D. Constantinopoli XV k. Dec. Lampadio et Oreste vv. cc. conss.

V De Dediticia Libertate Tollenda

[1] Imp. Iustinianus A. Iuliano pp. Dediticia condicio nullo modo in posterum nostram rem publicam molestare concedatur, sed sit penitus deleta, quia nec in usu esse reperimus, sed vanum nomen huiusmodi libertatis circumducitur. nos enim, qui veritatem colimus, ea tantummodo volumus in nostris esse legibus, quae re ipsa obtinent.

D. ... Lampadio et Oreste conss.

VI De Latina Libertate Tollenda et per Certos Modos in Civitatem Romanam Transfusa

[1] Imp. Iustinianus A. Iohanni pp. pr. Cum dediticii liberti iam sublati sunt, quapropter imperfecta Latinorum libertas incertis vestigiis titubans et quasi per saturam inducta adhuc remanet et non inutilis and shall become free, but also that the heir on account of his disrespect shall in addition be condemned to pay fourfold the amount of the expenses incurred by the legatee in the litigation, and that the legatee shall retain the right of patronage unimpaired.

Given November 17, at Constantinople, in the consulship of the viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestes (530).

Fifth Title The Abrogation of Manumission as a Prisoner of War[21]

[1] Emperor JUSTINIAN Augustus to Julian, Pretorian Prefect. The condition of prisoner of war (dediticia condicio) shall not be permitted to trouble Our state in any manner in the future but shall be entirely abolished, because We find it no longer in use, and the empty name of this kind of freedom is used deceptively. We who cultivate the truth want only those things that really exist to be in Our laws.

Given ... in the consulship of Lampadius and Orestes (530).[22]

Sixth Title The Abrogation of Latin Freedom and Its Transformation into Roman Citizenship through Certain Methods[23]

[1] Emperor JUSTINIAN Augustus to John, Praetorian Prefect. pr. Since the condition of freedmen with the status of prisoners of war (dediticii liberti) has already been abolished, why should imperfect Latin liberty remain, faltering

[21] Blume: "There were three classes of freedmen under the ancient Roman law, reduced, as shown by the next two titles, to one by Justinian. The lowest class, having what was called the dediticia libertas, was composed of liberated slaves that had been punished by their proprietors by chains, or had been branded, or had been convicted on a criminal charge, or had been committed to prison or a gladiatorial school or had been delivered to fight. Such slaves, when manumitted, never became either Latins or Roman citizens, and were merely considered as enemies who had surrendered at discretion. They could not take under a will in any form, or make a will, and they were forbidden, under penalty of being again reduced to slavery, to reside in Rome or within the hundredth milestone from Rome. Gaius 1.13; 15; 25; 27."

[22] Lounghis et al. date to between late February and December 31, 530.

[23] Blume: "The second class of freedmen, that frequently referred to in title 6 herein, was composed of those who had what was called the Latin right, and were called Latini Juniani – Latini, because they were assimilated in status to Latin colonists; Juniani, because they owed their freedom to the Junian law, before the enactment of which they were slaves. Gaius 1.22. This condition arose in a number of ways, some of which are enumerated in C. 7.6, infra. ....They could not dispose of their property by will, or take by direct devise or bequest, or be appointed testamentary guardian, although they could take property under a trust. Gaius 1.23–24; Ulpian 20.14. All of their property belonged, at death, to their patron, just as peculium – special property – of a slave. Gaius 3.56. Men of this class, though during life they lived as free persons, yet as they drew their last breath they were considered as losing their liberty along with their life, Inst. 3.7.4; which meant that they could make no testament, but all their property went to their patrons."

quidem pars eius deminuitur, quod autem ex ipsa rationabile est, hoc in ius perfectum deducitur? 1. Cum enim Latini liberti ad similitudinem antiquae Latinitatis, quae in coloniis missa est, videntur esse introducti, ex qua nihil aliud rei publicae nisi bellum accessit civile, satis absurdum est ipsa origine rei sublata imaginem eius derelinqui. 1a. Cum igitur multis modis et paene innumerabilibus Latinorum introducta est condicio et leges diversae et senatus consulta introducta sunt et ex his difficultates maximae emergebant tam ex lege Iunia quam ex Largiano senatus consulto nec non ex edicto divi Traiani, quorum plenae quidem fuerant nostrae leges, non autem in rebus fuerat eorum experimentum: studiosissimum nobis visum est haec quidem omnia et Latinam libertatem resecare, certos autem modos eligere, ex quibus antea quidem Latina competebat libertas, in praesenti autem Romana defertur condicio, ut his praesenti lege enumeratis et cives Romanos nascentibus ceteri omnes modi, per quos Latinorum nomen inducebatur, penitus conquiescant et non Latinos pariant, sed ut pro nullis habeantur. 1b. Quis enim patiatur talem esse libertatem, ex qua in ipso tempore mortis in eandem personam simul et libertas et servitium concurrunt et, qui quasi liber moratus est, eripitur non tantum in mortem, sed etiam in servitutem?

1c. Sancimus itaque, si quis per epistulam servum suum in libertatem producere maluerit, licere ei hoc facere quinque testibus adhibitis, qui post eius litteras sive in subscriptione positas sive per totum textum effusas suas litteras supponentes fidem perpetuam possint chartulae praebere. et si hoc fecerit, sive per se scribendo sive per tabularium, libertas servo competat quasi ex imitatione codicilli delata, ita tamen, ut et ipso patrono vivente et libertatem et civitatem habeat Romanam.

2. Sed et si quis inter amicos libertatem dare suo servo maluerit, licebit ei quinque similiter testibus adhibitis suam explanare voluntatem et quod liberum eum esse voluit dicere: et hoc sive inter acta fuerit testificatus sive testium voces attestationem sunt amplexae et litteras tam publicarum personarum quam testium habeant, simili modo servi ad with uncertain footsteps and brought on all jumbled up, as it were? Why should not the useless part thereof be dismantled and the rational part brought into a state of legal perfection? 1. For since Latin freedmen appear to have been created on the model of the ancient Latin status, which was conferred on colonies and out of which the state experienced nothing but civil war, it would be absurd that when the origin of such an institution had been removed, its image should persist. 1a. Since, therefore, Latin status arose in many, almost innumerable ways, and different statutes and decrees of the Senate were enacted out of which many difficulties have emerged – out of the lex Junia, as well as the SC Largianum, and the edict of the deified Trajan[24] – Our laws were full of these, yet there was no real experience of them in the real world. It therefore seemed to Us extremely important to eliminate all of these as well as Latin liberty itself, but to select certain means which formerly gave rise to Latin liberty but which at present give Roman status, so that, by enumerating these in the present law as producing Roman citizens, all remaining means, through which the Latin name used to be imposed, may be laid entirely to rest and may no longer give rise to Latins but be held as nullities. 1b. For who could tolerate liberty to be such that a man should be both free and slave at the moment of death, and that one who lived as a free man should not only be snatched into death, but into slavery as well?

1c. We therefore ordain that if anyone prefers to manumit his slave by letter (per epistulam), he may do so in the presence of five witnesses who can verify the document by adding their signatures to it below the writing of the author, whether he has merely signed the document or has written out the whole thing. And if he does so through a letter, written by himself or by a secretary (tabularius), the slave's manumission is valid as if he received it through a codicil, but he shall be both free and a Roman citizen even while his patron is still alive.

2. But if anyone prefers to give liberty to his slave in the presence of friends (inter amicos), he may make his wish known likewise in the presence of five witnesses and state that he wants the slave to be free. And whether he attested this on the public records or whether the witnesses' declarations contained its attestation, provided they have the signature of public secretaries and [24] The SC Largianum, passed in the consulship of Lupus and Largus (42 CE), regulated the order of succession to Junian Latins in three degrees: the manumissor; the manumissor's children, provided they had not been disinherited; the manumissor's external heirs, see Gaius 3.63–65. The net effect was to render the Junian Latin intestate, as if he had reverted to slavery upon death. The Edict of Trajan further stipulated that any Junian Latin who attained full freedom unbeknownst to his master by grant of the Emperor nevertheless reverted to Junian status at death, see Inst. 3.7.4.

civitatem producantur Romanam quasi ex codicillis similiter libertatem adipiscentes.

3. Sed scimus etiam hoc esse in antiqua Latinitate ex edicto divi Claudii introductum, quod, si quis servum suum aegritudine periclitantem sua domo publice eiecerit neque ipse eum procurans neque alii eum commendans, cum erat ei libera facultas, si non ipse ad eius curam sufficeret, in xenonem eum mittere vel quo poterat modo eum adiuvare, huiusmodi servus in libertate Latina antea morabatur et, quem ille moriendum dereliquit, eius bona iterum, cum moreretur, accipiebat. 3a. Talis itaque servus libertate necessaria a domino et nolente re ipsa donatus fiat ilico civis Romanus nec aditus in iura patronatus quondam domino reservetur. quem enim a sua domo suaque familia publice reppulit neque ipse eum procurans neque alii commendans neque in venerabilem xenonem eum mittens neque consueta ei praebens salaria, maneat ab eo eiusque substantia undique segregatus tam in omni tempore vitae liberti quam cum moriatur nec non postquam iam fuerit in fata sua concessus.

4. Similique modo si quis ancillam suam sub hac condicione alienaverit, ne prostituatur, novus autem dominus impia mercatione eam prostituendam esse temptaverit, vel si pristinus dominus manus iniectionem in tali alienatione sibi servaverit et, cum ad eum fuerit reversa, ipse ancillam prostituerit, ilico in libertatem Romanam eripiatur et, qui eam prostituerit, ab omni patronatus iure repellatur. qui enim ita degener et impius constitutus est, ut talem exerceret mercationem, quomodo dignus est vel ancillam vel libertam eam habere?

5. Sed et qui domini funus pileati antecedunt vel in ipso lectulo stantes cadaver ventilare videntur, si hoc ex voluntate fiat vel testatoris vel heredis, fiant ilico cives Romani. et ne quis vana liberalitate iactare se concedatur, ut populus quidem eum quasi humanum respiciat multos pileatos in funus procedentes adspiciens, omnibus autem deceptis maneant illi in pristina servitute publico testimonio defraudati: fiant itaque et hi cives Romani, iure tamen patronatus patronis integro servando.

said witnesses, these slaves shall receive Roman citizenship in like manner as though they received manumission by codicil.

3. We also know that this too was introduced by the edict of the deified Claudius in connection with the ancient Latin status, that if a man should publicly expel his mortally ill slave from his house, neither caring for him nor entrusting him to another, even though he could have sent him to a hospital (xenonem) or helped him in some other way in the absence of sufficient means to care for him personally, a slave in this situation used to remain in Latin liberty in an earlier age, and when he died, the master used to receive his property, though he had abandoned the slave to die. 3a. Therefore, such a slave, who has been endowed with liberty of necessity with an unwilling master but by the situation itself, shall by this very act immediately become a Roman citizen; and the former master shall retain no rights as patron. When such former master throws him publicly out of his house and family, neither caring for him, nor entrusting him to another, nor sending him to a venerable hospital, nor furnishing him the customary allowance, the slave shall remain entirely independent from his former master and his property both for the remainder of his life as a freedman, and upon his death, and after he has yielded to his fate.[25]

4. So, too, if a man transfers his female slave upon condition that she shall not be prostituted, but the new master attempts through impious dealing to give her over to prostitution, or if the former owner has reserved the right to her recovery in such case, and he, upon her return to him, himself prostitutes the slave, she shall immediately gain her freedom as a Roman citizen, and he who prostituted her shall lose all rights as patron. For how could a man who is so degenerate and impious as to engage in such dealing be worthy to have her either as his slave or his freedwoman?

5. And if any slaves wearing a cap of liberty (pileati) march in front of a funeral procession of their master or are seen fanning the corpse standing at his bier, whether this be by the wish of the testator or of his heir, they shall immediately become Roman citizens. Indeed, it shall not be permitted that any person can boast about granting empty manumissions so that people might respect him as humane when they see how many liberty-cap wearers process in his funeral, but then, once everyone has been deceived, those who were cheated in a public spectacle remain in their former servitude. Therefore these too shall become Roman citizens, but patronal rights shall be fully preserved for the patrons.

[25] For Claudius' ruling, see D. 40.8.2; Justinian repeats the same in the context of his long Novel on second marriages, Nov. 22.12.

6. Illo procul dubio observando, ut, si quis sive in testamento sive vindicta quendam manumiserit, licet hoc dixerit vel scripserit, quod voluerit esse Latinum, supervacua adiectio Latinitatis aboleatur et fiat civis Romanus, ne modi, qui ab antiqua observatione in civitatem Romanam homines producebant, per privatorum voluntates deminui videantur.

7. Sed et si sub condicione quidam libertatem suo servo reliquerit et adhuc pendente condicione extraneus heres libertatem ei imposuerit, non ut antea Latinus, sed civis fiat Romanus. et si quidem condicio defecerit, ipsius heredis, qui libertatem imposuit, maneat libertus. sin autem fuerit adimpleta, ne eripiatur forsitan liberis et cognatis ius patronatus, orcinus libertus videatur et ad eum iura patronatus perveniant, cui leges concedunt.

8. Illud etiam satis acerbum nobis visum est, quod putabat antiquitas, si in liberali iudicio superatus fuerat servus a domino, deinde servi pretium ab aliquo ei solutum est, in Latinitate eum remorari. quemadmodum enim rationabile est et pretio eum perfrui et mortis liberti tempore denuo eum in servitutem deducere, cum non sint ambo casus sibi consentanei? et in praesenti igitur casu libertas Romana ei accedat iure patronatus minime subnixa, quia ipse quodammodo sibi libertus invenitur.

9. Sed et si quis homini libero suam ancillam in matrimonio collocaverit et dotem pro ea conscripserit, quod solitum est in liberis personis solis procedere, ancilla non Latina, sed civis efficiatur Romana. si enim hoc, quod frequentissime in cives Romanas et maxime in nobiles personas fieri solet, id est dotalis instrumenti conscriptio, et in hac persona adhibita est, necessarium est consentaneum effectum huiusmodi scripturae observari. 10. Similique modo si dominus inter acta quendam servum filium suum nominaverit, voci eius quantum ad liberam condicionem credendum est. si enim ipse tali adfectione fuerat accensus, ut etiam filium servum suum nominare non indignetur, et hoc non secreto neque inter solos amicos, sed etiam actis intervenientibus et quasi in iudicii figura nominaverit, quomodo potest eum servum iterum saltem morientem habere? sed producatur et ipse in civitatem Romanam, vera liberalitate et non falso sermone domini sui sustentatus.

11. Ille etiam novissimus antiquae Latinitatis modus in civitatem Romanam translatus eligendus est, si quis instrumenta, ex quibus servus ostendebatur, vel dederit servo vel corruperit. 11a. Sed ne

6. Further, let it be observed that, if anyone manumits a slave in his will or by the staff and he says or writes that he wants the slave to be a Latin, the fruitless addition of Latinity shall be expunged and the slave shall become a Roman citizen, lest the methods which, according to ancient rules led to Roman citizenship, might be impaired by the wishes of private individuals.

7. And if a man bequeaths freedom to his slave upon some condition, and before the condition has been fulfilled an external heir grants him freedom, the latter shall not become a Latin, as formerly happened, but a Roman citizen. And if the condition fails, he shall remain the freedman of the heir who gave him his freedom. But if the condition is fulfilled, lest the right of patronage be removed from the children and relatives, the slave shall be regarded as a freedman of the testator (libertus orcinus), and the rights of patronage shall accrue to the person to whom the laws grant them.

8. This, too, seems harsh to Us: The ancients used to think that if a slave was defeated by his master in an action for his freedom, and someone subsequently paid the price of the slave to the master, that the slave should remain a Latin. For how can it be reasonable that the master should enjoy the price and at the time of the death of the freedman again reduce the latter to the condition of servitude? These matters are not in harmony. In this case too, therefore, the slave shall receive Roman freedom, which rests on no right of patronage, since the freedman is found to be like a freedman of himself.

9. And if anyone gives his female slave in marriage to a free man and underwrites a dowry for her – which is a custom only among free persons – the female slave shall become not a Latin but a Roman citizen. For because the act of underwriting a dowry, which frequently occurs among Roman citizens and particularly among persons of nobility, is also employed in the case of this female slave, it is necessary that a suitable effect be given to this document.[26] 10. Similarly, if a master gives to his slave the title of son in official records, such statement must be credited as meaning that the slave is free. For if the master is moved by such feelings of affection as not to consider it unworthy to call his slave his son, and does so not secretly and among friends only, but in official records, as though expressing his last wish, how may he again have him as a slave when he dies? So such slave shall become a Roman citizen, buoyed up by the true liberality of his maser rather than by false speech.[27]

11. And the last method too which gave rise to Latin freedom shall be adopted as a method to confer Roman citizenship, namely when a master gives the documents which prove a man to be a slave, to his slave or when he destroys them.

[26] At Nov. 22.11 Justinian also grants that masters who collude in the marriage of their female slaves passively consent to their manumission.

[27] See Inst. 1.11.12.

furandi occasio servis forsitan detur et sua malignitate in libertatem perveniant, talis modus certa et indubitata probatione manifestetur, ut testibus praesentibus non minus quinque dominus instrumenta vel det famulo suo vel deleat aut alio modo corrumpat. et ex eo igitur modo civitatem Romanam ei competere censemus, salvo iure patronatus tam in hac specie quam in ceteris, nisi ubi specialiter hoc patronis denegavimus.

12. His tantummodo casibus ex omni iure antiquae Latinitatis electis ceteri omnes, qui in libris prudentium vel constitutionibus enumerati sunt, penitus conquiescant nec Latini ab eis procedant, sed maneant, ut dictum est, servi in sua condicione nec tali remedio abuti concedantur. 12a. Et ne in posterum aliquod ius Latinae libertatis nostris legibus incurrat, lex Iunia taceat Largiano senatus consulto cessante, sileat edictum divi Traiani, quod ea sequebatur, et si qua alia lex vel senatus consultum vel etiam constitutio loquitur de Latinis, ea inefficax quantum in eam partem remaneat et triplex antea via libertatis, quae multiplices introducebat ambages, uno directo tramite discat ambulare. quod si aliqua lex vel constitutio libertatis faciet mentionem, non autem Latinitatis, ea pro civitate Romana loqui intellegatur. 13. Sed si quidem liberti iam mortui sunt, et bona eorum quasi Latinorum his quorum intererat adgregata sunt, vel adhuc vivunt, nihil ex hac lege innovetur, sed maneant apud eos iure antiquo firmiter detenta et vindicanda. in futuris autem libertis praesens constitutio locum sibi vindicet.

D. k. Nov. Constantinopoli post consulatum Lampadii et Orestis vv. cc.

VII De Servo Communi Manumisso

[1] Imp. Iustinianus A. Iuliano pp. pr. In communes servos eorumque libertatem et quando cuidam domino pars libertatem imponentis adcrescit nec ne, et maxime inter milites, qui huiusmodi imponunt libertatem, multa ambiguitas exorta est apud veteres iuris auctores. 1. Et inventa est constitutio apud Marcianum in institutionibus divi Severi, per quam idem imperator disposuit necessitatem imponi heredi militis comparare partem socii et servum libertate donare. 1a. Sed et alia

11a. But lest an opportunity for theft be given to slaves and they receive liberty through wickedness, this method must be made manifest through certain and undoubted evidence, so that the master must give the documents to his slave or erase or otherwise destroy them in the presence of not less than five witnesses. Therefore, also by this method Roman citizenship may be acquired, leaving the right of patronage unimpaired in this case as well as in all other cases, unless We have specially denied such right to patrons.

12. Having singled out these instances only from among the methods which formerly conferred Latin status, all others enumerated in books of jurists or in constitutions shall be entirely obsolete. No Latins shall be created thereby, but slaves shall, as stated, retain their status as such, and the misuse of such methods shall not be permitted. 12a. And lest hereafter anything relating to Latin liberty come up in Our laws, the lex Junia shall be silent, the SC Largianum shall cease to have validity, the edict of the deified Trajan which followed these shall be quiescent, and if any other statute or decree of the Senate or constitution speaks of Latins, they shall have no effect as to such provision, and the former threefold road to liberty which introduced manifold detours, shall learn to proceed along a single direct path. But if any statute or constitution makes mention of liberty without specifying anything about Latinity, it shall be understood to speak in favor of Roman citizenship. 13. If, however, there are freedmen who have already died and their property has been turned over as that belonging to Latins to those who had claims, or if they happen still to be alive, let nothing be altered in accordance with this law, but let such goods continue to be detained and recovered by these same according to ancient right. But the present constitution shall apply to all future freedmen.

Given November 1, at Constantinople, in the post-consulate of the viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestes (531).

Seventh Title A Manumitted Slave Owned in Common

[1] Emperor JUSTINIAN Augustus to Julian, Praetorian Prefect. pr. A great dispute arose among the ancient authorities of law concerning slaves owned in common and their manumission: when does the share of the owner-in-common who alone grants manumission accrue to another owner who does not grant it, and when not? And particularly what about soldiers who grant liberty in such cases? 1. A constitution of the deified Severus was found in the Institutes of Marcian by which that emperor ordained that it was necessary for an heir of a soldier[28] to purchase the portion of the other co-owner and grant liberty to the slave. 1a. But another constitution of the Emperors Severus constitutio Severi et Antonini principum reperta est, ex qua generaliter necessitas imponebatur socio partem suam socio vendere, quatenus libertas servo imponatur, licet nihil lucri ex substantia socii morientis alii socio accedat, pretio videlicet arbitrio praetoris constituendo, secundum ea, quae et Ulpianus libro sexto fideicommissorum et Paulus libro tertio fideicommissorum refert, ubi et hoc relatum est, quod Sextus Caecilius iuris antiqui conditor definivit socium per praetorem compelli suam partem vendere, quatenus liber servus efficiatur: quod et Marcellus apud Iulianum in eius digestis notat: hocque et Marcellum, cum Iulianum notaret, rettulisse palam est.

[28] That is, a soldier who was co-owner of a slave and manumitted him in his will.

1b. His itaque apud veteres iuris auctores inventis decidentes tales altercationes generaliter sancimus, ut nulla inducatur differentia militis seu privati in servis communibus, sed in omnibus communibus famulis, sive inter vivos sive in ultima dispositione libertatem quis legitimam imponere communi servo voluerit, hoc faciat, necessitatem habente socio vendere partem suam, quantam in servo possidet, sive dimidiam sive tertiam sive quantamcunque, et si plures sint socii, uno ex his libertatem imponere cupiente alios omnes necessitatem habere partes suas, quas in servo possident, vendere ipsi, qui libertatem servo imponere desiderat, vel heredi eius (licet ipse communis servus institutus sit), si hoc moriturus dixerit, ita tamen, ut omnimodo ipse qui partes alias comparavit vel heredes eius libertatem imponant.

2. Sin autem socius vel socii recusaverint pretium accipere, licentiam ei damus offerre hoc per publicas personas et sigillo impresso in aedem sacram deponere et sic habere facultatem servum libertate donare et eum habere plenissimam libertatem et civitate Romana perfrui et nullum timere ex sociis. sibi etenim imputent, si, cum liceret lucrari pretium, hoc accipere differunt.

3. Sed ne circa peculium servi aliqua fuerit dubitatio, peculium eius in omnes socios pertinere iubemus ex partibus, pro quibus quisque et dominium servi possidet: licentia concedenda ei, qui libertatem moriens imponit, etiam eius peculium quod ei attingit liberto concedere. iura autem patronatus procul dubio pro suo ordine ad eum venire qui libertatem donavit.

4. Sin autem servus ratiociniis suppositus sit, ne ratiocinia pereant vel libertas impediatur, praesidem provinciae vel competentem iudicem tempus statuere, intra quod debet ratiociniis ante factis et debitis, quae ex his apparuerint, redditis ita ad libertatem venire.

5. Ne autem quantitas servilis pretii sit incerta, sed manifesta, sancimus servi pretium sive ancillae, si nulla arte sunt imbuti, viginti solidis and Antoninus has been found which, in general terms, imposed on one partner the necessity to sell his share to his co-partner if manumission is granted to the slave, even though no profit accrues to the one partner from the estate of the other who is dying – in which case the price must be determined at the discretion of the Praetor, according to what Ulpian says in his sixth book On Trusts and Paulus in his third book On Trusts. There it is also reported what Sextus Caecilius (Africanus), a founder of ancient law, stated, that a partner is compelled by the Praetor to sell his share if a slave is set free, as Marcellus also notes on Julian in his Digests. And evidently Marcellus also reported this when he annotated Julian.

1b. Finding these statements in the books of the ancient founders of law, and settling such disputes, We ordain generally that there shall be no difference between slaves owned in common by soldiers and those owned by private persons, but in all cases involving slaves owned in common, if one partner wants to manumit the slave in a lawful manner, either among the living or by a last will, he may do so, and the co-partner is required to sell the share in however much of the slave he owns, whether a half, a third, or any other amount. And if there are several partners, and one of them desires to grant liberty, all the others are required to sell the shares which they own in the slave to the co-owner who desires to grant such liberty or to his heir, if a co-owner expressed that wish as he lay dying, even if the slave owned in common is made the heir. A co-owner who has (thus) purchased the other shares, or his heirs, must grant liberty.

2. Nevertheless, if one or more co-owners refuse to receive the price, the one who desires to grant liberty may tender it through public secretaries (per publicas personas) and deposit it, sealed, in a sacred building (in aedem sacram, presumably a church), and thus he has power to manumit the slave who thereupon shall have complete freedom, enjoy Roman citizenship, and fear nothing from the other co-owners. For the latter may blame themselves if they delay in accepting the price, from which they might have benefited.

3. And that no doubt may exist as to the peculium of the slave, We order that it shall belong to all the partners in proportion to the shares according to which each holds ownership of the slave. Permission must be given to the partner who bequeaths such liberty upon his death to give his share of the peculium to the freedman. The rights of patrons belong without question to the party who grants the manumission, as is normal.

4. If the slave was engaged in managing accounts, then, in order that these may not be lost or his manumission delayed, the governor or pertinent judge shall fix a time within which he shall be manumitted, provided an account has been rendered and the amounts shown to be due have been paid.

5. In order, moreover, that the price of a slave not be left uncertain and that it may be definitely known, We ordain that male or female slaves, shall be valued taxari, his videlicet, qui usque ad decimum annum suae venerunt aetatis, in decem tantummodo solidis ponendis: sin autem aliqua arte praediti sunt exceptis notariis et medicis, usque ad triginta solidos pretium eorum redigi sive in masculis sive in feminis. 5a. Sin autem notarius sit vel medicus sive masculus sive femina, notarius quidem usque ad quinquaginta, medicus autem usque ad sexaginta taxetur. 5b. Sin vero eunuchi sint servi communes maiores decem annis, si quidem sine arte sint, in quinquaginta solidos computentur, sin autem artifices, usque ad septuaginta: minores etenim decem annis eunuchos non amplius triginta solidis aestimari volumus. 5c. Et eorum partem competentem socii accipientes libertatem eis per competentes iudices imponere compellentur.

6. Sin autem, uno ex sociis libertatem sive imponere sive relinquere servo cupiente et pretium dante alter vel alteri ex his ipsi velle dixerint libertatem imponere et pretium dare, melior quidem causa erit eius, qui primus ad hanc rationem pietatis perveniet. 6a. Si tamen sub obtentu libertatis et ipsi ad haec prosiluerint, tunc iudicem competentem omnes compellere sine pretio ei libertatem imponere: peculio quidem in omnes secundum partem dominii distribuendo, iura autem patronatus secundum sui naturam omnibus qui libertatem imposuerunt aequaliter habentibus. 7. Ius enim adcrescendi, quod antiqua iura in communibus servis manumittendis introducebant, nullius esse momenti nec in posterum frequentari penitus concedimus.

D. k. Aug. Lampadio et Oreste vv. cc. conss.

[2] Idem A. Iuliano pp. pr. Cum apud omnes iuris peritos hoc placitum est, ut servus communis apud unumquemque dominum partim sit proprius partim alienus, ut ex hac causa possit et ipse legato honorari et ipse legari, huiusmodi incidit quaestio. 1. Duo vel plures domini communem servum habebant, sed unus ex his ipsi servo suam partem quam in eo habebat legavit. et semel accepta dubitationis occasione hoc vetustas in magnum extollit certamen.

2. Cum igitur nos sensum huiusmodi legati crebra indagatione adgredientes duplicem esse eum opinamur: aut enim putavit testator liberum fieri posse ex parte servum, qui huiusmodi legatum ei reliquit, aut, si hoc minime cogitavit, adfectu socii fecit, ut ei adquiratur, heredes autem suos eundem servum possidere minime voluit, ut sit manifestum a suo patrimonio penitus esse eum alienatum: in tali itaque comparatione nos, at 20 solidi if they have not been trained in a trade, provided that those who have only reached their tenth year shall only be valued at 10 solidi; if they have learned a trade, they shall, except in case of notaries and physicians, be valued up to 30 solidi, whether they are male or female. 5a. If they happen to be a notary or a doctor, whether they are male or female, the notary shall be valued up to 50 solidi, but the doctor up to 60 solidi. 5b. But if such slaves owned in common happen to be eunuchs, they shall, if older than 10 years and without a trade, be valued at 50 solidi; if they have a trade up to 70 solidi; eunuchs less than 10 years old shall be valued at not more than 30 solidi. 5c. And co-owners upon receiving their proper proportion will be compelled by the appropriate judges to grant liberty.

6. Moreover, if one of the co-owners wants to give or bequeath liberty to a slave and pay the price, and another or others of the co-owners want to do the same, the one who first undertakes this act of piety (rationem pietatis) shall have preference. 6a. If they all are eager to do so only on the pretence of granting liberty, the appropriate judge will compel them all to grant liberty without receiving the price. The peculium of the slave should be divided among all in proportion to their ownership, but the rights of patronage shall, according to the natural principle, be enjoyed equally by all who granted manumission. 7. The right of accrual (ius adcrescendi), which the ancient laws introduced in connection with the manumission of slaves owned in common, shall no longer exist and have no further application in the future.[29]

Given August 1, in the consulship of the viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestes (530).

[2] The same Augustus to Julian Praetorian Prefect. pr. Since it was agreed by all jurists that a slave owned in common partially belonged and partially did not belong to each owner, and that hence the slave could be gifted with a legacy as well as himself being given as a legacy, the following question arose: 1. Two or more owners had a slave in common, but one of them bequeathed the part he owned to the slave himself. Once this matter had given occasion for doubt, a mighty dispute arose among the ancients.

2. We have repeatedly looked into the intent involved in such a legacy and think that it may be construed in two ways: the testator who left this legacy either thought that the slave could be made free in part, or, if he did not think that, through affection for his co-owner, he wanted him to have his share. He did not, in any event, want his heirs to have the slave, as it is clear that the [29] As Blume notes: "A man cannot be partly free and partly slave. But an owner of half cannot free the other half. Hence, under the ancient law, if a co-owner purported to free the slave, the manumission did not take effect. The act was not always void; if the purported manumission was formal, i.e. by the rod or by testament, the effect was simply to vest the share of the freeing owner in the other owner by way of accrual."

qui fautores libertatis sumus, sic ambiguam testatoris interpretamur voluntatem, tamquam si voluit eum libertate in suam partem donare. 3. Et cum iam de communibus servis manumittendis statuimus, quid in huiusmodi casibus fieri oportet, ex illius sanctionis tenore et huiusmodi species sit definita. fiat itaque liber, ex parte quidem testatoris secundum eius voluntatem, ex altera autem parte ex nostra definitione, pretio secundum praedictae constitutionis tenorem vel sociis ab herede praestando vel, si accipere noluerint, tam offerendo quam signando et periculo eorum deponendo, cum sat abundeque imperiale est humaniorem sententiam pro durioribus sequi.

D. Constantinopoli XV k. Dec. Lampadio et Oreste vv. cc. conss.

VIII De Servo Pignori Dato Manumisso

[1] Impp. Severus et Antoninus AA. Proculo. Licet dotale mancipium vir qui solvendo est possit manumittere, tamen si te pignori quoque datum mulieri apparuerit, invita ea non posse libertatem adsequi non ambigitur.

PP. XII k. Mai. Antonino A. II et Geta II conss.

[2] Idem AA. Abascanto. Libertas a debitore fisci servo data, qui pignori non est ex conventione speciali, sed tantum privilegio fisci obligatus, non aliter infirmatur, quam si hoc fraudis consilio effectum detegatur.

[3] Idem AA. Antonio. Ab eo, qui bona sua pignori obligavit, quae habet quaeque habiturus esset, posse servis libertatem dari certum est. non idem iuris est in his servis, qui pignoris iure specialiter traditi vel obligati sunt.

PP. III k. Ian. Pompeiano et Avito conss.

[4] Imp. Alexander A. Sabiniano. Si, ut proponis, consentiente creditore, cui pignoris iure cum aliis mancipiis obligatus fuisti, a debitore manumissus es, potuisti ad libertatem pervenire.

slave was effectually severed from the testator's other property. Sponsors of liberty as We are, We have weighed the matter and interpret the ambiguous wish of the testator to mean that he wanted to give the slave liberty as to his share. 3. And since We have already decided what should be done in case of the manumission of slaves owned in common, cases like the present shall be governed according to the tenor of that law. Let the slave, therefore, be free as to the share of the testator, according to the latter's wish. As regards the other share, according to Our pronouncement, the price must be paid by the heir to the co-owners following the arrangement in said constitution, and if they refuse to receive it, it shall be tendered, sealed, and deposited at their risk, since it is the proper thing for an Emperor to prefer a humane interpretation to one that is harsh.

Given November 17, at Constantinople, in the consulship of the viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestes (530).

Eighth Title The Manumission of a Slave Tendered as a Pledge

[1] Emperors Severus and Antoninus, Augusti to Proculus. Although a solvent husband may manumit a slave given to him as a dowry, there is no doubt that, if it appears that you were also tendered (by the husband) as a pledge (pignus) to the wife, you cannot obtain liberty without her consent.

Posted April 20, in the consulship of Antoninus Augustus and Geta, for the second time (205).

[2] The same Augusti to Abascantus. Liberty bestowed by a debtor of the Treasury upon a slave, who is not pledged to the Treasury by special agreement, but upon whom it has only a general lien by reason of its privileges,[30] is not invalid unless it is shown that such liberty was granted with intent to defraud.

[3] The same Augusti to Antonius. It is certain that liberty can be given to slaves by a master who obligates his current and future property as a pledge. The law is not the same regarding those slaves who were specifically delivered or obligated by way of pledge.

Posted December 30, in the consulship of Pompeianus and Avitus (209).

[4] Emperor Alexander Augustus to Sabinianus. If, as you state, you were manumitted by the debtor with the consent of the creditor to whom you were pledged along with other slaves, you were able to obtain your liberty.

[30] The Fiscus had a general lien on the property of its debtor, but the present rescript shows that manumissions were favored over its claims.

PP. VI id. Mai. Alexandro A. cons.

[5] Idem A. Extricatiano. Si creditoribus satisfactum fuerit, ancillae, quae pignori obligatae a debitore manumissae erant, liberae fiunt. nam ipse manumissor si fraudem se fecisse creditoribus, ut revocet libertates, audeat dicere, audiri non debet nec heredes eius.

PP. III k. Iun. Maximo II et Aeliano conss.

[6] Idem A. Auctori. Si tutor tuus de pecunia tua servos emptos manumisit, quoniam huiusmodi servi sicut ceterae res pupillaribus pecuniis emptae iure pignoris ex constitutione divorum parentium meorum obligati sunt favore pupillorum, liberi facti non sunt.

[7] Imp. Gordianus A. Iulianae. Sive cum nupsisses mancipia in dotem dedisti, sive post datam dotem de pecunia dotis maritus tuus quaedam comparavit, iuris rationibus dominia eorum ad eum pervenerunt. ideoque frustra quaestionem super statu manumissorum conaris inferre, qui eius facti, qui comparavit vel in dotem accepit, ab eo iure potuerunt manumitti.

VIIII De Servis Rei Publicae Manumittendis

[1] Imp. Gordianus A. Epigono. Si ita, ut lege municipali constitutionibusque principum comprehenditur, cum servus publicus esses, ab ordine consentiente etiam praeside provinciae manumissus es, non ex eo, quod is quem dederas vicarium in fugam se convertit, iugo servitutis, quod manumissione evasisti, iterato cogeris succedere.

[2] Idem A. Hadrianae. Si decretum ordinis auctoritas rectoris provinciae comprobavit, quo is libertatem acceperat, cui postea fueras, ut proponis, matrimonio copulata, natam ex huiusmodi matrimonio et civem Romanam esse et in patris potestate non est incertae opinionis.

Posted May 10, in the consulship of Alexander Augustus (222).

[5] The same Augustus to Extricatianus. If the creditors have been paid, the female slaves who were manumitted by the debtor became free even though pledged to such creditors. For neither the manumitter nor his heirs should be heard if, in order to revoke the manumissions, he presumes to say that he defrauded the creditors.

Posted May 30, in the consulship of Maximus, for the second time, and Aelianus (223).

[6] The same Augustus to Auctor. If your guardian manumitted slaves who had been bought with your money, such slaves did not become free, since they, just as other property bought with the money of minors, are bound by a (tacit) right of pledge in favor of the minors, according to the constitution of my deified parents.

[7] Emperor GORDIAN Augustus to Juliana. Whether you gave slaves as a dowry when you were married, or, after the dowry was given, your husband purchased some with the money given as dowry, he was owner of them according to the rules of law. Therefore you are striving in vain to bring an inquest about the status of the slaves who were manumitted; these became the property of him who purchased them or received them as a dowry and could legally be manumitted by him.

Ninth Title The Manumission of Municipal Slaves[31]

[1] Emperor GORDIAN Augustus to Epigonus. If you were manumitted by the municipal order with the consent of the provincial governor in accordance with municipal law and imperial constitutions, you will not be again compelled to submit to the yoke of servitude, from which you escaped by manumission, because the slave whom you gave as a substitute fled.

[2] The same Augustus to Hadriana. If the governor (rector) of the province approved the decree of the municipal order by which the man, whom, as you state, you afterwards married, received his liberty, there is no room for doubt that the girl born of this marriage is a Roman citizen and under paternal power.

[31] See D. 40.3.

[3] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. et CC. Philadelpho. pr. Titulo non praecedente, quibus dominia servorum quaeri solent, municipum libertus servus non efficitur. 1. Si itaque secundum legem vetti libici,[ii] cuius potestatem senatus consulto Iuventio Celso iterum et Neratio Marcello consulibus facto ad provincias porrectam constitit, manumissus civitatem Romanam consecutus es, post vero ut libertus tabularium administrando libertatem quam fueras consecutus non amisisti, nec actus tuus filio ex liberis ingenuo suscepto, quominus decurio esse possit, obfuit.

D. XV k. April. Ravennae AA. conss.

X De His Qui a Non Domino Manumissi Sunt

[1] Imp. Antoninus A. Corneliano. Eum, qui servos alienos ac si suos manumittit, ut pretium eorum dominis, si hoc elegerint, dependat, quanti sua interest, saepe rescriptum est.

PP. k. Mart. Antonino A. IIII et Balbino conss.

[2] Imp. Alexander A. Mercuriali. Felicissima, quam mandante te servos emisse dicis, si dominium servi quem manumisit nondum ad te transtulerat, frustra petis, ut denegata libertate eius quem manumissum dicis possessio tibi tradatur.

[3] Idem A. Pompeio militi. Qui tibi hereditatem vendidit, antequam res hereditarias traderet, dominus earum perseveravit et ideo manumittendo libertatem servo hereditario praestitit.

PP. VI k. Aug. Agricola et Clemente conss.

[4] Impp. Valerianus et Gallienus AA. Zoilo. Si non proprietatem donaveras, sed ministerium ancillae dederas, libertatem mancipio dando ea, quae precarium usum haberet, dominio tuo nihil praeiudicavit. nemo enim alienum servum, quamvis ut proprium manumittat, ad libertatem producere potest.

[ii] veteris rei publicae

[3][32] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti, and the Caesars to Philadelphus. pr. In the absence of a preceding title by which ownership claims over slaves are normally asserted,[33] a freedman of municipal citizens does not become a slave. 1. And so, if you were manumitted and gained Roman citizenship according to the law of the old municipality, the authority of which was extended to the provinces by a decree of the Senate under the consulship of Juventus Celsus, for the second time, and Neratius Marcellus,[34] but subsequently you managed the public archive (tabularium) while a freedman, you did not lose the freedom which you had secured. Moreover, your occupation did not prevent your son, who was born free of free parents, from becoming a decurion.

Given March 18, at Ravenna, in the consulship of the Augusti (290 or 293).

Tenth Title Those Manumitted by One Who Is Not their Owner

[1] Emperor ANTONINUS Augustus to Cornelianus. It has often been stated in rescripts that a man who manumits the slaves of others as if they were his own could pay to the owners the value of the slave, or of the interest which they have therein if they (the owners) should choose this.

Posted March 1, in the consulship of Antoninus Augustus, for the fourth time, and Balbinus (213).

[2] Emperor ALEXANDER Augustus to Mercurialis. If Felicissima, who you say purchased slaves pursuant to your mandate, did not deliver to you ownership of the slave whom she manumitted, it is useless for you to ask that this manumission should be revoked and that possession of the man who you say was manumitted be transferred to you.

[3][35] The same Augustus to Pompeius, a soldier. The man who sold you an inheritance remained its owner until he delivered it to you, and accordingly he conferred freedom on the slave in the inheritance by manumitting him.

Posted July 27, in the consulship of Agricola and Clement (230).

[4] Emperors VALERIAN and GALLIENUS Augusti to Zoilus. If you did not transfer ownership, but simply loaned the service of a female slave, the woman (i.e., the borrower), who merely had use by sufferance (precarium usum), could not prejudice your right to the slave by manumitting her. For no one can give liberty to the slave of another, even if he manumits him as if he were his own.

[32] Combine with C. 6.8.1, whence the subscription is restored.
[33] See C. 7.14.6 for almost the same phrase.
[34] 129 CE, see D. 40.3.1.
[35] = C. 4.39.6, whence Pompeius' occupation is restored; that constitution concerns alienation by sale.

PP. x k. Aug. Saeculare et Donato conss.

[5] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. Marcellinae. Si tradita sunt ex donatione mancipia, ius manumittendi donatrix non habuit.

PP. v k. Mai. Maximo et Aquilino conss.

[6] Idem AA. et CC. Mido. Si pater servum vestrum, licet vobis minoribus viginti annis consentientibus, manumisit, ei libertatem praestare non potuit.

S. non. Mart. CC. conss.

[7] Imp. Constantinus A. ad Bassum. pr. Si non a dominis libertas detur mancipio alieno, si quidem ab his iudicibus impetrabitur, quibus dandi ius est, sine ulla trepidatione poenae facilis dissolutio est. 1. Si vero iubentibus nobis quicquam lege actum esse doceatur et non dominus, ut alienum mancipium manumitteretur, petisse probetur, tunc eodem, qui in conspectu nostro libertatem monstrabitur consecutus, ei protinus ad cuius proprietatem pertinet restituto is, qui mancipium alienum fallendo principis conscientiam manumisit, mancipia duo cogatur domino eius dare, cuiusmodi sexus aetatis atque artis constiterit esse manumissum, et alia tria fisco eadem ratione similia. 2. Quae multa non semper imponitur, sed potius conquiescit, si forte manumissus inferentem sibi quaestionem status obiecta legitima praescriptione potuerit excludere, cum sibi amissi mancipii damna debeat imputare, qui in perniciem suam gesta taciturnitate firmaverit.

PP. id. Iul. Constantino A. v et Licinio C. conss.

XI Qui Manumittere Non Possunt et Ne in Fraudem Creditorum Manumittatur

[1] Imp. Alexander A. Antiocho. Certum ius est non alias directas libertates per legem Aeliam Sentiam, quae sunt in fraudem creditorum manumissorum, revocari, nisi et consilium fraudis hoc animo manumittentis Posted July 23, in the consulship of Saecularis and Donatus (260).

[5] Emperors Diocletian and Maximian Augusti to Marcellina. If the slaves were delivered as a gift, the woman who donated them had no right to manumit them (thereafter).

Posted April 27, in the consulship of Maximus and Aquilinus (286).

[6] The same Augusti and the Caesars to Midus. If your father manumitted your slave, he was not able to grant him liberty even though you gave your consent while you were less than 20 years old.[36]

Signed March 7, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[7][37] Emperor Constantine Augustus to Bassus. pr. If liberty is given to another's slave by a non-owner, even if this is done pursuant to the authority of judges who had the right to grant permission to do so, this act is easily cancelled without any fear of penalty. 1. If, however, it is made to appear that this was done legally through Our order, and a non-owner is proven to have petitioned Us to manumit another's slave, then the slave who appears to have received liberty through Our court will be restored to his proper owner immediately, and he who by obfuscating the Emperor's understanding of the situation manumitted another's slave shall be compelled to give to the slave's owner two slaves of the same sex, age, and trade as the one manumitted, and to give three additional, similar slaves to the Treasury according to the same principle. 2. This penalty is not always imposed, indeed it does not obtain if perchance the manumitted person can show that the owner's right to question his status is barred by the legal period of prescription, for a man who ratifies the loss of his slave by his silence has no one but himself to blame.

Posted July 15, in the consulship of Constantine Augustus, for the fifth time, and Licinius Caesar (319).

Eleventh Title Those Who Cannot Manumit, and That No Manumission Be Made in Fraud of Creditors[38]

[1] Emperor Alexander Augustus to Antiochus. The law is certain that direct manumissions made in fraud of the manumitter's creditors are not to be revoked by the Lex Aelia Sentia unless the manumitter had the intent to defraud and loss results to creditors who want to recover their property. It has [36] The constitution appears to presume that the manumitter's children had been emancipated.

[37] = C.Th. 4.9.1.
[38] See D. 40.9.

et eventus damni suum recipere volentium sequatur. inter creditores autem etiam eos numerandos esse, quibus fideicommissum debetur, olim placuit.

PP. III id. Nov. Maximo II et Aeliano conss.

[2] Idem A. Nataliano. Servos meos nec per interpositam personam ad libertatem producere homines peculii sui posse mandatis comprehenditur.

[3] Idem A. Iustinae. Divo Marco auctore amplissimus ordo censuit, ne quis spectaculo, quod edatur, actorem suum alienumve servum manumitteret et, si factum esset, pro infecto haberetur.

[4] Idem A. Felicissimo. Si minor annis viginti ad libertatem praestandam homines tradidisti, senatus consulto quod gestum est irritum constituitur.

PP. III id. Mai. Iuliano et Crispino conss.

[5] Idem A. Prisco. Si in fraudem eorum quae fisco debebantur probari potest libertas data, non valet. sed si pecuniam is, quem patrem tuum appellas, emptori dederit et ab eo redemptus ad libertatem productus est, nihil videtur bonis defuisse eius, qui fisci debitor dicitur.

[6] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. et CC. Olympio. Nec fideicommissariam libertatem a pupilla sua servis debitam tutorem posse praestare certi iuris est. unde si hos, quos tu rogata manumittere fueras certo aetatis tuae tempore, ad libertatem non produxisti, sed tutor manumisit, remanserunt in servitute.

[7] Idem AA. et CC. Zotico. Si debitor ex administratione curae dominus tuus non solvendo constitutus fideicommissariam tibi reliquit libertatem, cum in fideicommissariis libertatibus eventum inspici tantum obtinuerit, nihil eius voluntas tibi prodesse potest.

long been agreed that the term "creditors" also includes those to whom a trust (fideicommissum) is due.

Posted November 11, in the consulship of Maximus, for the second time, and Aelianus (223).

[2] The same Augustus to Natalianus. It is understood from Our mandates that My slaves (i.e., servi Caesaris) cannot, even by the mediation of other persons, manumit slaves that are part of their own peculium.

[3] The same Augustus to Justina. On motion of the deified Marcus, the exalted Senate decreed that no one should manumit his manager or another's slave during a spectacle being given, and, if done, the act should be considered invalid.[39]

[4] The same Augustus to Felicissimus. If you, while less than 20 years old, delivered slaves in order that they might be manumitted, the transaction is declared invalid by decree of the Senate.

Posted May 13, in the consulship of Julian and Crispinus (224).

[5] The same Augustus to Priscus. If a manumission can be shown to have been made in fraud of debts due to the Treasury, it is invalid. But if the man, whom you call your father, gave money to the purchaser and was purchased by him and manumitted, the property of the man who is said to be a debtor of the Treasury does not appear to have been diminished.

[6] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti and the Caesars to Olympius. The law is certain that a tutor cannot grant liberty to slaves even when it is owed them in trust from his minor female ward. Hence, if you did not give freedom to those slaves whom you had been requested to manumit at a certain time of your life, the slaves remain in servitude, notwithstanding the manumission made by your tutor.

[7] The same Augusti and Caesars to Zoticus. If your master, who owed a debt as a result of his acting as curator and became insolvent, left you a bequest of freedom in trust, his bequest can be of no advantage to you, since in cases of manumission in trust only the final accounting is considered.

[39] Blume: "If such slave, participating at a spectacle, should be asked to be manumitted by the multitude on account of approval of his conduct, it would be hard to resist, and if done would, in a manner, be done under compulsion."

XII Qui Non Possunt ad Libertatem Pervenire

[1] Impp. Severus et Antoninus AA. Torquato. pr. Cum divus pater meus constituerit a praesidibus provinciarum vel qui coercendorum maleficiorum potestatem habent in perpetua vincula damnatos ad libertatem produci non posse, hi, qui intra tempora poenae liberi et heredes esse iussi sunt aut legatum fideicommissumve acceperunt, neque libertatem adipisci nec quicquam eorum quae his data sunt capere possunt. 1. Quod si poenae tempus compleverint, iam omni vinculo exsoluti et quasi ad pristinam vel simplicem servitutis condicionem redacti et libertatem et si qua testamentis dominorum illo tempore defunctorum acceperunt, sine ulla quaestione praeteritae poenae consequantur.

D. XVI k. Iul. ipsis Antonino et Vero AA. conss.

[2] Impp. Valerianus et Gallienus AA. Theodoro. pr. Is quidem, qui testamento vetitus est manumitti, ad libertatem non potest pervenire. 1. Sed in proposito interest, utrumne eos, quos cum filio educatos esse testator expresserit, propter familiare ministerium et usum filiorum necessarium et venire et manumitti noluerit, an quasi male meritis poenam inrogaverit. 2. Nam priore casu, morte eius cui consulebatur obsequii necessitate finita, libertas potest pervenire, posteriore id, quod poenae causa in servos statutum est, necesse est vires suas obtinere, quando divis parentibus meis placuerit eiusmodi testamentorum leges perpetuam servitutem male meritis servis inrogare, ut nec per suppositum emptorem ad libertatem produci possint.

XIII Pro Quibus Causis Servi Praemium Accipiunt Libertatem

[1] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. Firmino. Quoniam religiosa sollicitudo ad augendam provocandamque fidei observationem iuris

Twelfth Title Those Who Cannot Receive Freedom[40]

[1] Emperors SEVERUS and ANTONINUS Augusti to Torquatus. pr. Since my deified father decided[41] that those (slaves) condemned to perpetual chains by provincial governors or by others who have the power to punish malefactors cannot be given liberty, those who are ordered to be manumitted and become heirs or who receive a legacy or trust while still undergoing punishment cannot obtain liberty or receive anything bequeathed to them. 1. But if they have served out the time of punishment and are entirely freed from bonds and restored to what can be called their former or simple status of slavery, they may receive both liberty as well as any property left them at that time in the testament of their deceased masters, without any reference as to past punishment.

Given June 16, in the consulship of the same Antoninus and Verus (161?).[42]

[2] Emperors VALERIAN and GALLIENUS Augusti to Theodorus. pr. A slave forbidden by a testament to be manumitted cannot receive liberty. 1. But it is important to distinguish here whether the testator did not want the slaves, whom he stated to have been brought up with his sons, to be sold or manumitted because of household service and necessary use for his sons, or because he wanted to inflict deserved punishment on them. 2. For in the former case, if the party whose interests were consulted has died and the need of service is ended, liberty may be given. But in the latter, the punishment fixed for the slaves must be carried out, since my deified parents decided that orders of this sort given in wills should be able to impose perpetual slavery on ill-deserving slaves, so that they cannot obtain liberty even through a suppositious purchaser.[43]

Thirteenth Title For What Reasons Slaves Receive Liberty as a Reward

[1][44] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti to Firminus. Since scrupulous solicitude for increasing and stimulating the observance of fidelity should be rewarded by law, if you persisted with uncorrupted efforts and

[40] See D. 40.9.

[41] The decision attributed here to "my deified father" may be a rescript issued by the "fratres imperatores," i.e., Marcus Aurelius Antoninus and Lucius Verus (see Papinian, D. 48.19.33).

[42] The heading and subscription of this law are inconsistent. Krüger believed that the subscription was devised by Cuiacius, lacked ancient authority, and should be considered inauthentic; hence the rescript would date to 193–211. Other scholars have resolved the conflict differently.

[43] A third party commissioned by the slave, with the consent of the master, to buy the slave with the slave's own money and free him or her immediately, see D. 40.1.4–5.

[44] Combine with C. 1.19.1, where the recipient is named "Firmina."

praemio adfici debet, si ad ulciscendam caedem domini incorruptis probationibus ac strenuo nisu constiteris, libertatem, quam his qui dominorum caedem vindicant iam pridem senatus consulto et statutis principum praestari sancitum est, etiam tu pro tam ingentibus meritis non ex ipso facto, sed aditione et sententia praesidis reportabis.

PP. VII id. Dec. Diocletiano IIII et Maximiano III AA. conss.

[2] Imp. Constantinus A. ad Ianuarinum. Servi, qui monetarios adulterinam monetam clandestinis sceleribus exercentes detulerint, civitate Romana donantur, ut eorum domini pretium a fisco percipiant.

D. XII k. Dec. Romae Crispo et Constantino CC. II conss.

[3] Idem A. ad populum. Si quis servus raptus virginis facinus dissimulatione praeteritum aut pactione transmissum detulerit in publicum, libertate donetur.

D. prid. k. April. Aquileia Constantino A. VI et Constantino C. conss.

[4] Imppp. Gratianus Valentinianus et Theodosius AAA. ad Syagrium pp. Si desertorem servus prodiderit, libertate donetur.

PP. id. Iul. Romae Gratiano V et Theodosio AA. conss.

XIIII De Ingenuis Manumissis

[1] Imp. Alexander A. Phileto. Si ingenuum te et testamento manumissum esse dicas, apud suos iudices causam agere debes, si tamen iustum contradictorem habes, id est eum, qui se patronum tuum esse dicit, memor senatum censuisse, ut, qui post manumissionem originem persistent striving to avenge the murder of your master, you will be rewarded with liberty for such prodigious services, for long ago a decree of the Senate and the statutes of emperors provided that freedom should be given to those who avenge the murder of their masters. You will not receive liberty (automatically) through the performance of this deed, but by approaching the governor and obtaining his judgment.

Posted December 7, in the consulship of the Augusti Diocletian, for the fourth time, and Maximian, for the third time (290).[45]

[2][46] Emperor CONSTANTINE Augustus to Januarinus. Slaves who report coiners engaged in producing counterfeit money through secret crimes are rewarded with Roman citizenship, and their masters shall receive the value of such slaves from the Treasury.

Given November 20, at Rome, in the consulship of the Caesars Crispus and Constantine, for the second time (321).

[3][47] The same Augustus to the people. If a slave reports in public the crime of capturing a virgin which has been passed over through deceit or let slip through an agreement, he shall be rewarded with liberty.

Given March 31, at Aquileia, in the consulship of Constantine Augustus, for the sixth time, and Constantine Caesar (320).[48]

[4][49] Emperors GRATIAN, VALENTINIAN, and THEODOSIUS Augusti to Syagrius, Praetorian Prefect. If a slave reports a (military) deserter, he shall be given liberty.

Posted July 15, at Rome, in the consulship of the Augusti Gratian, for the fifth time, and Theodosius (380).

Fourteenth Title Free-born Persons Who Are Manumitted[50]

[1] Emperor ALEXANDER Augustus to Philetus. Since you say that you are free-born and also manumitted by a testament, you should bring action before a judge having jurisdiction. But if you have a legal opponent, that is, a person who claims to be your patron, remember that the Senate has decreed that, whoever claims his original status after manumission, must leave at the house

[45] C. 1.19.1 reveals that the law was given on October 8, the date given by Mommsen.
[46] = C.Th. 9.21.2; combine with C. 9.24.1. C. epitomates C.Th. Seeck dates to November 20, 318.
[47] = C.Th. 9.24.1.4. C. epitomates C.Th. and alters the wording to grant unencumbered liberty rather than Latin status, which C. 7.6.1 had abolished.
[48] Seeck dates this law to April 1, 326.
[49] = C.Th. 7.18.4.1; combine with C. 12.45.1. C. epitomates C.Th. Seeck dates to June 18, 380.
[50] See D. 40.14.

repetierint, ea quae de domo manumissoris habent ibi relinquant. in qua causa etiam legata ut liberto data esse iuris prudentibus placuit.

[2] Imp. Gordianus A. Pompeiae. Ingenuam natam neque nutrimentorum sumptus neque servitutis obsequium faciunt ancillam neque manumissio libertinam.

PP. V id. Mai. Sabino II et Venusto conss.

[3] Imp. Philippus A. Felicissimo. Si aviam tuam manumissam postea ingenuam sollemniter constitit statumque eius iustae sententiae tuetur auctoritas, filios eius quamvis ante sententiam susceptos ingenuam libertatem non immerito flagitare, si cum peritioribus tractatum habuisses, facile cognosceres.

[4] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. et CC. Agrippae. Cum cognatum tuum ingenuum, factum Palmyrenae factionis dominatione velut captivum, distractum esse dicas, praeses provinciae ingenuitati suae reddi eum efficiet.

S. IIII id. Ian. AA. conss.

[5] Idem AA. et CC. Crescenti. pr. Defamari statum ingenuorum seu errore seu malignitate quorundam periniquum est, praesertim cum adfirmes diu praesidem unum atque alterum interpellatum a te vocitasse diversam partem, ut contradictionem faceret, si defensionibus suis confideret. 1. Unde constat merito rectorem provinciae commotum adlegationibus tuis sententiam dedisse, ne de cetero inquietudinem sustineres. 2. Si igitur adhuc diversa pars perseverat in eadem obstinatione, aditus praeses provinciae ab iniuria temperari praecipiet.

D. prid. non. April. AA. conss.

of his manumitter whatever he received from it. Those learned in the law (iuris prudentes) agree that legacies left to a man as a freedman are of that nature.[51]

[2] Emperor GORDIAN Augustus to Pompeia. A free-born woman becomes a slave neither by the expenses on her support nor by her service as a slave, nor does she become a freedwoman by manumission.

Posted May 11, in the consulship of Sabinus, for the second time, and Venustus (240).

[3] Emperor PHILIP Augustus to Felicissimus. If, after your grandmother was manumitted, she was solemnly declared to be a free-born woman, and her status is protected by the authority of a legal verdict, you may easily come to know, if you consult those learned in the law, that her children, though born prior to the verdict, justly demand the right of free-born persons.

[4] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti and the Caesars to Agrippa. Since you say that your free-born relative was in effect made captive by the rule of the Palmyrene faction[52] and was sold, the provincial governor will take care that he is restored to his free-born status.

Written January 10, in the consulshp of the Augusti (293).

[5] The same Augusti and Caesars to Crescens. pr. It is very wicked to defame the status of free-born persons, whether through the error or the ill will of others, especially since, according to your statement, you have solicited one governor and then another, who have summoned your opponent for some time to make objection if he was confident of his claims. 1. Hence it is clear that the provincial governor, moved by your allegations, justly decided that you should no longer suffer disturbance in the future. 2. If, therefore, your opponent still perseveres in his obstinacy, when you approach the provincial governor, he will compel him to abstain from his outrageous conduct (iniuria).

Given April 4, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[51] Blume: "A man who was manumitted was not barred to claim that he was in fact free-born. He was, under a former law, limited to a period of five years after the manumission to make such claim, unless he did not discover his proofs until after that period, and he could then appeal directly to the emperor (D. 40.14.2 and 4). But that law was repealed by Justinian, C. 3.22.6 … Such person, however, must return to the manumitter all that he received from or through him, D. 40.14.2.1; D. 40.14.3–5."

[52] In the 260s Palmyra became a virtual regent over Rome's eastern territories under its rulers Odenathus and later his wife Zenobia and son Vaballathus until they were suppressed under Aurelian in 273.

[6] Idem AA. et CC. Dionysio. Scientis condicionem liberum non posse fieri servum evidentissimi iuris est. cum igitur proponas patrem pupillorum, quorum precibus fecisti mentionem, velut liberum te penes se habuisse, ministerium, licet in actu longi temporis, non praecedente vero titulo, quibus dominia quaeri solent, mutare tuam condicionem minime potuit.

S. VII k. Mai. AA. conss.

[7] Idem AA. et CC. Matronae. Si te ac filios tuos ingenuos esse constat, natalium veritas vos tuetur. nam qui servitutis moverat quaestionem, apud acta causae renuntiando ad ingenuitatis probationem nec nocere quicquam nec prodesse potest.

S. XV k. Iul. AA. conss.

[8] Idem AA. et CC. Callimorpho. Ingenui nascuntur, libertini manumissione tantum constituuntur: pactum autem nec servis nec libertinis ingenuitatem adsignat nec his, qui transactioni non consenserunt, quicquam praeiudicare potest.

S. IIII k. Ian. AA. conss.

[9] Idem AA. et CC. Potamoni. pr. Libertina matre procreatam ingenuis nasci natalibus evidentis ac manifesti iuris est. 1. Cum igitur te matre libertina editam, dehinc ab hostibus captam postliminio reversam proponas et nunc tibi servitutis moveri quaestionem, consequens est adiri praesidem provinciae, qui de causa liberali cognoscet iure laturus sententiam, sciens neque huiusmodi matris condicionem neque captivitatem reversis de statu pristino quicquam posse detrahere.

[10] Idem AA. et CC. Athenodorae. Ad recognoscendos singulos nomina comparata publico consensu, ob celandos natales ingenuis si mutentur, minime nocet, natosque, licet in ministerio servitutis, liberae condicionis non servos possessio, sed status ingenuos edi perficit.

[11] Idem AA. et CC. Maximae. Si vestram possessionem nullus praecessit titulus, sed ingenui constituti operas mercede placita locastis, nec

[6] The same Augusti and Caesars to Dionysius. The law is very plain that a free man cannot become the slave of a man who knows his status. Since therefore you state that the father of the minors whom you mention in your petition retained you as a free man (velut liberum) at his house, your service (ministerium) in no way alters your condition even if it was performed over a long period (in actu longi temporis) but with no previous title by which ownership claims are normally asserted.

Written April 25, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[7] The same Augusti and Caesars to Matrona. If it is clear that you and your sons were free-born, the true facts of your birth protect you. For whoever initiates an inquest into servile status can neither prejudice nor benefit your proof of free birth by making a denunciation in the records of the case.

Written June 17, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[8] The same Augusti and Caesars to Callimorphus. Freeborn persons are so by reason of birth; freedmen become such only by manumission. But a pact cannot give free-born status, either to slaves or to freedmen, nor can a pact prejudice those who did not consent to the settlement.

Written December 29, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[9] The same Augusti and Caesars to Potamo. pr. It is plain and clear law that the (female) offspring of a mother who is a freedwoman is born with free-born rights. 1. Since, therefore, you state that you were borne by a mother who was a freedwoman, and that thereafter you were captured by the enemy and subsequently returned with the resumption of your civil rights (postliminium), but that now an inquest into servile status is raised against you, it is proper to go before the provincial governor, who will try the case for freedom and who will give judgment according to law in full knowledge of the fact that neither the status of a mother like yours nor captivity can detract from the original status of those who return.

[10] The same Augusti and Caesars to Athenodora. If names obtained for the recognition of individuals through public consent should be changed for purposes of concealing the birth status of free-born people, this in no way prejudices them, and those born of free status (liberae condicionis), even if they are in the service of slavery, are rendered free-born by virtue of their status, rather than slaves by virtue of their being in possession.

[11] The same Augusti and Caesars to Maxima. If no title underlies the fact that you are in possession, but as established free-born persons you hired out your statui quicquam vestro derogatum est nec ad conventionis implendam fidem sollemniter agere prohibemini.

S. non. Mart. CC. conss.

[12] Idem AA. et CC. Quietae. Ad mutandum liberae statum commissum plagii nihil promovet, sed abductam natales, quibus nata est, post hunc etiam casum obtinere convenit.

S. III k. Dec. CC. conss.

[13] Idem AA. et CC. Menandro. Ingenuum se contendendo nec probando non amittit libertinitatem.

S. VII id. Dec. CC. conss.

[14] Idem AA. et CC. Aristoteli. Status ingenuae ex eo solo, quod velut ancilla sponsaliorum nomine data proponitur, praeiudicari nulla ratione potest.

S. VII k. Ian. CC. conss.

XV Communia de Manumissionibus

[1] Imp. Iustinianus A. Iuliano pp. pr. Sancimus, si proprietarius servo, cuius usus fructus ad alium pertinebat, libertatem imposuit, non secundum antiquam observationem et libertatem cadere et eum sine domino intellegi esse, sed nec inveniri personam, cui res ad se venientes adquirat: sed si tam proprietarius quam usufructuarius libertatem ei consentientes imposuerant, pleno iure liberum eum effici et, si quid postea sibi adquisierit, hoc in bonis suis habere.

1. Sin autem proprietarius solus libertatem imposuerit usufructuario minime consentiente, sit quidem ille, qui libertatem a proprietario accepit, inter libertos proprietarii connumeratus et, si quid in medio possedit, hoc sibi adquirat, sibi habeat, suae posteritati relinquat, salvo patronatus iure per omnia custodiendo, nisi et hoc ei legibus fuerit remissum. 1a. Ipse tamen libertus quasi servus apud usufructuarium permaneat, donec usufructuarius vivit vel usus fructus non legitimo modo peremptus est. etenim si finem usus fructus quocumque modo work for an agreed price, your status is not prejudiced, nor are you prohibited from suing in the usual manner to have the agreement made with you fulfilled.

Written March 7, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[12] The same Augusti and Caesars to Quieta. Kidnapping does not change the status of a free woman, but it is right that, even after this incident, the abducted woman retains the rights with which she was born.

Written November 29, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[13] The same Augusti and Caesars to Menander. A freedman who contends that he is free-born but fails to prove it does not thereby lose his status as freedman.

Written December 7, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[14] The same Augusti and Caesars to Aristoteles. The status of a free-born woman can in no manner be prejudiced by the sole fact that she is stated to have been given as a slave in an engagement gift.[53]

Written December 26, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

Fifteenth Title General Rules Concerning Manumissions

[1][54] Emperor Justinian Augustus to Julian, Praetorian Prefect. pr. We ordain that if an owner (proprietarius) gives liberty to a slave over whom another has a usufruct, the grant shall not, according to the old regulation, be void and the slave be considered to be without a master,[55] so that there would be no one for whose benefit he may acquire any property he might receive. Rather, if both the owner and the usufructuary agree to give him liberty, he will become completely free, and any property acquired by him thereafter shall be his own.

1. But if the owner alone gives liberty without the consent of the usufructuary, the slave who receives liberty from the owner will be the owner's freedman, and any property of which he later gains possession he acquires for himself, holds for himself, and may leave to his own posterity, while preserving all rights of the patron intact, unless these also were legally ceded to him. 1a. Such a freedman shall, however, remain like a slave (quasi servus) in the household of the usufructuary while the latter lives or until the usufruct is lost in some lawful manner. For if the usufruct ends in some way, the freedman may

[53] See C. 7.16.16.

[54] Combine with C. 7.7.1.

[55] Blume: "'A slave in whom a usufruct exists, if freed by the proprietor, does not become free, but is a slave without a master. Ulpian [Tituli] 1.19. It is this rule that Justinian corrects."

accipiat, tunc facultas ei tribuitur quo maluerit degere modo. si vero adhuc superstite usufructuario ab hac luce fuerit libertus exemptus, hereditas eius legitimum tramitem sequatur.

2. Sin autem usufructuarius tantummodo libertatem imposuerit, si quidem hoc modo, ut cedat usu fructu proprietario, plenissimum ius habeat in servo proprietarius et omnia ei servus adquirat secundum ea, quae generaliter in servos et dominos constituta sunt. 2a. Sin vero gratias agendo usufructuarius eum ab usu fructu liberaverit et libertate donaverit, tunc maneat quidem servus proprietario suo adnexus, sed non necessitas ei imponatur, donec vivit usufructuarius vel usus fructus constare potest, observare proprietarium et quaedam ministeria ei adimplere, sed iudices nostri eum in quiete tueantur. post usufructuarii autem mortem vel usus fructus quocumque modo interemptionem tunc serviat quidem domino et omnia, quae in medio ad eum perveniant, haec suo domino adquirat. 2b. Et sit ex nostra constitutione haec separatio inter servos et liberos et non secundum ius antiquum idem servus remaneat et nullum respiciat dominum.

3. Illud quoque huic legi adicimus, ut explosa antiqua personarum differentia liceat parentibus tam feminis quam masculis, filiis filiabus sive in sacris constitutis sive emancipatis cuiuscumque gradus, mandatum imponere, quatenus servos in libertatem producant sive apud iudicem sive in sacris ecclesiis sive secundum alium quem mandator voluerit legitimum modum. cum enim et in successionibus et in aliis paene omnibus nulla est inter liberos discretio, oportet hoc observari et in praesenti casu maxime pro libertate, quam et fovere et tueri Romanis legibus et praecipue nostro numini peculiare est.

D. xv k. April. Lampadio et Oreste vv. cc. conss.

[2] Idem A. Iuliano pp. Si quis servo suo libertatem imponat sive in ecclesia sive ad qualecumque tribunal vel apud eum, qui libertatem imponere legibus habet licentiam, sive in testamento vel alio ultimo elogio directam vel fideicommissariam, nullo coartetur modo eorum qui ad libertatem veniunt aetatem requirere. neque enim eum tantummodo civitatem Romanam adipisci volumus, qui maior triginta annis extitit, sed quemadmodum in ecclesiasticis libertatibus non est huiusmodi live in whatever manner he wishes. If the freedman dies while the usufructuary is still alive, his estate goes the path provided for it by law.

2. If, on the other hand, only the usufructuary gives liberty and in a manner merely to yield the usufruct to the owner, the owner acquires complete right over the slave and any property acquired by the slave is acquired for the owner according to the general provisions made for slaves and masters. 2a. If the usufructuary, however, frees the slave from the usufruct through gratitude and gives him liberty, the slave remains bound to his owner, but he need not attend on the owner or perform services for him during the life of the usufructuary or during the time that the right to the usufruct is in force; Our judges shall protect the slave from being disturbed. But after the death of the usufructuary or after the usufruct ceases in any manner, he must serve his master, and all property which he acquires during that time is acquired for the benefit of his master. 2b. Let this then be the distinction between slaves and freedmen according to Our constitution, and let the same man not, according to the ancient law, be a slave but have no master.

3. We also make the following addition to this law: now that We have rejected the old differences between persons, We permit parents, male or female, to impose a mandate on sons and daughters of all degrees, both those still in the household and those emancipated, to give liberty to slaves, whether before a judge, in sacred churches, or in any other legal mode, as the author of the order wishes.[56] For since no distinction exists between children in connection with successions and in almost all other things, that should be true also in the present instance, especially because it involves liberty, which it is the mission of Roman laws and especially of Our Divine Majesty to foster and protect.

Given March 18, in the consulship of the viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestes (530).

[2] The same Augustus to Julian, Praetorian Prefect. If a man manumits his slave in church, before any tribunal, before a magistrate who has power to grant liberty, or by testament or other last will, whether he does so directly or by way of trust, he shall in no way be compelled to look into the age of those who are manumitted. For We wish that not only a slave who is more than 30 years should attain Roman citizenship, but We also ordain that, just as no

[56] Blume: "It was a general rule that a man could not manumit a slave through someone else, not even an agent. A father, however, could manumit through a son in his power, since in that case the manumission by such son was the same as though it had been done by the father himself. But the latter could not manumit through an emancipated son, since the latter was no longer a member of his family. And since a mother did not have her children in her 'power,' she could not manumit through them. The present law changes these rules entirely; either parent is permitted to manumit through children emancipated or unemancipated."

aetatis differentia, ita in omnibus libertatibus, quae a dominis imponuntur sive in extremis dispositionibus sive per iudices vel alio legitimo modo, hoc observari sancimus, ut sint omnes cives Romani constituti: ampliandam enim magis civitatem nostram quam minuendam esse censemus.

D. k. Aug. Lampadio et Oreste vv. cc. conss.

[3] Idem A. Iohanni pp. pr. Si quis sine uxore constitutus ancillam suam nomine habeat concubinae et in eadem usque ad mortem consuetudine permanserit et forsitan liberos ex ea sustulerit, sancimus omnimodo non concedi heredibus defuncti eandem vel liberos eius, si etiam liberos habuerit, in servitutem deducere, sed post mortem domini sub certo modo eripiatur in libertatem una cum subole sua, si etiam eam forsitan habuerit. 1. Ipsi etenim domino, dum superest, damus licentiam quomodo voluerit uti tam ancilla sua quam etiam ex ea progenita subole et in suo ultimo elogio quidquid voluerit contra eos disponere, id est sive quasi servos eos aliis legare sive in servitute heredum nominatim relinquere. sin autem taciturnitate eos praeterierit, tunc post mortem eius ad libertatem eripiantur, ut sit domini mors libertatis eorum exordium. 2. Omnibus etenim uxores habentibus concubinas vel liberas vel ancillas habere nec antiqua iura nec nostra concedunt.

D. k. Nov. Constantinopoli post consulatum Lampadii et Orestis vv. cc.

XVI De Liberali Causa

[1] Imp. Antoninus A. Saturninae. Rem quidem illicitam et inhonestam admisisse confiteris, quia proponis filios ingenuos a te venumdatos. sed quia factum tuum filiis obesse non debet, adi competentem iudicem, si vis, ut causa agatur secundum ordinem iuris.

PP. v id. Febr.

[2] Idem A. Vereniano. Si hi, quos servos tuos esse dicis, liberi esse a diversa parte dicuntur, de statu eorum more solito quaeri oportet: nec enim res iudicata, qua de proprietate eorum pronuntiatum est, opponi causae liberali potest.

D. non. Febr. Romae Messala et Sabino conss.

[3] Imp. Alexander A. Quirino. Si liber homo alienae ancillae contubernium sequatur, licet ei fuerit denuntiatum, ut se abstineret, servus domini mulieris non fit.

difference as to age exists in ecclesiastical manumissions, so no difference as to age shall exist in any manumissions made by owners, whether by last will or by judges, or in any other legal manner, and all alike shall become Roman citizens. For We think that We should increase rather than diminish Our state.

Given August 1, in the consulship of the viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestes (530).

[3] The same Augustus to John, Praetorian Prefect. pr. If a man who is without a wife keeps his female slave as a concubine and continues in this habit up to his death, and if perchance he has children by her, We ordain that the heirs of the deceased shall have no right to reduce her, or whatever children she has, to slavery. But she and whatever offspring she has shall under a certain condition be taken into freedom after the master's death. 1. We permit the master while living to put both his female slave and any offspring born to her to any employment he wishes and to dispose of them in his last will as he desires. He may bequeath them as slaves to others or leave them as slaves to the heirs individually. But if he has passed them over in silence, they shall be taken into freedom after he dies, so that the death of the master becomes the beginning of their liberty. 2. Nevertheless, men who have wives are not permitted either by the ancient or the present laws to have concubines, whether free or slave.

Given November 1, at Constantinople in the post-consulate of Lampadius and Orestes (531).

Sixteenth Title Cases for Freedom[57]

[1] Emperor ANTONINUS Augustus to Saturnina. By stating that you sold your free-born sons, you acknowledge having committed an illegal and dishonorable act. But because your act ought not to prejudice the sons, please go before the pertinent judge so that the case may be tried according to the rule of law.

Posted February 9.

[2] The same Augustus to Verenianus. If the men who you say are your slaves are claimed by your opponent to be free, an inquest into their status should be held in the usual manner; for an adjudication as to who owns them cannot be set up as a defense in an action for their freedom.

Given February 5, at Rome, in the consulship of Messala and Sabinus (214).

[3] Emperor ALEXANDER Augustus to Quirinus. If a free man takes up a domestic partnership (contubernium) with another's female slave, he does not become the slave of the owner of the woman, even if he was warned to keep away from her.

[57] See D. 40.12.

PP. non. Febr. Fusco et Dextro conss.

[4] Idem A. Iucundo. Si is, quem in servitutem petebas, liber quamvis absente te causa cognita pronuntiatus est, secunda in servitutem petitio eius dari tibi non debet. sed si, posteaquam cognovisti de sententia iudicis, appellasti, an iure lata sit, in auditorio quaeretur.

[5] Idem A. Sabino. pr. Non ideo minus in libertatem proclamare potest ea, quam ancillam tuam esse dicis, quia eam vendente fisco comparasti. 1. Sed nec hoc ad praescriptionem operatur, quod venditionis tempore maior viginti annis fuit, cum aetatis adlegatio non alias possit praescriptionem adversus civem Romanum accommodare, quam si participandi pretii gratia consensum servituti dedisse probetur. 2. Probationis sane onus, cum ex servitute in libertatem adseritur, ad se recipit. qui si adfirmationem suam non impleat, inconcussum possessionis ius obtinebis.

[6] Impp. Valerianus et Gallienus AA. et Valerianus nobilissimus Caesar Vausumetio. Nec si volens scripsisses servum te esse, non liberum, praeiudicium iuri tuo aliquid comparasses: quanto nunc magis, cum eam scripturam dare compulsum te esse testaris?

P.

[7] Imp. Aurelianus A. Secundo. Si ab eo cuius servus fuisti manumissus es, frustra libertatis controversiam sustines, maxime ab herede eius qui manumisit, cum, etsi iure libertas non processit, respectu tamen aditae hereditatis voluntatem defuncti suo consensu firmare debuit.

[8] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. Veneriae. Cum adfirmes placuisse quondam domino tuo, ut pro te et filia tua dato nummo certae quantitatis vos manumitteret, et te tantummodo liberavit, aditus rector provinciae hortabitur eum salva reverentia, quam patrono liberti solent exhibere, placito suo stare.

Posted February 5, in the consulship of Fuscus and Dexter (225).

[4] The same Augustus to Jucundus. Even if it was during your absence that the man whom you claim as your slave was pronounced free in a trial, you should not be granted a second action to have him declared a slave.[58] But if you appealed after you learned the decision of the judge, the question will be investigated in court (in auditorio) as to whether the decision was made according to law.

[5] The same Augustus to Sabinus. pr. The woman who you say is your slave has no less right to defend her liberty simply because you bought her at a sale held by the Treasury. 1. Nor is her claim barred because she was more than 20 years old at the time of the sale. Such an allegation as to age is no defense against Roman citizenship unless it is shown that she sold herself into servitude for the purpose of sharing in the price. 2. Of course the burden of proof, since she asserts her liberty while in servitude, falls on her. And if she does not prove her allegation, you will retain the undisturbed right of possession.

[6] Emperors VALERIAN and GALLIENUS Augusti, and Valerian the Most Noble Caesar to Vausumetius. Not even if you had voluntarily stated in writing that you were a slave and not free would you have prejudiced your right. This holds all the more since you testify that you made such a statement under compulsion.

Posted ...

[7] Emperor AURELIAN Augustus to Secundus. If you were manumitted by the man whose slave you were, the suit you face calling your liberty into question is useless, especially as it is lodged by the heir of the manumitter. For although liberty was not given in a prescribed fashion (iure),[59] he is still bound to uphold the will of the decedent by his consent since he accepted the inheritance.

[8] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti to Veneria. Since you state that your former master agreed to manumit you and your daughter for a fixed sum of money that was given to him, and he has only liberated you, if you go before the provincial governor, he will exhort the man to abide by his agreement provided you demonstrate the reverence that freedmen ought to show their patrons.

[58] See C. 7.16.27.

[59] Rather, it was granted only informally.

PP. prid. ... Sept. Maximo II et Aquilino conss.

[9] Idem AA. et CC. Proculo. Cum precum tuarum conceptio, licet eum contra quem supplicas ex ancilla natum esse expresserit, tamen nomini cognomen, quo liberi dumtaxat nuncupantur, addiderit et non servum esse, sed servili macula adspersum comprehenderit, contra eum qui servus non est supplicasse te intellegitur.

[10] Idem AA. et CC. Stratio. Liberos privatis pactis vel actus quacumque administrati ratione non posse mutata condicione servos fieri certi iuris est.

D. IIII non.

[11] Idem AA. et CC. Faustino. Non mutant servi statum, si ad civiles honores illicite atque improbe adspiraverint. unde si status moveatur quaestio, intellegere vobis licet nihil prodesse posse, quod pater vester honores civiles gessit. sollemnibus itaque ordinatis apud praesidem provinciae de statu vestro cognoscetur.

[12] Idem AA. et CC. Secundo. Si liberum te natum aliquis comparavit, statum retines, quem antea habuisti. si vero ex ancilla editum naturalis pater idemque dominus distraxit ac post emptori pretium solvisti, non idcirco libertatem consecutus es.

PP. XVIII k. Mart. AA. conss.

[13] Idem AA. et CC. Antistiae. Principaliter de statu defuncti agi non potest. si vero ex peculio quondam eius, quem tibi bona reliquisse commemoras, res vindicentur vel eius filiis moveatur status quaestio, haec omnia sollemniter praesidali notione decidi debent.

Posted August (or September) ...,[60] in the consulship of Maximus, for the second time, and Aquilinus (286).

[9] The same Augusti and the Caesars to Proculus. Although your petition states that the one against whom you are appealing was born of a slave-woman, its very formation adds a personal name (cognomen) to a family name (nomen), which is precisely what identifies free people, and includes the statement that he is not a slave but is tainted with the mark of slavery (macula servitutis; i.e., his ancestor was a freed slave). It is therefore understood that you have appealed against a man who is not a slave.

[10] The same Augusti and Caesars to Stratius. The law is certain that free persons cannot be made slaves, with a change in their legal condition, by private pacts or by virtue of any transaction for the administration of business.[61]

Given the 2nd (or 4th) of ...[62] (293).

[11] The same Augusti and Caesars to Faustinus. Slaves do not change their status by unlawfully and dishonestly aspiring to civic office. Hence you must know that if the question of status is raised, you gain no advantage from the fact that your father held civic office. Trial as to your status will, accordingly, be held before the provincial governor after the usual preliminaries are arranged.

<Without subscription (293).>

[12] The same Augusti and Caesars to Secundus. If you are free-born, but someone bought you, you retain the status which you had before. But if you were born of a female slave, and your natural father, who was also your master, sold you, you did not acquire your liberty by later paying the purchaser the price.

Posted February 14, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[13] The same Augusti and Caesars to Antistia. When a person is dead, a suit cannot be brought in which the principal issue is to determine his status. But if a suit is lodged to recover property from the former peculium of the man whom you allege to have bequeathed you his estate, or if an inquest is made into the status of his sons, these matters must be decided through an investigation by the governor in the usual way.

[60] The transmitted subscription reads, "PP prid ... Sept."; i.e., either September 4 (non.) or 12 (id.) or August 31 (kal.).

[61] See C. 2.4.26, 7.14.8.

[62] The transmitted subscription reads, "D. IIII non."

D. v k. Mai. AA. conss.

[14] Idem AA. et CC. Quintianae. Lite ordinata in possessione libertatis is, de cuius libertate quaeritur, constituitur et interim pro libero habetur.

D. IIII k. Mai. Heracleae AA. conss.

[15] Idem AA. et CC. Palladio. Nec omissa professio probationem generis excludit nec falsa simulata veritatem minuit. cum itaque ad examinationem veri omnis iure prodita debeat admitti probatio, aditus praeses provinciae sollemnibus ordinatis, prout iuris ratio patitur, causam liberalem inter vos decidi providebit.

[16] Idem AA. et CC. Diogeniae. Si ministerium quasi libera exhibuisti ac te nesciente quasi ancilla in dotem data conscriptum instrumentum est, nihil haec libertati tuae nocere potuerunt, maxime cum te minorem aetate fuisse commemores et placuerit minores viginti annis nulla ratione mutare statum ac pro liberis servos fieri, ne ante libertatem inconsulte amittant, quam aliis propter aetatis rationem sine consilio praestare non possunt.

PP. VI id. Mai. Hadrianopoli AA. conss.

[17] Idem AA. et CC. Regino. pr. Multis rationibus, natalibus ingenuis fratribus natis, post delictis vel casibus intervenientibus singulorum causae status separantur. 1. Nihil itaque prohibet eundem et tibi non movere quaestionem et eos, quos fratres tuos adseveras, in servitutem vindicare sive retinere. 2. Igitur ad demonstrandam fratrum tuorum libertatem aliae sunt probationes necessariae: nam quod tibi non movetur quaestio libertatis, eorum non idoneam constat habere probationem.

S. x k. Iun. AA. conss.

[18] Idem AA. et CC. Zotico. Ad probationem ingenuitatis ab eo, contra cuius successores postulas, facta tibi locatio non sufficit, nec tamen hoc solum ad servitutis vinculum argumentum est idoneum.

S. id. Iul. Philippopoli AA. conss.

Given April 27, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[14] The same Augusti and Caesars to Quintiana. After a preliminary surety has been given (lite ordinata), the person whose liberty is under inquest is in possession of liberty and is in the meanwhile treated as a free man.

Given April 28, at Heraclea, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[15] The same Augusti and Caesars to Palladius. Neither does a failure to declare a birth exclude proof of origin, nor does a false declaration diminish the truth. Since, accordingly, all proof offered legally should be admitted for investigation into the truth, the provincial governor will, when you go before him, see that, after the usual preliminary arrangements as the rule of law demands, the case for freedom is decided between you.[63]

<Without subscription (293).>

[16] The same Augusti and Caesars to Diogenia. If you performed service as a free person and a document was executed giving you in dowry as a female slave without your knowledge, these things cannot prejudice your liberty. This is especially so since you state that you were a minor, and it is agreed that minors under 20 years cannot in any manner change their status from free persons to slaves, in order that they may not inconsiderately lose the freedom that they cannot, on account of their age, even give to others without consent.

Posted May 10, at Adrianople, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[17] The same Augusti and Casears to Reginus. pr. When there are several free-born brothers, the status of one may thereafter be entirely different from that of the others for any number of reasons, as for example crimes they commit or intervening circumstances. 1. Hence nothing prevents one and the same man from not bringing an inquest against you even while he attempts to recover or retain in slavery persons who you claim are your brothers. 2. Therefore other proofs are necessary to show the freedom of your brothers, since the fact that no inquest into freedom is brought against you does not offer suitable proof in their instances.

Written May 23, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[18] The same Augusti and Caesars to Zoticus. The fact that the man against whose heirs you direct your petition leased you some property is not sufficient proof that you are free-born, but it alone is also not suitable evidence to reduce you to slavery.

Written July 15, at Philippopolis, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[63] Compare P. Tebtynis 285.

[19] Idem AA. et CC. Paulo. Principaliter causam eius de quo supplicas esse quam tuam perspicimus. nam cum te eum ad libertatem produxisse profitearis, illius interest magis sollemniter suum tueri statum et consequenter tua etiam agetur causa: nam si ab eo, contra quem fundis preces, servus dicatur eique libertas ex manumissione tua vindicetur, probatio servitutis originis et beneficium manumissionis libertatem illi adsignans tuum etiam ius patronatus tuetur. si vero consentiat servituti, tunc iure concesso adito praeside provinciae eum invitum etiam defendere poteris.

[20] Idem AA. et CC. Aeternali. Sicut semel praestitam libertatem revocari non licet, sic per ea, quae non manumittendi causa domini cum servis propriis agunt, nihil sibi detrahunt.

S. VI k. Sept. AA. conss.

[21] Idem AA. et CC. Thallusae. Eam, quae in possessione libertatis non sine dolo malo reperitur, in servitutem constitutae simile habere praeiudicium edicto perpetuo 'si controversia erit, utrum ex servitute in libertatem petatur an ex libertate in servitutem' sui conceptione manifeste probatur, nec quicquam ancillae dolus proprii iuris dominis aufert.

S. non. Oct. Sirmi AA. conss.

[22] Idem AA. et CC. Pardaleae. Parentes natales, non confessio adsignat. quapropter si ex ancilla nata post ad libertatem manumissa pervenisti, te velut ex altera natam ancilla servam professa quaesitam manumissione libertatem huiusmodi simulatione vel errore amittere minime potuisti, cum servi nascantur ratione certa, non confessione constituantur.

D. V k. Dec. AA. conss.

[23] Idem AA. et CC. Musciae. Si tibi testamento directa libertas a domino relicta est et ex eo successerunt scriptae filiae, non idcirco, quod secundum eius voluntatem vel contra de filiis uni praestas obsequium, ceterae filiae tuam rescindere possunt libertatem.

[19] The same Augusti and Caesars to Paulus. We think that the man concerning whom you appeal had the main interest in the case rather than you. For since you acknowledge that you set him free, it is more in his interest to protect his status in the usual manner. Your case, too, will thereby be litigated suitably. For if the man against whom you lodge your petitions says he is a slave, and if your grant of liberty through manumission is upheld for him (i.e., the former slave), the proof of his origin as a slave and of the gift of manumission assign liberty to him and protect your right of patronage. But if he consents to slavery, you have a right under the law to go before the provincial governor and defend him even against his wish.

<Without subscription (293).>

[20] The same Augusti and Caesars to Aeternalis. Just as liberty once granted cannot be revoked, so masters lose nothing through transactions with their own slaves not entered into for the purpose of manumission.

Written August 27, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[21] The same Augusti and Caesars to Thallusa. By the working of the Perpetual Edict: "If there is a controversy whether a slave is claimed from slavery into liberty or from liberty into slavery," it is clearly shown that, in a case where it appears that a woman is in possession of liberty through fraud, the same preliminary order (as to burden of proof) will be made as in a case where a party is in actual slavery. Furthermore, the fraud of the female slave in no way diminishes the rights of the master.

Written October 7, at Sirmium, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[22] The same Augusti and Caesars to Pardalea. Your parents, not your confession, determine your birth. Thus if you were born of a female slave but became free through manumission, you could not lose the freedom you obtained in manumission through deception or error by professing that you were a slave born of some other female slave. For slaves are created by birth according to certain rules, not made such by confession.

Given November 27, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[23] The same Augusti and Caesars to Muscia. If direct liberty was left you in the testament of your master, and the daughters appointed heirs therein succeeded to his estate, the fact that you offer service (obsequium) to one of the daughters, whether in accordance with the master's wish or not, gives the others no right to rescind your liberty.

[24] Idem AA. et CC. Sebastiano. Interrogatam et professam apud acta se esse ancillam huiusmodi factum defensionem libertatis non excludit.

S. IIII k. Ian. AA. conss.

[25] Idem AA. et CC. Licentiano. Sicut praetermissa instrumenta manumissionis recte factae nullum adferunt praestitae libertati vitium, ita si servum ad libertatem produxisti, instrumentorum amissio nihil ei nocere potest.

S. V id. Febr. CC. conss.

[26] Idem AA. et CC. Molento. Sicut datam libertatem manumissis adimere patronus non potest, ita manumissionis instrumentum praestare cogitur.

S. VII id. Mart. CC. conss.

[27] Idem AA. et CC. Aurelio Asterio. pr. Arrianus si mota quaestione a Leonide liber fuit pronuntiatus, in servitutem a victo iterum non recte petitus est. 1. Coheres etiam tibi ab Arriano datus colludens cum eo sive heredibus ipsius, qui status moverat quaestionem, nihil tibi obfuit, nec quae in confessionem inter eos venerunt, statum veritatis vel nomen substantiae defuncti mutare potuerunt.

D. III k. April. Sirmio CC. conss.

[28] Idem AA. et CC. Eurymedonti. Avi paterni magistratu functi dignitas ad libertatis probationem nihil nepoti prodest, si quidem in liberali causa matris, non patris inspiciatur condicio. sed nec materni avi sola sufficit, cum, licet avia quoque libera probari possit, multis tamen ex causis status mutari consueverit.

Sirmi IIII id. April. AA. conss.

[29] Idem AA. et CC. Troilae. De ancilla matre natam et ab eo redemptam, in cuius fuit contubernio, si non manumittitur, in servitute permanere non ambigitur.

<Without subscription (293).>

[24] The same Augusti and Caesars to Sebastianus. If a woman was asked whether she was a female slave and in the public records professed that she was, this fact does not bar a defense of her liberty.

Subscribed December 29, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[25] The same Augusti and Caesars to Licentianus. Just as the omission to execute documents showing a properly performed manumission does not vitiate the grant of liberty, so if you gave freedom to a slave, the loss of the documents cannot injure him.

Written February 9, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[26] The same Augusti and Caesars to Molentus. Just as a patron cannot deprive those whom he manumitted of liberty, so he must furnish a document of manumission.

Written March 9, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[27][64] The same Augusti and Caesars to Aurelius Asterius. pr. If Leonides brought an inquest and Arrianus was pronounced free, the defeated party could not legally bring action against him as a slave a second time.[65] 1. And if the man appointed by Arrianus as your co-heir conspired with him (Leonides) who had brought the inquest or with his heirs, that did not prejudice you. Also the agreement between them could not change the truth or the legal nature of the property of the decedent.

Given March 30,[66] at Sirmium, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[28] The same Augusti and Caesars to Eurymedon. The fact that his paternal grandfather had the honor of holding a magistracy cannot aid a grandson in proving his liberty since in an action involving liberty the status of the mother, not of the father, is considered. Not even the status of the maternal grandfather will alone suffice since, though the maternal grandmother may be shown to have been free, still, status is accustomed to be changed for many reasons.

Given April 10, at Sirmium, in the consulship of the Augusti (294?).

[29] The same Augusti and Caesars to Troila. A woman born of a female slave mother who was purchased by the man with whom she lives in a domestic partnership still remains a slave, unless she is manumitted.

<Without subscription (294).>

[64] Combine with C. 3.31.8, 6.59.4; Consultatio 6.18.

[65] See C. 7.16.4.

[66] C. 6.59.4 reports March 7.

[30] Idem AA. et CC. Eutychio. Solo obsequii non praestiti velamento data libertas rescindi non potest.

[31] Idem AA. et CC. Corsianae. Si tibi servitutis improbe moveatur quaestio, sollemnibus ordinatis de calumnia vel iniuria, prout vindictae viam elegeris, habita contestatione, posteaquam servus non esse fueris pronuntiatus, adversus eam sententiam postulare potes, tunc demum de his etiam quae direpta probaveris restitutionem, cum pro libertate fuerit pronuntiatum, petiturus.

S. v id. Oct. CC. Conss.

[32] Idem AA. et CC. Athenaidi. Subscriptio filii domini manumittentis nec addere secuta nec omissa detrahere libertati quicquam potest.

D. non. Nov. CC. conss.

[33] Idem AA. et CC. Melitianae. Licet accepta pecunia dominus te manumisit, tamen tributa libertas rescindi non potuit.

S. IIII id. Nov. CC. conss.

[34] Idem AA. et CC. Hermionae. Libera concubinatus ratione non constituitur ancilla.

D. id. Nov. CC. conss.

[35] Idem AA. et CC. Atellio. Non idcirco minus, quod pupilli res velut tutor administrasse dicitur, ex eius persona servitutis pati quaestionem potest.

Sirmi non. Dec. CC. conss.

[36] Idem AA. et CC. Theodorae. Post certi temporis ministerium ancillae liberam eam esse cum ea paciscendo conventionis obtemperandi legi domina nullam habet necessitatem. utque hoc verum est, ita e contrario si filios suos constituta cum his libera in ministerium tibi tradere promisisse probetur, parere placitis non compellitur.

[30] The same Augusti and Caesars to Eutychius. Liberty once granted cannot be revoked under the sole pretense that obedient service (obsequium) was not rendered.

<Without subscription (294).>

[31] The same Augusti and Caesars to Corsiana. If an inquest into servile status was dishonestly begun against you, after you have been pronounced to be no slave you may duly offer surety and commence an action for vexatious litigation or outrage (de calumnia vel iniuria), whichever path for vengeance you choose, and bring suit against this verdict. At that point, when a decision in favor of liberty has been rendered, you may also demand restitution of any property which you can prove was seized.

Written October 11, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[32] The same Augusti and Caesars to Athenais. The signature of the son of a master who is granting manumission cannot add anything to the grant of freedom by being subjoined, nor detract from it by being omitted.[67]

Given November 5, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[33] The same Augusti and Caesars to Melitiana. Although your master manumitted you for the money he received, liberty once granted could not be rescinded.

Written November 10, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[34] The same Augusti and Caesars to Hermione. A female slave is not made free by reason of concubinage.

Given November 13, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[35] The same Augusti and Caesars to Atellius. An inquest into servile status is by no means precluded against a person because he as tutor is said to have managed the property of a minor ward (pupillus).

December 5, at Sirmium, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[36] The same Augusti and Caesars to Theodora. A female slaveowner who makes an agreement (paciscendo) with a female slave that the latter should be free after a certain time of service has no legal obligation to comply with the agreement. And just as that is true, so, on the contrary, if it is proven that a woman and her sons are free, and she promised to put them into your service, she is not compelled to comply with the agreement.

<Without subscription (294).>

[67] Blume: "The practice in Greek law was for the heir to sign the documents. Hence the question arose whether that was necessary also under Roman law."

[37] Idem AA. et CC. Olympio. Si filium tuum liberum genero vendidisti, qui tam proxima necessitudine coniunctus condicionis ignorantiam simulare non potest, utrisque sociis criminis accusator deest.

[38] Idem AA. et CC. Philoserapi. Non idcirco minus, quod te limenarcha creato nemo contradixit, rei publicae nomine moveri tibi status quaestio potest.

D. XVI k. Ian. Nicomediae CC. conss.

[39] Idem AA. et CC. Eutychio. Liberos velut servos profitentes statum eorum mutare non posse constat.

S. VII k. Ian. Sirmi CC. conss.

[40] Exemplum sacrarum litterarum ad Verinum. Iuxta edicti nostri continentiam in liberalibus quoque negotiis, sive de libertinitate sive de ingenuitate moventur, absente nihilo minus una parte causam discuti et pro iustitiae ratione sententiam proferri nihil prohibet.

[41] Impp. Constantinus et Licinius AA. ad Titianum praesidem Cappadociae. Iubemus omnes epistulas actricis, quas ad Aelium tamquam principalem fecerat, inanes et vacuas esse atque in irritum devocari ac de ingenuitate eiusdem Aelii requiri nec mulieri id obesse, quod ad eum tamquam decurionem ac principalem scripserit, vel id, quod idem se finxerit decurionem vel principalem, maxime cum non solum testium professione et cognationis eius, quae iugum servile agnoscit, verum etiam voce propria eiusdem Aelii apud aliud iudicium patuerat, quod condicionis servilis videretur.

[42] Imp. Constantinus A. ad Maximum pu. Placuit eos qui nascuntur matrum condicionibus uti, quarum mox visceribus exponuntur. ante litem vero nati suo omnes nomine in quaestionem vocentur, quoniam hos solos, qui in lite nati erunt, omnem fortunam matrum [37] The same Augusti and Caesars to Olympius. If you sold your free son to your son-in-law, who is connected by such close family ties that he cannot pretend ignorance of the son's status, neither partner in the crime can accuse the other.

<Without subscription (294).>

[38] The same Augusti and Caesars to Philoserapis. An inquest into your status cannot be impeded simply because no one objected when you were made overseer of the harbor (limenarches).

Given December 17, at Nicomedia, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[39] The same Augusti and Caesars to Eutychius. It is clear that those representing free persons as slaves cannot change their status.

Written December 26, at Sirmium, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).[68]

[40] A copy of an imperial letter to Verinus. According to the contents of Our edict, if a case involving freedom is brought, whether by reason of manumission or free birth, there is nothing to hinder the full investigation of it and the rendition of a judgment according to the rule of justice, even if one of the parties is absent.

[41] Emperors CONSTANTINE and LICINIUS Augusti to Titianus, Governor of Cappadocia. We order that all letters of the female plaintiff which she addressed to Aelius as chief civic magistrate (principalis) shall be null and void and considered of no effect, and inquiry must be made whether the same Aelius is freeborn. Nor shall it be an objection against the woman that she wrote to him as decurion and chief civic magistrate, or that the latter pretended to be decurion or chief civic magistrate. This is especially so because it was revealed that he appears to be of servile status not only from the confession of witnesses and of his own relations, who acknowledge his servile status, but also through Aelius' very own report in a different suit.[69]

[42][70] Emperor CONSTANTINE Augustus to Maximus, City Prefect. It is agreed that children have the status of their mother who gave them birth. But all those born before the commencement of a suit (against the mother) must be summoned to an inquest in their own name, for only those who were born during the suit ought to have the same fate as their mother and either be handed over [68] Sirmium seems wrong, since the court was then at Nicomedia; but the origin of the mistake is uncertain. Mommsen relocates the constitution to Nicomedia. On the constitution's content, see D. 1.5.8.

[69] Seeck dates this constitution to May 14, 316.

[70] = C.Th. 4.8.4. C. epitomates C.Th.

complecti oportet et aut iustis tradi dominis aut libertate cum lucis auctoribus frui.

D. prid. id. Iun. Sirmio Probiano et Iuliano conss.

XVII De Adsertione Tollenda

[1] Imp. Iustinianus A. Menae pp. pr. Lites super servili condicione movendas ad clementiorem tam examinationem quam terminum transferimus iubentes, si quis vel adhuc serviens liberum se esse dixerit vel in libertate commorans ad servitutem vocatus fuerit, adsertoris difficultatem in utroque casu cessare ipsumque per se ad intentiones eius qui dominum sese adserit respondere et, si ex possessione libertatis ad servitutem ducitur, etiam procuratorem dare minime prohiberi, quod his, qui ex servitute ad libertatem prosiluerint, penitus interdicimus: illis legibus, quae dudum et secunda et tertia vice adsertorias lites examinari praecipiebant, in posterum conquiescentibus, cum sit iustum primam definitionem in suis manere viribus, cum provocatio nulla oblata fuerit: qua porrecta, ad similitudinem aliorum negotiorum iudex, ad quem res ex provocatione ducitur, eam examinabit, cuius et ipsius iudicium ad secundam exquisitionem minime deducetur occasione legum, quae super adsertoriis litibus positae sunt.

1. Super peculio etiam eorum vel aliis rebus aut causis veterem defensoris observationem tollimus, praecipientes illorum tantummodo peculia, qui ex possessione servitutis super libera condicione litigant, aliasque res quae vindicantur in tuto pro dispositione iudicis collocari.

2. Omnes vero, qui pro libertate periclitantur, si quidem possint fideiussorem dare, eum exigi: sin vero re vera datio eius impossibilis eis sit hocque iudici manifeste ostendatur, iuratoriae cautioni committi: scientes quod, si post huiusmodi expositionem afuerint et edictis citati in absentia nihilo minus per unum annum duraverint, omnimodo servituti obnoxii erunt et eius dominio, qui litem eis intulit, sine ulla dubitatione adsignabuntur. 3. Scire vero eos volumus, qui aliquem ad servitutem vocant, quod, si post primam accusationem in quocumque to their rightful masters or allowed to enjoy liberty together with those who brought them into the world.

Given June 12, at Sirmium, in the consulship of Probianus et Julian (322).

Seventeenth Title Abolishing the Sponsorship of Liberty

[1] Emperor JUSTINIAN Augustus to Menas, Praetorian Prefect. pr. We alter the conduct of suits concerning servile status to a milder method of proof and termination by ordering that, if a person still in slavery claims to be free, or a person enjoying freedom is claimed as a slave, the difficulty of (needing) a sponsor (adsertor) in either case is eliminated, and he may himself defend against the assertions of the party who claims to be the master. And if he is in possession of liberty and is claimed into slavery, he may even appoint a procurator (to conduct the suit for him), which We entirely forbid for a man in slavery who claims liberty.[71] The laws which formerly directed suits of sponsors to be examined a second and a third time shall hereafter lose force since it is just that the first judgment can stand on its own merits when no appeal is offered.[72] If one is offered, then, as in other cases, the judge to whom the appeal is taken shall look into it, but his judgment shall in no way be brought to a second investigation by the prompting of the laws passed on sponsorship suits.

1. We also abolish the ancient rule for defendants (defensores) concerning their peculium and other property and suits, directing that the peculium of those – and of those only – who are in slavery and sue for their freedom and other property claimed shall be put in safekeeping to await the final decision of the judge.

2. All, however, whose liberty is called into question shall furnish a surety (fideiussor) if they are able. If, however, it is truly impossible for them to furnish one and this is clearly shown to the judge, they shall give their own written promise under oath, knowing that, if after this investigation they absent themselves and remain absent for a year even after being cited in edicts, they shall be subject to servitude and shall be assigned to the ownership of the one who brought the suit. 3. Nevertheless, We want those who claim anyone into slavery to know that, after the first accusation has been made in any court or through

[71] Blume: "A procurator differed from an assertor (sponsor or defender) in that the former carried on a suit at the risk of the principal, the latter at his own risk."

[72] Blume: "The statement in the law of this title about a second and third investigation of a cause involving liberty needs some comment, since the general rule was that a judgment once closed and not appealed from was res judicata. Reference to a second investigation is made in Quintil. Inst. 5.21; 11.1.78. Buckland, Roman Law of Slavery, 668–9, after referring to the various sources touching on this subject, states it as his opinion that they point to a conjecture that there was a rule, of which the source is now lost, requiring all such suits to be gone through twice or oftener, before different triers, before a final decision was reached. The law as to security, in force prior to Justinian, is not clear."

iudicio vel ex divali iussione factam et admonitionem ei oblatam, qui servus esse dicitur, in alio iudicio eum accusaverint (praeterquam si eius occasionem ipse qui servus esse dicitur praestiterit), etsi domini sint, suo iure privabuntur.

D. III id. Dec. dn. Iustiniano pp. A. II cons.

[2] Idem A. Iohanni pp. pr. Expeditam antea quaestionem, in praesenti autem ex nostra lege, quam de adsertione tollenda posuimus, in quandam difficultatem incidere periclitantem, compendioso remedio fulciendam esse censemus. 1. Cum enim per adsertores super libertate iudicium agitabatur, si in medio adsertore litem agente adsertus ab hac luce fuerit subtractus, necessitas imponebatur nihilo minus adsertori litem implere, ut emptor, si victus erat et pro libertate fuerat pronuntiatum, habeat regressum adversus venditorem, ut ei quasi liberae personae venditor reddat id, quod emptionali instrumento continebatur vel natura contractus exigebat.

2. In praesenti autem, quia adsertorum vana nomina reiecta sunt, si persona, pro cuius condicione lis agitur, mortua fuerit, quemadmodum iudicium potest adimpleri una tantummodo persona in iudicium veniente? 3. Sancimus itaque in praesenti casu licentiam esse emptori adversus suum auctorem venire, quatenus vel ostendat venditor servum se vendidisse vel, si non potuerit, quasi libera persona vendita evictionis periculum ad eum revertatur.

D. k. Sept.

XVIII Quibus ad Libertatem Proclamare Non Licet et de Rebus Eorum, Qui ad Libertatem Proclamare Non Prohibentur

[1] Imp. Gordianus A. Proculo. pr. Dispar causa est eius, qui dissimulata condicione sua distrahi se passus est, et eius, qui pretium participatus est. nam superiori quidem non denegatur libertatis defensio, posteriori autem, et si civis Romanus sit et participatus est pretia,[iii] libertas denegatur. 1. Eandemque et in eo distinctionem adhibendam, cui fideicommissaria libertas debetur, meritissimo iuris auctores responderunt.

PP. k. Mai. Gordiano A. et Aviola conss.

[iii] [et participatus est pretia]

an imperial order and after the one who is said to be a slave has been notified, if they accuse him in another court, they shall be deprived of their right even if they should be the owners, except in case the person said to be a slave is the one who occasioned this.

Given December 11, in the consulship of Our Lord Justinian, Ever Augustus, for the second time (528).

[2] The same Augustus to John, Praetorian Prefect. pr. We have decided to use a brief remedy to shore up a question that used to be simple but has now run into a certain difficulty because of the law which We issued to abolish sponsorship. 1. When a suit concerning liberty was prosecuted by a sponsor, if the person who was claimed as a slave died while the sponsor was conducting his suit, the sponsor was nevertheless required to finish the suit so that the buyer of the slave, if he was defeated and judgment was given in favor of liberty, might have recourse against the seller. This way the seller, as a vendor of a free person, might be compelled to return to the buyer whatever was specified in the deed of purchase and whatever else the nature of the contract demanded.

2. But, since the very name of sponsor is at present abolished as superfluous, if the person on account of whose status a suit is prosecuted should die, how can a trial be finished when only one person is able to be present at the trial? 3. Hence, We ordain that, in such case, the buyer may have immediate recourse against the vendor, and the latter must either show that he sold a slave, or, if he cannot do so, he must stand the loss as the seller of a free person.

Given September 1 (531).

Eighteenth Title Those Who Are Not Permitted to Claim Liberty and the Property of Those Who Are Not Forbidden to Claim Liberty[73]

[1] Emperor Gordian Augustus to Proculus. pr. The case of a man who allows himself to be sold by concealing his status is different from that of a man who shares in the price. For the right to defend his liberty is not denied to the former, but freedom is denied to the latter even if he is a Roman citizen. 1. And the jurisconsults have quite rightly responded that the same distinction is to be observed in the case of one who is owed fiduciary (fideicommissaria) liberty.

Posted May 1, in the consulship of Gordian and Aviola (239).

[73] See D. 40.13.

[2] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. et CC. Melanae. De latronum familia descendentibus ex largitione principali vel auctoritate fiscali servis factis retro principes libertatem denegari decreverunt.

[3] Imp. Constantinus A. ad Maximum pu. pr. Si quis in libertatem proclamaverit, id, quod apud se esse eius qui se dominum dicit profitebitur, quoniam de eo non dubitatur, reddi ac referri iudex protinus pronuntiabit.

1. Quod vero petitur, si fuerit negatione dubium, per cautionem conservabitur ac petitio differetur, ut, si fuerit approbata libertas, (quoniam et ipsis, qui his rem commiserunt, medendum est) gestarum rerum ab eodem ratio atque omne quod debebitur reposcatur, ut servitute depulsa qui pro domino quondam fuerat habeat, quod ut servo dominii iure largitus est et quae ex earum rerum quaestu ac fructibus conciliata sunt et quae de furtivis compendiis obscure capta ac parata sunt, cum liberum esse non oporteat, quod apud servum dominus peculii nomine collocaverat.

2. Ea vero, quae testamento vel donatione quaesita sunt aut quae ex earum rerum emolumentis empta confectaque sunt, eidem ingenuo deputentur. quae tamen universa exacto libertatis iudicio, quae a supra dictis rebus discernantur, in sequestro esse oportet, ut his ab utroque deductis atque in medio iure collocatis ad eorum proprietatem uterque contendat.

D. XV k. Iun. Thessalonica Severo et Rufino conss.

XVIIII De Ordine Cognitionum

[1] Imp. Alexander A. Vitalio. Cum et ipse confessus es status controversiam pati, qua ratione postulas, priusquam de condicione constaret tua, accusandi tibi tribui potestatem contra eum, qui te servum esse contendit? cum igitur, sicut adlegas, statu generis fretus es, iuxta ius

[2] Emperors Diocletian and Maximian Augusti and the Caesars to Melana. Emperors decreed formerly that those who descend from a family of brigands (latrones) who were made slaves through the imperial exchequer (ex largitione principali) or the authority of the Treasury (auctoritate fiscali) cannot be freed.

[3][74] Emperor Constantine Augustus to Maximus, City Prefect. pr. If a person claims liberty but he acknowledges that property in his possession belongs to the party who claims to be his master, the judge must order such property to be immediately returned and restored since it is not in dispute.

1. But if the status of the property stands in doubt by reason of denial, it shall be protected through a written promise (per cautionem), and the claim thereto deferred. If the finding shall be in favor of liberty for the claimant, an account of his doings can be demanded from him, and whatever he owes can be reclaimed – since the interests of those who entrust things to slaves must be protected. Once the claim to enslavement has been rejected, the one who formerly occupied the position of master may receive back what he gave as master to one supposedly his slave together with what was acquired through the profits and fruits of that property, and whatever furtive profits he (the supposed slave) secretly took; for whatever a man lent his slave as peculium should not also be "freed."

2. But whatever property was obtained (by the supposed slave) under a testament or gift, and whatever was bought or produced with the income therefrom, must be turned over to the free man (ingenuus).[75] But once the trial for liberty is concluded, all the property which had been separated out from the above-mentioned items should be sequestered so that, now that it has been taken out of the hands of both parties and placed in the possession of the court, both parties can contend for its ownership.

Given May 18, at Thessalonica, in the consulship of Severus and Rufinus (323).[76]

Nineteenth Title The Order of Trials

[1] Emperor Alexander Augustus to Vitalius. Since you yourself have acknowledged that a dispute as to your status has been raised, how can you ask, before your status has become clear, that you should be given permission to make an accusation against the party who contends that you are his slave? Inasmuch as you rely, as you say, on the status of your progenitors, you should follow ordinary law and go before the governor, who can first try the case for

[74] = C.Th. 4.8.6.4–7; combine with C. 8.46.10.
[75] From Constantine onward, ingenuus could be used both of free-born individuals and of freedmen.
[76] Seeck dates to February 15, 323.

ordinarium praesidem pete, qui cognita prius liberali causa ex eventu iudicii, quid de crimine statuere debeat, non dubitabit.

PP. V id. M. ... Maximo II et Aeliano conss.

[2] Idem A. Galliae. Si de hereditate et libertate controversia est, prius agi causa libertatis debet. sed si de hereditate agetur, ordinanda quidem est causa libertatis, sed sufficit ei, qui libertate utitur, ad victoriam de hereditate secundum se pronuntiatum.

PP. V id. Aug. Maximo II et Aeliano conss.

[3] Idem A. Valeriano. Si crimen aliquod inferatur ei, quam ingenuam esse dicis, ante liberalis causa suo ordine agi debet, cognitionem suam praeside praebente, quoniam necesse est ante sciri, si delictum probatum fuerit, ut in liberam et ingenuam an ut in ancillam constitui oportet.

PP. VI k. Dec. Maximo II et Aeliano conss.

[4] Imp. Gordianus A. Menedemo. pr. Si status controversiam pateris, lite prius liberali terminata, si pro te fuerit pronuntiatum, agere etiam adversus eum, qui se dominum tuum esse contendit, non prohiberis. 1. Quod si ideo te ab accusatione elidet, quasi servum non proprium sed alienum, liberale quidem iudicium cessat, causae autem examinatio apud eum qui iudicat ostendet, utrumne accusatio induci debeat propter statum personae, an evanescat.

D. X k. Dec. Gordiano A. et Aviola conss.

[5] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. et CC. Alpheo. Cum status quaestionem tibi moveri et te debita velle petere commemores, ordinarium est prius sollemnibus interpositis, si hoc iuris admiserit ratio, causam liberalem apud praesidem provinciae decidi, ut, si liber fueris vel servus non esse pronuntiatus, tunc tibi iure debita restitui iubeat, cum hoc incerto, utrumne tibi libero constituto an domino tuo, si servum te sententia declaraverit, debeatur, ad solutionem debitorem tuum urgueri non oporteat.

S. prid. k. Mai. Beraci AA. conss.

freedom and, based on the result of the trial, will not be in doubt as to how he should decide regarding the accusation.

Posted M[arch] (or M[ay]) 11, in the consulship of Maximus, for the second time, and Aelianus (223).

[2] The same Augustus to Gallia. If there is a dispute as to liberty and as to an inheritance, the issue as to liberty should be tried first. But if an action for an inheritance shall be brought, the case in favor of freedom is to be presupposed,[77] but the plaintiff who is in enjoyment of liberty wins a sufficient victory if he receives a favorable decision as to the inheritance.

Posted August 9, in the consulship of Maximus, for the second time, and Aelianus (223).

[3] The same Augustus to Valerianus. If a criminal accusation is brought against the woman who you say is free-born, the issue as to her liberty should be tried first in proper order by the governor granting a hearing; for if a delict is proven, it is necessary to know first of all whether the charge should go against a free and free-born person or against a female slave.

Posted November 26, in the consulship of Maximus, for the second time, and Aelianus (223).

[4] Emperor G*ORDIAN* Augustus to Menedemus. If you are undergoing a trial regarding your status, once the suit has been settled, provided the decision is in your favor, you are not forbidden to sue the man who claimed to be your master. If, however, he opposes to your accusation the fact that you are not his, but another's slave, the suit as to your liberty fails of course, but an examination of the case by the judge will show whether an accusation (against him) should be introduced or dismissed based on (your) personal status.

Given November 22, in the consulship of Gordian Augustus and Aviola (239).

[5] Emperors D*IOCLETIAN* and M*AXIMIAN* Augusti and the Caesars to Alpheus. Since you state that an inquest into your status has been raised but that you want to sue for what is owed to you, it is customary, after arranging the usual preliminaries – if the law permits that – to first try the issue of liberty before the governor. This way he may order payment of the amount owed to you only if you have been pronounced free or not to be a slave. For your debtor should not be compelled to pay while it is uncertain whether the debt is due to you as a free man or to your master, in case the decision should pronounce you to be slave.

Written April 30, at Beracis,[78] in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[77] After litis ordinatio, the person whose liberty was in question was to be considered free for purposes of the trial. The wording of this constitution is obscure and possibly corrupt.

[78] Berancis. Or Heraclea?

[6] Idem AA. et CC. Alexandriae. Si res tuas raptas vel amotas esse dicis ab his, quos servos tuos esse contendis, hique in libertatem proclamaverunt, causa liberalis prius adversus eos et tunc damni dati rerumque amotarum lis apud praesidem provinciae contestanda est, ut, si quidem liberi vel servi non esse pronuntientur, tunc demum damni dati et amotarum rerum procedere possit adhibita probatione condemnatio, si vero secus, quaestio rerum amotarum evanescat.

D. III k. Ian. Sirmi AA. conss.

[7] Imp. Constantinus A. ad Bassum. pr. Si quando negotium status fuerit exortum, si ab eius parte qui dicitur servus aliquid dicatur dominus abripuisse, prius considerari placet, utrum de possessione servitutis in libertatem reclamandum putet an vero ex possessione libertatis in servitutem vocatur.

1. Ac si eum de obsequiis servilibus libertatem constiterit flagitare, ante decidi status convenit causam atque ita praeberi direptorum negotiorum, si res exegerit, audientiam.

2. Quod si ei qui ad servitutem vocatur quicquam direptum esse memoretur, universa quae constiterit ablata ita demum reddi convenit ei, qui servus esse contenditur, si modo salvam rem futuram per idoneos fideiussores promiserit. 3. Nam si tales non potuerit dare, tunc ea convenit, de quibus in iudicio tractabitur, sequestrari in eum diem, in quo controversia sopietur, ita ut ex isdem, si alia facultas esse non poterit, tantum litis sumptibus et alimoniae hominis subministretur, quantum moderato iudicis arbitrio fuerit aestimatum. 4. Cum autem necdum lite de statu mota res ab aliquo direptae sint et sententia de restituenda possessione rerum lata ille, ne sententiae satisfieret, de statu controversiam movit, necessitatem habebit et sine satisdatione easdem res reddere et tunc causam liberalem secundum iuris ordinem exercere.

XX De Collusione Detegenda

[1] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. Theodorae. Cum servum matris tuae et stupro violasse dominam suam et turpis coniunctionis maculam excogitandae ingenuitatis collusione ac falsae captivitatis velamento apud competentem iudicem obtegere voluisse proponas nec

[6] The same Augusti and Caesars to Alexandria. Since you state that your things were robbed or removed by those whom you contend to be your slaves, but these claim that they are free, a case as to their freedom must be held first before the provincial governor, and the issue as to damages and the removal of the goods only later. In this way, if they are pronounced free or not to be slaves, judgment may be rendered for damage done and for things taken after proof has been supplied. But if they are not so pronounced, the inquest into the removal of the property must disappear.

Given December 30, at Sirmium, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[7] Emperor C*ONSTANTINE* Augustus to Bassus. pr. If a suit as to status is commenced and the party claimed to be a slave asserts that the party claiming to be his master has taken something from him, it should be first considered whether the alleged slave thinks he is possessed as a slave and is attempting to reclaim liberty, or whether he is in enjoyment of liberty and is being claimed into servitude.

1. Indeed, if it is evident that he is in a state of servile subordination and claims liberty, the question as to his status should be decided first, and a hearing as to the property taken should be offered only if required.

2. If, on the other hand, something has been taken from a man who is claimed into servitude, everything that has been taken from him will be returned to him only provided he promises, with sufficient sureties, that the property will be kept safely. 3. For if he cannot give sureties, the property in controversy must be sequestered until the day when the dispute is settled, but in such a way that, if there are no other resources, the expenses of the litigation and the support of the man must be paid from that property in an amount equitably fixed by the judge. 4. But if things are taken from a man when no question as to his status has yet been raised and the property has been ordered returned, but the defeated party then raises the question as to status so as to escape satisfying the judgment, it will be necessary to restore the property without receiving any surety, and thereafter to try the question as to liberty according to law.

<Without subscription (317–319).>[79]

Twentieth Title Detection of Collusion[80]

[1] Emperors D*IOCLETIAN and* M*AXIMIAN* Augusti to Theodora. Since you state that a slave of your mother violated his mistress through criminal fornication (stuprum) and then attempted to cover up this disgraceful connection before the appropriate judge by colluding (with her) to pretend he was [79] Seeck dates this constitution to July 15, 319.

[80] See D. 40.16.

libertatem ei matrem tuam dedisse, sed in solam ingenuitatem eum nudae voluntatis mendacio producere enisam adseveres, servum esse palam est, quando etiam divi Pii rescriptum super captivitate emissum, quam non intercessisse significas, ingenuum fecisse non videatur, nec adseveratio consensus tui ingenuitatis ius tribuere potuit.

PP. XIIII k. Iul. Diocletiano IIII et Maximiano III AA. conss.

[2] Idem AA. et CC. Milesio. Libertinae condicionis constitutis privatis pactis mutare statum non licere Ninniano senatus consulto contra collusorem poena statuta praemioque detegenti promisso manifeste declaratur.

D. V k. Dec. CC. conss.

XXI Ne De Statu Defunctorum Post Quinquennium Quaeratur

[1] Impp. Severus et Antoninus AA. Niconi. Aditus competens iudex causam praescriptionis examinabit et, si Domitiae patronum, qui civis Romanus in diem mortis vixit, ante quinque annos, quam lis bonorum mulieris inchoaretur, vita decessisse constiterit, libertae status ex persona manumissoris non retractabitur.

[2] Idem AA. Maximo. Si is, qui te heredem fecit, propter matris condicionem servus dicitur et mater ante quinque annos litis motae vita decessit, praescriptioni locus erit, cum quaeri de statu non possit, nisi free-born and fabricating a false story that he had been in captivity, and since you allege that your mother did not give him freedom but only endeavored to support him in his claim to free-born status by a pure and willing lie, it is plain that he is a slave. For the rescript the deified Pius issued concerning captivity – which you say did not occur – does not make him free-born, and the allegation (by him) that you too gave your consent could not grant him the right of free-born status.

Posted June 18, in the consulship of Diocletian, for the fourth time, and Maximian, for the third time, Augusti (290).

[2] The same Augusti and the Caesars to Milesius. It is plainly declared by the SC Ninnianum that it is not permitted for freedman status to be changed through private pacts, and a penalty is established against anyone who colludes to do so and a reward promised to those who report them.[81]

Given November 27, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

Twenty-First Title The Status of Decedents Shall Not be Questioned after Five Years[82]

[1] Emperors Severus and Antoninus Augusti to Nicon. The appropriate judge, when appeal is made to him, will examine the matter of prescription (loss of a claim through statutory limitation), and if it is evident that the patron of Domitia, who lived as a Roman citizen at the time of his death, departed this life more than five years before the suit over the property of his wife was begun, her status as a freedwoman cannot be reinvestigated by inquiring into the status of her manumitter.[83]

[2] The same Augusti to Maximus. If he who appointed you as heir is said to be a slave on account of the status of his mother, and the mother departed this life more than five years before the commencement of suit, such suit is barred by [81] Blume: "The Ninnianian senate decree, mentioned in the second law of this title, is probably the law passed in the time of Domitian, mentioned in D. 40.16.1. It is there stated that if any one proved that a slave had been made free and declared free-born by collusion, he had the right to claim the man as his slave. Some reward is referred to in C. 7.20.2, in case of collusion to have a freedman declared a free-born person. The character of the reward is not stated. In the note to this law in the Basilica (48.23.2), the reward is stated to be that the detector of such collusion has the rights of patronage as to such freedman. That this was formerly true appears from D. 2.4.8.1. But under C. 6.4.4.26, the right was confined to that of reverence."

[82] See D. 40.15.

[83] Blume: "Death did not of itself terminate inquiry into a man's status, where that was not the principal issue. C. 7.16.13. But it was early made the general rule that a man's status should not be attacked after he had been dead five years. The rule seems to have first been laid down by an edict of the Emperor Nerva. D. 40.15.4. But there was evidently a subsequent senate decree to the same effect, such decree being referred to in C. 7.21.4.7 and 8."

de condicione matris retractaretur. haec ita, si, quamdiu vixit, sine interpellatione ut civis Romana egit.

PP. id. Sept. Antonino A. II et Geta C. II conss.

[3] Imp. Alexander A. Olympiadi. Quamvis defunctus sit maritus quondam tuus, cui status quaestio inferebatur, causa tamen etiam post obitum eius propter emolumentum successionis durat eamque apud eum, qui de hereditate vel de singulis rebus iudicaturus est, decidi oportet.

[4] Idem A. Marciano. pr. Si is, quem servum tuum fuisse et a fratre tuo manumissum atque heredem scriptum proponis, ut civis Romanus vixit nec intra quinquennium post mortem eius status quaestionem movere coepisti, intellegis neque heredibus ab eo scriptis neque his, quos liberos esse voluit, controversiam te contra formam senatus consulti facere posse. 1. Quod si prius, quam id spatium temporis excederet, agere coepisti, et peculium eius more iudiciorum persequi et cum manumissis ordinata lite secundum formam edicti experiri non prohiberis.

PP. V id. Iun. Modesto et Probo conss.

[5] Imp. Gordianus A. Severo. Quod est constitutum post quinquennium de statu defunctorum quaestionem incipere non posse, ad speciem emancipationis, iure nec ne perfecta sit, minime pertinet.

[6] Impp. Valerianus et Gallienus AA. Pollae. pr. Si mater tua quasi ingenua communi opinione vixit et quinquennium a die mortis eius excessit, potes rem publicam et pupillos, si tibi status quaestionem movere temptaverint, nota praescriptione repellere. 1. An autem pro ingenua in diem mortis egerit, in iudicio requiretur. quod si varietas interveniat, posteriora tempora spectari convenit.

PP. VI id. Iun. Saeculare II et Donato conss.

prescription, since inquiry into his status cannot be made except by reexamining the status of his mother. This is true, however, only if the latter lived her life as a Roman citizen without interruption.

Posted September 13, in the consulship of Antoninus Augustus, for the second time, and Geta Caesar, for the second time (205).

[3] Emperor ALEXANDER Augustus to Olympias. Although your former husband is deceased, an inquest into his status was being conducted, and the action against him survives even after his death because the benefit of his inheritance is at stake. It should be decided by the judge, who will adjudicate concerning the estate or the individual property therein.

[4] The same Augustus to Marcianus. pr. If the man whom you state to have been your slave and who was manumitted by your brother and appointed by him as his heir lived as a Roman citizen, and you did not begin to bring an inquest into his status within five years of his death, you must know that you cannot raise a dispute either against his appointed heirs or against (slaves) whom he wanted to be free, which would be contrary to the rule of the decree of the Senate. 1. But if you commenced suit before that period of time expired, you are not forbidden to go after his peculium and to try an action, properly instituted, against those manumitted by him in accordance with the rule of the edict.

Posted June 9, in the consulship of Modestus and Probus (228).

[5] Emperor GORDIAN Augustus to Severus. The provision that an inquest as to the status of decedents may not be commenced after five years does not apply to an instance of emancipation and whether it was carried out legally or not completed.

[6] Emperors VALERIAN and GALLIENUS Augusti to Polla. pr. If your mother was widely believed to have lived as a free-born person and five years have passed since the day of her death, you may, by the well-known prescription, defeat the municipality as well as minor wards if they attempt to bring any inquest into status against you. 1. But it will be investigated in court whether she lived as a free-born person at the time of her death. But if that differed at various times, the later time governs.

Posted June 8, in the consulship of Saecularis, for the second time, and Donatus (260).

[7] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. Heliodoro. Si pater tuus veluti ingenuus vixit nec status controversiam, quasi fisci servus esset, apud praesidem provinciae, qui super huiusmodi quaestionibus iudicare solet, sed apud curatorem rei publicae non competentem iudicem passus est, postque mortem eius quinquennium fluxit, status tuus ex praescriptione, quae ex senatus consulto emanat, protectus est.

[8] Idem AA. et CC. Theodoro. Repetitio peculii rerum servi tui, si nullo iusto titulo intercedente corpora ab aliquo possideantur, nulla temporis praescriptione mutilabitur. nec enim senatus consultum, quo super non retractandis defunctorum statibus sancitum est, intervenit, si defunctus in fuga conversatus atque latitans decessit.

D. x k. Dec. Mel. Diocletiano et Maximiano AA. conss.

XXII De Longi Temporis Praescriptione, Quae pro Libertate et Non Adversus Libertatem Opponitur

[1] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. et CC. Muciano. Mala fide morato in libertate diu prodesse non potest temporis praescriptio. unde cum confitearis fuga te ab eo cuius meministi recessisse, intellegis ex hoc solo sine dolo malo in possessione te libertatis non esse.

D. x k. Sept. AA. conss.

[2] Idem AA. et CC. Carterio. Praestat firmam defensionem libertatis ex iusto initio longo tempore obtenta possessio. favor enim libertatibus debitus et salubris iam pridem ratio suasit, ut his, qui bona fide in possessione libertatis per viginti annorum spatium sine interpellatione morati essent, praescriptio adversus inquietudinem status eorum prodesse deberet, ut et liberi et cives fiant Romani.

D. VII k. Iul. Antiochiae Constantio III et Maximiano III CC. conss.

[3] Exemplum sacrarum litterarum Constantini et Licinii AA. ad Dionysium vice praefectorum agentem. Solam temporis longinquitatem,

[7] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti to Heliodorus. If your father lived as a free person, and he experienced a dispute over his status and whether he was a fiscal slave not in the court of the provincial governor, who usually judges this sort of inquest, but only before the curator of the municipality, who is not an appropriate judge, and now five years have elapsed since his death, your status is protected by reason of the bar prescribed by the decree of the Senate.

[8] The same Augusti and the Caesars to Theodorus. The right to reclaim property which was part of the peculium of your slave will not be barred by lapse of time if the several articles thereof are in the possession of anyone without lawful ground of title. Nor does the decree of the Senate forbidding the reexamination of the status of decedents apply if the decedent was a fugitive and died while in hiding.

Given November 22, at Mel.,[84] in the consulship of Diocletian and Maximian Augusti (299?).

Twenty-Second Title Long-Time Prescription, Which May Be Used in Favor of but Not Opposed to Liberty

[1] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti and the Caesars to Mucianus. Prescription of time is no defense for a man who has for a long time remained in liberty in bad faith. Hence, since you acknowledge that through flight you left the man whom you mention, you understand that by that alone you are not in possession of liberty without fraud.

Given August 23, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[2] The same Augusti and Caesars to Carterius. Possession of liberty which began legally and continued for a long time furnishes a full defense. For partiality for freedom and sound reasoning led to the conclusion long ago that those who should remain in possession of liberty for twenty years in good faith without interruption should be protected against disturbance as to their status by that period of prescription and should become free and be Roman citizens.

Given June 25, at Antioch, in the consulship of Constantius and Maximianus, for the third time, Caesars (300).

[3] Copy of an imperial letter of the Emperors CONSTANTINE and LICINIUS Augusti to Dionysius, Vice Prefect.[85] It is in accordance with justice that no

[84] Perhaps Melitene, but Med(iolanum) has also been conjectured.
[85] That is, Vicar. Seeck gives May 13, 314, for the date.

etiamsi sexaginta annorum curricula excesserunt, libertatis iura minime mutilare oportere congruit aequitati.

D. III k. Mai. Volusiano et Anniano conss.

XXIII De Peculio Eius Qui Libertatem Meruit

[1] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. et CC. Rufino. Longe diversam causam eorum, qui a superstitibus manumittuntur, item illorum, quibus testamento libertas relinquitur, esse dissimulare non debueras, cum superiore quidem casu concessum tacite peculium, si non adimatur, posteriore vero, nisi specialiter fuerit datum, penes successorem remanere sit iuris evidentis.

S. V non. Oct. CC. conss.

XXIIII De Senatus Consulto Claudiano Tollendo

[1] Imp. Iustinianus A. Hermogeni magistro officiorum. pr. Cum in nostris temporibus, in quibus multos labores pro libertate subiectorum sustinuimus, satis esse impium credidimus quasdam mulieres libertate sua fraudari et, quod ab hostium ferocitate contra naturalem libertatem inductum est, hoc a libidine nequissimorum hominum inferri, Claudianum senatus consultum et omnem eius observationem circa denuntiationes et iudicum sententias conquiescere in posterum volumus, ne, quae libera constituta est, vel semel decepta vel infelici cupidine capta vel alio quocumque modo contra natalium suorum ingenuitatem deducatur in servitutem et sit pessimum dedecus cognationis suae fulgori, ut, quae forsitan decoratos dignitatibus habeat cognatos, haec in alienum cadat dominium et dominum pertimescat forsitan cognatis suis inferiorem. quod et in libertis observari oportet: semel etenim libertate potitam per tale dedecus in servitutem reduci religio temporum meorum nullo patitur modo.

1. Sed ne servi vel adscripticii putent sibi impunitum esse tale conamen, quod maxime in adscripticios verendum est, ne liberarum mulierum nuptiis ab his excogitatis paulatim huiusmodi hominum condicio length of time, even though a period of sixty years has passed, should alone bar a claim of liberty.

Given April 29, in the consulship of Volusianus and Annianus (314).

Twenty-Third Title The Peculium of One Who Has Gained Liberty

[1] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti and the Caesars to Rufinus. You should not overlook the fact that the situation of those who are manumitted by living persons is very different from that of those to whom liberty is left by testament, for in the case of the former there is an implied grant of the peculium, provided it is not taken from them (expressly), but the law is plain that in the case of the latter, the peculium remains the property of the decedent's successor, unless it has been specially granted (to the freedman).

Written October 3, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

Twenty-Fourth Title Abolishing the Senatus Consultum Claudianum[86]

[1] Emperor JUSTINIAN Augustus to Hermogenes, Master of the Offices. pr. Since We have in Our times gone to much trouble to further the liberty of Our subjects, We thought it quite impious that some women should be deprived of their liberty, and that a practice introduced by the ferocity of enemies, contrary to natural liberty, should also be the result of the caprice of worthless men. Therefore, We wish the SC Claudianum, and all its regulations regarding notices and judicial sentences, hereafter to be void, in order that a free woman, whether she was deceived or overpowered by an unfortunate passion or however else, might not be led into slavery contrary to her birthright and thus bring the worst disgrace upon her honored relatives, with the result that she who might have relatives decorated with titles might become the property of another and fear a master who may be inferior to her own relatives. This shall also apply to freedwomen, for the spirit of Our time does not tolerate that a woman who has once had freedom should be reduced to slavery by such disgrace.

1.[87] But in order that slaves and enrolled tenants (adscripticii) may not think that such efforts (to marry free women) will go unpunished – which is especially to be feared in the case of adscripticii – and in order that the number of [86] The SC Claudianum of 52 CE had permitted the master of a male slave to enslave any free woman who continued to have sexual relations with his slave even after thrice being ordered to desist. See Tac. Ann. 12.53; Gaius 1.84, 91, 160; Inst. 3.12.1; C. Th. 4.12.2–5, 7.

[87] = C. 11.48.24. Possibly to be combined with C. 1.3.53, 5.17.11, 9.13.1

decrescat, sancimus, si quid tale fuerit vel a servo vel adscripticio perpetratum, liberam habere potestatem dominum eius sive per se sive per praesidem provinciae talem servum vel adscripticium castigatione competenti corrigere et abstrahere a tali muliere. quod si neglexerit, sciat in suum damnum huiusmodi desidiam reversuram.

XXV De Nudo ex Iure Quiritium Tollendo

[1] Imp. Iustinianus A. Iuliano pp. Antiquae subtilitatis ludibrium per hanc decisionem expellentes nullam esse differentiam patimur inter dominos, apud quos vel nudum ex iure Quiritum vel tantummodo in bonis reperitur, quia nec huiusmodi esse volumus distinctionem nec ex iure Quiritum nomen, quod nihil aenigmate discrepat nec umquam videtur neque in rebus apparet, sed est vacuum et superfluum verbum, per quod animi iuvenum, qui ad primam veniunt legum audientiam, perterriti ex primis eorum cunabulis inutiles legis antiquae dispositiones accipiunt. sed sit plenissimus et legitimus quisque dominus sive servi sui sive aliarum rerum ad se pertinentium.

XXVI De Usucapione pro Emptore vel Transactione

[1] Imp. Antoninus A. Flaviano. Mancipia tua si ab eis distracta sunt, qui ius vendendi non habuerunt, vindicare ea potes. nec enim usucapi ab emptoribus potuerunt, cum illicita venditione furtum contractum sit.

PP. id. Aug. Antonino A. IIII et Balbino conss.

[2] Imp. Alexander A. Marcellino. Si contra defuncti voluntatem servos, quos propter perfectae artis peritiam heredibus suis defunctus servari testamento praecepit, tutores vendiderunt, usucapi non potuerunt.

D. V non. Mart. Iuliano et Crispino conss.

this class of men may not gradually decrease by their intermarriage with free women, We ordain that if anything of that kind is done by a slave or adscripticius, his owner shall have the free power, either personally or through the provincial governor, to correct such a slave or adscripticius by proper chastisement and to take him away from such a woman. If he neglects this, he may know that such laziness will redound to his own loss.

<Without subscription (531–534).>

Twenty-Fifth Title Abolishing Naked Ownership through Quiritary Right[88]

[1] Emperor Justinian Augustus to Julian, Praetorian Prefect. By this judgment We eliminate a trifling ancient nicety and allow for no difference between owners who have either naked ownership through Quiritary right or rights over property (in bonis), since We wish no such distinction to exist. The term "through Quiritary right" (ex iure Quiritum) does not differ from a riddle and is nowhere seen in the real world, but it is an empty and superfluous term by which the minds of young men who come to their first lecture on law are terrified as they receive useless provisions of ancient laws during their elementary classes. But let each owner be a complete legal owner whether of a slave or of other property belonging to him.

<Without subscription (530–531).>

Twenty-Sixth Title Usucapion by the Buyer or through Settlement[89]

[1] Emperor Antoninus Augustus to Flavianus. If your slaves were sold by those who had no right to sell, you may reclaim them. Nor could they be usucapted by the purchasers, since the unlawful sale constituted a theft.

Posted August 13, in the consulship of Antoninus Augustus, for the fourth time, and Balbinus (213).

[2] Emperor Alexander Augstus to Marcellinus. If tutores sold slaves contrary to the wish of the deceased, who in his testament directed them to be kept for his heirs because of their special skill, title to them could not be acquired by usucapion.

Given March 3, in the consulship of Julian and Crispinus (224).

[88] This constitution allows transfer of ownership of res mancipi by simple handover, traditio.

[89] See D. 41.4.

[3] Idem A. Nepotillae. Si matrem eius, cuius nomine quaestionem pati dicis, bona fide emptam possidere coepisti, etiamsi ipsa in causam furtivam incidit, tamen postea conceptum apud te partum usucapere potuisti.

[4] Idem A. Achilleo. Venditioni ancillae consensum dedisse diversam partem si probaveris, retractando contractum, quem ipsa ratum habuit, non audietur. sed et hac probatione cessante si bona fide emptam ancillam venditore bona fide distrahente temporis spatio usuceperis, intentio proprietatem vindicantis tenere non potest.

PP. III id. April.

[5] Imp. Gordianus A. Marino. pr. Si partem possessionis mala fide possessor venumdedit, id quidem, quod ab ipso tenetur, omnimodo cum fructibus recipi potest, portio autem, quae distracta est, ita demum recte petitur a possidente, si sciens alienam comparavit vel bona fide emptor nondum complevit usucapionem. 1. Violenter autem possessione amissa, priusquam in domini potestatem perveniat, usucapio emptori, etsi bona fide mercatus est, non competit.

PP. XII k. April. Pio et Pontiano conss.

[6] Imp. Philippus A. cum consilio collocutus dixit: Cum sit probatum rem pignori fuisse obligatam et postea a debitore distractam, palam est non potuisse eam quasi furtivam usucapi.

Sine die et consule.

[7] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. et CC. Pecudi. Sciens servum alienum citra domini voluntatem venumdans furtum committit. quod rei vitium, priusquam ad dominum eius revertatur possessio, non permittit usucapionem fieri, licet bona fide possideatur.

D. V id. Febr. CC. conss.

[8] Idem AA. et CC. Severo. Ex causa transactionis habentes iustam causam possessionis usucapere possunt.

[3] The same Augustus to Nepotilla. If you purchased and began in good faith to possess the mother of the boy concerning whom a suit is brought against you, even if she herself became part of the case for theft, you could usucapt a child she conceived afterward while with you.

[4] The same Augustus to Achilleus. If you prove that your opponent gave his consent to the sale of the female slave, he will not be heard when he rescinds an agreement which he ratified. Nevertheless, even if that proof is lacking, but the female slave was bought in good faith, and the seller sold her in good faith, and if you have usucapted her by the passage of time, the claim of ownership on the part of your opponent cannot hold.

Posted April 11.

[5] Emperor Gordian Augustus to Marinus. pr. If a bad faith possessor has sold part of his possession, the portion retained by him together with its fruits may indeed be recovered, but the portion sold by him may legally be reclaimed from the possessor only if he bought it knowing it belonged to someone other than the seller, or if the good faith buyer had not yet finished usucapting it. 1. But if possession is lost by force, the period of usucapion does not begin for the buyer, even though he bought it in good faith, before the property has come back into the power of the owner.

Posted March 21, in the consulship of Pius and Pontianus (238).

[6] Emperor Philip Augustus speaking in council said: Since it has been proven that the property was pledged and was thereafter sold by the debtor (contrary to the terms of the pledge), it is plain that, as stolen property, it could not thereafter be usucapted.

Without date or consul.

[7] Emperors Diocletian and Maximian Augusti and the Caesars to Pecudes. One who knowingly sells another's slave without the consent of the owner commits theft. That defect in the property, even though it was possessed in good faith, prevents usucapion before possession returns to the owner.

Given February 9, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[8][90] The same Augusti and Caesars to Severus. Those who have just cause for possession by reason of a settlement (transactio) are able to usucapt.

[90] Possibly to be combined with C. 4.38.9, given March 25, 294, at Sirmium.

[9] Idem AA. et CC. Gaio. Eum, qui a pupillo sine tutoris auctoritate distrahente comparavit, nullum temporis spatium defendit. sed si locupletior factus emptoris pecunia post pubertatem occasionem iuris ad iniquum trahat compendium, doli mali submovebitur exceptione.
S. VIII id. Dec. CC. conss.

XXVII De Usucapione pro Donato

[1] Imp. Alexander A. Macedonio. Sive fuit dominus, qui tibi loca de quibus supplicasti donavit, sive a non domino bona fide donata suscepisti eaque usucepisti, auferri tibi quod iure quaesitum est non potest.
PP. V id. Mart.

[2] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. et CC. Capitoni. Donantem ancillam alienam nihil domino deminuere non est ambigui iuris: furtum etiam contrahere citra voluntatem domini contractantem, ut eius rei nec usucapio possit procedere.
S. V id. April. AA. conss.

[3] Idem AA. et CC. Rhodano. Irritam facere donationem perfectam nemini licet. utque hoc verum est, sic error falsae causae ratione fidei bonae non defenditur. quod et in dominio pro usucapione quaerendo servatur.

XXVIII De Usucapione pro Dote

[1] Imp. Alexander A. Taurino. Res mobiles in dotem datae, quamvis alienae, si sine vitio tamen fuerunt, a bona fide accipiente pro dote usucapiuntur.

[9][91] The same Augusti and Caesars to Gaius. No passage of time protects a person who has purchased something from a minor ward who was alienating (the property) without the authorization of a tutor. But if, upon reaching puberty, the youth has been enriched by the money of the buyer and turns the legal situation into a chance for unjust enrichment, he will be defeated by the defense of malicious intent (exceptio doli mali).

Subscribed December 6, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

Twenty-Seventh Title Usucapion Pursuant to a Gift[92]

[1] Emperor ALEXANDER Augustus to Macedonius. Whether it was the owner who gave you the places about which you petitioned, or you received them as a donation in good faith from a non-owner and usucapted them, they cannot be taken from you because they were lawfully acquired.

Posted March 11.

[2] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti and the Caesars to Capito. The law is clear that one who gives away another's female slave takes nothing from the rights of the owner. In fact, a man who handles property to make contracts without the owner's consent commits theft, and no prescription (of lapse of time) can apply thereto.

Written April 9, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[3] The same Augusti and Caesars to Rhodanus. No one has power to annul a completed gift. And just as that is true, so, too, a mistake caused by a false cause (for obtaining possession) is not cured by good faith. This applies to acquisition of ownership by usucapion.

Twenty-Eighth Title Usucapion Pursuant to a Dowry[93]

[1] Emperor ALEXANDER Augustus to Taurinus. Movable property given in a dowry may be usucapted by one who receives it in good faith as a dowry, even if it belongs to someone else, provided there was no defect otherwise.

[91] = C. 5.59.3, which omits the second sentence.
[92] See D. 41.6.
[93] See D. 41.9.

XXVIIII De Usucapione pro Herede

[1] Imp. Antoninus A. Zoilo. Cum pro herede usucapio locum non habeat, intellegis neque matrem tuam, cui heres extitisti, neque te usu mancipia ex ea causa capere posse.
PP. VII k. Iul. Romae Laeto et Cereale conss.

[2] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. et CC. Marinae. Nihil pro herede posse usucapi suis existentibus heredibus obtinuit.
PP. V k. Febr. AA. conss.

[3] Idem AA. et CC. Diocletiano. Opinione falsa mortis pro herede possessio rerum absentis procedere non potest.

[4] Idem AA. et CC. Serapioni. Usucapio non praecedente vero titulo procedere non potest nec prodesse neque tenenti neque heredi eius potest, nec obtentu velut ex hereditate, quod alienum fuit, domini intentio ullo longi temporis spatio absumitur.
D. VII k. Ian. CC. conss.

XXX Communia de Usucapionibus

[1] Imp. Alexander A. Sabino. Qui ex conducto possidet, quamvis corporaliter teneat, non tamen sibi, sed domino rei creditur possidere. neque enim colono vel conductori praediorum longae possessionis praescriptio quaeritur.
PP. VII k. April. Alexandro A. II et Marcello conss.

Twenty-Ninth Title Usucapion by One Acting in Place of the Heir[94]

[1] Emperor ANTONINUS Augustus to Zoilus. Since usucapion by one acting in place of the heir (pro herede usucapio) is not permissible, neither your mother, whose heir you are, nor you yourself can acquire slaves by such method.

Posted June 25, at Rome, in the consulship of Laetus and Cerealis (215).

[2] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti and the Caesars to Marina. The law is that when there are heirs, nothing can be usucapted by one acting in place of the heir.

Posted January 28, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[3] The same Augusti and Caesars to Diocletianus. Possession as heir of the property of an owner who is absent and falsely believed dead cannot be valid.

[4] The same Augusti and Caesars to Serapio. In the absence of good title usucapion cannot occur, nor can it benefit either the possessor or his heir. Furthermore, the pretense that another's property was part of an inheritance does not bar the owner's claim regardless of how long a span of time it was held.

Given December 26, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

Thirtieth Title General Rules of Usucapion[95]

[1] Emperor ALEXANDER Augustus to Sabinus. If someone holds possession under a lease, although he has physical control of the thing, he is thought to possess it not for himself but for its owner. Therefore a tenant farmer (colonus) or lessee of real properties (conductor praediorum) may not sue for prescriptive acquisition through long-term possession.

Posted March 26, in the consulship of Alexander Augustus, for the second time, and Marcellus (226).

[94] See D. 41.5. Blume: "Formerly any person might take possession of an inheritance when no heir had done so and acquire title by prescription within one year. Gaius 2.52–3. Neither good faith nor color of title was required. The reason for such speedy acquisition of title in this manner was, as Gaius 2.55 tells us, that the ancients wished heirs to enter on an inheritance with all speed, so that they might perform the sacred rites for the deceased, and so that creditors might have someone who would satisfy their claims. But a senate decree was passed under Hadrian prohibiting the acquisition of a prescriptive title in this manner against the true heir. Gaius 2.57. A person might, however, take possession as heir and acquire a prescriptive title against persons who were not in fact heirs."

[95] See D. 41.3; Inst. 2.6.

[2] Idem A. Onesimae. Iam pridem quidem mancipium, de quo supplicas, comparasse te dicis: sed si cogitaveris fisci mei rem usucapi non posse, respondere te actionibus fisci mei intellegis nec alias posse proprietatem obtinere, quam si non ex ancilla fiscali natum fuisse constiterit.

PP. non. Mart. Pompeiano et Peligno conss.

[3] Imp. Alexander A. Pantherio. Si mala fide servum tuum sciens Antiochus tenuit, intentionem tuam contra successorem eius, licet bona fide possidet, propter initii vitium usucapio non absumpsit.

XXXI De Usucapione Transformanda et de Sublata Differentia Rerum Mancipi et Nec Mancipi

[1] Imp. Iustinianus A. Iohanni pp. pr. Cum nostri animi vigilantia ex iure Quiritum nomen et substantiam sustulerit et communes exceptiones in omni loco valeant, id est decem vel viginti vel triginta annorum vel si quae sunt aliae maioris aevi continentes prolixitatem, satis inutile est usucapionem in Italicis quidem solis rebus admittere, in provincialibus autem recludere. sed et si quis res alienas, Italicas tamen, bona fide possidebat per biennium, miseri rerum domini excludebantur et nullus eis ad eas reservabatur regressus. quae et nescientibus dominis procedebant: quo nihil inhumanius erat, si homo absens et nesciens tam angusto tempore suis cadebat possessionibus.

1. Ideo per praesentem legem et in Italicis solis rebus, quae immobiles sunt vel esse intelleguntur, sicut annalem exceptionem, ita et usucapionem transformandam esse censemus, ut tantummodo et hic decem vel viginti annorum vel triginta et aliarum exceptionum tempora currant, huiusmodi angustiis penitus semotis.

2. Cum autem antiqui et in rebus mobilibus vel se moventibus, quae fuerant alienatae vel quocumque modo, bona fide tamen, detentae, usucapionem extendebant, non in Italico solo nexu, sed in omnem orbem terrarum, et hanc annali tempore concludebant, et eam duximus esse

[2] The same Augustus to Onesima. You say that you bought the slave mentioned in your petition a long time ago. But if you stop to think that no property belonging to my Treasury (fisci mei res) can be usucapted, you will realize that you must answer in the action brought by the Treasury, and that you could not gain ownership unless it happens that he was not born of a female slave belonging to the Treasury.

Posted March 7, in the consulship of Pompeianus and Pelignus (231).

[3] The same Augustus to Pantherius. If Antiochus knowingly had possession of your slave in bad faith, your claim against his heir is not barred by usucapion even if he possessed the slave in good faith, for the beginning (of his possession) was flawed.

Thirty-First Title The Transformation of Usucapion, and Eliminating the Distinction between Res Mancipi and Res Nec Mancipi

[1][96] Emperor Justinian Augustus to John, Praetorian Prefect. pr. Since the vigilance of Our Mind abolished the name and substance of Quiritary right,[97] and the common defenses (exceptiones) are valid in every place – that is to say those relating to the lapse of ten, twenty, and thirty years, and those relating to the lapse of a still greater period – it is not beneficial that usucapion should exist as to Italic land but should be precluded from provincial land. Moreover, if a man in good faith had possession of another's property that was Italic for a period of two years, the unfortunate owners of the property were barred without any right to reclaim it. And this used to happen to owners even without their knowledge. There was nothing more cruel than that a man who was absent and without knowledge should lose his possessions by the lapse of such a short period of time.

1. We therefore ordain through this present law that both the one-year defense and also usucapion should be transformed for property on Italic land which is either immovable or interpreted as such. In this way here too the time period of ten or twenty or thirty years or of other defenses must lapse, and the brief period should be entirely abolished.

2. But the ancients also used to extend the application of usucapion to things movable and self-moving that were transferred or held (detentae) in some fashion, provided it was in good faith, and they used to fix the period for such usucapion at one year not just in connection with Italic land but anywhere in the world. We have thought it best to correct this too, so that, if a man in good corrigendam, ut, si quis alienam rem mobilem seu se moventem in quacumque terra sive Italica sive provinciali bona fide per continuum triennium detinuerit, is firmo iure eam possideat, quasi per usucapionem ei adquisitam.

[96] Combine with C. 3.34.13.
[97] C. 7.25.1.

3. Hoc tantummodo observando, ut in his omnibus casibus ab initio bona fide eam capiat, secundum quod exigit longi temporis praescriptio, et ut continuetur ei possessio etiam anterioris iusti possessoris et connumeretur in decennium vel viginti annorum spatium vel triennium, quod in rebus mobilibus observandum esse censemus, ut in omnibus iusto titulo possessionis antecessoris iusta detentio, quam in re habuit, non interrumpatur ex posteriore forsitan alienae rei scientia, licet ex titulo lucrativo ea coepta est. 4. Ita etenim ampliatur quidem longi temporis materia, quae ei subdita est, minuitur autem usucapionum compendiosa dominis iactura et eius iura nocentia. 5. Cum etiam res dividi mancipi et nec mancipi sane antiquum est et merito antiquari oportet, sit et rebus et locis omnibus similis ordo, inutilibus ambiguitatibus et differentiis sublatis.

D. xv k. Nov. Constantinopoli post consulatum Lampadii et Orestis vv. cc.

XXXII De Adquirenda et Retinenda Possessione

[1] Impp. Severus et Antoninus AA. Attico. Per liberam personam ignoranti quoque adquiri possessionem et, postquam scientia intervenerit, usucapionis condicionem inchoari posse tam ratione utilitatis quam iuris pridem receptum est.

PP. vi k. Dec. Dextro ii et Prisco conss.

[2] Imp. Alexander A. Gauro. Minus instructus est, qui te sollicitum reddidit, quasi in vacuam possessionem eius, quod per procuratorem emisti, non sis inductus, cum ipse proponas diu te in possessione fuisse omniaque ut dominum gessisse. licet enim instrumento non sit comprehensum, quod tibi tradita sit possessio, ipsa tamen rei veritate id consecutus es, si sciente venditore in possessione fuisti.

faith holds another's movable or self-moving property on any land, whether Italic or provincial, for a continuous period of three years, he shall have it in his own right as having been acquired by usucapion.

3. This only must be complied with, namely, that in all cases he takes possession in good faith from the beginning in keeping with the requirement of long time prescription, and that his possession follow immediately upon that of a previous just possessor, and that it be counted in a ten- or twenty-year period, or alternatively a three-year period – which We ordain should be observed in connection with movable property – so that in all cases the just holding (detentio) of property which a predecessor had based on a just title shall not be interrupted by the later knowledge that the property might belong to another, even if the possession initially arose as a result of a gift. 4. In this manner, the subject matter of long time (prescription) and that which is subject to it is increased, while the many losses to owners from short term usucapion and its pernicious rights are diminished. 5. Likewise, since the division of property into res mancipi and res nec mancipi is ancient and should justly be superannuated, the same rule should apply both to things and to all places, and useless ambiguities and distinctions should cease.

Given October 18, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Lampadius and Orestes (531).

Thirty-Second Title Acquiring and Retaining Possession[98]

[1] Emperors SEVERUS and ANTONINUS Augusti to Atticus. Expediency (utilitas) dictates, and the law has long permitted, that possession may be acquired through a free person even for a man who has no knowledge thereof, and that the condition for usucapion may start after knowledge (of such possession) is obtained.

Posted November 26, in the consulship of Dexter, for the second time, and Priscus (196).

[2] Emperor ALEXANDER Augustus to Gaurus. The man who made you fearful that you were not brought into quiet possession of the property which you bought through a procurator is not well informed. For you yourself state that you have long been in possession and have been managing everything as owner. Although the document of purchase did not state that possession was delivered to you, still you obtained it by the truth of the matter if you were in possession and the seller knew this.

[98] See D. 41.2.

[3] Imp. Decius A. Rufo. Donatarum rerum a quacumque persona infanti vacua possessio tradita corpore quaeritur. quamvis enim sint auctorum sententiae dissentientes, tamen consultius videtur interim, licet animi plenus non fuisset adfectus, possessionem per traditionem esse quaesitam: alioquin, sicuti viri consultissimi Papiniani responso continetur, ne quidem per tutorem possessio infanti poterit adquiri.

PP. v k. April. Decio A. II et Grato conss.

[4] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. Nepotianae. Licet possessio nudo animo adquiri non possit, tamen solo animo retineri potest. si igitur desertam praediorum possessionem non derelinquendi adfectione transacto tempore non coluisti, sed ex metus necessitate culturam eorum distulisti, praeiudicium tibi ex transmissi temporis iniuria generari non potest.

PP. k. Aug. ipsis IIII et III AA. conss.

[5] Idem AA. Mennoni. Cum nemo causam sibi possessionis mutare possit proponasque colonum nulla extrinsecus accedente causa ex colendi occasione ad iniquae venditionis vitium esse prolapsum, praeses provinciae inquisita fide veri dominii tui ius convelli non sinet.

[6] Idem AA. et CC. Valerio. Si nulla iusta ex causa ingressum agrum sive vineas eum cuius meministi praeses reppererit nec ulla praescriptione vestra interpellatur petitio, restituere te possessioni cum omni causa non dubitabit.

S. id. April. AA. conss.

[7] Idem AA. et CC. Asyncrito. Improba possessio firmum titulum possidendi nullum praestare potest. unde ingredientem in vacuam possessionem alieni fundi non consentiente domino vel actore, qui eius rei concedendi potestatem habuit, causam iustam possessionis adipisci non potuisse certum est.

PP. v id. Dec. AA. conss.

[3] Emperor Decius Augustus to Rufus. Quiet possession of property gifted to a small child (infans) by any person is acquired when it is transferred physically (corpore). Indeed, although the opinions of authorities differ, it nevertheless seems preferable that possession is obtained through transfer even if there was no fully formed sentiment of intent (animi plenus adfectus). Otherwise, as stated in the response of the learned Papinian, legal possession could not be acquired for a small child even through a tutor.

Posted March 28, in the consulship of Decius Augustus, for the second time, and Gratus (250).

[4] Emperors Diocletian and Maximian Augusti to Nepotiana. Although possession as owner cannot be acquired by mere intent (nudo animo), it may nevertheless be retained by intention alone (solo animo). Therefore, if you failed to cultivate estates, which you left deserted for a period now passed, without any intention to abandon them, but you simply deferred their cultivation through the compulsion of some fear (necessitate metus), no prejudice can arise against you because of the injustice of a bygone time (ex transmissi temporis iniuria).

Posted August 1, in the consulship of the same Augusti, for the fourth and third time (290).

[5] The same Augusti to Mennon. Since no one by himself can change the legal basis upon which he holds possession, and you state that your tenant (colonus), without any intervening title but through the mere occasion of his cultivation of the property, committed the wrongful act of selling it, the provincial governor, after inquiry into the true facts, will not permit you to be deprived of ownership of the property.

[6][99] The same Augusti and the Caesars to Valerius. When the governor learns that the man you mention invaded your field or vineyards without lawful title, and your claim is not interrupted by prescription, he will not hesitate to restore its possession and all its belongings to you.

Written April 13, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[7] The same Augusti and Caesars to Asyncritus. Dishonest possession gives no firm title for possession. Hence it is certain that, if someone invaded the quiet possession of another's farm without the consent of the owner or manager who had the power to grant rights over it, he was not able to acquire just cause for his possession.

Posted December 9, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[99] Possibly to be combined with C. 6.2.10.

[8] Idem AA. et CC. Cyrillo. Per procuratorem utilitatis causa possessionem et, si proprietas ab hac separari non possit, dominium etiam quaeri placuit.

PP. XVIII k. Mart.[iv] Sirmi CC. conss.

[9] Idem AA. et CC. Sergio. Nec ex vera venditione possessionem, quam non fuerat emptor adeptus, improbe retinere potest: ac multo minus is, qui adseveratione falsa velut emptor, cum sine obligatione pignoris pecuniam mutuo dedisset, fundum inrumpens alienum retinendi iustam habet causam.

P.P. III non. April. Sirmi CC. conss.

[10] Imp. Constantinus A. ad Maternum. Nemo ambigit possessionis duplicem esse rationem, aliam quae iure consistit, aliam quae corpore, utramque autem ita demum esse legitimam, cum omnium adversariorum silentio ac taciturnitate firmetur: interpellatione vero et controversia progressa non posse eum intellegi possessorem, qui, licet corpore teneat, tamen ex interposita contestatione et causa in iudicium deducta super iure possessionis vacillet ac dubitet.

PP. XI k. Febr. Triveris Volusiano et Anniano conss.

[11] Impp. Arcadius et Honorius AA. Petronio vicario Hispaniarum. Vitia possessionum a maioribus contracta perdurant et successorem auctoris sui culpa comitatur.

D. XV k. Ian. Mediolano Caesario et Attico conss.

[12] Imp. Iustinianus A. Iohanni pp. pr. Ex libris Sabinianis quaestionem in divinas nostri numinis aures relatam tollentes definimus, ut, sive servus sive procurator vel colonus vel inquilinus vel quispiam alius, per quem licentia est nobis possidere, corporaliter nactam possessionem cuiuscumque rei eam dereliquerit vel alii prodiderit, desidia forte vel dolo, ut locus aperiatur alii eandem possessionem detinere, nihil penitus domino praeiudicium generetur, ne ex aliena malignitate alienum damnum emergat, sed et ipse, si liberae condicionis est, competentibus actionibus subiugetur, omni iactura ab eo restituenda domino rei vel ei, circa quem neglegenter vel dolose versatus est.

1. Sin autem necdum sub manibus procuratoris vel coloni vel inquilini vel servi possessio facta est, sed ipse eam accipere desidia vel dolo

[iv] XVI k. Mart. (Mommsen)

[8] The same Augusti and Caesars to Cyrillus. For the sake of expediency, it is agreed that possession may be acquired through a procurator, and if ownership cannot be separated from possession, it too may be acquired thus.[100]

Posted February 14, at Sirmium, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[9] The same Augusti and Caesars to Sergius. Even pursuant to a true sale, a buyer cannot dishonestly retain possession which he never obtained. But so much the less does someone have a lawful cause of detention if he invaded someone else's farm after pretending to be a buyer under a false claim, when he lent money without demanding (the farm as) a pledge.

Posted April 3, at Sirmium, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[10] Emperor CONSTANTINE Augustus to Maternus. No one doubts that the basis of possession is twofold: the first aspect exists through law, the second through physical occupation; both are ultimately legal only when confirmed by the silence and muteness of all adversaries. Hence, while a suit and controversy is pending, a man cannot be considered to have possession who, though he has physical control, is uncertain and doubtful as to his right of possession by reason of the suit and the joinder of issue.

Posted January 22, at Trier, in the consulship of Volusianus and Annianus (314).

[11] Emperors ARCADIUS and HONORIUS Augusti to Petronius, Vicar of the Spanish diocese. Defects in possession initiated by predecessors continue, and fault follows the successor of the person who initiated it.

Given December 18, at Milan, in the consulship of Caesarius and Atticus (397).

[12] Emperor JUSTINIAN Augustus to John, Praetorian Prefect. pr. Settling a dispute contained in the books of Sabinus and brought to the ears of Our Divine Majesty, We order that if a slave, procurator, bound or resident tenant (colonus vel inquilinus), or anyone else through whom possession may be acquired, either abandons the physical possession of any property or turns it over to someone else, whether negligently or deceitfully, so that opportunity is given to another to take possession, no prejudice shall result to the owner. Damages should not be inflicted on one man through the evil intention of another, but he himself will, if free, be subject to proper actions, and must make good all loss to the owner or to him toward whom he acted negligently or deceitfully.

1. But if possession has not yet come into the hands of the procurator, bound or resident tenant, or slave, but he neglects to accept it, whether through sloth supersedit, tunc ipse qui eum transmisit ex mala sua electione praeiudicium circa possessionem patiatur, ex memoratarum personarum vel machinatione vel neglegentia accedens. 2. Hoc etenim tantummodo sancimus, ut dominus nullo modo aliquod discrimen sustineat ab his quos transmiserit, non ut etiam lucrum sibi per eos adquirat, cum et antiqua regula, quae definivit deteriorem condicionem per servum domini nullo fieri modo, tunc locum habet, cum de damno dominus periclitetur, non cum sibi lucrum per servum adquiri desiderat: salva videlicet et in hoc casu domino rei vel ei, qui ad eam detinendam praefatas transmiserit personas, adversus eas omni actione, si qua ex legibus ei competit servata.

[100] See C. 4.27.1.

XXXIII De Praescriptione Longi Temporis Decem vel Viginti Annorum

[1] Impp. Severus et Antoninus AA. Iuliano pp. pr. Cum post motam et omissam quaestionem res ad nova dominia bona fide transierint et exinde novi viginti anni intercesserint sine interpellatione, non est inquietanda quae nunc possidet persona, quae sicut accessione prioris domini non utitur, qui est inquietatus, ita nec impedienda est, quod ei mota controversia sit. 1. Quod si prior possessor inquietatus est, etsi postea per longum tempus sine aliqua interpellatione in possessione remansit, tamen non potest uti longi temporis praescriptione. 2. Quod etiam in re publica servari oportet.

D. III et Antonino AA. conss.

[2] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. Longi temporis praescriptio his, qui bona fide coeptam possessionem continuatam nec interruptam inquietudine litis tenuerunt, solet patrocinari.

PP. V k. Dec. Maximo II et Aquilino conss.

[3] Idem AA. et CC. Antonio. Si vineae, quas mater tua vitrico in dotem dedit, tuae proprietatis sunt nec ulla praescriptio ex transacti temporis prolixitate adolevit, praeses provinciae restitui tibi eas efficiet.

or deceit, then the man who sent him to take possession must suffer the loss as to his possession as the result of his bad selection (of an agent) and thus yield to the trickery or negligence of the previously listed persons. 2. For We ordain only that an owner shall suffer no loss through the agents whom he has sent, not that he may also make a profit through them. Indeed, the ancient rule which holds that the condition of the master shall not be made worse by a slave also applies only when the master is in danger of loss, not when he seeks to make a profit through his slave. But, even in this case, every action permissible by the laws is to be preserved for the owner of the property or for the one who sent the previously listed persons with the purpose of gaining possession.

<Without subscription (531–533).>

Thirty-Third Title Long-Time Prescription of Ten or Twenty Years

[1] Emperors Severus and Antoninus Augusti to Julian, Praetorian Prefect. pr. When, after a dispute has been raised and abandoned, the property passes to a new owner in good faith, and from then on a new period of twenty years elapses without interruption, the person who now possesses it should not be disturbed. Just as he does not seek to join his possession to that of the prior owner who was disturbed, so also he should not be prejudiced because a dispute was raised against his predecessor. 1. But if the prior possessor is disturbed, although he thereafter remains in possession for a long time without interruption, he cannot benefit from long-time prescription. 2. This rule applies to a municipality as well.

Given in the consulship of [Severus], for the third time, and Antoninus, Augusti (202).

[2] Emperors Diocletian and Maximian Augusti. Long-time prescription usually protects those who have held possession that was begun in good faith and that continued and was not interrupted by the disturbance of a suit.

Posted November 27, in the consulship of Maximus, for the second time, and Aquilinus (286).

[3] The same Augusti and the Caesars to Antonius. If the vineyards which your mother gave to your stepfather as a dowry belong to you, and the time elapsed has not ripened into completed prescription, the provincial governor will cause them to be restored to you.

<Without subscription (293).>

[4] Idem AA. et CC. Hermo. Diutina possessio iure tantum successionis sine iusto titulo obtenta prodesse ad praescriptionem hac sola ratione non potest.

PP. IIII id. April. AA. conss.

[5] Idem AA. et CC. Sotericho. Nec petentem dominium ab eo, cui petentis solus error causam possessionis sine vero titulo praestitit, silentii longi praescriptione depelli, iuris evidentissimi est.

S. Sirmi XI k. Mai. AA. conss.

[6] Pars epistulae Diocletiani et Maximiani AA. et CC. ad Primosum praesidem Syriae. Si fraude et dolo, licet inter maiores annis, facta venditio est, hanc confirmare non potuit consequens tempus, cum longi temporis praescriptio in malae fidei contractibus locum non habeat.

Accepta.

[7] Idem AA. et CC. Antheae. Longi temporis praescriptione munitis instrumentorum amissio nihil iuris aufert nec diuturnitate possessionis partam securitatem maleficium alterius turbare potest.

D. prid. k. Ian. AA. conss.

[8] Idem AA. et CC. Celso. pr. Si is contra quem supplicas matris tuae quondam mancipia quasi filius ex causa tantum adoptionis defendit, adfectio destinatae illicitae adoptionis ad horum dominium ei quaerendum sola non sufficit. 1. Quapropter mancipia petere non prohiberis nullam timens temporis praescriptionem, si hoc tantum initio procedente is contra quem supplicas horum possessionem adeptus est.

[9] Idem AA. et CC. Demostheni. Emptor bona fide contra praesentem decennii praescriptione, cuius initio contestationem haberi sufficit,

[4] The same Augusti and Caesars to Hermus. Lasting possession alleged only pursuant to the right of succession as heir without any just title (sine iusto titulo) cannot alone serve as a basis for prescription.

Posted April 10, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[5] The same Augusti and Caesars to Soterichus. The law is very plain that one who claims ownership from another, to whom without just title only an error of the claimant gave any ground for his possession, cannot be defeated by prescription of a long quietude.

Written April 21, at Sirmium, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[6] Part of a letter of DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti and the Caesars to Primosus, Governor of Syria. If a sale was made through fraud and deceit, even though among persons of the age of legal majority, the subsequent time could not confirm it since long-time prescription does not apply to contracts made in bad faith.

Received (293).

[7] The same Augusti and Caesars to Anthea. Loss of documentation does not prejudice the right of parties who are protected by long-time prescription, nor can the wicked act of another disturb the security acquired by length of possession.

Given December 31, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[8] The same Augusti and Caesars to Celsus. pr. If the man against whom you complain lays claim to the former slaves of your mother as if he were her son, but only on the grounds of adoption, her desire to effect an intended but illegal[101] adoption does not of itself suffice for him to claim ownership of them. 1. Therefore you are not prohibited from suing for the slaves by fear of any prescription of time, provided that the man against whom you complain gained possession of them through this starting point alone.

<Without subscription (294).>

[9] The same Augusti and Caesars to Demosthenes. Against a person present (in the province, as a plaintiff), a buyer in good faith rightly demands to win his suit by using a defense of prescription of ten years. After the claimant has satisfied the premise of his claim, it is sufficient for there to be a declaration

[101] In general women were prohibited from adopting, the exception being if they had lost their children, Inst. 1.11.10; C. 8.47.5; Gaius 1.104. Because the woman in question had a son, her intent to adopt another was barred.

posteaquam suam impleverit intentionem petitor, adhibita probatione iustae possessionis defensus[v] absolvi recte postulat.

[10] Idem AA. et CC. Regino. Nec bona fide possessionem adeptis longi temporis praescriptio post moram litis contestatae completa proficit, cum post motam controversiam in praeteritum aestimetur.

PP. v id. Dec. CC. conss.

[11] Imp. Iustinianus A. Menae pp. Super longi temporis praescriptione, quae ex decem vel viginti annis introducitur, perspicuo iure sancimus, ut, sive ex donatione sive ex alia lucrativa causa bona fide quis per decem vel viginti annos rem detinuisse probetur, adiecto scilicet etiam tempore prioris possessoris, memorata longi temporis exceptio sine dubio ei competat nec occasione lucrativae causae repellatur.

D. k. Iun. dn. Iustiniano PP. A. II cons.

[12] Idem A. Iohanni pp. pr. Cum in longi temporis praescriptione tres emergebant veteribus ambiguitates, prima propter res, ubi positae sunt, secunda propter personas, sive utriusque sive alterutrius praesentiam exigimus, et tertiae, si in eadem provincia vel si in eadem civitate debent esse personae tam petentis quam possidentis et res, pro quibus certatur: omnes praesentis legis amplectimur definitione, ut nihil citra eam relinquatur.

1. Sancimus itaque debere in huiusmodi specie utriusque personae tam petentis quam possidentis spectari domicilium, ut tam is qui dominii vel hypothecae quaestionem inducit quam is qui res possidet domicilium in uno habeant loco, id est in una provincia. hoc etenim nobis magis eligendum videtur, ut non civitate concludatur domicilium, sed magis provincia, et si uterque domicilium in eadem habet provincia, causam inter praesentes esse videri et decennio agentem excludi. 2. De rebus autem, de quibus dubitatio est, nulla erit differentia, sive in

[v] <defensus> posteaquam … [defensus]

(contestatio) of the beginning of the prescriptive period along with proof of his just possession.[102]

<Without subscription (294).>

[10] The same Augusti and Caesars to Reginus. Long-time prescription does not benefit those that acquire possession in good faith if it was completed after a delay in the joinder of issues, since it is reckoned backward from the commencement of a suit.[103]

Posted December 9, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[11] Emperor JUSTINIAN Augustus to Menas, Praetorian Prefect. As to long-time prescription which applies after ten or twenty years, We ordain clearly by this enactment that, if it is proven that someone has held property in good faith for ten or twenty years pursuant to a donation or any kind of gift, and moreover the time of possession of any prior occupant is also joined to his own, the above-mentioned defense of prescription should suffice for him, nor shall he be defeated because the title is based on a gift.

Given June 1, in the consulship of Our Lord Justinian, Ever Augustus, for the second time (528).

[12] The same Augustus to John, Praetorian Prefect. pr. Three doubts arose among the ancients in connection with long-time prescription: the first as to the property and its location, the second as to the persons and whether the presence of one or both is required, the third whether the claimant and the possessor should personally be in the same province or in the same city territory as the property in dispute. We shall consider all of these questions in the present law, so that nothing will be left outside of its scope.

1. Therefore, We ordain that in a matter of this kind the domicile of both parties, both of the claimant and of the possessor, must be considered in order to establish whether the man who claims ownership or hypothecation as well as the man who is in possession of the property have their domicile in one place, that is to say, in the same province. And indeed it appears to Us preferable that the domicile to be considered should be circumscribed not by a city territory but by a province, and if both have their domicile in the same province, the case shall be considered as between persons who are present, and the claimant will be defeated by a prescription of ten years. 2. But in the case of properties concerning which there is some doubt, there shall be no eadem provincia sint sive in vicina vel trans mare positae et longo spatio separatae.

[102] Blume: "This law appears to contemplate that the defense of prescription should be set up in the beginning of the suit. But, as appears from C. 8.35.9, that does not appear to have been absolutely necessary, since it was a defense in bar."

[103] See C. 3.32.26.

3. Sin autem non in eadem provincia uterque domicilium habeat, sed alter in alia, alius in altera, tunc ut inter absentes causam disceptari et locum esse viginti annorum exceptioni. nihil enim prohibet, sive in eadem provincia res constitutae sint sive in alia, super his controversiam in iudicio provinciali moveri et multo magis in hac florentissima civitate. 3a. Quid enim prodest in ipsa provincia esse possessionem an in alia, cum ius vindicationis incorporale est et, ubicumque res positae sunt, et dominium earum et vinculum ad dominum vel creditorem possit reverti? ideo enim nostri maiores subtilissimo animo et divino quodam motu ad actiones et earum iura pervenerunt, ut incorporales constitutae possint ubicumque ius suum et effectum corporalem extendere.

3b. Sit igitur secundum hanc definitionem causa perfectissime composita et nemo posthac dubitet, neque inter praesentes neque inter absentes quid statuendum sit, ut bono initio et possessione tenentis et utriusque partis domicilio requisito sit expedita quaestio pro rebus ubicumque positis, nulla scientia vel ignorantia expectanda, ne altera dubitationis inextricabilis oriatur occasio. 4. Eodem observando et si res non soli sint, sed incorporales, quae in iure consistunt, veluti usus fructus et ceterae servitutes.

D. v k. Dec. Constantinopoli post consulatum Lampadii et Orestis vv. cc.

XXXIIII In Quibus Causis Cessat Longi Temporis Praescriptio

[1] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. Marcellinae. Si is, cui colendum fundum dedisti, post instrumenta, quibus dominium ad te pertinere probari posset, per novercam tuam subtraxit, hoc solo praescriptione temporis defendi non potest.

[2] Idem AA. et CC. Dionysio. In servorum proprietatis negotio cum usucapio locum habeat, ad quaestionem longi temporis praescriptionis superfluo pervenitur.

differentiation whether they are in the same province, or in a neighboring one, or in places across the sea and separated by long distance.

3. If, however, both parties do not have their domicile in the same province, but one is in one, the other in another, the case shall be decided as one between absent persons, and the prescriptive period of twenty years applies. But there is nothing to prevent the parties from bringing an action as to the property in the provincial courts, let alone in this flourishing city, whether such property is located in the same province or not. 3a. For of what advantage would it be for the property to be in one province rather than in another when the right to sue for its ownership is incorporeal and its ownership or a lien on it may be returned to the owner or creditor wherever it may be located? In fact, for this reason Our forebears created actions and laws governing them with a logical and almost divinely inspired mind, so that these incorporeal rights might extend their power everywhere with corporeal effect.

3b. Let the matter, therefore, be definitely settled according to this provision, and let no one hereafter doubt as to how this question of presence or absence is to be decided, so that when the points of a good beginning of title, of the possession of the holder, and of the domicile of both parties have been examined, the suit may be settled as to property wherever situated, without further inquiry into knowledge or ignorance (of adverse possession), lest further occasion for inextricable doubt arise. 4. The same rules shall apply even if the property is not landed but is incorporeal, consisting of a right, such as usufructs and the other servitudes.

Given November 27, at Constantinople, in the post-consulate of the viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestes (531).

Thirty-Fourth Title In What Cases Long Time Prescription Does Not Apply

[1] Emperors Diocletian and Maximian Augusti to Marcellina. If the man to whom you gave a farm for cultivation later stole, with the help of your stepmother, the documents that could prove ownership vested in you, through that alone he cannot be protected by the prescription of time.

[2][104] The same Augusti and the Caesars to Dionysius. When usucapion is applied in a matter involving the ownership of slaves, inquiry into long-time prescription is superfluous.

[104] See C. 7.14.6, dated to April 25, 293.

[3] Idem AA. et CC. Apollinario. Unus individuum commune pro solido possidens intervallo temporis, quominus socius portionem vindicare vel eum communi dividundo iudicio provocare possit, non defenditur, cum neque familiae erciscundae iudicium neque communi dividundo actio excluditur longi temporis praescriptione.

III k. April. Sirmi CC. conss.

[4] Idem AA. et CC. Liviae. Hereditatem quidem petentibus longi temporis praescriptio nocere non potest. verum his, qui nec pro herede nec pro possessore, sed pro emptore vel donato seu alio titulo res quae hereditariae sunt vel fuerunt possident, cum ab his successio vindicari non possit, nihil haec iuris definitio noceat.

III id. Sept.

[5] Idem AA. et CC. Zosimo. Si puerum non pro derelicto habitum, sed ab hostibus vulneratum sumptibus tuis, sicut adseveras, liberum existimans curasti, longi temporis praescriptione, quominus dominus eius offerens erogata recte vindicet, defendi non potes.

XXXV Quibus Non Obiciatur Longi Temporis Praescriptio

[1] Imp. Alexander A. Venuleio veterano. Tempus expeditionis adversus petitiones, si quae competisse iuste probari possunt, praescriptionem non parit.

PP. VI non. Iul. Iuliano et Crispino conss.

[2] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. Aurelio archiatro. pr. Cum per absentiam tuam eos, de quibus quereris, in res iuris tui inruisse adseveres teque ob medendi curam comitatu nostro discedere non posse palam sit, praefectus praetorio nostro accitis his quos causa contingit inter vos cognoscet. 1. Non necessario autem petis ex longi temporis diuturnitate praescriptionem tibi non opponi, quando iustae absentiae ratio et necessitatis publicae obsequium ab huiusmodi praeiudicio te defendat.

PP. XII k. Mart. Nicomediae Maximo II et Aquilino conss.

[3] The same Augusti and Caesars to Apollinarius. One who is in exclusive possession of property owned in common is not protected by lapse of time so as to prevent his co-owner from claiming his portion or suing him in an action of partition (communi dividundo iudicium), since neither an action to divide an inheritance (familiae erciscundae iudicium) nor the action to partition is barred by long-time prescription.

Given May 29, at Sirmium, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[4] The same Augusti and Caesars to Livia. Long-time prescription cannot injure those claiming an inheritance. But this provision of the law should not injure those who claim not as heir or as possessor, but are in possession of property, which belongs or belonged to an inheritance, as its purchaser, donee, or pursuant to another title, since an inheritance cannot be reclaimed from these.

September 11.

[5] The same Augusti and Caesars to Zosimus. If, as you assert, you cured at your expense a slave-boy who had not been abandoned but was wounded by the enemy, while you thought he was free, you cannot set up the defense of long-time prescription against his owner who reclaims him and offers you the amount paid out.

Thirty-Fifth Title Those Against Whom Long-Time Prescription Cannot Be Used as a Defense

[1] Emperor Alexander Augustus to Venuleius, a veteran. The time during which a soldier is engaged in an expedition does not give rise to prescription against a claim of his that can be shown to be just.

Posted July 2, in the consulship of Julian and Crispus (224).

[2] Emperors Diocletian and Maximian Augusti to Aurelius, Chief Physician. pr. Since you assert that the men against whom you complain forcibly invaded property belonging to you during your absence, and since it is plain that you could not depart from Our (imperial) court on account of your duties as physician, Our Praetorian Prefect will summon the men in question and will try the dispute between you. 1. But you unnecessarily ask that the plea of long time prescription not be permitted to be set up against you, for justifiable absence and the performance of public duty protects you against any prejudice of this sort.

Posted February 18, at Nicomedia, in the consulship of Maximus, for the second time, and Aquilinus (286).

[3] Idem AA. Numidio correctori Italiae. Non est incognitum id temporis, quod in minore aetate transmissum est, in longi temporis praescriptione non computari. ea enim tunc currere incipit, quando ad maiorem aetatem dominus rei pervenerit.
PP. III id. Sept. ipsis IIII et III AA. conss.

[4] Idem AA. et CC. Crispino. Si possessio inconcussa sine controversia perseveraverit, firmitatem suam teneat obiecta praescriptio: quam contra absentes vel rei publicae causa vel maxime fortuito casu nequaquam valere decernimus.
PP. IIII k. Mart. Hannibaliano et Asclepiodoto conss.

[5] Idem AA. et CC. Ianuario. Neque mutui neque commodati aut depositi seu legati vel fideicommissi vel tutelae seu alii cuilibet personali actioni longi temporis praescriptionem obici posse certi iuris est.
S. k. Febr. AA. conss.

[6] Idem AA. et CC. Doleo. Ab hostibus captus ac postliminio reversus actione in rem directa vel qualibet alia dominium vindicando temporis adversarii possessionem frustra times, cum adversus eos, qui restitutionis auxilio quacumque ratione iuvantur, huiusmodi factum non opituletur.
VI id. Nov. Heracleae CC. conss.

[7] Idem AA. et CC. Cassandro. Praescriptione bona fide possidentes adversus praesentem annorum decem, absentem autem viginti muniuntur. quod tempus, si ex alicuius persona de petitorum parte restitutionis praetendatur auxilium, deducto eo, quo, si quid fuerit gestum, succurri solet, residuum computari rationis est.

[8] Imp. Iustinianus A. Menae pp. Sancimus his solis militibus, qui expeditionibus occupati sunt, ea tantummodo tempora, quae in eadem expeditione percurrunt, in exceptionibus declinandis opitulari: illis temporibus, per quae citra expeditionum necessitatem in aliis locis vel

[3] The same Augusti to Numidius, Corrector of Italy. It is not unknown that the time passed while one is a minor does not count toward long-time prescription. For the latter begins to run when the owner of the property comes of age.

Posted September 11, in the consulship of the same Augusti, for the fourth and third time (290).

[4] The same Augusti and the Caesars to Crispinus. If undisturbed possession has continued without controversy, a plea of prescription is valid. But We decree that it has no force against persons absent on public business or especially by reason of an act of chance (fortuitus casus).

Posted February 26, in the consulship of Hannibalianus and Asclepiodotus (292).

[5] The same Augusti and Caesars to Januarius. The law is certain that long-time prescription cannot be set up in an action on a loan (mutuum), loan for use (commodatum), deposit, legacy, trust, guardianship, or any other personal action (actio personalis).

Written February 1, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[6] The same Augusti and the Caesars to Doleus. Having been captured by the enemy and returned with the resumption of civil rights (postliminium), it is unnecessary for you to fear the long-time possession of your opponent when you bring a direct action in rem or some other action to recover ownership. For this fact offers no support against those who for some reason are benefited by the aid of restoration of rights (restitutionis auxilio).

Given November 8, at Heraclea, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[7] The same Augusti and the Caesars to Cassander. Good faith possessors are protected against those present in the province by a prescription of ten years and against those absent from the province by prescription of twenty years. If the claimant invokes the aid of restitution, the rule is that you deduct the time for which such aid is usually extended because of business done (for the public), then the remainder is counted (to make up the prescriptive period).

[8][105] Emperor JUSTINIAN to Menas, Praetorian Prefect. We ordain that only soldiers engaged in an expedition may be aided by the time occupied in the expedition, and by that time alone, to defeat a defense (of prescription). The time during which they are not on expedition and while they live in other in suis aedibus degunt, minime eos ad vindicandum hoc privilegium adiuvantibus.

[105] = C. 2.50.8 (April 8); combine with C. 6.21.17.

D. k. April. Constantinopoli Decio vc. cons.

XXXVI Adversus Creditorem

[1] Imp. Gordianus A. Veneriae. Diuturnum silentium longi temporis praescriptione corroboratum creditoribus pignus persequentibus inefficacem actionem constituit, praeterquam si debitores vel qui in iura eorum successerunt obligatae rei possessioni incumbant. ubi autem creditori a possessore longi temporis praescriptio obicitur, personalis actio adversus debitorem salva ei competit.

[2] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. et CC. Marcellae. Si debitori heres non extitisti, sed iusta viginti annorum possessione collata in te donatio roborata est, neque personali actione, quia debitori non successisti, conveniri te iuris ratio permittit nec data pignori praedia post intervallum longi temporis tibi auferenda sunt, quando etiam praesentibus creditoribus decem annorum praescriptionem opponi posse tam rescriptis nostris quam priorum principum statutis probatum sit.

XXXVII De Quadriennii Praescriptione

[1] Imp. Constantinus A. ad Orfitum. Notum est a fisco quaestionem post quadriennium continuum super bonis vacantibus inchoandam non esse. additum etiam est et eos, qui nostra largitate nituntur, nulla inquietudine lacessendos nec his a fisco nostro controversiam commovendam, qui quoquo modo aut titulo easdem res possederint.

[2] Imp. Zeno A. Aeneae comiti rerum privatarum. pr. Omnes, qui quascumque res mobiles vel immobiles seu se moventes vel in actionibus aut quocumque iure constitutas a sacratissimo aerario comparaverint, places or in their own houses, without being constrained by an expedition, will not avail them in claiming that privilege.

Given April 1, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Decius (529).

Thirty-Sixth Title (Prescription) Against a Creditor

[1] Emperor Gordian Augustus to Veneria. Extended silence, fortified by long-time prescription, renders an action by creditors suing for a pledge inefficacious, except when possession of the pledged property inheres in the debtors themselves or their heirs. But when the defense of long-time prescription is set up against the creditor by (an outside) possessor, a personal action against the debtor (on the debt) remains available.

[2] Emperors Diocletian and Maximian Augusti and the Caesars to Marcella. If you were not the debtor's heir, but a gift (of the property) to you is fortified by lawful possession of twenty years, neither does the rule of law permit suit against you in a personal action, since you did not succeed to the debtor as heir, nor are properties that were offered as a pledge to be taken from you after the lapse of this long time period, for it has been demonstrated both in Our rescripts and the statutes of former emperors that prescription of just ten years may be set up against creditors who are present in the province.[106]

Thirty-Seventh Title Prescription of Four Years

[1] Emperor Constantine Augustus to Orfitus. It is known that no inquest can be initiated by Our Treasury concerning ownerless property (bona vacantia) after a continuous period of (possession of) four years.[107] It may also be added that those who base their case on a gift from Us must not be disturbed, nor must a dispute be raised by Our Treasury against those who hold such property in any manner or by any title.

[2] Emperor Zeno Augustus to Aeneas, Count of the Privy Purse. pr. All who acquired from the imperial treasury any movable, immovable, or self-moving

[106] Blume: "The statement in the two preceding laws that a hypothecary action, that is to say, an action by a pledgee or mortgagee of property to recover the pledged or mortgaged property in the hands of a third person may be barred in ten or twenty years, is confirmed by other laws in the Code, as C. 7.39.8 pr; C. 4.10.7; C. 8.13.7; C. 8.40.25; C. 8.44.19."

[107] Inst. 2.6.14 claims that Marcus set the period of prescription at five years and that Zeno (in the constitution that follows) set it at four. It is likely, then, that this constitution originally read "five" years, but was altered to "four" by the Justinianic editors. Seeck dates the constitution to March 28, 355.

eos quin etiam, quibus quaecumque res mobiles seu immobiles seu se moventes aut in actionibus vel quocumque iure constitutae munificentiae principalis nomine datae fuerint, omnibus pariter privilegiis, quae ex divinis sanctionibus inclitae recordationis Leonis et nostrae pietatis super certis patrimoniis antea emptores consecuti sunt, perpotiri et ita cunctos huiusmodi beneficiis seu privilegiis perfrui, tamquam si super singulis substantiis seu patrimoniis etiam nunc vel postea data fuisset huiusmodi dispositio: nec posse contra emptores praedictarum rerum factos iam vel futuros, vel contra eos, quibus super huiusmodi rebus largitas nostra delata est vel fuerit, aliquas actiones in rem dominii vel hypothecae gratia vel in personam, civiles seu praetorias, vel ex legibus aut sacratissimis constitutionibus descendentes vel quaslibet alias, licet nominatim praesenti sanctione non sint comprehensae, moveri: data volentibus licentia intra quadriennium contra sacratissimum aerarium, si quas sibi competere actiones existimant, exercere, ita tamen, ut post elapsum quadriennium nec sacratissimum fiscum licere sibimet quibuslibet actionibus pulsare cognoscant.

1. Ad haec fiscalium rerum emptoribus cum ratione iustitiae consulentes iubemus, quotiens competens scrinium gestis intervenientibus distractarum rerum pretia sese deposuerit suscepisse, minime post huiusmodi solutae pecuniae depositionem emptores quasi non numeratis pecuniis molestari vel necessitatem isdem emptoribus imponi, licet non sollemnem consecuti fuerint securitatem, soluta fuisse pretia probare. sed cum sit in arbitrio pretia suscipientis minime deponere sese quod non accepit suscepisse, ita convenit nec emptores plenissimam ex huiusmodi depositione super pretii solutione securitatem consecutos ullum (sicut dictum est) ulterius probatione gravamen penitus formidare.

[3] Imp. Iustinianus A. Floro comiti rerum privatarum et curatori dominicae domus et Petro viro illustri curatori divinae domus serenissimae Augustae et Macedonio viro illustri curatori et ipsi dominicae domus. pr. Bene a Zenone divae memoriae fiscalibus alienationibus prospectum est, ne homines, qui ex nostro aerario donationis vel emptionis vel cuiuslibet alienationis titulo quicquam accipiunt, si quid circa contractum contrarium emerserit vel evictionis vel alterius inquietudinis gratia ad dominium vel hypothecam respiciens, aliquid sustineant property, or property constituted in legal actions or by whatever right, as well as those who were gifted in the name of Our imperial munificence with whatever movable, immovable, or self moving property or property constituted in legal actions or by whatever right, shall hold it with all attendant privileges which buyers gained previously over certain patrimonies by the imperial sanctions of Leo of famous memory and of Our Own Piety. And all shall enjoy the benefits and privileges of that kind, the same as if such provision had been made now or in future as to individual properties or patrimonies. And no action in rem, claiming ownership or hypothecation, and no action in personam, civil or Praetorian, and no action stemming from any law or imperial constitution, and no other action, even if it might not be mentioned explicitly in this ordinance, shall be brought against any purchasers, past or future, of the aforesaid property, or against those who have benefited or shall benefit from Our largess in respect to such properties. To those who wish, We grant permission to sue the imperial treasury within four years, if they think that they have any right of action, but they should know that they will not be permitted to sue the imperial treasury after the lapse of four years in any form of action.

1. In addition, in looking after the interests of purchasers of Treasury property by the rule of justice, We order that whenever the relevant bureau records in its paid accounts that it has received the price of the properties sold, after this manner of recording payment, the buyers are in no way to be bothered as if the money had not been paid or to be imposed with the necessity of proving that the price was paid, even if they did not obtain the customary receipt. For as it is hardly good judgment for the one who receives the price to record that he has received what he did not, so too it is proper that the buyers should fear no further burden of proof, as We said, when they obtained the fullest guarantee of having paid the price from the record itself.[108]

[3] Emperor JUSTINIAN Augustus to Florus, Count of the Privy Purse and Curator of the Imperial Patrimony, and to the vir illustris Petrus, Curator of the Patrimony of the Most Serene Augusta, and to the vir illustris Macedonius, also Curator of the Imperial Patrimony. pr. Alienations by the Treasury (fiscales alienationes) were well protected by Zeno of sacred memory, so that men who received any property from Our Treasury by gift, purchase, or other conveyance should not sustain any loss if any adverse claims should be made against such contracts, looking either toward the eviction of such men or otherwise disturbing them under a claim of ownership or hypothecation: no actions should be brought against the parties who purchased, detrimentum: sed adversus emptores quidem vel donationem accipientes vel per alios titulos alienationis quicquam detinentes minime quaecumque actiones moveantur, sed tantummodo contra aerarium usque ad quadriennium tantum, quo translapso neque adversus fiscum remaneat aliqua actio.

[108] Lounghis et al. date to between 474 and 491.

1. Sed scimus hoc quidem in fiscalibus alienationibus naviter observari, sed non simili modo rem fuisse observatam circa eas res, quae a sacratissimis imperatoribus non a fiscalibus rebus, sed ex privata eorum substantia procedunt. 1a. Quod satis inrationabile est. quae enim differentia introducitur, cum omnia principis esse intellegantur, sive a sua substantia sive ex fiscali fuerit aliquid alienatum? eodemque modo et si a serenissima Augusta aliquid alienetur, quare non eadem utatur praerogativa? sed curatores nostri, per quos solemus substantiam nostram gubernare, necesse habeant in venditionibus rerum et evictionem et alia quae sunt privatae utilitatis pacta emptionalibus instrumentis addere vel quasdam tales obligationes in alienationum instrumentis agnoscere vel in permutationibus vel in transactionibus, si et hoc fuerit celebratum? 1b. Hoc enim est eorum, qui nec maiestatem imperialem agnoscunt et quantum inter privatam fortunam et regale culmen medium est, et nostros curatores, per quos res divinarum domuum aguntur, aliquibus iniuriis vel damnis adficere conantur.

1c. Quae omnia resecantes per hanc generalem et in perpetuum valituram legem sancimus omnes alienationes de aula procedentes, sive a nostra clementia sive a serenissima Augusta coniuge nostra sive ab his, qui postea digni fuerint nomine imperiali, sive iam alienatum quid est sive postea fuerit, sine omni inquietudine permanere, sive res eis per nosmet ipsos sive procuratores, ex epistalmate tamen nostro, fuerint adsignatae. 1d. Et nemo audeat eos, qui res accipiunt per quemcumque titulum alienationis sive mobiles sive immobiles seu se moventes vel iura incorporalia vel panes civiles, iudiciis adficere vel sperare aliquam contra eos esse sibi viam apertam, sed omnis aditus excludatur, omnis motus et spes huiusmodi petulantiae.

2. Sed adversus domos nostras habeant, intra quadriennium tamen, secundum imitationem fisci, quas existimant posse sibi competere actiones in rem vel hypothecariam, ut ex nostra iussione causa moveatur et competentem mereatur effectum. quod si quadriennium fuerit emensum, nec adversus nostram domum habeat quis quamcumque actionem.

received as a gift, or held such property under any other title of alienation, but (such actions might be brought) only against the Treasury, and only during a period of four years, beyond which no action remains even against the Treasury.

1. We know that this is zealously observed in alienations by the Treasury, but it has not been observed in like fashion in connection with property that originates with the most Sacred Emperors coming from their own private patrimony rather than Treasury property. 1a. That is surely irrational. For since all of it is understood to belong to the Emperor, what is the difference whether the property alienated is part of his private patrimony or belongs to the Treasury? Similarly, if something is alienated by the Most Serene Augusta, why should it not enjoy the same prerogative? And why should it be necessary for Our curators, through whom We are accustomed to manage Our property, in cases of property sales to add warranties against eviction and other agreements useful in connection with private contracts, or to acknowledge such obligations in documents of alienations, exchange or compromise, should such transactions occur? 1b. This is the mark of those who do not acknowledge the Imperial Majesty or the contrast between private fortune and Imperial Greatness, and who attempt to inflict injury and damage upon Our curators by whom the property of the imperial patrimony is managed.

1c. Correcting all these things, We ordain by this general and perpetually valid law, that all alienations coming from the imperial court – either from Our Clemency, or from the Most Serene Augusta, Our Consort, or from those who hereafter shall be worthy of the imperial name – shall remain valid and free of any disturbance regardless of whether the alienation has already been made or shall be made in future and of whether it was made by ourselves or by Our procurators, provided it is pursuant to an imperial commission. 1d. And no one shall dare to sue those who receive movable, immovable, or self-moving property, or any incorporeal rights, or civil bread rights (panes civiles) pursuant to any title of alienation, or to hope that any method to defeat them is open to them. Rather, may every approach be barred, as also every motion and expectation of such petulance.

2. But against Our Patrimony (domos nostras) let them have actions in rem or hypothecary actions, whichever they think pertinent to their cases, but only for up to four years, in keeping with the rules of the Treasury, in order that the case may be initiated according to Our command and may obtain an appropriate outcome. But if four years are permitted to pass, no one shall have any right of action against Our Patrimony.

3. Quia igitur multa scimus tam nosmet ipsos quam serenissimam Augustam coniugem nostram variis personis iam donasse et vendidisse et per alios titulos adsignasse, et maxime sacrosanctis ecclesiis et xenonibus et ptochotrophiis et episcopis et monachis et aliis innumerabilibus personis, et eandem liberalitatem ex nostra substantia sive serenissimae coniugis nostrae esse confectam, sancimus etiam eos firmo iure habere quod consecuti sunt, ita ut contra illos quidem nulla moveatur actio, intra quadriennium autem ex praesenti die numerandum pateat omnibus aditus contra nostras divinas domos suas actiones super isdem rebus movere, scituris, quod praefato quadriennio finito neque adversus nostras domos aliquis eis reservetur regressus. 4. Cum enim multa privilegia Augusta fortuna meruit et in donationibus sine insinuatione gestorum omnem firmitatem habentibus et super rebus, quas pro tempore serenissimus princeps divinae Augustae constante matrimonio donaverit vel ipse a serenissima Augusta per donationis titulum consequatur, ut maneat ilico donatio plena, nullo alio adfirmationis tempore expectando, ita et hoc videatur imperiale esse privilegium. qui enim suis consiliis suisque laboribus pro toto orbe terrarum die noctuque laborant, quare non habeant dignam sua praerogativam fortuna?

5. Quae igitur pro Augusto honore et cautela res accipientium nostra statuit aeternitas, haec tam sublimitas tua quam ceteri omnes iudices nostri observare festinent, ex eo tempore valitura, ex quo nutu divino imperiales suscepimus infulas.

D. v k. Dec. Constantinopoli post consulatum Lampadii et Orestis vv. cc.

XXXVIII Ne Rei Dominicae vel Templorum Vindicatio Temporis Exceptione Submoveatur

[1] Impp. Valentinianus et Valens AA. ad Probum pp. Galliarum. Saepenumero praeceptum est, ut servi atque liberti, colonique praeterea rei nostrae nec non etiam eorum suboles ac nepotes, quicumque de nostris possessionibus recessissent ac se ad diversa militiae genera contulissent, cingulo, in quo obrepserant fraudulenter, exuti, si ad aliquas fortasse transcenderint dignitates, omni temporis definitione submota nostro patrimonio redderentur.

D. xi k. Dec. Valentiniano et Valenta AA. conss.

3. And because We know that We ourselves and the Most Serene Augusta, Our Consort, have already given, sold or transferred by some other title much property, especially to the holy churches, guest-houses (xenones), almshouses (ptochotrophia), bishops, monks and innumerable other persons, and that such bounty came from Our Own Patrimony or that of Our Serene Consort, We ordain that such parties shall firmly hold what they obtained in such a way that no action may be brought against them. But within a four-year period to be reckoned from the present day, all shall have the opportunity to bring their actions against Our Imperial Patrimony, but should know that, once this four-year period has ended, no one has the right to recourse (even) against Our Patrimony. 4. For as the Imperial Fortune enjoys many privileges, both in regard to gifts which are valid without record of the transaction and in regard to property which the then Serene Emperor (princeps) gave during marriage to the deified Augusta, or which he himself received as a gift from the Most Serene Augusta, such gift being immediately valid without waiting to receive confirmation through any further lapse of time,[109] this too is part of the imperial privilege. For why should they who by their counsel and work labor day and night for the people of the whole earth not have a prerogative worthy of their fortune?

5. Your Sublimity, therefore, and all other judges shall hasten to observe what Our Eternity has decided for the Imperial Dignity and for the protection of the recipients of property, which shall be valid from the time that We, with God's approval, took the imperial crown.

Given November 27, at Constantinople, in the post-consulate of the viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestes (531).

Thirty-Eighth Title Suits of Ownership for Imperial or Temple Property May Not be Barred through a Defense of Prescription[110]

[1] Emperors VALENTINIAN and VALENS, Augusti, to Probus, Praetorian Prefect of the Gauls. It has been often ordered that slaves and freedmen and bound tenants (coloni) belonging to imperial property, and their offspring and grandchildren, who have left Our possessions and have entered different kinds of public service shall be deprived of the rank (cingulum) into which they fraudulently crept, should they happen to have obtained any offices, and be returned to Our property, with any claims to prescription of time debarred.

Given November 21, in the consulship of Valentinian and Valens Augusti (365).[111]

[109] See C. 5.16.26 (529 CE).

[110] Blume: "The property of the temples referred to in the title was probably the property formerly belonging to the heathen temples, and confiscated for the benefit of the crown domain. See Gothofredus ad C.Th. 10.1.15."

[111] Seeck dates to October 13, 367.

[2] Imppp. Valentinianus Theodosius et Arcadius AAA. Dextro comiti rerum pivatarum. Universas terras, quae a colonis dominicis iuris rei publicae vel iuris templorum in qualibet provincia venditae vel ullo alio pacto alienatae sunt, ab his, qui perperam atque contra leges eas detinent, nulla longi temporis praescriptione officiente iubemus restitui, ita ut nec pretium quidem iniquis comparatoribus reposcere liceat.

D. v non. Iul. Constantinopoli Valentiniano A. III et Eutropio conss.

[3] Impp. Arcadius et Honorius AA. ad Paulum comitem domorum. pr. Si qua usquam loca ad sacrum dominium pertinentia cuiuslibet temeritas occupavit, secundum veteris census fidem in sua iura retrahentur. 1. Rescripta igitur obreptionibus impetrata cum praescriptione longi temporis et novi census praeiudicio submovebit auctoritas tua, atque ita omnia suo corpori quae sunt avulsa restituet. neque enim incubatio diuturna aut novella professio proprietatis nostrae privilegium abolere poterit.

D. v k. April. Constantinopoli Arcadio IIII et Honorio III AA. conss.

XXXVIIII De Praescriptione XXX vel XL Annorum

[1] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. Arrianae. pr. Cum adseveras te absente eos, qui oculos praediis tuis imposuerant, operam dedisse, ut annonariae collationis praetextu vili pretio ab officio praesidali praedia tua distraherentur, si legitimi temporis spatium ex venditionis die fluxit, qui provinciam regit inter vos cognoscet et, quod publico iure praescriptum est, statuet. 1. Si autem nondum ex die publicae venditionis legitimum tempus transmissum sit, iudex examinatis adlegationibus tuis quod rei qualitas dictaverit sequetur, non ignarus, si iniustam esse emptionem perspexerit, pretium, quod pro vitioso contractu datum est, secundum principalium statutorum tenorem mala fide emptoribus restitui non oportere.

[2] Impp. Valentinianus et Valens AA. ad Volusianum pu. pr. Male agitur cum dominis praediorum, si tanta precario possidentibus praerogativa

[2] Emperors VALENTINIAN, THEODOSIUS, and ARCADIUS Augusti to Dexter, Count of the Privy Purse. We order that all municipal or temple lands in any province which have been sold or in any manner alienated by bound tenants (coloni) of the Emperor shall be restored by those who detain them wrongfully and contrary to law, without bar of long-time prescription, and fraudulent purchasers shall not even have the right to demand back the price.

Given July 3, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Valentinian Augustus, for the third time, and Eutropius (387).

[3][112] Emperors ARCADIUS and HONORIUS Augusti to Paulus, Count of the Private Estate. pr. If anyone has rashly occupied any places belonging to the Sacred Imperial Property (sacrum dominium), they will be drawn back to their proper status in accord with reliance on the former census. 1. Your Authority, therefore, will declare void any rescripts fraudulently obtained, disregard long time prescription and any new inscription on the census roll, and restore all parts which have been severed to the body to which they belong. For neither squatting over the long term nor a new census declaration (professio) could destroy the privilege of Our ownership.

Given March 28, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Arcadius, for the fourth time, and Honorius, for the third time, Augusti (396).

Thirty-Ninth Title Prescription of Thirty or Forty Years[113]

[1] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti to Arriana. pr. Since you allege that those who had their eye on your land had brought it to pass in your absence that your lands were sold (to them) for a very small price by the governor's office under the pretext of the grain tax (due from you), if the legal time since the day of the sale has lapsed, the provincial governor will examine the matter between you and will decide what is prescribed in the public law. 1. If, however, the legal time since the day of the sale has not yet lapsed, the judge will examine your allegations and will do what the situation demands, knowing that, if he finds that the purchase was illegal, the price paid under a void contract should not be returned to bad faith purchasers, in keeping with the tenor of imperial statutes.

[2] Emperors VALENTINIAN and VALENS, Augusti, to Volusianus, City Prefect. pr. It would be bad for owners of lands if the privileges of those who hold land [112] = C. 11.67.2 (where Theodosius is added as originator); C.Th. 10.1.15.

[113] This title deals with two long-term bars on bringing legal actions; both are of late imperial origin.

defertur, ut eos post quadraginta annorum spatia qualibet ratione decursa inquietare non liceat, cum lex Constantiniana iubeat ab his possessionis initium non requiri, qui sibi potius quam alteri possederunt, eos autem possessores non convenit appellari, qui ita tenent, ut ob hoc ipsum solitam debeant praestare mercedem. 1. Nemo igitur, qui ad possessionem conductor accedit, diu alienas res tenendo ius sibi proprietatis usurpet, ne cogantur domini aut amittere quod locaverunt aut conductores utiles sibi fortassis excludere aut annis omnibus super dominio suo publice protestari.

D. VIIII k. Aug. Valentiniano et Valente AA. conss.

[3] Impp. Honorius et Theodosius AA. Asclepiodoto pp. pr. Sicut in rem speciales, ita de universitate ac personales actiones ultra triginta annorum spatium minime protendantur. sed si qua res vel ius aliquod postuletur vel persona qualicumque actione vel persecutione pulsetur, nihilo minus erit agenti triginta annorum praescriptio metuenda: eodem etiam in eius valente persona, qui pignus vel hypothecam non a suo debitore, sed ab alio per longum tempus possidente nititur vindicare. 1. Quae ergo ante non motae sunt actiones, triginta annorum iugi silentio, ex quo competere iure coeperunt, vivendi ulterius non habeant facultatem.

nec sufficiat precibus oblatis speciale quoddam, licet per adnotationem, promeruisse responsum, vel etiam iudiciis adlegasse, nisi adlegato sacro rescripto aut in iudicio postulatione deposita fuerit subsecuta per exsecutorem conventio. 1a. Non sexus fragilitate, non absentia, non militia contra hanc legem defendenda, sed pupillari aetate dumtaxat, quamvis sub tutoris defensione consistit, huic eximenda sanctioni. nam cum ad eos annos pervenerit, qui ad sollicitudinem pertinent curatoris, necessario eis similiter ut aliis annorum triginta intervalla servanda sunt.

2. Hae autem actiones annis triginta continuis extinguantur, quae perpetuae videbantur, non illae, quae antiquitus temporibus limitantur. 3. Post hanc vero temporis definitionem nulli movendi ulterius facultatem patere censemus, etiamsi se legis ignorantia excusare temptaverit.

D. XVIII k. Dec. Constantinopoli Victore cons.

on sufferance (precario possidentes) were extended to the point that they could not be disturbed (in their possession) after forty years had lapsed, regardless of the terms (of the grant). The Constantinian law[114] orders that the beginning of possession shall not be questioned in the case of those who are in possession for themselves and not for another, but it is not proper to call those people possessors who hold anything upon the condition that they pay the customary rent. 1. No one, therefore, who receives possession as tenant (conductor) may usurp the right of ownership by holding another's property over a long time. Otherwise owners will be compelled either to lose what they had leased, or perhaps to evict tenants who are useful to them, or to publicly proclaim their ownership every year.

Given July 24, in the consulship of Valentinian and Valens Augusti (365).

[3][115] Emperors Honorius and Theodosius Augusti to Asclepiodotus, Praetorian Prefect. pr. As with individual (speciales) actions in rem, so also with corporate (de universitate) and personal actions, these may not be extended beyond thirty years. But if some thing or some right is sought or if a person is sued through any action or prosecution, the plaintiff must nevertheless beware the thirty-year prescription. The same is true as to a plaintiff who attempts to recover a pledge or hypothec not from his debtor, but from another who has had long-term possession. 1. Therefore any actions not commenced earlier shall have no further life after a continuous silence of thirty years from the time when they accrued.

Nor shall it suffice that, after making a petition, someone has obtained a special rescript, even one with an imperial dispensation (per adnotationem), not even if it has been adduced in court, unless, once the imperial rescript was adduced or the initial pleading has been filed in court, a summons has followed through a court clerk. 1a. Weakness of sex, absence, or public office (militia) shall be no defense against this law; only minors under the age of puberty – although protected by a guardian – are excepted from these provisions. And once minors have arrived at the age when they come under the care of a curator, the prescriptive period of thirty years applies to them the same as to others.

2. The bar of thirty years' prescription is applicable, however, to those actions that have been considered perpetual, not to those which were since ancient times limited in time. 3. After the time mentioned, no further right to commence an action exists, even if a claimant attempts to excuse himself by ignorance of the law.

Given November 14, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Victor (424).

[114] C. 3.1.8 and 7.22.3 may be fragments of this law, which is no longer extant.
[115] = C.Th. 4.14.1; combine with C.Th. 2.12.7.

[4] Imp. Anastasius A. Matroniano pp. pr. Omnes nocendi quibuslibet modis artes omnibus amputantes cunctas quidem temporales exceptiones, quae ex vetere iure vel principalibus decretis descendunt, tamquam si per hanc legem specialiter ac nominatim fuissent enumeratae, cum suo robore durare et suum cunctis, quibus competunt vel in posterum competere valuerint, pro suo videlicet tenore praesidium in perpetuum deferre decernimus.

1. Quidquid autem praeteritarum praescriptionum vel verbis vel sensibus minus continetur, implentes per hanc in perpetuum valituram legem sancimus, ut, si quis contractus, si qua actio, quae, cum non esset expressim saepe dictis temporalibus praescriptionibus concepta, quorundam tamen vel fortuita vel excogitata interpretatione saepe dictarum exceptionum laqueos evadere posse videatur, huic saluberrimae nostrae sanctioni succumbat et quadraginta curriculis annorum procul dubio sopiatur, nullumque ius privatum vel publicum in quacumque causa in quacumque persona, quod praedictorum quadraginta annorum extinctum est iugi silentio, moveatur. 2. Sed quicumque super quolibet iure, quod per memoratum tempus inconcussum et sine ulla re ipsa illata iudiciaria conventione possedit, superque sua condicione, qua per idem tempus absque ulla iudiciali sententia simili munitione potitus est, sit liber et praesentis saluberrimae legis plenissima munitione securus.

D. IIII k. Aug. Constantinopoli Olybrio cons.

[5] Idem A. ad Thomam pp. per Illyricum. Praescriptionem quadraginta annorum ab his, qui ad curialem condicionem vocantur, opponi non patimur, sed genitalem statum semper eos agnoscere compelli sancimus. sacra etenim nostrae pietatis lex de aliis loquitur condicionibus nec anterioribus constitutionibus per eandem novellam legem derogatur, quae manifestissime curiales et liberos eorum explosis temporalibus praescriptionibus patriis suis reddi praecipiunt.

[6] Idem A. Leontio pp. pr. Comperit nostra serenitas quosdam sacratissima*m* nostrae pietatis constitutionem, quae de annorum quadraginta loquitur praescriptione, ad praeiudicium etiam publicarum functionum solutionis trahere conari et, si quid per tanti vel amplioris temporis lapsum minime vel minus quam oportuerat tributorum nomine

[4] Emperor ANASTASIUS Augustus to Matronianus, Praetorian Prefect.[116] pr. Intent on curtailing every method of doing harm for everyone, We decree that all defenses limiting the time for bringing actions that derive from ancient law or imperial decrees shall remain in full force, as if specially enumerated by name in this law, and shall be a perpetual protection to all to whom they are or shall be available in accordance with the tenor of each.

1. In order to supply whatever is not clearly contained within the words or meaning of previous enactments providing for limitation of actions, We ordain by this perpetually valid law that any contract or action, even if not expressly contained within the regularly cited defenses as to limitation of action, shall be subject to this most salutary enactment of Ours, although it may seem possible for it to escape the bonds of the regularly cited defenses either through accidental or deliberate interpretation. It shall be void and barred after a period of forty years, and no right, private or public, which has become extinct by the silence of these forty years, shall be deployed in any cause or in relation to any person. 2. But with regard to any right that someone has possessed undisturbed for the cited time period without any judicial summons being brought as to the main subject matter, and with regard to a person's status (sua condicione) that he has maintained during the same time without any contrary judgment,[117] he shall be free and fully protected by the full force of the present, most salutary law.

Given July 29, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Olybrius (491).

[5][118] The same Augustus to Thomas, Praetorian Prefect for Illyricum. We do not permit the period of limitation of forty years to be used as a defense by those called to curial status (curialem condicionem), but We ordain that they must acknowledge their birth status forever. For the law of Our Piety[119] speaks of other statuses (de aliis condicionibus), nor does the same new law detract from former constitutions which plainly direct that curials and their children be returned to their native cities without reference to any prescriptive period.

[6] The same Augustus to Leontius, Praetorian Prefect. pr. Our Serenity has learned that some parties attempt to apply the imperial constitution of Our Piety which speaks of forty years prescription to avoid the fulfillment of public obligations (publicae functiones). These contend that if tribute or a portion [116] Combine with C. 10.27.1, 11.62.14. Lounghis et al. date to July 30, 491.

[117] Blume: "By C. 7.22.2, a man in good faith in possession of liberty for twenty years was protected. The difference, evidently is, that no possession in good faith was necessary in the limitation of forty years. Under this law, every sort of action is barred in forty years."

[118] Combine with C. 2.4.43, 2.7.21. Lounghis et al. give November 17, 500.

[119] C. 7.39.4.2.

solutum est, non posse requiri seu profligari contendere, cum huiusmodi conamen manifestissime sensui propositoque nostrae legis obviare noscatur. 1. Ideoque iubemus eos, qui rem aliquam per continuum annorum quadraginta curriculum sine quadam legitima interpellatione possederunt, de possessione quidem rei seu dominio nequaquam removeri, functiones autem seu civilem canonem vel aliam quandam publicam collationem impositam ei dependere compelli nec huic parti cuiuscumque temporis praescriptionem oppositam admitti.

[7] Imp. Iustinus A. Archelao pp. pr. Cum notissimi iuris sit actionem hypothecariam in extraneos quidem suppositae rei detentores annorum triginta finiri spatiis, si non interruptum erit silentium, ut lege cautum est, id est etiam per solam conventionem, aut si aetas impubes excipienda monstretur, in ipsos vero debitores aut heredes eorum primos vel ulteriores nullis expirare lustrorum cursibus: nostrae provisionis esse perspeximus hoc quoque emendare, ne possessores eiusmodi prope immortali timore teneantur.

1. Quamobrem iubemus hypothecarum persecutionem, quae rerum movetur gratia vel apud debitores consistentium vel apud debitorum heredes, non ultra quadraginta annos, ex quo competere coepit, prorogari, nisi conventio aut aetas, sicut dictum est, intercesserit, ut diversitas utriusque rerum persecutionis, quae in debitorem aut heredes eius quaeque movetur in extraneos, in solo sit annorum numero, verum in aliis omnibus ambo similes sint: in actione scilicet personali his custodiendis, quae prisca constitutionum sanxit iustitia.

2. Sed cum illud etiam in forensibus controversiis ventilabatur, an creditor anteriora iura praetendens potest posteriorem creditorem hypothecam tenentem et ultra triginta annos inquietare utpote imaginem debitoris obtinentem eique possidentem, necessarium duximus et hoc dirimere. 2a. Et sancimus, donec communis debitor vivit, non posse creditori anteriori triginta annorum exceptionem opponi, sed locum esse quadraginta annorum praescriptioni, quia, dum ille vivit, merito anterior creditor confidit, utpote apud debitorem eius possessione per posteriorem creditorem constituta.

2b. Ex quo autem in fata sua debitor decesserit, ex eo quasi suo nomine possidentem posteriorem creditorem merito posse triginta annorum opponere praescriptionem. et secundum hanc distinctionem computationem temporum adhibendam, ut ex persona quidem sua thereof is not paid and the time mentioned or a greater time has elapsed, the arrears cannot be demanded or collected. Yet it is known that such attempts are clearly contrary to the intent and purpose of Our law. 1. Therefore We order that those who are in possession of any property through a continuous period of forty years without legal interruption cannot be deprived of the possession or ownership of that property, but with regard to public obligations, whether municipal dues (civilis canon) or any other public contribution imposed on someone, these must be paid and no limitation of any time period can be set up as a defense to them.[120]

[7] Emperor Justin Augustus to Archelaus, Praetorian Prefect. pr. It is well-known law that an action on a hypothec against third parties who hold the hypothecated property as occupants (detentores) is barred by the lapse of thirty years, provided the time is not interrupted as provided by law, including interruption by summons alone, or if the age of a prepubescent minor (impubes) is shown to require an exception. But claims against debtors themselves or their heirs, whether of the first degree or of further degrees, are not barred by the lapse of years. We have deemed it to be part of Our watchfulness to correct that situation also, lest possessors of that kind be held in almost endless fear.

1. We order, accordingly, that actions on hypothecs brought to recover property which is in the hands either of debtors or their heirs shall not be extended beyond forty years from the time that the right accrued, unless, as mentioned, a lawsuit or age intervenes, so that the only difference as to the right to recover the property from the debtor and his heirs or from third parties shall be in the number of years. In all other respects they shall be alike. That is to say, in a personal action the rights which the justice of older constitutions safeguarded ought to be preserved.

2. And since it has also been disputed in the courts whether, even after thirty years, a creditor having superior rights can disturb a creditor with inferior right who holds a hypothec, as though he took the place of the debtor and was in possession for him, We have thought it necessary to clarify that point too. 2a. And We ordain that, while the common debtor lives, the prescriptive period of thirty years cannot be set up against the creditor with superior right, but the prescriptive period of forty years applies because, while the former lives, the creditor with superior right justly has confidence knowing that his debtor's possession is confirmed through the creditor with inferior right.

2b. But from the time that the debtor dies, the creditor with inferior right may, as possessor in his own right, set up the prescription of thirty years, and time shall be computed according to the following distinction: the creditor posterior creditor triginta annos, quos ipse post mortem debitoris possedit, opponat: sin autem coniungere voluerit suae possessioni quam post mortem debitoris habuit, etiam tempus, quo vivente debitore vel ipse creditor vel communis debitor detinuit, tunc quadraginta annorum exceptionis iura tractari et, quantum deest ad quadraginta annorum possessionem, per quam et ipse debitor creditorem repellere potuerat, hoc se possedisse ostendat. 3. Eodem iure pro temporum computatione observando et si posterior creditor anteriori creditori offerre debitum paratus est et is creditor longaevam possessionis praescriptionem ei opponere conatur.

[120] Lounghis et al. date to between late 500 and 518.

4. Illud autem plus quam manifestum est, quod in omnibus contractibus, in quibus sub aliqua condicione vel sub die certa vel incerta stipulationes et promissiones vel pacta ponuntur, post condicionis exitum vel post institutae diei certae vel incertae lapsum praescriptiones triginta aut quadraginta annorum, quae personalibus vel hypothecariis actionibus opponuntur, initium accipiunt. 4a. Unde evenit, ut in matrimoniis, in quibus redhibitio dotis vel ante nuptias donationis in diem incertam mortis vel repudii differri adsolet, post coniugii dissolutionem earundem curricula praescriptionum personalibus itidem actionibus vel hypothecariis opponendarum incipiant.

5. Immo et illud procul dubio est, quod, si quis eorum, quibus aliquid debetur, res sibi suppositas sine violentia tenuerit, per hanc detentionem interruptio fit praeteriti temporis, si minus effluxit triginta vel quadraginta annis, et multo magis, quam si esset interruptio per conventionem introducta, cum litis contestationem imitatur ea detentio. 5a. Sed et si quis debitorum ad agnoscendum suum debitum secundam cautionem in creditorem exposuerit, tempora memoratarum praescriptionum interrupta esse videbuntur, quantum ad priorem cautionem pertinet, quae scilicet innovata permansit, tam in personalibus quam in hypothecariis actionibus. namque improbum est debitorem contradicere, qui, ne sub accusatione creditoris fiat, secundam in eum super eo debito cautionem exposuit.

6. In his etiam promissionibus vel legatis vel aliis obligationibus, quae dationem per singulos annos vel menses aut aliquod singulare tempus continent, tempora memoratarum praescriptionum non ab exordio talis obligationis, sed ab initio cuiusque anni vel mensis vel alterius singularis temporis computari manifestum est.

7. Nulla scilicet danda licentia vel ei, qui iure emphyteutico rem aliquam per quadraginta vel quoscumque alios annos detinuerit, dicendi ex transacto tempore dominium sibi in isdem rebus quaesitum esse, with inferior right acting on his own behalf may oppose the limitation of thirty years during which he was in possession after the debtor's death; but if he also wants to tack that time when he himself as creditor or as joint debtor was in possession during the original debtor's lifetime onto his own possession which followed the death of the debtor, then the rights of the forty years defense obtain, and he must show that he has been in possession for however much time was remaining for the fulfillment of forty years' possession by which even the original debtor would have been able to defend against the creditor. 3. The same rule about the computation of time shall be followed even if the creditor of inferior right is ready to offer the debt due to the earlier creditor, and the latter attempts to set up against him long time prescription.

4. But it is more than evident that in all contracts in which stipulations, promises, or pacts are imposed in connection with some condition or some certain or uncertain date (sub die certa vel incerta), the prescriptive period of thirty or forty years operative against personal or hypothecary actions begins to run after the condition occurs or after the date arrives. 4a. Whence it occurs that in the case of marriages, where the repayment of a dowry or prenuptial gift is usually put off to the uncertain date of a death or divorce, the prescriptive period to be set up against personal actions or actions on a hypothec likewise commences to run after the dissolution of the marriage.

5. And it is also unquestioned that if a man to whom a debt is due peaceably holds the property pledged to him, the prescriptive period is interrupted by this occupation (detentionem), if less than thirty or forty years respectively have run. In fact this is all the more true than if the period had been interrupted by summons, since such occupation is likened to joinder of issue. 5a. And if a debtor gives a creditor a new promise (cautio) for the purpose of acknowledging the debt, the prescriptive period as it relates to the first promise – which of course is renewed but continues in force – will seem to have been interrupted, both in personal and hypothecary actions. For it is dishonest for a debtor to object who gives a second promise for that debt in order to avoid a suit by the creditor.

6. So also, where promises, legacies or other obligations require the giving of something each year, month or other particular time, it is clear that the prescriptive period mentioned is not computed from the beginning of such obligation, but from the beginning of each year, month or other particular time (in which something is due).

7. Absolutely no permission must be given to the person who holds property under emphyteusis and has detained it for forty years or any other period of years to claim that he has acquired ownership in such property by reason of the cum in eodem statu semper manere datas iure emphyteutico res oporteat, vel conductori seu procuratori rerum alienarum dicendi ex quocumque temporum curriculo non debere se domino volenti post completa conductionis tempora possessionem recipere eam reddere.

D. k. Dec. Constantinopoli Philoxeno et Probo conss.

[8] Imp. Iustinianus A. Menae pp. II. pr. Si quis emptionis vel donationis vel alterius cuiuscumque contractus titulo rem aliquam bona fide per decem vel viginti annos possederit et longi temporis exceptionem contra dominos eius vel creditores hypothecam eius praetendentes sibi adquisierit posteaque fortuito casu possessionem eius rei perdiderit, posse eum etiam actionem ad vindicandam eandem rem habere sancimus. hoc enim et veteres leges, si quis eas recte inspexerit, sanciebant.

1. Quod si quis eam rem desierit possidere, cuius dominus vel is qui suppositam eam habebat exceptione triginta vel quadraginta annorum expulsus est, praedictum auxilium non indiscrete, sed cum moderata divisione ei praestare censemus, ut, si quidem bona fide ab initio eam rem tenuit, simili possit uti praesidio, sin vero mala fide eam adeptus est, indignus eo videatur, ita tamen, ut novus possessor, si quidem ipse rei dominus ab initio fuit vel suppositam eam habebat et memoratae exceptionis necessitate expulsus est, commodum detentionis sibi adquirat. 1a. Sin vero nullum ius in eadem re quocumque tempore habuit, tunc licentia sit priori domino vel creditori, qui nomine hypothecae rem obligatam habuit, et heredibus eorum ab iniusto detentore eam vindicare, non obsistente ei, quod prior possessor triginta vel quadraginta annorum exceptione eum removerat, nisi ipse iniustus possessor triginta vel quadraginta annorum ex eo tempore computandorum, ex quo prior possessor, qui et vicit, ea possessione cecidit, exceptione munitus sit.

2. Sed haec super illis detentoribus censemus, qui sine violentia eandem rem nancti sunt. nam si quis violenter eam abstulit, omnimodo licebit priori possessori sine ulla distinctione eam vindicare. 3. Sed et si quis non per vim, sed sententia iudicis eam detinuit, ea tamen occasione, quod absens prior possessor et ad litem vocatus minime respondit, licebit ei ad similitudinem ceterorum, qui rei dominium habent, intra annum se offerenti cautionemque suscipiendae litis danti eandem rem lapse of time, since property held by right of emphyteusis should always remain in the same state. Nor must opportunity be given to a lessee (conductor) or procurator of another's property to say, by reason of the lapse of any period of time whatever, that he ought not to restore it to the owner who wants to retake possession after the time of the lease has expired.

Given December 1, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Philoxenus and Probus (525).

[8] Emperor Justinian Augustus to Menas, Praetorian Prefect for the second time. pr. If a man has been in good faith possession of any property for ten or twenty years by title of purchase, gift or any other contract and has acquired the right to the defense of long-time prescription against the owners or against creditors claiming a hypothec over it, and afterwards he loses possession of the property by a fortuitous circumstance, We ordain that he is able to have a suit on ownership to recover the property. The ancient laws, if correctly considered, also made provision for that.

1. But if a person ceases to possess that property, whose owner or whose mortgagee has lost it through the defense of thirty or forty years, We decree that the aforementioned remedy should not be applied indiscriminately but should follow a moderate distinction: if the person held the property in good faith from the beginning, he shall enjoy that right, but if he acquired it in bad faith, he seems unworthy of it; thus if the new possessor was the original owner or mortgagee of the property and lost it by reason of the aforesaid defense (of prescription), he acquires the benefit of the occupation. 1a. But if (the new possessor) had no right to the property at any time, then the former owner or the creditor to whom the property was bound under a hypothec, as well as to their heirs, are given the right to reclaim it from the unlawful occupant. And it shall be no defense that a prior possessor had blocked (the original owner) by the defense of the prescriptive period of thirty or forty years, unless the unlawful possessor himself was fortified by the defense of thirty or forty years computed from the time when the prior possessor, who had also evicted (the original owner), fell out of possession.

2. These provisions apply, however, only to occupants (detentores) who acquired the property without violence. For if a person takes possession violently, the prior possessor is permitted to recover it in all cases. 3. And if a person detains it not by violence but pursuant to a judicial verdict rendered when the prior possessor was absent and did not respond to a summons to court, the latter may, as other owners of property, appear within a year, give a guarantee (cautio) to defend the suit, and receive the property back subject to recipere superque ea cognitionalia subire certamina. 4. Exceptionem etiam triginta vel quadraginta annorum in illis contractibus, in quibus usurae promissae sunt, ex illo tempore initium capere sancimus, ex quo debitor usuras minime persolvit.

D. III id. Dec. Constantinopoli dn. Iustiniano A. II cons.

[9] Idem A. Demostheni pp. pr. Saepe quidam suos obnoxios in iudicium vocantes et iudiciariis certaminibus ventilatis non ad certum finem lites producebant, sed taciturnitate in medio tempore adhibita, propter potentiam forte fugientium vel suam imbecillitatem vel alios quoscumque casus (cum sortis humanae multa sunt, quae nec dici nec enumerari possint), deinde iure suo lapsi esse videbantur eo, quod post cognitionem novissimam triginta annorum spatium effluxerit, et huiusmodi exceptione opposita suas fortunas ad alios translatas videntes merito quidem, sine remedio autem lugebant.

1. Quod nos corrigentes eandem exceptionem, quae ex triginta annis oritur, in huiusmodi casu opponi minime patimur, sed licet personalis actio ab initio fuerit instituta, tamen eam in quadragesimum annum extendimus, cum non sit similis, qui penitus ab initio tacuit, ei, qui et postulationem deposuit et in iudicium venit et subiit certamina, litem autem implere per quosdam casus praepeditus est. 2. Sed licet ipse actor defecerit, suae posteritati huiusmodi causae cursum eum relinquere posse definimus, ut eius heredibus vel successoribus liceat eam adimplere, nullo modo triginta annorum exceptione sublatam. 3. Quod tempus, id est quadraginta annorum spatium, ex eo numerari decernimus, ex quo novissima processit cognitio, post quam utraque pars cessavit.

XXXX De Annali Exceptione Italici Contractus Tollenda et de Diversis Temporibus et Exceptionibus et Praescriptionibus et Interruptionibus Earum

[1] Imp. Iustinianus A. Iuliano pp. pr. Super annali exceptione, quae ex Italicis contractibus oritur, tantae moles altercationum in omnibus iudiciis exortae sunt, quantas et enumerari difficile et explanari impossibile est. 1. Primum etenim naturae eius observatio cum omni scrupulositate et difficultate composita est, cum multa concurrere debent, ut ea nascatur. 1a. Deinde illud spatium annale alii quidem ita effuse

the result of the suit. 4. In case of contracts which draw interest, the defense of the prescriptive period of thirty or forty years shall accrue from the time that the debtor fails to pay the interest.

Given December 11, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Our Lord Justinian Augustus, for the second time (528).

[9] The same Augustus to Demosthenes, Praetorian Prefect. pr. Plaintiffs who have cited into court defendants liable to them and have put the suit in motion have frequently failed to end it definitely, but thereafter remained inactive on account of the influence of the defendants or on account of their own weakness or for other causes – since people's fates are too many to describe or enumerate. Afterwards they seem to have lost their right since a span of thirty years had passed after they last brought suit, and that defense was set up so that they have grieved, justly but without remedy, as they watched their fortunes transferred to others.

1. Correcting this, We do not permit the defense arising from the passage of thirty years to be set up in a case of this kind, but extend the period to forty years, even if the action was instituted from the beginning as a personal action, since a case where a party remains entirely silent from the beginning is not like one where he offers a summons, comes into court, and commences litigation, but is prevented from finishing the suit through some chance. 2. And though the plaintiff himself dies, We determine that he may transmit his right to his posterity, and his heirs and successors may assert it, for it cannot be defeated by the defense of the lapse of thirty years. 3. The period of forty years shall be computed from the time the most recent suit was brought after which both parties became inactive.

<Without subscription (529).>[121]

Fortieth Title Repeal of the One-Year Prescription of an Italic Contract, Various Grace Periods, Exceptions, Prescriptions, and their Interruption[122]

[1][123] Emperor JUSTINIAN Augustus to Julian, Praetorian Prefect. pr. Such great mountains of disputes over the one-year prescription arising from Italic contracts have arisen that it is difficult to enumerate them and impossible to explain them. 1. In the first place the observance of the nature of the rule is wrapped in much technicality and difficulty, since many things must concur in order that it may apply. 1a. Next, some have interpreted that period of a year so broadly that it may be extended to ten years; others think that it should not [121] Lounghis et al. date to September or October 529.

[122] See D. 44.3.
[123] Combine with C. 1.2.23.

interpretabantur, ut possit usque ad decennium extendi, alii iudicantes usque ad quinquennium standum esse putaverunt. et in nostris temporibus saepius super huiusmodi calculo a iudicibus variatum est, unde nec facile suum effectum in litigiis ostendere huiusmodi exceptio valuit.

1b. Cum itaque nobis aliae temporales exceptiones vel praescriptiones sufficiant, huiusmodi difficultatibus illigari nostro subiectos imperio minime patimur. ideoque memorata annali exceptione penitus quiescente aliae omnes legitimae exceptiones vel praescriptiones in iudiciis suum vigorem ostendant, sive quae super decennio vel viginti vel triginta vel quadraginta annis introductae sunt, sive quae minoribus spatiis concluduntur. 1c. Ad haec cum nihil prohibet etiam ea, quae aliquam dubitationem acceperunt, clarioribus et compendiosis sanctionibus renovare, iubemus omnes personales actiones, quas verbosa quorundam interpretatio iactare extra metas triginta annorum conabatur, triginta annorum spatiis concludi, nisi legitimus modus, qui et veteribus et nostris legibus enumeratus est, interruptionem temporis introduxerit: sola hypothecaria actione quadraginta annorum utente curriculis. 1d. Nemo itaque audeat neque actionis familiae erciscundae neque communi dividundo neque finium regundorum neque pro socio neque furti neque vi bonorum raptorum neque alterius cuiuscumque personalis actionis vitam longiorem esse triginta annis interpretari: sed ex quo ab initio competit et semel nata est et non iteratis fabulis saepe recreata, quemadmodum in furti dicebatur, post memoratum tempus finiri. 1e. Exceptis omnibus actionibus, licet personales sint, quae in iudicium deductae sunt et cognitionalia acceperunt certamina et postea silentio traditae sunt, in quibus non triginta, sed quadraginta annos esse expectandos, ex quo novissimum litigatores tacuerunt, nostra lex antea promulgavit.

2. Ne autem imperfecta sanctio videatur, cum in maternis quidem rebus filiis familias tempore exceptionum currere dispositum erat, ex quo sacris paternis absoluti sunt, in aliis autem, quae minime adquiri possunt, hoc non fuerat specialiter constitutum, apertissima definitione sancimus filiis familias omnibus in his casibus, in quibus habent res minime patribus suis adquisitas, nullam temporalem exceptionem opponi, nisi ex quo actionem movere poterint, id est postquam manu paterna vel eius in cuius potestate erant constituti fuerint liberati. quis enim incusare eos poterit, si hoc non fecerint, quod et si maluerint, minime adimplere lege obviante valebant?

D. xv k. April. Constantinopoli Lampadio et Oreste vv. cc. conss.

exceed five years. Even in Our own times judges have often varied over this calculation, on account of which this type of defense has scarcely been able to be effective in litigation.

1b. So, since We find other defenses as to limitation of actions or prescription sufficient, We cannot permit Our subjects to be enmeshed in these sorts of difficulties. Therefore, the defense of one year's prescription shall no longer be in force, but all other legal defenses or prescriptions shall remain in effect for lawsuits, namely, those limiting them to ten, twenty, thirty or forty years, or those that conclude in briefer periods. 1c. Furthermore, since nothing prevents the revision of laws which are ambiguous by clearer and succinct provisions, We order that all personal actions, which the verbose interpretation of some has attempted to extend beyond the bounds of thirty years, must be concluded within a span of thirty years, unless that period is interrupted by one of the legal methods set forth in ancient laws and in statutes enacted by Us. The limitation of forty years shall apply only to hypothecary actions. 1d. So no one must dare to argue that an action has validity for more than thirty years, whether it is an action to divide an inheritance, to partition common property, to fix boundaries, an action on partnership, theft, robbery, or any other personal action; but from the period when it first comes into existence it is born once and for all and ends after the stated time period, without having been recreated again and again through repeated stories, as is said of actions on theft. 1e. An exception is made where actions, even when personal, are brought and proceedings in court have been commenced and the parties become inactive thereafter. In such cases one must wait not thirty but forty years from the last time when the litigants became inactive, as provided in Our recently promulgated law.[124]

2. It had been provided by former laws that prescription against unemancipated sons (filiifamilias) as regards maternal property runs only from the time that they were released from paternal power, but this provision was not specially made as to other property, which they cannot acquire. So, in order that this law may not seem incomplete, We ordain by this plain provision that no prescription shall run against unemancipated sons in any case when they have property not acquired by them for the benefit of their father, except from the time that they could bring an action, that is to say, after they have been liberated from their father's power or that of some other person in whose power they were. In fact, who could accuse them of not having done what they would have chosen to do had they not been unable because the law prevented them.

Given March 18, at Constantinople, in the consulship of the viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestes (530).

[124] C. 7.39.9.

[2] Idem A. Iohanni pp. pr. Ut perfectius omnibus consulamus et nemini absentia vel potentia vel infantia penitus adversarii sui noceat, sed sit aliqua inter desides et vigilantes differentia, sancimus: si quando afuerit is, qui res alienas vel creditori obnoxias detinet, et desiderat dominus rei vel creditor suam intentionem proponere et non ei licentia sit, absente suo adversario qui rem detinet, vel infantia vel furore laborante et neminem tutorem vel curatorem habente, vel in magna potestate constituto, licentia ei detur adire praesidem vel libellum ei porrigere et hoc in querimoniam deducere intra constituta tempora et interruptionem temporis facere: et sufficere hoc ad plenissimam interruptionem. 1. Sin autem nullo poterit modo praesidem adire, saltem ad episcopum locorum eat vel defensorem civitatis et suam manifestare voluntatem in scriptis deproperet. sin autem afuerit vel praeses vel episcopus vel defensor, liceat ei et proponere publice, ubi domicilium habet possessor, seu cum tabulariorum subscriptione vel, si civitas tabularios non habeat, cum trium testium subscriptione: et hoc sufficere ad omnem temporalem interruptionem sive triennii sive longi temporis sive triginta vel quadraginta annorum sit. 2. Omnibus aliis, quae de longi temporis praescriptione vel triginta vel quadraginta annorum curriculis constituta sunt sive ab antiquis legum conditoribus sive a nostra maiestate, in suo robore duraturis.

D. xv k. Nov. Constantinopoli post consulatum Lampadii et Orestis vv. cc.

[3] Idem A. Iohanni pp. pr. Si ex multis causis quendam obnoxium habens, et maxime ex similibus quantitatibus, in unius quidem causae summam libellum conventionis composuerit, causam tamen non expresserit, apud veteres agitabatur, an videatur omnes causas in iudicium deduxisse aut vetustissimam earum aut nihil fecisse, cum eius sensus incertus esse apparebat. 1. Sed et in iudiciis in multis casibus tales altercationes ventilatas invenimus, et maxime propter longi temporis interruptionem. si enim personalis forte fuerat mota actio, hypothecariae autem actionis nulla mentio procedebat, quidam putabant personalem quidem esse temporis interruptione perpetuatam, hypothecariam autem evanescere taciturnitate sopitam. 2. Et si quis generaliter dixerat obnoxium sibi aliquem constitutum, aliae dubitationes emergebant, si omnes ei competentes actiones huiusmodi narratione contineri credantur, an vero quasi silentio circa eas habito tempore expirare, nullo ex incerta libelli confectione adminiculo eis adquisito.

[2] The same Augustus to John, Praetorian Prefect. pr. In order that We may more perfectly look after the interests of all, and that the absence, power, or infancy of an adversary may harm no one, and yet that there may remain a distinction between those who are negligent and those who are vigilant, We[125] ordain that if he who detains property owned by another or under obligation to a creditor should be absent, and the owner or creditor wishes to bring suit but is not permitted because his opponent, who detains the property, is absent or is impeded by inability to speak (infantia) or insanity and has no tutor or curator, or is in a position of great power, permission shall be given to the owner or creditor to go before the governor or to present him with a petition and make this a matter of complaint within the allotted period, and thus interrupt the time. 1. But if he cannot in any way go before the governor, he shall go at least before the bishop of the place or the Defender of the City, and hasten to make known his desire in writing. If the governor or bishop or Defender are absent, he may make a public statement where the possessor has his domicile, in writing, witnessed by secretaries (tabularii), or by three other witnesses if the city has no secretaries; and this shall suffice for interrupting any prescriptive period, either of three years, of a long time (ten or twenty years), or of thirty or forty years. 2. All other provisions made concerning long-time prescription and prescription of thirty and forty years shall remain in force, whether made by the ancient founders of the laws or by Our Majesty.

Given October 18, at Constantinople, in the post-consulate of the viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestes (531).

[3] The same Augustus to John, Praetorian Prefect. pr. If a plaintiff to whom a defendant was liable on many causes of action, and particularly for similar sums, claimed in the summons the sum involved in one of these causes of action without expressing the cause, it was debated among the ancients whether he should be considered to have brought action on all of the causes, or the oldest one, or on none, since the premise of his claim appeared uncertain. 1. And We find that such dispute frequently arose in trials, especially in connection with the interruption of long-time prescription. If, for instance, a personal action was commenced and no mention was made of a hypothecary action, some thought that the personal action was extended by the interruption but that the hypothecary action was extinguished by silence. 2. And if someone stated generally that the defendant was liable to him, other doubts arose as to whether all actions available to him should be considered as embraced in the statement, or whether all should be held to expire during the prescriptive time, as though he had been silent as to all of them, the uncertain statement in his petition being of no benefit to him.

[125] The text is repeated from this point down to "make his desire known in writing" at C. 1.4.31 (incorrectly dated to October 1).

3. Sancimus itaque nullam in iudiciis in posterum locum habere talem confusionem, sed qui obnoxium suum in iudicium clamaverit et libellum conventionis ei transmiserit, licet generaliter nullius causae mentionem habentem vel unius quidem specialiter, tantummodo autem personales actiones vel hypothecarias continentem, nihilo minus videri ius suum omne eum in iudicium deduxisse et esse interrupta temporum curricula, cum contra desides homines et sui iuris contemptores odiosae exceptiones oppositae sunt.

D. xv k. Nov. Constantinopoli post consulatum Lampadii et Orestis vv. cc.

XXXXI De Adluvionibus et Paludibus et de Pascuis ad Alium Statum Translatis

[1] Imp. Gordianus A. Marco. Quamvis fluminis naturalem cursum opere manu facto alio non liceat avertere, tamen ripam suam adversus rapidi amnis impetum munire prohibitum non est. et cum fluvius priore alveo derelicto alium sibi facit, ager quem circumivit, prioris domini manet. quod si paulatim ita auferat aliique parti applicet, id adluvionis iure ei quaeritur, cuius fundus crescit.

PP. III k. Dec. Gordiano A. et Aviola conss.

[2] Imppp. Arcadius Honorius et Theodosius AAA. Caesario pp. Hi, quos inundatio Nili fluminis reddidit ditiores, pro terris quas possident tributorum praestationem agnoscant. et qui suum deplorant patrimonium imminutum, alieno saltem functionis onere liberentur et nostrae serenitatis largitate defensi, locorum etiam possessione contenti, pro agitandi census examine respondeant devotioni.

D. III id. Iun. Theodosio A. et Rumorido conss.

[3] Impp. Theodosius et Valentinianus AA. Cyro pp. pr. Ea, quae per adluvionem sive in Aegypto per Nilum sive in al*iis* provinci*is* per diversa flumina possessoribus adquiruntur, neque ab aerario vendi neque a quolibet peti nec separatim censeri vel functiones exigi hac

3. Therefore, We ordain that such confusion shall no longer have any place in the courts, but whoever cites into court anyone liable to him and sends him a petition of summons, whether he has not mentioned a general cause of action, or has stated only a specific one, or has brought only a personal or a hypothecary action, he shall nevertheless be considered to have commenced an action as to every right which he has and to have interrupted the prescriptive period. Indeed, odious defenses should be set up only against men who are negligent and contemptuous of their rights.

Given October 18, at Constantinople, in the post-consulate of the viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestes (531).

Forty-First Title Alluvium and Swamps and Pastures Transferred to Another Status

[1] Emperor GORDIAN Augustus to Marcus. Although it is not permitted to divert the natural course of a river through any man-made work, nevertheless it is not forbidden to strengthen its banks against the assault of a rapid stream. And when a river abandons its former channel and makes another for itself, the field round which it flows remains the property of the former owner. But if it carries the soil off gradually, adding it to another field, such added soil is acquired by the man whose farm is increased through the right of alluvium (alluvio).

Posted November 29, in the consulship of Gordian Augustus and Aviola (239).

[2] Emperors ARCADIUS, HONORIUS, and THEODOSIUS Augusti to Caesarius, Praetorian Prefect. Persons whom the inundation of the river Nile makes richer must pay tribute for the land which they possess. But those who lament the diminution of their property should at least be relieved from the burden of an obligation owed by another, and, protected by the bounty of Our Serenity and content with the land they possess, they should devotedly pay their tribute according to the adjustment made.[126]

Given June 11, in the consulship of Theodosius Augustus and Rumoridus (403).

[3][127] Emperors THEODOSIUS and VALENTINIAN Augusti to Cyrus, Praetorian Prefect. pr. We ordain by this perpetually valid law that property which is acquired by possessors through alluvium, whether in Egypt because of the Nile [126] The last sentence is awkward. This translation reflects its sense more than its exact wording. Seeck dates this constitution to June 11, 397.

[127] = Nov. Theod. 20.

perpetuo lege valitura sancimus, ne vel adluvionum ignorare vitia vel rem noxiam possessoribus videamur indicere. 1. Similiter ne ea quidem, quae paludibus antea vel pascuis videbantur adscripta, si sumptibus possessorum nunc ad frugum fertilitatem translata sunt, vel vendi vel peti vel quasi fertilia separatim censeri vel functiones exigi concedimus, ne doleant diligentes operam suam agri dedisse culturae nec diligentiam suam sibi damnosam intellegant. 2. Cuius legis temeratores quinquaginta librarum auri condemnatione coerceri decernimus: inter quos habendum est officium quoque tuae sedis excelsae, si aliquid eiusmodi suggesserit disponendum vel si preces instruxerit petitoris.

D. XI k. Oct. Constantinopoli Valentiniano A. V et Anatolio conss.

XXXXII De Sententiis Praefectorum Praetorio

[1] Impp. Theodosius et Valentinianus AA. Thalassio pp. Illyrici. Litigantibus in amplissimo praetorianae praefecturae iudicio, si contra ius se laesos adfirment, non provocandi, sed supplicandi licentiam ministramus, licet pro curia vel qualibet publica utilitate seu alia causa dicatur prolata sententia (nec enim publice prodest singulis legum adminicula denegari): ita videlicet, ut intra biennium tantum nostro numini contra cognitionales sedis praetorianae praefecturae sententias, post successionem iudicis numerandum, supplicandi eis tribuatur facultas.

D. III id. Aug. Constantinopoli Theodosio A. XVII et Festo conss.

XXXXIII Quomodo et Quando Iudex Sententiam Proferre Debet Praesentibus Partibus vel Una Absente

[1] Imp. Titus Aelius Antoninus Publicio. Non semper compelleris, ut adversus absentem pronunties, propter subscriptionem patris mei, qua significavit etiam contra absentes sententiam dari solere. id enim eo pertinet, ut absentem damnare possis, non ut omnimodo necesse habeas.

Sine die et conss.

or in other provinces because of various rivers, shall not be sold by the Treasury (aerarium) nor claimed by anyone, nor shall it be separately assessed or compelled to obligations. In this way We will not seem to overlook the defects of alluvial lands or to impose something injurious on possessors. 1. Similarly, We do not permit even those lands formerly assigned to swamp or pasture but which have been made agriculturally productive through the outlays[128] of possessors to be sold or claimed or separately assessed or compelled to obligations as fertile lands, lest the diligent lament the efforts they expended in cultivating them and witness their diligence turned into loss. 2. We decree that violators of this law shall be punished by a fine of 50 pounds of gold. Among them are to be considered the members of your official staff if they suggest any such disposition or prepare a petition of a claimant.

Given on September 21, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Valentinian Augustus, for the fifth time, and Anatolius (440).

Forty-Second Title The Verdicts of Praetorian Prefects

[1][129] Emperors THEODOSIUS and VALENTINIAN Augusti to Thalassius, Praetorian Prefect of Illyricum. If litigants in the most high court of the Praetorian Prefecture allege that they have been injured contrary to law, We offer them the right not of appeal but of supplication, even if a decision was given in favor of a (municipal) council, or for the public interest, or for the benefit of any other matter. For it is not in the interest of the public to deny the aid of the law to individuals. Nevertheless, this right of supplicating Our Majesty against the judicial decisions of the court of the Praetorian Prefecture exists only for two years beginning from the time when the judge is succeeded.

Given August 11, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Theodosius Augustus, for the seventeenth time, and Festus (439).

Forty-Third Title How and When a Judge Should Give His Verdict When Both Parties Are Present or One Is Absent[130]

[1] Emperor TITUS AELIUS ANTONINUS to Publicius. You are not always compelled to give judgment against an absent party on account of the signed rescript (subscriptio) of my father in which he stated that decisions are regularly given even against parties that are absent. For that means that you may condemn a party that is absent, not that you are always required to do so.

Without date or consul.

[128] Nov. Theod. 20 adds "and labors" (ac laboribus).
[129] = Nov. Theod. 13, with minor variations.
[130] See Paul, Sent. 5.5a.

[2] Imp. Gordianus A. Severo. Cessante quoque causa peremptorii edicti adversus eos, qui admoniti iudicio adesse noluerunt, sententiam ab iudice posse ferri certum est.

S. IIII k. Aug. Pio et Pontiano conss.

[3] Idem A. Antistio. Ab eo iudicato recedi non potest, quod vobis absentibus et ignorantibus atque indefensis dicitis esse prolatum, si, ubi primum cognovistis, non ilico de statutis querellam detulistis. ita enim firmitatem sententia, quae ita prolata est, non habebit, si ei non sit commodatus adsensus.

PP. IIII id. Iun. Gordiano A. et Aviola conss.

[4] Imp. Philippus A. Domitio. Si, ut proponis, pars diversa die feriato absente et ignorante te ab iudice dato sententiam pro partibus suis, quasi contumaciter deesses, impetravit, non immerito praeses denuo negotium alterius iudicis notioni terminandum commisit.

PP. V id. Oct. Peregrino et Aemiliano conss.

[5] Idem A. et Philippus C. Longino. Si, ut proponis, praeses provinciae, cum certum locum causae cognoscendae dedisset, alibi per obreptionem aditus sententiam adversus te absentem protulit, quod ita gestum est, ad effectum iuris spectare minime oportet.

[6] Impp. Valerianus et Gallienus AA. Domitio. Si praeses quasi desertam ab adultis tuis causam appellationis, quae ab adiutore suo facta fuerat, circumduxit eo tempore, quo adulti curatores non habebant, repetitus notionem suam exhibebit. neque enim debet adultis nocere, quidquid eo tempore statutum est, quo defensione iusta et curatoris auxilio fuerant destituti.

[7] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. Marino. Ea, quae statuuntur adversus absentes non per contumaciam, scilicet denuntiationibus nequaquam ex more conventos, iudicatae rei firmitatem non obtinere certum est.

PP. III k. April. ipsis IIII et III AA. conss.

[8] Idem AA. Claudiae. Consentaneum iuri fuit temporibus ad praesentiam partis adversae praescriptis praesidem provinciae impleta iuris sollemnitate et adversario tuo trinis litteris vel uno pro omnibus peremptorio edicto, ut praesentiam sui faceret, commonefacto, si in eadem

[2] Emperor Gordian Augustus to Severus. It is certain that a decision may be given by a judge against those who were cited but refused to appear, even if the grounds for the issuance of a peremptory edict fail.

Written July 29, in the consulship of Pius and Pontianus (239).

[3] The same Augustus to Antistius. A judgment which you say was pronounced in your absence, without your knowledge, and while undefended, cannot be vacated if you did not petition against the decision immediately after learning of it. For a decision thus given is only invalid if it is not acquiesced in.

Posted June 10, in the consulship of Gordian Augustus and Aviola (239).

[4] Emperor Philip Augustus to Domitius. If, as you state, your opponent obtained a decision in his favor from the judge appointed for the case, but it was on a holiday, in your absence, and without your knowledge, as though your absence was contumacious, the governor was right to refer the matter to another judge for investigation and determination.

Posted October 11, in the consulship of Peregrinus and Aemilianus (244).

[5] The same Augustus and Caesar Philip to Longinus. Although the provincial governor had appointed a certain place for the trial of a case, if, as you state, he was approached clandestinely and gave judgment elsewhere against you while you were absent, such action should have no legal effect.

[6] Emperors Valerian and Gallienus, Augusti, to Domitius. If the governor treated an appeal that his assistant had prepared as abandoned by your pubescent minors (adulti) in a period when the minors had no curator, he will take up the matter again if you go before him. For the minors cannot be prejudiced by a decision made when they were without proper defense and the assistance of a curator.

[7] Emperors Diocletian and Maximian Augusti to Marinus. It is certain that a decision given against parties who are absent without contumacy, not having been summoned by the usual notices (denuntiationes), is invalid.

Posted March 30, in the consulship of the same Augusti, for the fourth and third time (290).

[8] The same Augusti to Claudia. When the time for the appearance of your opponent had been fixed, and the usual formality of law had been observed, and your opponent had been admonished to appear by three written notices (litterae) or by one peremptory edict serving in place of all, if he persevered in contumacia perseveravit, praesentis adlegationes audire. quod vel successor eius facere curabit. a quo ter citatus si contumaciter praesentiam sui facere neglexerit, non abs re erit vel ad cogendum eum, ut se repraesentaret, possessionem bonorum cui incumbit ad te transferre et adversarium petitorem constituere, vel auditis defensionibus tuis id quod iuris ratio exegerit iudicare.

PP. III k. Oct. ipsis IIII et III AA. conss.

[9] Idem AA. Leontio. Tres denuntiationes ad peremptorii edicti vicem adversus contumaces convalescere salubriter statutum est.

PP. XI k. Nov. ipsis IIII et III AA. conss.

[10] Idem AA. Blaesio. Cum non voluntatis tuae arbitrio, sed necessitate profectus sis, quidquid contra absentem statutum fuerit, quando absentiae necessaria causa sit, officere tibi iuris ratio non permittit.

PP. III id. Mai. Tiberiano et Dione conss.

[11] Idem AA. et CC. Valerio. Cum praesentibus partibus litem inchoatam proponas, si, posteaquam contra te licet absentem pronuntiatum est, intra praefinitum diem non appellasti, latam sententiam rescindi postulanti multae sacrae constitutiones refragantur.

XXXXIIII De Sententiis ex Periculo Recitandis

[1] Impp. Valerianus et Gallienus AA. Quinto. Arbitri nulla sententia est, quam scriptam edidit litigatoribus, non ipse recitavit. si igitur nihil fallis, omissa provocationis mora ex integro iudicari impetrabis a rectore provinciae.

[2] Imppp. Valentinianus Valens et Gratianus AAA. ad Probum pp. pr. Hac lege perpetua credimus ordinandum, ut iudices, quos cognoscendi et pronuntiandi necessitas teneret, non subitas, sed deliberatione habita post negotium sententias ponderatas sibi ante formarent et emendatas statim in libellum secuta fidelitate conferrent scriptasque ex libello

the same contumacy, it was in harmony with the law for the provincial governor to hear the allegations of the party present. Now his successor will see to the matter. If your opponent has been cited by him three times but contumaciously refuses to appear, it will be proper either to compel him to defend himself by transferring to you possession of the property over which he disposes and thus putting him in the position of claimant, or simply to hear your claims and give judgment according to the law.

Posted September 29, in the consulship of the same Augusti, for the fourth and third time (290).

[9] The same Augusti to Leontius. It is a salutary provision that three notices (denuntiationes) to contumacious parties are sufficient to take the place of a peremptory edict.

Posted October 22, in the consulship of the same Augusti, for the fourth and third time (290).

[10] The same Augusti to Blaesius. Since you did not leave (the jurisdiction) voluntarily but through necessity, the rule of law does not permit the decision rendered against you while absent to prejudice you, for your absence was necessary.

Posted May 13, in the consulship of Tiberianus and Dio (291).

[11] The same Augusti and the Caesars to Valerius. Since, as you state, the dispute was commenced while the parties were all present, and judgment was later given against you while absent, if you did not appeal within the date fixed, many imperial constitutions oppose your demand to have the decision vacated.

Forty-Fourth Title Reading Draft Trial Verdicts

[1] Emperors VALERIAN and GALLIENUS Augusti to Quintus. The verdict of the judge arbitrator given to the litigants in writing but not read by him is void. Therefore, if you have stated the truth, the governor (rector) of the province will grant you a new trial, without the delay of an appeal.

[2] Emperors VALENTINIAN, VALENS, and GRATIAN Augusti to Probus, Praetorian Prefect. pr. We believe it best to provide by this perpetually valid law that judges, whose duty it is to try to decide cases, must first formulate verdicts that are not hasty but well considered in deliberations held after the trial partibus legerent, sed ne sit eis posthac copia corrigendi vel mutandi. 1. Exceptis tam viris eminentissimis praefectis praetorio quam aliis illustrem administrationem gerentibus ceterisque illustribus iudicibus, quibus licentia conceditur etiam per officium suum et eos, qui ministerium suum eis accommodant, sententias definitivas recitare.

D. XII k. Febr. Gratiano A. II et Probo conss.

[3] Idem AAA. ad Probum pp. pr. Statutis generalibus iussimus, ut universi iudices, quibus reddendi iuris in provinciis permisimus facultatem, cognitis causis ultimas definitiones de scripti recitatione proferant. 1. Huic adicimus sanctioni, ut sententia, quae dicta fuerit, cum scripta non esset, nec nomen quidem sententiae habere mereatur nec ad rescissionem perperam decretorum appellationis sollemnitas requiratur.

D. III non. Dec. Triveris Gratiano A. III et Equitio conss.

XXXXV · De Sententiis et Interlocutionibus Omnium Iudicum

[1] Impp. Severus et Antoninus AA. Quintiliano. Non videtur nobis rationem habere sententia decessoris tui, qui cum cognovisset inter petitorem et procuratorem, non procuratorem, sed ipsam dominam litis condemnavit, cuius persona in iudicio non fuit. potes igitur ut re integra de causa cognoscere.

D. IIII k. Iun. Antonino A. III et Geta conss.

[2] Imp. Antoninus A. Sextilio. Si arbiter datus a magistratibus, cum sententiam dixit, in libertate morabatur, quamvis postea in servitutem depulsus sit, sententia ab eo dicta habet rei iudicatae auctoritatem.

[3] Imp. Alexander A. Vettio. Praeses provinciae non ignorat definitivam sententiam, quae condemnationem vel absolutionem non continet, pro iusta non haberi.

PP. k. Oct. Maximo II et Aeliano conss.

and, once these have been corrected, they must transfer them to the protocol (in libellum) immediately and accurately, and, once they have been written, the judges must read them from the protocol to the parties, and they are to have no opportunity to correct or change them afterward. 1. Excepted from this rule are the most eminent Praetorian Prefects, and others who occupy illustrious offices, and all other judges of illustrious rank. They are permitted to have their final decisions read by members of their official staff or other persons who serve in their office.

Given January 21, in the consulship of Gratian Augustus, for the second time, and Probus (371).

[3][131] The same Augusti to Probus, Praetorian Prefect. pr. We have ordered by general provisions that all judges to whom We give power to render justice in the provinces shall, after cases have been tried, give final judgment by reading their written decisions. 1. And We add to this provision that a verdict that is spoken but not written does not deserve to have even the name of a verdict, nor is the customary appeal required to rescind such faulty decisions.

Given December 3, at Trier, in the consulship of Gratian Augustus, for the third time, and Equitius (374).

Forty-Fifth Title Verdicts and Interim Orders of All Judges

[1] Emperors SEVERUS and ANTONINUS Augusti to Quintilianus. We do not see the reason behind the verdict of your predecessor, who tried a case between a claimant and a (female owner's) procurator and rendered judgment against the female owner even though she was not legally involved. You can, therefore, retry the case anew.

Given May 29, in the consulship of Antoninus Augustus, for the third time, and Geta (208).

[2] Emperor ANTONINUS Augustus to Sextilius. If a judge arbitrator appointed by magistrates was living as a free man when he rendered his decision, it has the force of a judgment, even if he was later forced into servitude.

[3] Emperor ALEXANDER Augustus to Vettius. The provincial governor is aware that a final verdict which does not contain a condemnation or absolution is not considered legal.

Posted October 1, in the consulship of Maximus, for the second time, and Aelianus (223).

[131] = C.Th. 4.17.1.

[4] Idem A. Severae. Prolatam a praeside sententiam contra solitum iudiciorum ordinem auctoritatem rei iudicatae non obtinere certum est.

PP. XV k. Ian. Alexandro A. III et Dione conss.

[5] Imp. Philippus A. et Philippus C. Montano. Cum eorum, qui principaliter fisco tenebantur, bona ea lege fideiussoribus procurator tradi iusserit, ut ipsi indemnitatem fisco praestarent, nec a sententia eius intercesserit provocatio, consequens est datae formae obtemperari.

[6] Imppp. Carus Carinus et Numerianus AAA. Zoilo. Cum sententiam praesidis irritam esse dicis, quod non publice, sed in secreto loco officio eius non praesente sententiam suam dixit, nullum tibi ex his quae ab eo decreta sunt praeiudicium generandum esse constat.

PP. V k. Dec. Caro et Carino conss.

[7] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. et CC. Isidorae. pr. Ex stipulatione parta actione pacisci proximis personis suadendo praeses provinciae verborum obligationem, quam certo iure tolli tantum licet, extinguere non potest, nec vox omnis iudicis iudicati continet auctoritatem, cum potestatem sententiae certis finibus concludi saepe sit constitutum. 1. Quapropter si nihil causa cognita secundum iuris rationem pronuntiatum est, vox pacisci suadentis praesidis actionem tuam perimere, si quam habuisti, minime potuit.

[8] Idem AA. et CC. Licinio. pr. Libera quidem Theodota, quam ex emptionis causa vel in solutum creditori traditam proponis, pronuntiata citra provocationis auxilium sententia rescindi non potest. 1. Verum si mota quaestione, praemissa denuntiatione ei, qui auctor huius mulieris fuit, iudicatum processit, quanti tua interest, empti, si emisti, vel ob debitum reddendum, si in solutum data est, repetere non prohiberis.

[9] Idem AA. et CC. Domno. Post sententiam, quae finibus certis concluditur, ab eo qui pronuntiaverat vel eius successore de quaestione, quae iam decisa est, statuta rei iudicatae non obtinent auctoritatem:

[4][132] The same Augustus to Severa. It is certain that a verdict rendered by the governor in violation of the usual rules in administering justice does not have the force of a judgment.

Posted December 18, in the consulship of Alexander Augustus, for the third time, and Dio (229).

[5] Emperors PHILIP Augustus and Caesar PHILIP to Montanus. Since the Procurator ordered that the property of those who are liable to the Treasury as principals should be turned over to sureties upon the condition that these indemnify the Treasury, and an appeal on his verdict has not been lodged, it follows that this order should be obeyed.

[6] Emperors CARUS, CARINUS, and NUMERIAN Augusti to Zoilus. Since you state that the verdict of the governor is void because he did not pronounce his verdict publicly but in a secret place without the presence of his official staff, it is clear that his decisions create no prejudice for you.

Posted November 27, in the consulship of Carus and Carinus (283).

[7][133] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti and the Caesars to Isidora. pr. If a right of action was acquired by a stipulation, the provincial governor could not extinguish such a verbal obligation by persuading persons who were close relations to settle, for it can only be eliminated in a set legal manner. Nor does every pronouncement of a judge have the force of an adjudication, since it has often been held that the force of a verdict is limited within definite bounds. 1. Hence, if no pronouncement is made after the trial of a case according to the principle of law, the pronouncement of the governor persuading a settlement could in no way destroy your cause of action, if you had any.

[8] The same Augusti and Caesars to Licinius. pr. If Theodota, who you say was delivered to you pursuant to a purchase or in payment of a debt, was judicially pronounced to be a free woman, the verdict cannot be vacated without appealing. 1. But if the suit was started and notice was given to the one who sold this woman and he proceeded to trial, you are not forbidden to recover your interest in an action on purchase, if you bought her, or an action on recovery of debt, if she was given to you in payment of debt.

[9] The same Augusti and Caesars to Domnus. After a verdict, which is confined by definite limits, is rendered, a subsequent decision of the same question, made either by the judge who gave the first one or by his successor, does not have the force of an adjudication. But a judgment as to possession does not nam nec de possessione pronuntiata proprietati ullum praeiudicium adferunt nec interlocutiones ullam causam plerumque perimunt.

[132] Combine with C. 6.34.1.
[133] See C. 8.37.5, dated November 27, 293.

S. III non. April. CC. conss.

[10] Idem AA. et CC. Menodoro. Nulli, qui statuendi non habet facultatem, interdicere patriae cuiquam permittitur.

[11] Idem AA. et CC. Titiano. Cum iudex in definitiva sententia iusiurandum solummodo praestari praecipiat, non tamen addat, quid ex recusatione vel praestatione sacramenti fieri oportet, huiusmodi sententiam nullam vim obtinere palam est.

[12] Impp. Arcadius et Honorius AA. Iuliano proconsuli Africae. Iudices tam Latina quam Graeca lingua sententias proferre possunt.

D. v id. Ian. Mediolani Caesario et Attico conss.

[13] Imp. Iustinianus A. Demostheni pp. Nemo iudex vel arbiter existimet neque consultationes, quas non rite iudicatas esse putaverit, sequendum, et multo magis sententias eminentissimorum praefectorum vel aliorum procerum (non enim, si quid non bene dirimatur, hoc et in aliorum iudicum vitium extendi oportet, cum non exemplis, sed legibus iudicandum est), nec si cognitionales sint amplissimae praefecturae vel alicuius maximi magistratus prolatae sententiae: sed omnes iudices nostros veritatem et legum et iustitiae sequi vestigia sancimus.

D. III k. Nov.[vi]

[14] Idem A. Demostheni pp. Cum Papinianus summi ingenii vir in quaestionibus suis rite disposuit non solum iudicem de absolutione rei iudicare, sed ipsum actorem, si e contrario obnoxius fuerit inventus, condemnare, huiusmodi sententiam non solum roborandam, sed etiam augendam esse sancimus, ut liceat iudici vel contra actorem ferre sententiam et aliquid eum daturum vel facturum pronuntiare, nulla ei opponenda exceptione, quod non competens iudex agentis esse cognoscitur. cuius enim in agendo observavit arbitrium, eum habere et contra se iudicem in eodem negotio non dedignetur.

[vi] <Recitata septimo miliario in novo consistorio palatii Iustiniani> d. III k. Nov. <Decio vc. cons.> (Corcoran).

prejudice the question of ownership, nor do interim orders (interlocutiones) generally destroy a cause of action.

Written April 3, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[10] The same Augusti and Caesars to Menodorus. No one who lacks the power of rendering judgment can banish anyone from his native land.

[11] The same Augusti and Caesars to Titianus. When a judge merely directs in his final verdict that an oath shall be taken, but does not add what the consequences of either refusing the oath or taking it should be, it is clear that his verdict has no validity.

[12] Emperors ARCADIUS and HONORIUS Augusti to Julian, Proconsul of Africa. Judges may give verdicts in the Latin as well as the Greek language.

Given January 9, at Milan, in the consulship of Caesarius and Atticus (397).

[13][134] Emperor JUSTINIAN Augustus to Demosthenes, Praetorian Prefect. No judge or judge arbitrator needs to follow answers to a consultation (consultatio) which he does not believe to be correct, much less the opinions of the most eminent Prefects or other high officials, nor even the judicial decisions of the most high Prefecture or of any other of the highest officials. For if a case has been improperly resolved, it should not be extended so as to vitiate other judges, since judgments should be made based on laws not examples. We ordain that all Our judges must follow the truth and the path of both law and justice.

Read at the seventh milestone in the New Consistory of Justinian's Palace. Given October 30, in the consulship of the vir clarissimus Decius (529).

[14][135] The same Augustus to Demosthenes, Praetorian Prefect. Since Papinian, a man of great genius, rightly held in his Questions that a judge may not only decide to absolve a defendant, but may also condemn the plaintiff if he should be found to be liable, We ordain that this opinion should not only be confirmed but also extended. Therefore let it be permitted for a judge to give judgment against the plaintiff and order him to give or do something, and there can be no objection that the judge was not competent to give judgment against the plaintiff. For if a person, while acting as plaintiff, respected this man's judgment, he may not deem him unworthy to serve as judge against himself in the same matter.[136]

[134] Possibly to combine with 14.

[135] Possibly to combine with 13.

[136] MS P reports the subscription: "Given November 17 in the consulship of Lampadius and (H) Orestes (530)." This cannot be reconciled with the known dates for Demosthenes' (second) Praetorian Prefecture, which ended after October 30, 529; see PLRE II Fl. Theodorus Petrus Demosthenes 4. The subscription is thus to be transferred to §16.

[15] [Ὁ αὐτὸς βασιλεὺς Ἰουλιανῷ ἐπάρχῳ πραιτωρίων.] Ἡ διάταξις κελεύει πολλῶν ὄντων ἐν τῇ δίκῃ κεφαλαίων δύνασθαι τὸν δικαστὴν ἐπὶ τισιν αὐτῶν ἐξαγαγεῖν ἀπόφασιν τελείαν καὶ τότε πάλιν ζητῆσαι περὶ τῶν ἄλλων καὶ πάλιν ἐξενεγκεῖν τὴν δοκοῦσαν αὐτῷ ἀπόφασιν καὶ μὴ ἀναγκάζεσθαι μίαν ἀπόφασιν περὶ πάντων ἅμα λέγειν τῶν κεφαλαίων.

[16] Idem A. Iuliano pp. Cum solitum est in sententiis iudicum sic interlocutionem proferri, ut non liceat partibus ante definitivam sententiam ad appellationis vel recusationis venire auxilium, quidam putabant non licere ante litem contestatam nec iudicem recusare, quemadmodum nec ab eo appellare. cum enim simul utrumque vocabulum ponitur tam appellationis quam recusationis, provocatio autem ante litem contestatam non potest porrigi, putabant, quod nec recusare quidem iudicem cuidam conceditur ante litem contestatam. quod minime vetitum est. caveant itaque iudices huiusmodi sermonem simul et sine certa distinctione proferre.

D. xv k. Dec. Lampadio et Oresta vv. cc. conss.

XXXXVI De Sententia, Quae sine Certa Quantitate Prolata Est

[1] Impp. Severus et Antoninus AA. Aelianae. Cum iudicem, quoad pecunia condemnationis soluta fuisset, pendendis usuris legem dixisse profitearis, non contra iuris formam sententiam datam palam est.

[2] Imp. Alexander A. Marcellino. Quamquam pecuniae quantitas sententia curatoris rei publicae non continetur, sententia tamen eius rata est, quoniam indemnitatem rei publicae praestari iussit.

[3] Imp. Gordianus A. Aemilio. Haec sententia: 'omnem debiti quantitatem cum usuris competentibus solve' iudicati actionem parere non potest, cum apud iudices ita demum sine certa quantitate facta condemnatio auctoritate rei iudicatae censeatur, si parte aliqua actorum certa sit quantitas comprehensa.

[15][137] [The same Emperor to Julian, Praetorian Prefect.] The constitution orders that if many points are involved in a suit, the judge may give a final decision on some of them and then proceed to investigate others and again give a decision on them, and he shall not be compelled to pronounce his decision on all the points at once.

[16] The same Augustus to Julian, Praetorian Prefect. As it has been customary in judicial sentences to frame an interim order (interlocutio) in such a way that the parties could not have recourse to an appeal or an objection to the judge (recusatio) before the final decision, some have thought that the parties could not object to the judge (recusare) before joinder of issue just as they could not appeal from him. For as both expressions, "appeal" and "objection to the judge," are used together, and as no appeal can be made before joinder of issue, they thought that the judge could not be objected to before joinder of issue. But that is not forbidden. Judges, therefore, must be careful not to use these expressions at the same time and without definite distinction.

Given November 17, in the consulship of the viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestes (530).

Forty-Sixth Title A Verdict Rendered Without Naming a Definite Sum

[1] Emperors Severus and Antoninus Augusti to Aeliana. Since you state that the judge fixed the conditions for paying interest until the monetary amount of the judgment could be satisfied, it is clear that the verdict was not given contrary to the legal norm.

[2] Emperor Alexander Augustus to Marcellinus. Although no sum of money is mentioned in the verdict of the curator of the municipality, his verdict is nevertheless valid since he ordered indemnity to be furnished to the municipality.

[3] Emperor Gordian Augustus to Aemilius. The verdict: "Pay the whole sum of the debt with corresponding interest," cannot give rise to an action on the judgment (actio iudicati), since a condemnation made at the trial stage without fixing an amount is in fact considered an adjudicated matter (only) if a definite sum is named somewhere in the record (acta).

[137] Possibly to combine with C. 3.2.5, whence the inscription is restored; it also has the subscription: "Given June 24, at Chalcedon, in the consulship of Lampadius and Orestes (530)." Lounghis et al. accept this date. The preserved text is a Greek synopsis of the original constitution found at Basilika 9.1.81.

[4] Idem A. Saturninae. Haec sententia: 'quae bona fide accepisti, solve,' cum incertum esset quid accepisset quantumque ab eo peteretur, praesertim cum ipse qui extra ordinem iudicabat interlocutus sit dotem datam quae repeteretur non liquidam esse, iudicati auctoritate non nititur. cum igitur is qui postea iudicabat contra te certam sententiam protulit neque ab statutis provocaveris, ipsa tuo facto confirmasti iudicatum.

XXXXVII De Sententiis, Quae pro Eo Quod Interest Proferuntur

[1] Imp. Iustinianus A. Johanni pp. pr. Cum pro eo quod interest dubitationes antiquae in infinitum productae sunt, melius nobis visum est huiusmodi prolixitatem prout possibile est in angustum coartare. 1. Sancimus itaque in omnibus casibus, qui certam habent quantitatem vel naturam, veluti in venditionibus et locationibus et omnibus contractibus, hoc quod interest dupli quantitatem minime excedere: in aliis autem casibus, qui incerti esse videntur, iudices, qui causas dirimendas suscipiunt, per suam subtilitatem requirere, ut, quod re vera inducitur damnum, hoc reddatur et non ex quibusdam machinationibus et immodicis perversionibus in circuitus inextricabiles redigatur, ne, dum in infinitum computatio reducitur, pro sua impossibilitate cadat, cum scimus esse naturae congruum eas tantummodo poenas exigi, quae cum competenti moderatione proferuntur vel a legibus certo fine conclusae statuuntur. 2. Et hoc non solum in damno, sed etiam in lucro nostra amplectitur constitutio, quia et ex eo veteres quod interest statuerunt: et sit omnibus, secundum quod dictum est, finis antiquae prolixitatis huius constitutionis recitatio.

D. k. Sept. Constantinopoli post consulatum Lampadii et Orestae vv. cc.

XXXXVIII Si Non a Competenti Iudice Iudicatum Esse Dicatur

[1] Imp. Alexander A. Sabiniano. Iudex ad certam rem datus, si de aliis pronuntiavit, quam quod ad eam speciem pertinet, nihil egit.

III non. Ian. Maximo II et Aeliano conss.

[4] The same Augustus to Saturnina. The verdict: "Pay what you received in good faith," does not have the authority of an adjudication since it was uncertain what he had received and how much was claimed from him. This is especially true because the judge himself who tried the case, under the extraordinary procedure, stated in an interim order that the amount of the dowry which was claimed was not clear. Since, therefore, the judge who later gave judgment against you reported a definite amount and you did not appeal from his decision, you ratified the judgment by your own act.

Forty-Seventh Title Verdicts Given for Indemnification of One's Interest

[1] Emperor JUSTINIAN Augustus to John, Praetorian Prefect. pr. Since the ancient ambiguities as to indemnification of one's interest (id quod interest) are innumerable, We thought it best to confine such immoderation as narrowly as possible. 1. Therefore, We ordain that in all cases which involve a definite sum or which are definite in their nature, like sales, leases and all contracts, no one's interest shall exceed double the amount stated. But in other cases, where the amount is uncertain, the judges who try the cases must deploy their attentiveness to detail in order that the actual damage might be recompensed and that it not be pulled into inextricable complications through certain machinations and immoderate perversions, lest the computation be extended endlessly and thus fail because of its own impossibility. Indeed, We know it to be consonant with the law of nature that only those penalties can be extracted which are doled out with appropriate moderation and regulated so as to be bounded by a definite end. 2. This is applicable not only to damage proper but also to loss of profits, since the ancients also considered that in fixing the amount of indemnification. May the recitation of this constitution set an end to the ancient immoderation for all, according to what has been said.

Given September 1, at Constantinople, in the post-consulate of the viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestes (531).

Forty-Eighth Title When Judgment Is Said to Have Been Given by One Who Is Not the Appropriate Judge

[1] Emperor ALEXANDER Augustus to Sabinianus. If a judge appointed for a definite matter gives judgment on some other matter, he acted without effect.

January 3, in the consulship of Maximus, for the second time, and Aelianus (223).

[2] Imp. Gordianus A. Liciniae. Si militaris iudex super ea causa, de qua civilibus actionibus disceptandum fuit, non datus, a quo dari poterat, cognovit, etiam remota appellatione id quod ab eo statutum est firmitatem non habet iudicati.

[3] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. et CC. Philetae. Si de proprietate datus iudex adversus te nihil super hac statuit, rector aditus provinciae causam hanc cognoscere suaque decidere sententia curabit, cum et si quid de possessione pronuntiatum probetur, hoc causae proprietatis minime noceat.

S. non. Nov. Heracleae CC. conss.

[4] Imppp. Gratianus Valentinianus et Theodosius AAA. ad Potitum vicarium. Et in privatorum causis huiusmodi forma servetur, ne quemquam litigatorum sententia non a suo iudice dicta constringat.

D. x k. Oct. Romae Ausonio et Olybrio conss.

XXXXVIIII De Poena Iudicis, Qui Male Iudicavit, vel Eius, Qui Iudicem vel Adversarium Corrumpere Curavit

[1] Imp. Antoninus A. ad Gaudium. Constitit in quacumque causa sive privata sive publica sive fiscali, ut, cuicumque data fuerit pecunia, vel iudici vel adversario, amittat actionem is, qui diffidentia iustae sententiae in pecuniae corruptela spem negotii reposuerit.

D. XIIII k. Ian. duobus Aspris conss.

[2] Imp. Constantinus A. ad Felicem praesidem Corsicae. De eo, qui pretio depravatus aut gratia perperam iudicaverit, ei vindicta quem laeserit non solum existimationis dispendiis, sed etiam litis discrimine praebeatur.

D. VIII k. Nov. Sirmi Constantino A. V et Licinio C. conss.

[2] Emperor G*ORDIAN* Augustus to Licinia. If a military judge tries a case which should be tried in civil court without having been appointed by someone with the authority to appoint him, his decision does not have the force of a judgment and even the possibility of appeal is removed (as superfluous).

[3] Emperors D*IOCLETIAN and* M*AXIMIAN Augusti and the Caesars to Philetas.* If a judge appointed to try a question of ownership decided nothing against you on that point, the provincial governor (rector) will, when you go before him, try to decide that question himself, since even if a judgment is proven to have been rendered concerning possession, this in no way harms your case for ownership

Written November 5, at Heraclea, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[4][138] Emperors G*RATIAN,* V*ALENTINIAN, and* T*HEODOSIUS Augusti to Politus, Vicar.* This rule is observed in cases between private individuals as well, lest a verdict given by an inappropriate judge bind any of the litigants.

Given[139] September 22, at Rome, in the consulship of Ausonius and Olybrius (379).

Forty-Ninth Title Punishment of a Judge Who Adjudicated Corruptly or of Someone Who Caused a Judge or Opponent to be Corrupted

[1][140] Emperor A*NTONINUS Augustus to Gaudius.* It is well known that if any money should be given in any case, whether private, public, or Treasury-related, regardless of whether the money is given to a judge or an opponent, anyone who, from lack of confidence in a just decision, placed his hope in the corruption of money should lose his right of action.

Given December 19, in the consulship of the two Aspri (212).

[2][141] Emperor C*ONSTANTINE Augustus to Felix, Governor of Corsica.* A judge who gives a wrong decision distorted by bribery or favoritism shall be punished not only by the loss of his good name, but he will also be liable to the party whom he injured for the value of the suit.

Given October 25, at Sirmium, in the consulship of Constantine Augustus, for the fifth time, and Licinius Caesar (319).

[138] = C.Th. 4.16.2.

[139] Gothofredus emended to "posted" since no emperor is known to have been at Rome to have issued this constitution in September 379.

[140] See D. 3.6.1.3.

[141] = C.Th. 1.16.3; combine with C.Th. 2.6.2. C. epitomates C.Th. Seeck dates to October 24, 318.

L Sententiam Rescindi Non Posse

[1] Imp. Gordianus A. Secundo. Neque suam neque decessoris sui sententiam quemquam posse revocare in dubium non venit: nec necesse esse ab eiusmodi decreto interponere provocationem explorati iuris est.
PP. k. Mart.

[2] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. et CC. Alexandrae. pr. Peremptorias exceptiones omissas initio, antequam sententia feratur, opponi posse perpetuum edictum manifeste declarat. 1. Quod si aliter actum fuerit, in integrum restitutio permittitur. nam iudicatum contra maiores annis viginti quinque non oppositae praescriptionis velamento citra remedium appellationis rescindi non potest.
VII k. Ian. Nicomediae CC. conss.

[3] Imp. Constantinus A. ad Proculum. Impetrata rescripta non placet admitti, si decisae semel causae fuerint iudiciali sententia, quam provocatio nulla suspendit: sed eos, qui tale rescriptum meruerint, etiam limine iudiciorum expelli.
D. VII k. Ian. Constantino A. V et Licinio conss.

LI De Fructibus et Litis Expensis

[1] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. et CC. Actae. Hoc fructuum nomine continetur, quod iustis sumptibus deductis superest.
III non. April. CC. conss.

[2] Impp. Valentinianus et Valens AA. Olybrio pu. Litigator victus, qui post conventionem rei incubarit alienae, non in sola rei redhibitione teneatur nec tantum fructuum praestationem aut eorum quos ipse percepit agnoscat, sed eos, quos percipi oportuisse, non quos eum redegisse constabit, exsolvat ex eo, ex quo re in iudicium deducta scientiam malae

Fiftieth Title A Verdict May Not be Rescinded

[1] Emperor GORDIAN Augustus to Secundus. It is beyond doubt that no one (acting as a judge) may revoke his own decision or that of his predecessor in office. It is also settled law that it is unnecessary to appeal from a (substitute) decision of this sort.

Posted March 1.

[2] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti and the Caesars to Alexandra. pr. The Perpetual Edict clearly declares that when peremptory defenses are omitted in the beginning, they may be set up (at any time) before the decision is given.[142] 1. But if that is not done, restoration of rights is permitted (to minors under 25 years). For without the remedy of appeal, a judgment against a man who is more than 25 years old cannot be rescinded under the pretense that such a defense was not set up.

December 26, at Nicomedia, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[3] Emperor CONSTANTINE Augustus to Proculus.[143] It is not permitted to admit rescripts obtained once cases have been disposed of through a judicial verdict that has not been suspended by an appeal. But those who have obtained such a rescript shall be expelled from the very threshold of the courts.

Given December 26, in the consulship of Constantine Augustus, for the fifth time, and Licinius (319).

Fifty-First Title Fruits and the Expenses of Litigation

[1] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti and the Caesars to Acta. The term "fruits" means: what remains after just expenses have been deducted.

April 3, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[2][144] Emperors VALENTINIAN and VALENS Augusti to Olybrius, City Prefect. A litigant who was defeated and who after summons remained in possession of another's property is bound to restore not only the property, nor just the fruits which he acknowledges he collected, but he must pay the fruits which he ought to have collected and not those which he is acknowledged to have received, beginning from the period when he came to know that he was in wrongful [142] Exceptiones peremptoriae are defenses that can be interposed at any point in the trial and, if proved, render the plaintiff's claim void. Most common defenses are peremptory.

[143] = C.Th. 4.16.1, which reports "petitions (preces) and rescripts."

[144] = C.Th. 4.18.1, with considerable changes affecting the substance. Seeck dates to April 25, 369.

possessionis accepit. heredis quoque succedentis in vitium par habenda fortuna est.

D. VII k. Mart. Treviris Valentiniano np. et Victore conss.

[3] Impp. Honorius et Theodosius AA. Asclepiodoto pp. Terminato transactoque negotio posthac nulli actio neque ex rescripto super sumptuum repetitione praestetur, nisi iudex, qui de principali negotio sententiam promulgavit, cominus partibus constitutis iuridica pronuntiatione signaverit victori causae restitui debere expensas aut super his querellam iure competere. post absolutum enim dimissumque iudicium nefas est litem alteram consurgere ex litis primae materia.

D. III k. April. Constantinopoli Asclepiodoto et Mariniano conss.

[4] Impp. Valentiniani et Marciani AA. edictum ad populum. Non ignoret is, cuius ex interpellatione aliquis secundum datam formam in longinqua fuerit protractus examina, quod, si culpa sui fuerit dilata cognitio vel minime actioni suae adfuerit vel delata probaverit, pro calumnia quidem poenam luat legibus constitutam, pro vero pecuniaria causa post dispendia, post sumptus considerata quantitate postulatorum vel medii itineris intervallo condemnationem pro aestimatione iudicis sustinebit.

D. V id. Oct. Constantinopoli Valentiniano A. VII et Avieno conss.

[5] [Αὐτοκράτωρ Ζήνων Α.] pr. Ἡ διάταξις κελεύει, ὥστε πάντα δικαστὴν ἐν τῇ ἀποφάσει αὐτοῦ κελεύειν τὸν ἡττηθέντα διδόναι τὰ δαπανήματα πάντα τὰ ἐν τῷ δικαστηρίῳ γενόμενα. ἔχοντος ἐξουσίαν αὐτοῦ τοῦ δικαστοῦ καὶ ὑπερβαίνειν τὴν δαπάνην ἕως τῆς δεκάτης μοίρας τῶν δαπανηθέντων, ἐὰν αὐτὸν ἡ ἀναισχυντία τοῦ ἡττηθέντος μέρους πρὸς τοῦτο παρακινήσῃ, ὥστε τὸ ὑπὲρ τὰ δαπανήματα τῷ δημοσίῳ λόγῳ διαφέρειν, εἰ μή τι ἄρα ὁ δικαστὴς τὴν τριβὴν τοῦ νενικηκότος μέρους βουληθεὶς θεραπεῦσαι μέρος τί ποτε ἐκ τούτων αὐτῷ ἀφορίσει. 1. Καταδικαζομένου μὴ μόνον τοῦ ἐνάγοντος καὶ τοῦ ἐναγομένου, ὅτε πρόσφορος ἑκατέρῳ ἐστὶν ὁ δικαστής, ἀλλὰ κἂν τοῦ ἐνάγοντος ἀπρόσφορός ἐστιν, ἡττηθῇ δὲ ἐξ ἀντεναγωγῆς, μὴ δυνάμενος ἐκεῖνον τὸν δικαστὴν παραιτήσασθαι, εἴτε ἄρχοντες εἴησαν δικασταὶ εἴτε θεῖοι διαιτηταί· ἔχουσι γὰρ καὶ οὗτοι ἐκβιβαστὰς καὶ possession due to the lawsuit being brought. An heir who succeeds to a bad title is subject to the same fate.

Given February 23, at Trier, in the consulship of Valentinian, Most Noble Boy, and Victor (369).

[3][145] Emperors HONORIUS and THEODOSIUS Augusti to Asclepiodotus, Praetorian Prefect. Once a suit has been terminated and completed, no action shall lie to recover expenses even pursuant to an imperial rescript, unless the judge who rendered the verdict in the main suit has declared, by judicial pronouncement while the parties were still present, that the expenses should be repaid to the winner of the case or that a complaint to recover them has legal force. For it is wrong that after a judgment is resolved and dismissed, a second suit should arise out of the substance of the first.

Given March 30, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Asclepiodotus and Marinianus (423).

[4][146] An Edict of Emperors VALENTINIAN and MARCIAN Augusti to the People. Anyone at whose instigation another is dragged to a distant court pursuant to law should not forget that, if the case is protracted through his fault, or if he fails to be present or fails to prove his allegations, he must pay a penalty fixed by law for vexatious litigation (calumnia); he will, in a civil case, aside from costs and expenses incur a penalty fixed at the discretion of the judge taking into consideration the sum demanded by his adversary or the distance of the average journey.

Given October 11, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Valentinian Augustus, for the third time, and Avienus (450).

[5][147] [The Emperor ZENO Augustus... pr. The constitution orders that every judge shall in his verdict order the loser to pay all expenses of litigation. The judge has the authority to exceed the expenses up to one-tenth of the value of what was spent if the insolence of the losing party moves him to this, in such a way that the excess over the expenses shall accrue to the Treasury, unless the judge wishes to make good the losses of the winning party and sets aside some part of the sum for him. 1. Not only may the plaintiff and defendant be condemned thus when the judge has authority to give judgment against either party, but also when he has no such power over the plaintiff, but the latter is defeated by a counter claim, since he cannot refuse that judge, whether the ἐπείκτας. 2. Εἰ δὲ μὴ τοῦτο ποιήσει ὁ δικαστής, αὐτὸς τὴν ζημίαν ταύτην ἀναγκάζεται θεραπεῦσαι τῷ νενικηκότι μέρει. 3. Ἐὰν δέ τις ἐναγόμενος εὐγνωμόνως ἀποδώσει ἢ ἐνάγων ἀποστῇ τῆς δίκης ἢ καὶ ὁ δικαστὴς εὕρῃ αὐτὸν τῇ ἀληθείᾳ οὐχὶ συκοφάντην, ἀλλὰ ἐπὶ ἀμφιβόλῳ πράγματι δικαζόμενον, ὁ τοιοῦτος ἐκφεύγει τὴν τῶν δαπανημάτων καταδίκην. 4. Δῆλον δέ, ὅτι ἐπὶ τῶν χαμαιδικαστῶν ὁ ἄρχων ἐστὶν ὁ ὀφείλων αὐτοῖς ἀφορίσαι ταξεώτην τὸν ταῦτα μεθοδεύοντα.

[145] = C.Th. 4.18.2; combine with C. 7.62.31; C.Th. 11.31.9.

[146] = Nov. Marc. 1.1.7.

[147] Possibly to combine with C. 1.51.13 (dated June 26, 487), 2.7.18–19 (dated December 27, 487), 3.3.6, 3.10.1. The preserved text is a Greek synopsis of the original constitution found at Bas. 9.3.69.

D. VII k. April. post consulatum Longini.

[6] Imp. Anastasius A. Stephano magistro militum. Cum quidam per leges sacrasque constitutiones, alii per speciales largitates sibi praestituta privilegia praetendunt tam super sportulis pro conventionibus usque ad certam quantitatem praebendis quam super expensis litium vel minuendis vel penitus non agnoscendis, per hanc legem decernimus, ut, quicumque huiusmodi privilegio munitus est vel postea talem praerogativam quolibet modo meruerit, sciat, et si quos ipse utpote obnoxius sibi pro quacumque criminali vel civili causa constitutos in accusationem deduxerit, hos nihilo minus isdem privilegiis potituros, quoniam non est ferendum eos, qui praefatas praerogativas, ut ante latum est, praetendunt, aliquid plus ab adversariis suis quaerere concedi, quam ipsi ab aliis pulsati facere patiantur: ita scilicet, ut haec forma modis omnibus observetur super privilegiis per liberalitates vel generaliter quibusdam officiis aut scholis seu dignitatibus vel specialiter certis personis praestitis vel postea praebendis, sive hoc ipsum expressim principalibus dispositionibus vel adfatibus insertum sive praetermissum sit vel fuerit.

LII De Re Iudicata

[1] Imp. Antoninus A. Stellatori. Rebus quidem iudicatis standum est. sed si probare poteris eum cui condemnatus es id quod furto amisisse videbatur recepisse, adversus iudicati agentem doli exceptione opposita tueri te poteris.

XII k. Mart. Antonino A. IIII et Balbino conss.

[2] Idem A. Pacatiano. Res iudicatae si sub praetextu computationis instaurentur, nullus erit litium finis.

PP. prid. non. ... Romae Laeto et Cereale conss.

judges are magistrates or imperial arbitrators: for these also have subordinates and court clerks (apparitores exsecutoresque, ἐκβιβαστὰς καὶ ἐπείκτας). 2. If the judge fails to do so, he must himself make good the damage to the winning party. 3. But if a defendant shows his good faith by paying, or if the plaintiff abandons the suit, or the judge truly finds that he is not a malicious litigant but that the case was over a contentious matter, he will escape condemnation to pay the costs. 4. It is proper in the instance of petty judges for the magistrate to be the one who assigns a subordinate that can manage these affairs.

Given March 26, in the post-consulate of Longinus (487).

[6] Emperor ANASTASIUS Augustus to Stephanus, Master of the Soldiers. Some persons claim that, under laws and imperial constitutions or through special munificence, they have obtained privileges of having to pay only a certain amount as fees before a summons, and less than the usual amount of the expenses of suit or none at all. Therefore We decree by this law that, whoever has now obtained or hereafter obtains such privilege in any manner, should know that, if he himself sues anyone as liable to him in a criminal or civil case, the defendant shall have the same privileges. For it is not to be tolerated that those who, as stated before, claim the aforesaid prerogatives should be permitted to seek from their opponents anything more than they would pay if sued by others. And this rule shall be followed in every respect in connection with privileges already given or hereafter to be given by special munificence, or generally to any officials, departments (scholis), ranks, or to individuals by special grant, whether this is expressly stated in imperial orders or rescripts or it happens to have been omitted.[148]

Fifty-Second Title An Adjudicated Matter[149]

[1] Emperor ANTONINUS Augustus to Stellator. Once matters have been adjudicated, they must remain so. But if you can prove that the man who obtained judgment against you received back (from some other source) what he seemed to have lost by theft, you can protect yourself using the defense of fraud (exceptio doli) against him when he sues you on adjudicated matters.

February 18, in the consulship of Antoninus Augustus, for the fourth time, and Balbinus (213).

[2] The same Augustus to Pacatianus. If an adjudicated matter were reopened under the pretext of (an error in) computation, there could be no end to law-suits.

Posted on the day before the nones of ..., at Rome, in the consulship of Laetus and Cerealis (215).

[148] Lounghis et al. date to between 491 and 518.
[149] See D. 42.1.

[3] Idem A. Demetrio. Si pecuniam, quam mala ratione intercepisse vos apparuit, iussi sitis inferre cum poena et comperto praecepto praesidis non provocaveritis, universam quantitatem debetis inferre.

[4] Imp. Gordianus A. Antonino. Sub specie novorum instrumentorum postea repertorum res iudicatas restaurari exemplo grave est.
D. VII id. Mart.

[5] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. et CC. Valentino. Ad solutionem dilationem petentem adquievisse sententiae manifeste probatur, sicut eum, qui quolibet modo sententiae adquieverit. nec enim instaurari finita rerum iudicatarum patitur auctoritas.
S. prid. id. Febr. Sirmi CC. conss.

[6] Impp. Honorius et Theodosius AA. Iuliano proconsuli Africae. Gesta, quae sunt translata in publica monumenta, habere volumus perpetuam firmitatem. neque enim morte cognitoris perire debet publica fides.
D. III k. Sept. Romae Constantio et Constante conss.

LIII De Exsecutione Rei Iudicatae

[1] Impp. Severus et Antoninus AA. Iustino. Nimis propere iudex pignora Marcellae capi ac distrahi iussit ante rem iudicatam. prius est ergo, ut servato ordine actionem adversus eam dirigas et causa cognita sententiam accipias.
PP. III k. Febr. Albino et Aemiliano conss.

[2] Imp. Antoninus A. Maximo. Si causam iudicati non novasti, rem iudicatam praeses provinciae etiam pignoribus captis ac distractis ad emolumentum perduci iubebit. quod si novata causa est, ex stipulatu tibi actio competit et iudice accepto secundum iuris formam experire.

[3] The same Augustus to Demetrius. If you were ordered to pay the money which you were shown to have embezzled by false accounting, together with a penalty, and you did not appeal when you learned of the governor's order, you must pay the full amount.

[4] Emperor Gordian Augustus to Antoninus. It sets an unseemly example to reopen an adjudicated matter on the pretense of the subsequent discovery of new documents.

Given March 9.

[5] Emperors Diocletian and Maximian Augusti and the Caesars to Valentinus. A man who asks time for payment is clearly proven to have acquiesced in the verdict, just like one who acquiesces in a verdict in any other manner. And the law of adjudicated matters does not permit completed cases to be reopened.

Written February 12, at Sirmium, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[6][150] Emperors Honorius and Theodosius Augusti to Julian, Proconsul of Africa. We want transactions that are transferred into public records to have perpetual force. Public trust should not perish with the death of the trial judge.

Given August 30, at Rome, in the consulship of Constantius and Constans (414).

Fifty-Third Title Execution of a Judgment[151]

[1] Emperors Severus and Antoninus Augusti to Justinus. The (trial) judge was too hasty in ordering the pledges of Marcella to be seized and sold before the matter was adjudicated. You should, accordingly, first, by observing the regular order, commence an action (for execution) against her, and obtain judgment after the trial of the case.

Posted January 30, in the consulship of Albinus and Aemilianus (206).

[2] Emperor Antoninus Augustus to Maximus. If you did not seek novation of the judgment, the provincial governor will order the adjudicated matter to be satisfied by the seizure and sale of pledges. But if there was a novation of the case (through stipulation), you have an action on stipulation, and once a judge is appointed, you should try the case according to law.

[150] = C.Th. 16.5.55. C. epitomizes C.Th., which applied quite specifically to trials against Donatists.
[151] See D. 42.1.

[3] Idem A. Agrippae. Ordo rei gestae et mora solutionis, quae intercessit, constantius desiderat remedium. si itaque praesidem provinciae, qui rem iudicatam exsequi debet, adieris et adlegaveris res soli, quae pignori datae sunt, diu subhastatas ex compacto sive ambitione diversae partis emptorem non invenire, in possessionem earum te mittet, ut vel hoc remedio res tam diu tracta ad effectum perducatur.

D. XI k. Iul. Messala et Sabino conss.

[4] Idem A. Marcello militi. Stipendia retineri propterea, quod condemnatus es, non patietur praeses provinciae, cum rem iudicatam possit aliis rationibus exsequi.

PP. III non. Iun. Sabino II et Anullino conss.

[5] Imp. Gordianus A. Amando. Etiam nomen debitoris in causa iudicati capi posse ignotum non est.

PP. III id. Oct. Attico et Praetextato conss.

[6] Imp. Philippus A. et Philippus C. Titiano. Si, ut proponis, rerum iudicatarum executor datus partes sibi iudicis vindicavit et contra ea, quae pridem pro partibus tuis fuerunt statuta, aliquid pronuntiandum putavit, sententia ab eo dicta vim rei iudicatae obtinere nequaquam potest.

[7] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. Theodoro. Si longis apertisque frustrationibus partis adversae restitutio remorata est, etiam servis rebus humanis exemptis a frustratore aestimatio eorum restituenda est. animalia quoque cum fetubus tibi intercessu praesidis repraesentabuntur.

[8] Idem AA. et CC. Exsecutorem eum solum esse manifestum sit, qui post sententiam, inter partes audita omni et discussa lite, prolatam iudicatae rei vigorem ad effectum videtur adducere.

Sine die et consule.

[3] The same Augustus to Agrippa. The order in which things were done and the delay in payment which intervened call for a more steadfast remedy. If, accordingly, you go before the provincial governor who ought to be executing the judgment and show that the land (res soli) that was given in pledge has long been up for auction but has not found a buyer, whether through an agreement or through the corrupt solicitation of the opposite party, he will put you in possession of it, so that a matter that has been dragged out for so long may be brought to a close through this remedy.

Given June 21, in the consulship of Messala and Sabinus (214).

[4] The same Augustus to Marcellus, a soldier. The provincial governor will not allow your salary (stipendia) to be distrained to satisfy a judgment against you, since he is able to compel the adjudicated matter to be satisfied by other methods.

Posted June 3, in the consulship of Sabinus, for the second time, and Anullinus (216).

[5] Emperor Gordian Augustus to Amandus. It is not unknown that a claim due from a debtor may be taken to satisfy a judgment.

Posted October 13, in the consulship of Atticus and Praetextatus (242).

[6] Emperors Philip Augustus and Caesar Philip to Titianus. If, as you state, the court officer (exsecutor) appointed to enforce the adjudicated matter arrogated to himself the office of judge and undertook to render a decision contrary to what was previously decided in your favor, the verdict which he pronounced cannot obtain the force of an adjudicated matter.

[7] Emperors Diocletian and Maximian Augusti to Theodorus. If restitution was delayed by the long and open evasion of your opponent, even if the slaves have died in the meantime, an estimate of their value must be restored by the evader. So, too, any animals along with their offspring are to be given back to you by the intercession of the governor.

[8][152] The same Augusti and the Caesars. Let it be clear that he alone is an enforcement officer (exsecutor) who, after a verdict and after the entire suit between the parties has been heard and discussed, brings the adjudicated matter into effect.

Without date or consul

[152] Possibly to combine with C. 3.3.2 and 3.11.1 (implying a date of March or July 18); 7.62.6, which add dicunt to the inscription.

[9] Idem AA. et CC. Glyconi. Eos, quos debitores tuos esse contendis, apud rectorem conveni provinciae, qui sive confessi debitum sive negantes et convicti fuerint condemnati nec intra statutum spatium solutioni satisfecerint, cum latae sententiae pignoribus etiam captis ac distractis secundum ea quae saepe constituta sunt meruerunt exsecutionem, iuris formam tibi custodiet.

S. non. Nov. CC. conss.

LIIII De Usuris Rei Iudicatae

[1] Imp. Antoninus A. procuratoribus hereditatium. Fiscus, qui bona secundum se dicta sententia persequitur, eas quoque rationes habiturus est, ut, qui post legitimum tempus placitis non obtemperavit, usuram centesimam temporis quod postea fluxerit solvat.

[2] Imp. Iustinianus A. Menae pp. Eos, qui condemnati solutionem pecuniarum, quas dependere iussi sunt, ultra quattuor menses a die condemnationis vel, si provocatio fuerit oblata, a die confirmationis sententiae connumerandos distulerint, centesimas usuras exigi praecipimus: nec priscis legibus, quae duas centesimas eis inferebant, nec nostra sanctione, quae dimidiam centesimae statuit, locum in eorum personam habentibus.

D. VII id. April. Constantinopoli Decio cons.

[3] Idem A. Iohanni pp. pr. Sancimus, ut si quis condemnatus fuerit, post datas a nobis quadrimenstres indutias centesimas quidem usuras secundum naturam iudicati eum compelli solvere, sed tantummodo sortis et non usurarum, quae ex pristino contractu in condemnationem deductae sunt. cum enim iam constituimus usurarum usuras penitus esse delendas, nullum casum relinquimus, ex quo huiusmodi machinatio possit induci. 1. Si enim sine emendatione relinquatur, aliquid absurdum atque inelegans necesse est evenire, cum utiliter ex contractibus descendentes plerumque minores centesimae ex nostra lege factae sunt et necesse est minoribus usuris graviores supponi. si enim ex iudicati actione centesimae omnimodo currunt usurae, ex contractibus autem hoc raro contingit in capitulis lege nostra tantummodo exceptis, huiusmodi iniquitatem ipsa necessitas rerum introducebat.

[9] The same Augusti and the Caesars to Glyco. Sue the men who you contend are your debtors before the provincial governor. He will safeguard the substance of the law on your behalf, whether they confess the debt or, having denied it, are defeated and condemned but fail to make payment within the time fixed. Once verdicts were rendered and pledges seized and sold according to oft-repeated provisions, they deserved enforcement.

Written November 5, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

Fifty-Fourth Title Interest on an Adjudicated Matter

[1] Emperor Antoninus Augsustus to the Procurators of Inheritances. The Treasury, which pursues property adjudicated to it, will also take into account that anyone who failed to comply with the order of the court must pay interest at 1 percent per month for the period that runs after the legal time fixed for such compliance.

[2] Emperor Justinian Augustus to Menas, Praetorian Prefect. We order those condemned to pay a money judgment to pay interest at a rate of 1 percent per month on the judgment beginning after four months from the day on which they were condemned or, if an appeal was made, four months beyond the date of confirmation of the verdict. Neither the old laws, which imposed interest at 2 percent per month, nor Our own sanction,[153] which established a 0.5 percent per month, are to apply to such persons.

Given April 7, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Decius (529).[154]

[3] The same Augustus to John, Praetorian Prefect. pr. We ordain that a judgment debtor must, after a period of four months' grace, pay interest at the rate of 1 percent per month, according to the nature of the matter adjudged, but only on the principal and not on interest, which, arising out of a prior contract, was included in the judgment. Since We have already established[155] that interest payments on interest are to be eliminated, We leave no chance for this sort of contrivance to be introduced. 1. If left without correction, an absurd and inconsistent situation would necessarily arise. For inasmuch as interest on contracts is, under Our law,[156] generally less than 1 percent per month, it is necessary to replace a heavier interest with a lesser one. Indeed, if interest rates of 1 percent per month always result from an action on judgment, but arise only rarely from contracts, with the lone exception of chapters from Our law, this sort of inequality was perforce naturally introduced.

[153] C. 4.32.26.2.
[154] Lounghis et al. date to April 6, 529.
[155] C. 4.32.28.
[156] C. 4.32.26.2.

2. Et ideo pio remedio causam corrigentes sancimus sortis tantummodo usuras usque ad centesimam currentes ex iudicati actione profligari, non autem usurarum quantascumque usuras. si enim novatur iudicati actione prior contractus, necesse est usurarum quidem, quae anterioris contractus sunt, cursum post sententias inhiberi, alias autem usuras ex iudicati actione tantummodo sortis procedere, et non ideo, quod forsitan consummata est quantitas sortis et usurarum, totius summae usuras postea colligi, sed sortis tantummodo. 3. Et cum antiquitas pessimo exemplo reis quidem condemnatis laxamentum duorum mensum praestabat, fideiussores autem eorum eodem uti beneficio non concedebat, ut liceret victoribus relictis propter legem condemnatis personis a fideiussoribus eorum vel mandatoribus statim pecunias vel res in condemnatione positas exigere, huiusmodi acerbitatem resecantes sancimus quadrimenstres indutias, quas dedimus condemnatis, etiam ad fideiussores eorum et mandatores extendi, ne legi fiat derogatum. cum enim interventor solvere compellatur et ipse reum coerceat ad invitam solutionem, nullum condemnatus habebat nostrae sensum humanitatis, quia per medium fideiussorem statim pecunias persolvere compellebatur.

D. v k. Dec. Constantinopoli post consulatum Lampadii et Orestis vv. cc.

LV Si Plures Una Sententia Condemnati Sunt

[1] Imp. Alexander A. Victori. Si non singuli in solidum, sed generaliter tu et collega tuus una et certa quantitate condemnati estis nec additum, ut, quod ab altero servari non possit, alter suppleret, effectus sententiae virilibus portionibus discretus est. ideoque parens pro tua portione sententiae ob cessationem alterius ex causa iudicati conveniri non potes.

PP. k. Iul. Alexandro A. III et Dione conss.

[2] Imp. Gordianus A. Anniano. Quotiens a tutoribus singulis procuratoribus datis insequitur in omnium persona condemnatio, periculum sententiae videri esse divisum. ideoque quod ab uno servari non potuerit, a ceteris exigi non posse explorati iuris est.

PP. XV k. April. Attico et Praetextato conss.

2. Correcting the matter, therefore, by this pious remedy, We ordain that interest on the principal shall be demanded only up to 1 percent per month under an action on judgment, but no interest whatever on interest. For if a novation of the prior contract occurs through the action on judgment, the accrual of interest on the previous contract must necessarily cease after the verdict, but any other interest arising from the action on judgment must necessarily arise from the principal only. Therefore, because the amount of the principal and of the interest may have been added together, interest on the entire sum must not then be collected, but only interest on the principal. 3. And since antiquity set a bad example by giving convicted defendants two months' grace without permitting their sureties to enjoy the same benefit, plaintiffs who won their suit could ignore the principal defendant, who had been convicted at law, and immediately demand the money or property mentioned in the judgment from their sureties or mandators (mandatores). Correcting such harshness, We ordain that the four-month grace We have given to defendants condemned in judgment shall be extended to their sureties and mandators lest anything be detracted from the law. Since the surety-guarantor (intentor) is compelled to pay and he in turn coerces the principal defendant to involuntary payment, the condemned defendant did not use to receive the benefit of Our kindness, because through the surety or guarantor he was compelled to pay immediately.

Given November 27, at Constantinople, in the post-consulate of the viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestes (531).

Fifty-Fifth Title If Several Persons are Condemned by One Verdict

[1] Emperor ALEXANDER Augustus to Victor. If you and your associate together were, in general terms, condemned to pay a single and certain sum of money, and each was not condemned to pay the whole, and it was not added that the amount not collected from one should be paid by the other, each will be compelled to pay only his portion of the judgment. If, accordingly, you complied with the verdict as to your portion, you cannot be sued on the judgment on account of the default of the other party.

Posted July 1, in the consulship of Alexander Augustus, for the third time, and Dio (229).

[2] Emperor GORDIAN Augustus to Annianus. Whenever a group of procurators severally appointed by tutores is condemned on a person-by-person basis, the risk of the verdict is divided. Accordingly, it is settled law that the amount that cannot be collected from one cannot be extracted from the others.

Posted March 18, in the consulship of Atticus and Praetextatus (242).

LVI Quibus Res Iudicata Non Nocet

[1] Imp. Alexander A. Masculino. Si neque mandasti fratri tuo defensionem rei tuae neque quod gestum est ratum habuisti, praescriptio rei iudicatae tibi non oberit. et ideo non prohiberis causam tuam agere sine praeiudicio rerum iudicatarum.
PP. non. Mai. Alexandro A. cons.

[2] Imp. Gordianus A. Athenio. Res inter alios iudicatae neque emolumentum adferre his, qui iudicio non interfuerunt, neque praeiudicium solent inrogare. ideoque nepti tuae praeiudicare non potest, quod adversus coheredem eius iudicatum est, si nihil adversus ipsam statutum est.
PP. v id. Iul. Gordiano A. et Aviola conss.

[3] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. Honorato. Iuris manifestissimi est et in accusationibus his, qui congressi iudicio non sunt, officere non posse, si quid forte praeiudicii videatur oblatum.
PP. xiiii k. Sept. Basso et Quintiano conss.

[4] Idem AA. et CC. Soteriano. Nec in simili negotio res inter alios actas absenti praeiudicare saepe constitutum est.
S. iii k. Dec. CC. conss.

LVII Comminationes Epistulas Programmata Subscriptiones Auctoritatem Rei Iudicatae Non Habere

[1] Imp. Antoninus A. Rogatiano. Nec vim stipulationis obtinere potest comminatio iudicis, qui certas usuras praestaturos eos dixit, qui intra certum diem debitum non exsolvissent.
PP. prid. id. Ian. Antonino A. iiii et Balbino conss.

[2] Imp. Alexander A. Maximiano. Rei iudicatae effectum non habet, quod per epistulam rector provinciae solvere vos pecuniam rei publicae iussit.

Fifty-Sixth Title Those Not Harmed by an Adjudicated Matter

[1] Emperor Alexander Augustus to Masculinus. If you gave no mandate to your brother to defend your property and did not ratify what was done, a defense that the matter has been adjudicated does not stand in your way. Accordingly, you are permitted to prosecute your cause without prejudice from the claim that the matter was adjudicated.

Posted May 7, in the consulship of Alexander Augustus (222).

[2] Emperor Gordian Augustus to Athenius. The fact that matters were adjudicated between others gives no benefit to parties not involved in the case, nor can it ordinarily harm their case. Accordingly, it cannot prejudice your granddaughter that a judgment was rendered against her co-heir if there was no decision against herself.

Posted July 11, in the consulship of Gordian Augustus and Aviola (239).

[3][157] Emperors Diocletian and Maximian Augusti to Honoratus. The law is very clear that even in criminal actions, nothing can injure parties who are not in court, even though something is brought forth that seems prejudicial to them.

Posted August 19, in the consulship of Bassus and Quintianus (289).

[4] The same Augusti and the Caesars to Soterianus. It has often been established that litigation among third parties cannot prejudice an absent person even in a similar affair.

Written November 29, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

Fifty-Seventh Title Warnings, Letters, Proclamations, and Signed Responses Do Not Have the Force of an Adjudicated Matter

[1] Emperor Antoninus Augustus to Rogatianus. A judge's warning (comminatio) that those who fail to pay a debt within a certain date should pay a certain interest does not have the force of a stipulation.

Posted January 12, in the consulship of Antoninus Augustus, for the fourth time, and Balbinus (213).

[2] Emperor Alexander Augustus to Maximianus. A letter of the provincial governor ordering you to pay money to a municipality does not have the force of an adjudicated matter.

[157] Combine with C. 9.2.9.

PP. IIII id. Mart. Maximo II et Aeliano conss.

[3] Idem A. Zotico. Ea, quae causa cognita statuuntur, subscriptionibus revocari non posse saepe rescriptum est.

PP. VI id. Sept. Albino et Maximo conss.

[4] Imp. Gordianus A. Asclepiadi. Interlocutio praesidis apud acta signata: 'nisi solutioni debiti is qui convenitur obsequium praestitisset, duplum seu quadruplum inferat' voluntas potius comminantis quam sententia iudicantis est, cum placitum eiusmodi ne rei iudicatae auctoritatem obtineat, iuris ratio declaret.

PP. III id. Dec. Gordiano A. et Aviola conss.

[5] Idem A. Iucundo. Iudex, qui disceptationi locum dederat, partium adlegationes audire et examinare debuit. nam subscriptionem ad libellum datam talem, quae diversam partem in possessionem fundi mitteret, vicem rei iudicatae non obtinere non ambigitur.

PP. XII k. Febr. Gordiano A. II et Pompeiano conss.

[6] Imp. Philippus A. et Philippus C. Cassiano. Programma, si quod a praeside propositum est, vim rei iudicatae nequaquam potest obtinere. nec comminationem vim rei iudicatae continere manifestum est.

PP. X k. April. ... conss.

[7] Imp. Constantinus A. ad Bassum pp. Quod magno conflictu sententia decerni solet, id paucis litteris temere adscriptis definiri fas non est.

D. XV k. April. Constantino A. VI et Constantino C. conss.

Posted March 12, in the consulship of Maximus, for the second time, and Aelianus (223).

[3] The same Augustus to Zoticus. It has often been stated by rescript that decisions made after a hearing cannot be reopened because of signed responses (subscriptiones).

Posted September 8, in the consulship of Albinus and Maximus (223).

[4] Emperor Gordian Augustus to Asclepiades. An interim order (interlocutio) of the governor from the signed records (acta signata), "unless the party that is being sued has obeyed the order to pay the debt, he must pay twofold or fourfold," is more the expression of a wish by someone giving a warning than the verdict of someone offering a judgment. Indeed, the law declares that an order of that sort does not have the force of an adjudicated matter.

Posted December 11, in the consulship of Gordian Augustus and Aviola (239).

[5] The same Augustus to Jucundus. The judge, who had provided the forum for a legal dispute, should have heard and examined the allegations of the parties. For there is no doubt that a notation made on a petition designed to put the opposing party in possession of a farm does not obtain the force of an adjudicated matter.

Posted January 21, in the consulship of Gordian Augustus, for the second time, and Pompeianus (241).

[6] Emperor Philip Augustus and Caesar Philip to Cassianus. A petition (programma), if such was posted by the governor, is in no way able to obtain the force of an adjudicated matter. Nor, it is clear, does a warning have the force of an adjudicated matter.

Posted March 23, in the consulship of ...[158]

[7] Emperor Constantine Augustus to Bassus, Praetorian Prefect. It is not right that a decision in a great conflict, usually rendered through a verdict, be issued with a bit of hastily added writing.[159]

Given March 18, in the consulship of Constantine Augustus, for the sixth time, and Constantine Caesar (320).

158 The names of the Consuls have fallen out. Krüger suggests emending to "in the consulship of Praesens and Albinus" (246) based on MS V, which appears to read: "apr. ... a ... et dione conss."

159 Blume: "Reference is not made to the shortness of a decision, but to the manner in which the words thereof are written. The decision, in other words, should not be by signs or a few abbreviated words." Junius Bassus was Praetorian Prefect (pp) 318–321. Following an alternate manuscript tradition, Seeck dated this constitution to March 18, 318, when Septimius Bassus was City Prefect (pu) in Rome.

LVIII Si ex Falsis Instrumentis vel Testimoniis Iudicatum Erit

[1] Impp. Severus et Antoninus AA. Vipsaniae. Si tabulas testamenti, quas secutus proconsul vir clarissimus sententiam dixit, falsas dicere vis, praebebit notionem suam non obstante praescriptione rei iudicatae, quia nondum de falso quaesitum est.

PP. v ... conss.

[2] Imp. Alexander A. Optato. Et qui non provocaverunt, si instrumentis falsis se victos esse probare possunt, cum de crimine docuerint, ex integro de causa audiuntur.

PP. xvi k. Oct. Iuliano et Crispino conss.

[3] Idem A. Clementi. Falsam quidem testationem, qua diversa pars in iudicio adversus te usa est, ut proponis, solito more arguere non prohiberis. sed causa iudicati in irritum non devocatur, nisi si probare poteris eum qui iudicaverat secutum eius instrumenti fidem, quod falsum esse constiterit, adversus te pronuntiasse.

PP. vii k. Sept.

[4] Imp. Gordianus A. Herennio. Iudicati exsecutio solet suspendi et soluti dari repetitio, si falsis instrumentis circumventam esse religionem iudicantis crimine postea falsi illato manifestis probationibus fuerit ostensum.

PP. v id. Sept.

LVIIII De Confessis

[1] Imp. Antoninus A. Iuliano. Confessos in iure pro iudicatis haberi placet. quare sine causa desideras recedi a confessione tua, cum et solvere cogeris.

Accepta prid. k. Oct. Gentiano et Basso conss.

Fifty-Eighth Title If a Decision was Given as a Result of False Documents or Testimony

[1] Emperors SEVERUS and ANTONINUS Augusti to Vipsania. If you want to raise the claim that the testament which the Proconsul, a vir clarissimus, followed in rendering his decision is in fact forged, he will give you a hearing without reference to any defense that the matter has been adjudicated, for the question of forgery has not yet been tried.

Posted on the 5th ..., in the consulship of ...

[2] Emperor ALEXANDER Augustus to Optatus. Even if they never made an appeal, their case will be heard again from the beginning if they are able to prove that they were defeated by forged documents, for they will have made demonstration of a crime.

Posted September 16, in the consulship of Julian and Crispinus (224).

[3] The same Augustus to Clemens. You are not forbidden to argue, in the usual manner, that, as you allege, the evidence which your opponent used against you in the trial was false. But the judgment does not become void unless you can prove that the person who gave judgment had decided against you while relying on the validity of the document that is shown to be forged.

Posted August 26.

[4] Emperor GORDIAN Augustus to Herennius. Execution of the judgment is usually suspended, and a right granted to recover money already paid, if it should be shown by clear proofs that the scrupulousness of the judge was misled by forged documents, and a charge of forgery is later brought.

Posted September 9.

Fifty-Ninth Title Those who Confess[160]

[1] Emperor ANTONINUS Augustus to Julian. It is agreed that those who confess their liability in court are considered the same as adjudged debtors. Hence it is pointless for you to ask to rescind your confession, since even so you will be compelled to pay.

Received September 30, in the consulship of Gentianus and Bassus (211).

[160] See D. 42.2.

LX Inter Alios Acta vel Iudicata Aliis Non Nocere

[1] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. et CC. Epagatho. Inter alios res gestas aliis non posse facere praeiudicium saepe constitutum est. unde licet quosdam de heredibus eius, quem debitorem tuum fuisse significas, solvisse commemores, tamen ceteri non alias ad solutionem urguentur, nisi debitum fuerit probatum.
v k. April. Byzantio AA. conss.

[2] Idem AA. et CC. Severae. Inter alios factam transactionem absenti non posse facere praeiudicium notissimi iuris est. quapropter adito praeside provinciae aviam tuam mancipium tibi donasse proba ac, si hoc iure ad te pertinere perspexerit, restitui tibi providebit. neque enim, si te absente divisionem eius fecerint, aliquid iuri tuo derogari poterit.
S. id. April. Byzantio AA. conss.

[3] Idem AA. et CC. Fortunatae. Si cum fratre tuo matri successisti, frater pro portione tua cum debitoribus hereditariis paciscendo vel agendo, non ex tua voluntate, pro hereditaria parte tibi quaesitam obligationem extinguere non potuit.
v id. Oct. Retiariae CC. conss.

LXI De Relationibus

[1] Imp. Constantinus A. Profuturo praefecto annonae. pr. Si quis iudicum duxerit esse referendum, nihil inter partes pronuntiet, sed magis super quo haesitandum putaverit, nostram consulat scientiam aut, si tulerit sententiam, minime postea, ne a se provocetur, relatione promissa terreat litigantes, sciens, quod, si hoc fecerit, nihilo minus iure appellationum res agitabitur. 1. Sed nec ad nos mittatur aliquid, quod plena instructionem indigeat. 2. Quotiens autem ad nostram scientiam

Sixtieth Title Transactions and Adjudications between Third Parties Do Not Harm Anyone Else

[1] Emperors Diocletian and Maximian Augusti and the Caesars to Epagathus. It has often been established that transactions between third parties cannot injure others. Hence, although you say that some of the heirs of the decedent, who you state to have been your debtor, have paid (the decedent's alleged debt), the others will not be forced to pay unless the debt is proven.

March 28, at Byzantium, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).[161]

[2] The same Augusti and Caesars to Severa. It is well known law that a settlement (transactio) made between third parties cannot prejudice an absent party. Go, therefore, before the provincial governor and prove that your grandmother gave you the slave, and if he finds that such slave legally belongs to you, he will see to it that he is restored to you. For even if, in your absence, they made an agreement dividing the interest in the slave among themselves, that could not detract from your rights.

Written April 13, at Byzantium, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[3] The same Augusti and Caesars to Fortunata. If you and your brother succeeded your mother as heirs, your brother could not without your consent deprive you of your proportionate right in an obligation due to the decedent by making an agreement with or bringing suit against the debtors to the estate.

October 11, at Retiaria, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).[162]

Sixty-First Title Legal Referrals (to the Emperor)[163]

[1][164] Emperor Constantine Augustus to Profuturus, Prefect of the Food Supply. pr. If any judge believes that a matter ought to be referred to the Emperor, he must render no decision between the parties, but should consult Our wisdom as to the point that he believes to be questionable. Or, if he has given a decision, he must not afterwards deter litigants from making an appeal by promising to refer the matter to us,[165] knowing that, even if he does so, the matter will nevertheless be handled according to the right of appeal. 1. Nothing must be sent to Us which lacks a complete case report. 2. Whenever the judge promises to refer a matter to us, he must order that a copy of the consultation

[161] Mommsen dates to April 9, 293.

[162] Mommsen dates to October 10, 294.

[163] See D. 49.1. A relatio or consultatio is the referral of a legal question by a lower-level judge to a higher one or to the Emperor.

[164] = C.Th. 11.29.2, C.Th. 11.30.1. §1 = C.Th. 2.18.1 (ending).

[165] C.Th. 11.29.2 breaks off here. The Justinianic compilers added down to "complete case report" beyond which C. follows C.Th. 11.30.1, in epitomated form.

iudex se polliceatur relaturum, consultationis exemplum litigatoribus ilico edi apud acta iubeat, ut, si cui forte relatio minus plena vel contraria videatur, is refutatorias preces similiter apud acta sine aliqua frustratoria dilatione offerat.

D. IIII id. Febr. Sirmio Constantino A. V et Licinio C. conss.

[2] Impp. Valentinianus et Valens AA. ad Viventium pp. Super delictis provincialium numquam rectores provinciarum ad scientiam principum putent esse referendum, nisi ediderint prius consultationis exemplum. quippe tunc demum relationibus plena maturitas est, cum vel adlegationibus refelluntur vel probantur adsensu.

D. III k. Ian. Treviris Valentiniano et Valente AA. conss.

[3] Idem AA. ad Apodemium. Si quando ratio aut necessitas est in negotiis nostra iudicia requirendi expectandique responsa, omnem omnino causam relationis series comprehendat, ut recitata consultatione, quae ita est dirigenda, propemodum actorum recensione non opus sit: actis etiam necessario sociandis.

D. VI id. Mai. Treviris Valentiniano np. et Victore conss.

LXII De Appellationibus et Consultationibus

[1] Sententia divi Severi data in persona Marci Prisci idibus Ian. Pompeiano et Avito conss. Severus A. dixit: Prius de possessione pronuntiare et ita crimen violentiae excutere praeses provinciae debuit. quod cum non fecerit, iuste provocatum est.

[2] Imp. Alexander A. Plariano. Novum quod postulas non est, quod, etsi rescripti mei auctoritas intercesserit, provocandi tamen facultas tibi non denegetur.

[3] Imp. Gordianus A. Victori. Appellatione interposita, licet ab iudice repudiata sit, in praeiudicium deliberationis nihil fieri debere et in eo

(consultatio) be immediately furnished of record to the litigants, so that if the report appears to anyone not to be complete or to be wrong, that person may, without evasive delay, offer refutatory statements of record.[166]

Given February 10, at Sirmium, in the consulship of Constantine Augustus, for the fifth time, and Licinius Caesar (319).

[2][167] Emperors VALENTINIAN and VALENS Augusti to Viventius, Praetorian Prefect. Provincial governors should never think that they can refer cases involving the delicts of provincials to the wisdom of the Emperors unless they first issue a copy of the consultation. For referrals (relationes) are only made complete when they are either refuted by allegations or proven by consent.

Given December 30, at Trier, in the consulship of Valentinian and Valens Augusti (368).

[3][168] The same Augusti to Apodemius. If it should appear reasonable or necessary in suits that Our advice be sought and Our response awaited, the report of reference must include the entire dossier of the case, so that, after reading the consultation, which needs to be sent thus, a reexamination of the records is almost unnecessary. It is also necessary to attach the records.

Given May 10, at Trier, in the consulship of Valentinian, Most Noble Boy, and Victor (369).

Sixty-Second Title Appeals and Consultations[169]

[1] Verdict of the deified SEVERUS, given through Marcus Priscus, January 13, in the consulship of Pompeianus and Avitus. Severus Augustus said: The provincial governor ought to have pronounced on the question of possession first, and thus to have disposed of the charge of violence (against a possessor). Because he failed to do so, it was right to appeal.

(209).

[2] Emperor ALEXANDER Augustus to Plarianus. What you demand is nothing strange, for even if the authority of my rescript was interposed, nevertheless you are not denied the opportunity to appeal.

[3] Emperor GORDIAN Augustus to Victor. Quite often it has been established that, when an appeal is demanded, although the judge may refuse it, nothing

[166] Blume: "According to C.Th. 11.30.1, the copy of the inquiry was to be given and placed of record within ten days; anyone dissatisfied might furnish for the record refutatory statements within five days thereafter." Seeck dates this constitution to February 7, 318.

[167] = C.Th. 11.29.3. Seeck dates to December 30, 368 or 370.

[168] = C.Th. 11.29.4, including also Gratian among the authors.

[169] See D. 49.1.

statu omnia esse, quo tempore pronuntiationis fuerint, saepissime constitutum est.

PP. IIII …

[4] Imp. Philippus A. et Philippus C. Probo. Si ad scribatum nominatus non provocasti, convelli statuta non possunt.

[5] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. Valerio. Praeses provinciae, ad quem appellasti, si non vitio neglegentiae vestrae tempus, quod ad reddendos apostolos praescriptum est, exemptum esse animadverterit, sed ex fatalis casus necessitate, diem functo eo qui eos perferebat, id accidisse cognoverit, iuxta perpetui iuris formam desiderio vestro medebitur.

[6] Idem AA. et CC. dicunt: pr. Eos, qui de appellationibus cognoscent ac iudicabunt, ita iudicium suum praebere conveniet, ut intellegant, quod, cum appellatio post decisam per sententiam litem interposita fuerit, non ex occasione aliqua remittere negotium ad iudicem suum fas sit, sed omnem causam propria sententia determinare conveniat, cum salubritas legis constitutae ad id spectare videatur, ut post sententiam ab eo qui de appellatione cognoscit recursus fieri non possit ad iudicem, a quo fuerit provocatum. quapropter remittendi litigatores ad provincias remotam occasionem atque exclusam penitus intellegant, cum super omni causa interpositam provocationem vel iniustam tantum liceat pronuntiare vel iustam.

1. Si quid autem in agendo negotio minus se adlegasse litigator crediderit, quod in iudicio acto fuerit omissum, apud eum qui de appellatione cognoscit persequatur, cum votum gerentibus nobis aliud nihil in iudiciis quam iustitiam locum habere debere necessaria res forte transmissa non excludenda videatur. 2. Si quis autem post interpositam appellationem necessarias sibi putaverit poscendas esse personas, quo apud iudicem qui super appellatione cognoscet veritatem possit ostendere, quam existimabit occultam, hocque iudex fieri prospexerit, sumptus isdem ad faciendi itineris expeditionem praebere debebit, cum id iustitia ipsa persuadeat ab eo haec recognosci, qui evocandi personas sua interesse crediderit.

3. Super his vero, qui in capitalibus causis constituti appellaverint (quos tamen et ipsos vel qui pro his provocabunt non nisi audita omni causa atque discussa post sententiam dictam appellare conveniet), id observandum esse sancimus, ut inopia idonei fideiussoris retentis in must be done to prejudice the deliberation, and everything must remain in the situation in which it was at the time of the decision.

Posted on the 4th.[170]

[4] Emperor PHILIP Augustus and Caesar PHILIP to Probus. If you were appointed to the post of secretary (ad scribatum) and you did not appeal, the appointment cannot be annulled.[171]

[5] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti to Valerius. If the provincial governor to whom you appealed noted that the time fixed for filing the report on appeal (apostoli) expired not through any fault of your negligence, but he learned that this occurred because of the accidental fact that the man who was carrying it had died, he will grant your request in accordance with the usual rule.

[6][172] The same Augusti and the Caesars say: pr. Those who will hear and decide appeals ought to formulate their own judgment in such a way as to reflect their understanding that, when an appeal is interposed after a suit has been decided through a verdict, the matter may under no circumstances be sent back to its original judge, but it is proper that they decide the whole case with their own verdict. For the benefit of established law seems to require that, after a verdict from the appellate judge, there can be no recourse to the judge from whom the case was appealed. Because of this, litigants should know that any occasion for sending it back to the provinces is removed and entirely excluded, since in every case it should be permissible only to decide whether the appeal that was interposed is unjust or just.

1. If a litigant thinks that he omitted an allegation in the process of trial, whatever he omitted in the previous trial must be investigated before the judge who hears the appeal. For We wish nothing else than that justice find its place in courtrooms and thus think that a related matter which might have been reported should not be excluded. 2. But if someone thinks after making an appeal that essential witnesses should be produced on his behalf in order that he could demonstrate to the appellate judge a truth that he thinks has been hidden, and the judge thinks this advisable, he should pay the traveling expenses, since justice requires that they be paid by the party who thinks that summoning such persons will be in his interest.

3. As to those who appeal in capital cases – which may not be done by themselves or others for them until the whole case has been heard and tried and a verdict rendered – We ordain the following: appellants are detained in custody in the absence of a proper surety (idoneus fideiussor); judges shall issue to the custodia reis opiniones suas iudices exemplo appellatoribus edito ac refutatorios eorum ad scrinia quorum interest transmittant, quibus gestarum rerum fides manifesta relatione pandatur, ut meritis eorum consideratis pro fortuna singulorum sententia proferatur. 4. Ne temere autem ac passim provocandi omnibus facultas praeberetur, arbitramur eum, qui malam litem fuerit persecutus, mediocriter poenam a competenti iudice sustinere. 5. Sin autem in iudicio propriam causam quis fuerit persecutus atque superatus voluerit provocare, eodem die vel altero libellos appellatorios offerre debebit. is vero, qui negotium tuetur alienum, supra dicta condicione etiam tertio die provocabit.

[170] Subscript partially preserved as PP. XII K. in Fragmenta Londiniensia Anteiustiniana (FLA), see Corcoran and Salway.

[171] Consular date restored from FLA to 245.

[172] Possibly combine with C. 3.3.2, 3.11.1, 7.53.8.

6. Apostolos post interpositam provocationem etiam non petente appellatore sine aliqua dilatione iudicem dare oportet, cautione videlicet de exercenda provocatione in posterum minime praebenda.

Sine die et consule.

[7] Idem AA. et CC. Neoni. Qui ad civilia munera vel decurionatum vel honores devocantur, licet vacationem a principibus acceperint, si appellationis auxilio non utantur, consensu suo nominationem confirmant. cum igitur ad munus vocatus appellaveris a praeside provinciae, iuste te appellasse ostende.

[8] Idem AA. et CC. Oppiano. Si contra maiorem quinque et viginti annis sententia lata provocationis secutae tempore praefinito causas non esse repraesentatas nec appellatione pendente transactione finitum negotium rector animadverterit, res iudicatas exsequi curabit.

[9] Idem AA. et CC. have Heraclida carissime nobis. Dominus litis causam appellationis, quam procurator suus litigando interposuit, etiam absente procuratore exsequi potest.

[10] Idem AA. et CC. Titiano. pr. Si actor a curatore ordinatus deteriorem calculum reportaverit, tam ipse quam curator ad provocationis auxilium possunt pervenire, curator vero solus provocationis litem exercebit. 1. Sin autem interim adulescens veniam aetatis impetraverit vel ad legitimam aetatem pervenerit, potest suo nomine appellationem exercere.

S. prid. k. Oct. Viminacii CC. conss.

appellants a copy of their decisions and send these and any refutatory statements to the relevant bureau. Through these an accurate representation of the matters transacted should be laid out in a clear report so that, after considering their merits, a verdict may be rendered according to the circumstances of each individual. 4. In order that appeals may not be made inconsiderately and indiscriminately, We judge that anyone who pursues an appeal without merit shall suffer a moderate penalty at the hands of the appropriate judge. 5. But if someone prosecutes his own case in court and loses, and he wishes to appeal, he should offer his petition for appeal on the same day or the day following. But whoever oversees another's affair shall appeal by the third day also following the condition stated above.

6. After an appeal is made, the judge must offer reports on appeal (apostoli) even if the appellant does not ask for them and without any delay, and no bond shall hereafter be required to lodge the appeal.

Without date or consul.[173]

[7] The same Augusti and Caesars to Neo. Persons appointed to public services (civilia munera) or the decurionate or magistracies (honores), if they do not make use of an appeal, ratify the appointment by acquiescence even though they have been granted exemption by the Emperors. Therefore, since you were called to a public service by the provincial governor but appealed, show that your appeal is just.

[8] The same Augusti and Caesars to Oppianus. If a decision was given against a man over 25 years old, and the governor learns that the grounds of the appeal subsequently taken were not presented within the fixed time, and that the affair was not concluded by a settlement while an appeal was pending, he will see to it that the judgment is executed.

[9] The same Augusti and Caesars: Hail, Heraclides, very dear to us. The principal of a suit, even in the absence of his procurator, may prosecute an appeal which his procurator made in the litigation.

[10] The same Augusti and Caesars to Titianus. pr. If an agent (actor) appointed by a curator lost his case, both he and the curator can have recourse to the aid of an appeal, but only the curator can conduct the suit on appeal. 1. But if the minor has in the meantime received the rights of majority (venia aetatis) or has arrived at legal age, he may prosecute the appeal in his own name.

Written September 30, at Viminacium, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[173] This constitution may be dated March 18, 294, based on the subscription of C. 3.11.1 and 7.53.8, or July 18, 294, based on the subscription of C. 3.3.2.

[11] Idem AA. et CC. Aurelio. Cives et incolae, manifestas etiam excusationes habentes, si sub iusta nominatione non appellaverint, ad probationem earum non admittuntur.

xvii k. Ian.

[12] Imp. Constantinus A. ad Catullinum. Minime fas est, ut in civili negotio libellis appellatoriis oblatis aut carceris cruciatus aut cuiuslibet iniuriae genus seu tormenta vel etiam contumelias perferat appellator, absque his criminalibus causis, in quibus, etiamsi possunt provocare, eum tamen statum debent obtinere, ut post provocationem in custodia, si fideiussoris idonei copiam non habeant, perseverent.

D. III non. Nov. Treviris. acc. XV k. Mai. Hadrumeto Volusiano et Anniano conss.

[13] Idem A. Petronio Probiano suo salutem. Ex illo tempore, quo in civilibus causis, quae inter privatos moventur, consultaturum vel relaturum te esse promiseris vel appellationis a te interpositae sollemnia completa fuerint, nihil posthac tibi quodlibet speciale ac requisitum vel quibuscumque modis favoris gratiam praeferens audiendum est, sed observandum, ut iuxta priora statuta sollemnitatis more expleto gesta ad comitatum omnia dirigantur.

D. id. Aug. Arelato. pp. id. Oct. Theveste Sabino et Rufino conss.

[14] Idem A. ad Bassum pu. Litigatoribus copia est etiam non conscriptis libellis ilico appellare voce, cum res poposcerit iudicata, tam in civilibus quam in criminalibus causis.

D. VIII id. Iun. Sirmio Gallicano et Basso conss.

[15] Idem A. ad Severum vicarium. Ne causas, quae in nostram venerint scientiam, rursus transferri ad iudicia necesse sit, instructiones necessarias plene actis inseri praecipimus. nam cogimur a proferenda sententia temperare, quoniam verendum est, ne lis incognito negotio dirimatur, adempta copia conquerendi. quare perennibus inuretur

[11][174] The same Augusti and Caesars to Aurelius. Citizens and inhabitants who do not appeal when lawfully appointed to a civic position will not, even though they have clear excuses (to avoid service), be permitted to prove them.

December 16 (294?).

[12][175] Emperor CONSTANTINE Augustus to Catullinus. It is not right that, if petitions for appeal in a civil affair have been filed, an appellant should have to endure the hardships of imprisonment or any sort of outrage or tortures or even insults, with the exception of those criminal cases in which, even if they are able to appeal, they would nevertheless remain in a state requiring them to abide in prison following the appeal should a suitable surety (fideiussor) be lacking.

Given November 3, at Trier, received April 17, at Hadrumetum, in the consulship of Volusianus and Annianus (314).

[13][176] The same Augustus to his friend Petronius Probianus, greetings: From the time when you have promised that you would consult Us or report to Us on civil cases litigated between private persons, or when the formalities for an appeal interposed from your decision have been completed, you should no longer hear any special request or offer the benefit of your favor in any other way. Rather you must observe that all matters be directed to Our court in the customary fashion according to previous statutes.[177]

Given August 13, at Arles, posted October 15, at Theveste, in the consulship of Sabinus and Rufinus (316).

[14][178] The same Augustus to Bassus, City Prefect. Litigants in civil as well as criminal cases may, when the adjudicated matter demands it, immediately appeal orally even without any written petition.

Given June 6, at Sirmium, in the consulship of Gallicanus and Bassus (317).

[15][179] The same Augustus to Severus, Vicar. In order that it may not be necessary to refer cases that have come into Our knowledge back for trial, We direct that the necessary documents shall be attached fully to the records. For We shall feel compelled to abstain from rendering a verdict,[180] since there is cause to fear that a suit might be decided without complete knowledge and the [174] Possibly to combine with C. 10.40.7.

[175] = C.Th. 11.30.2. C. epitomizes C.Th. Combine with C. 9.47.16; C.Th. 11.36.1. Seeck dates this constitution to November 3, 313.
[176] = C.Th. 11.30.5. Combine with C. 1.21.2.
[177] Apparently C.Th. 11.30.1.
[178] = C.Th. 11.30.7.
[179] = C.Th. 11.30.9. Seeck dates to June 22, 318.
[180] C.Th. adds here: "We who have sanctioned that the rescripts We have granted to the opinions or even reports of judges ought not to be revised."

iudex notis, si cuncta, quae litigatores instructionis probationisque causa recitaverint, indita actis vel subiecta non potuerint inveniri.
D. x k. Iul. Aquileiae Constantino A. v et Licinio C. conss.

[16] Idem A. ad Maximum. Etiam eos, qui imaginem principalis disceptationis accipiunt, appellationum adminicula necesse est accipere.
D. prid. id. Ian. Sirmio Crispo II et Constantino II CC. conss.

[17] Idem A. ad Iulianum pu. Si apud utrumque praetorem, dum quaestio ventilatur, ab aliqua parte auxilium provocationis fuerit obiectum, praefecturae urbis iudicium sacrum appellator observet.

[18] Idem A. Victori rationali urbis Romae. Quoniam nonnulli fisci debitores, cum iussi fuerint debitam summam exsolvere, interposito provocationis auxilio vim exsecutionis eludunt nec iam opinionis exemplum nec refutatorias preces curant petere vel offerre, placuit, ut, si intra dies sollemnitatibus praestitutos ad facienda haec appellatoris cura defuerit, deserta ab eo provocatio aestimetur moxque debitum exigatur.
D. prid. k. Aug. Constantino et Maximo conss.

[19] Idem A. ad universos provinciales. pr. A proconsulibus et comitibus et his qui vice praefectorum cognoscunt, sive ex appellatione sive ex delegato sive ex ordine iudicaverint, provocari permittimus, ita ut appellanti iudex praebeat opinionis exemplum et acta cum refutatoriis partium suisque litteris ad nos dirigat. a praefectis autem praetorio provocare non sinimus. 1. Quod si victus oblatam nec receptam ab iudice appellationem adfirmet, praefectos adeat, ut apud eos de integro litiget tamquam appellatione suscepta. superatus enim si iniuste opportunity of protest removed. Hence a judge will be branded with eternal infamy, if everything which the litigants cited for elucidation and as proof cannot be found embodied in or attached to the records.

Given June 22, at Aquileia, in the consulship of Constantine Augustus, for the fifth time, and Licinius Caesar (319).

[16][181] The same Augustus to Maximus. Even judges who represent the Emperor in trial must permit the right of appeal.

Given January 12, at Sirmium, in the consulship of Crispus, for the second time, and Constantine, for the second time, Caesars (321).

[17][182] The same Augustus to Julian, City Prefect. If, while a case is being aired before the two Praetors,[183] the aid of an appeal is interposed by either party, the appellant must observe the imperial judgment of the City Prefecture.

[18][184] The same Augustus to Victor, Comptroller of the City of Rome. Since some debtors of the Treasury, when they have been ordered to pay a sum due, elude the execution of the judgment by making an appeal and do not bother to seek or offer a copy of the report or any refutatory statements, We have decided that, if the appellant fails to see that the formalities attendant upon an appeal are complied with in the time fixed for that purpose, the appeal shall be considered to have been abandoned and thereafter the debt shall be collected.

Given July 31, in the consulship of Constantius and Maximus (327).

[19][185] The same Augustus to all provincials. pr. We permit an appeal to be made from Proconsuls, Counts, and Vicars, whether they offer judgment on appeal or by assignment or in their ordinary jurisdiction (ex ordine), in such a way that the judge must furnish a copy of the report to the appellant and must send Us the records together with refutatory statements of the parties as well as his own report. But We do not permit an appeal from the Praetorian Prefects. 1. And if the defeated party alleges that an appeal was made but not accepted

[181] = C.Th. 11.30.11. Combine with C. 3.1.9. C. epitomates C.Th. and alters the wording dramatically. Seeck dates to June 12, 321.

[182] = C.Th. 3.32.2. Combine with C. 5.71.18. C. epitomates C.Th. and alters the wording dramatically. The constitution is dated by Krüger to 322, but Seeck is surely right to argue for December 31, 326.

[183] Clearly the Praetors of the newly founded city of Constantinople, one called the "Constantinian" and the other either the "Flavialis" or "Triumphalis," see C.Th. 3.32.2, 6.4.5; and Joh. Lyd. Mag. 2.30.2.

[184] = C.Th. 11.30.14.

[185] = C.Th. 11.30.16. Combine with C. 1.21.3.

appellare videbitur, lite perdita notatus abscedet: aut si vicerit, contra eum iudicem, qui appellationem non receperit, ad nos referre necesse est, ut digno supplicio puniatur.

D. k. Aug. pp. k. Sept. Constantinopoli Basso et Ablabio conss.

[20] Imp. Constantius A. Albino. Et in maioribus et in minoribus negotiis appellandi facultas est. nec enim iudicem oportet iniuriam sibi fieri existimare eo, quod litigator ad provocationis auxilium convolavit.

D. VII id. April. Marcellino et Probino conss.

[21] Idem A. ad Lollianum pp. Quoniam iudices ordinarii provocationes aestimant respuendas, placet, ut, si quis appellationem suscipere recusaverit, quae non contra exsecutionem, sed adversus sententiam iurgium terminantem fuerit interposita, triginta auri pondo cogatur largitionibus nostris inferre: triginta alia officio eius itidem soluturo, nisi ei pertinaciter restiterit atque actis contradixerit et, quid iure sit constitutum, ostenderit.

D. VIII k. Aug. Messadensi. PP. Capuae Arbitione et Lolliano conss.

[22] Idem A. ad Volusianum pp. Lata sententia, quae pertinet ad bona vacantia et ad ea, quae indignis legibus cogentibus auferuntur, si quis putaverit provocandum, vox eius debebit admitti.

D. III k. Aug. Arbitione et Lolliano conss.

[23] Idem A. ad senatum. Cum appellatio interposita fuerit per Bithyniam Paphlagoniam Lydiam Hellespontum, insulas etiam ac Phrygiam salutarem, Europam ac Rhodopam et Haemimontum, praefecturae urbis iudicium sacrum appellator observet.

D. V non. Mai. Tauro et Florentio conss.

by the judge, he may go before the Prefects in order to litigate the matter anew before them as though the appeal had been accepted. If he is defeated and appears to have appealed unjustifiably, he will lose his suit and be branded with infamy as he departs. But if he prevails, it is necessary to report to Us the case against the judge who refused to receive the appeal, so that he may be visited with proper punishment.

Given August 1, and posted September 1, at Constantinople in the consulship of Bassus and Ablabius (331).

[20][186] Emperor CONSTANTIUS Augustus to Albinus. The opportunity for appeal exists in large and small cases. For a judge should not think that he is insulted because a litigant resorts to the aid of an appeal.

Given April 7, in the consulship of Marcellinus and Probinus (341).

[21][187] The same Augustus to Lollianus, Praetorian Prefect. Since ordinary judges suppose that appeals are to be rejected, We have decided that if any judge refuses to take up an appeal which is not interposed against the execution of a judgment but from a verdict that terminates a dispute, he must pay 30 pounds of gold into Our treasury; and his official staff must pay another 30 pounds if it does not strenuously resist and oppose him on the records and show him what is established in the law.

Given July 25, at Messadensis, posted at Capua in the consulship of Arbitio and Lollianus (355).

[22][188] The same Augustus to Volusianus, Praetorian Prefect. When a decision is given which relates to ownerless property (bona vacantia) and to property which is taken from unworthy heirs under legal compulsion, if anyone thinks he should appeal, his plea must be admitted.

Given July 30, in the consulship of Arbitio and Lollianus (355).

[23][189] The same Augustus to the Senate. When an appeal is interposed from Bithynia, Paphlagonia, Lydia, Hellespontus, the Islands, and Phrygia Salutaris, Europa, and Rhodope, and Haeminontus, the appellant should look to the imperial court of the City Prefect (at Constantinople).

Given May 3, in the consulship of Taurus and Florentius (361).

[186] Combine with C.Th. 11.36.5. The inscription of C.Th. reports "the same Augusti," i.e., Constantius II and Constans.

[187] = C.Th. 11.30.25. Combine with C.Th. 11.36.11. The final phrase, beginning "if it does not ..." is borrowed from C.Th. 11.30.58. Seeck dates to July 25, 356.

[188] = C.Th. 11.30.26. Combine with C.Th. 11.36.12. Seeck dates to July 29, 355.

[189] = C.Th. 1.6.1. Combine with C. 12.1.7; C.Th. 6.4.12 and 13, 7.8.1, 11.1.7, 11.15.1, 11.23.1, 12.1.48, 13.1.3. These laws indicate that the constitution was given at "Gyfyra," i.e., Gephyra in Syria.

[24] Impp. Valentinianus et Valens AA. salutem dicunt ordini civitatis Carthaginensium. Iudicibus non solum appellationis suscipiendae necessitas videtur imposita, verum etiam triginta dierum spatia ex die sententiae definita sunt, intra quae gesta una cum relatione litigatoribus convenit praestari: iudice et officio eius, si statuta fuerint aliqua parte mutilata, multae subiacentibus.

D. prid. non. Febr. Mediolani divo Ioviano et Varroniano conss.

[25] Imppp. Gratianus Valentinianus et Theodosius AAA. ad Syagrium pp. Et in multis ab iudicibus inferendis appellationes iubemus admitti.

D. XIIII k. Iul. Gratiano V et Theodosio AA. conss.

[26] Idem AAA. et Arcadius A. ad Pelagium comitem rerum privatarum. Cum post sententiam discussoris vel rationalis fuerit provocatum, ad sinceritatem tuam negotium transferatur, ut, si mediocritas negotii aut longinquitas regionis ad iudicium tuum litigatores venire non patitur, iudicio rectoris provinciae, quem ipse probaveris, negotium deleges.

D. XV k. Mart. Mediolano Arcadio A. et Bautone conss.

[27] Impp. Arcadius et Honorius AA. Ennodio proconsuli Africae. Nominationes libellis vel edictis factae citra consilium publicum non valent: de quibus nec appellare necesse est, si sollemnitas deest.

D. XVII k. Iun. Mediolani Olybrio et Probino conss.

[28] Idem AA. Nebridio proconsuli Asiae. Si quis libellos appellatorios ingesserit, sciat se habere licentiam arbitrium commutandi et suos libellos recuperandi, ne iustae paenitudinis humanitas amputetur.

D. XI k. Aug. Constantinopoli Arcadio IIII et Honorio III AA. conss.

[24][190] Emperors VALENTINIAN and VALENS, Augusti, greet the Senate of the City of Carthage. Not only does the necessity of accepting an appeal seem to be imposed on judges, but a period of thirty days from the date of the decision is also fixed within which the records together with the report should be furnished to the litigants. The judge and his official staff will be subject to a fine if the requirements are violated in any respect.

Given February 4, at Milan, in the consulship of the deified Jovian and Varronian (364).

[25][191] Emperors GRATIAN, VALENTINIAN, and THEODOSIUS Augusti to Syagrius, Praetorian Prefect. We order that appeals shall also be permitted from fines imposed by judges.

Given June 18, in the consulship of Gratian and Theodosius Augusti (380).

[26][192] The same Augusti and ARCADIUS Augustus to Pelagius, Count of the Privy Purse. Since an appeal was lodged after the verdict of an Auditor (discussor) or Comptroller (rationalis), the affair should be referred to Your Uprightness, so that if the unimportance of the affair or the remoteness of the region does not permit the litigants to come to your court, you may delegate the affair to the judgment of the provincial governor whom you yourself approve.

Given February 15, at Milan, in the consulship of Arcadius Augustus and Bauto (385).

[27][193] Emperors ARCADIUS and HONORIUS Augusti to Ennodius, Proconsul of Africa. Appointments (of councilors) made by petitions or edicts outside a public meeting are not valid. Nor is it necessary to appeal them if the customary formality is lacking.

Given May 16, at Milan, in the consulship of Olybrius and Probinus (395).

[28][194] The same Augusti to NEBRIDIUS, Proconsul of Asia. If anyone has filed a petition of appeal, he should know that he has the right to change his mind and withdraw the petition, lest the benefit of a just repentance be curtailed.

Given July 22, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Arcadius, for the fourth time, and Honorius, for the third time (396).

190 = C.Th. 11.30.32, with some additional provisions. Combine with C.Th. 11.36.15. Seeck gives February 4, 365.

191 = C.Th. 11.30.38.

192 = C.Th. 11.30.45. Combine with C. 7.65.7. The Justinianic compilers have omitted the final sentence of the C.Th. text, which continues "but overseas appeals should be tried in your court within the space of a year; appeals from provinces that are contiguous or not far removed should be completed within the legally constituted time period."

193 = C.Th. 11.30.53. Combine with C.10.32.45; C.Th. 12.1.141–5.

194 = C.Th. 11.30.56. C. epitomates C.Th. and alters the wording dramatically.

[29] Idem AA. ad Eutychianum pp. pr. Addictos supplicio et pro criminum immanitate damnatos nulli clericorum vel monachorum, eorum etiam quos synoditas vocant, per vim atque usurpationem vindicare liceat ac tenere. 1. Quibus in causa criminali humanitatis consideratione, si tempora suffragantur, interponendae provocationis copiam non negamus, ut ibi diligentius examinetur, ubi contra hominis salutem per errorem vel gratia cognitoris oppressa putatur esse iustitia: ea condicione, ut, si proconsules vel comes Orientis, Augustalis, vicarii fuerint cognitores, non tam ad clementiam nostram quam ad amplissimas potestates sciant esse referendum. eorum enim de his plenum volumus esse iudicium, qui, si ita res est et crimen exegerit, rectius possint punire damnatos.

D. VI k. Aug. Mnizo Honorio A. IIII et Eutychiano conss.

[30] Idem AA. Theodoro pp. Si quis provocatione interposita suspecti iudicis velit prolatam evitare sententiam, in hac voce liberam habeat potestatem nec timeat contumeliam iudiciorum, cum et ab ipsa iniuria possit facile provocare, maxime cum a solo tantum praefecto praetorio non sine dispendio causae provocare permissum sit. sciant igitur cuncti sibi ab iniuriis et suspectis iudicibus et in capitali supplicio ac fortunarum dispendio provocationem esse concessam.

D. VII id. Iun. Mediolani Theodoro cons.

[31] Impp. Honorius et Theodosius AA. Asclepiodoto pp. pr. Si appellationem oblatam, in qua vel tuae amplitudinis vel urbanae praefecturae sacrum auditorium postulatur, iudex non susceperit vel suscepta appellatione apostolorum copiam denegaverit, ad deponendam super hac iniquitate querimoniam nec non etiam conveniendum adversarium ex sententia prolata iuxta antiquum ius anni metas habeat litigator: vel si huiusmodi appellatio suscepta non fuerit, in qua inferiorum iudicum sacra desideratur auditio, ad haec eadem facienda sex menses habeat litigator. 1. Si vero arbiter appellationem suscipere aut relationem dare contempserit, quattuor mensum tempora observentur: ut his quae

[29][195] The same Augusti to Eutychianus, Praetorian Prefect. pr. No clergymen or monks, or yet those called "fellow travelers,"[196] may by force or unlawful seizure protect and detain men sentenced to punishment and condemned for the enormity of their crimes. 1. We do not deny them the opportunity to interpose an appeal out of humanitarian consideration if time permits, in order that a more careful investigation can be made in those instances where justice is thought to have been suppressed contrary to human welfare either through error or the partiality of the judge. But this condition must be observed, that if Proconsuls, the Count of the East, the Augustal Prefect, or Vicars were the judges, the case must be referred not to Our Clemency, but to the Most High Office (of the Praetorian Prefect). We wish their jurisdiction to be plenary in order that, if the matter is such that the crime demands it, they can better punish the condemned.

Given July 27, at Mnizus, in the consulship of Honorius Augustus, for the fourth time, and Eutychianus (398).

[30][197] The same Augusti to Theodorus Praetorian Prefect. If anyone, by interposing an appeal, wants to avoid a verdict rendered by a judge suspected (of bias?), he shall have full freedom to do so in his plea, nor need he fear contumely from the court since it is easy to appeal even from an outrage, and especially since it is permitted to appeal without the penalty of losing one's case, with the lone exception of cases from the Praetorian Prefect. Therefore, let all know that they are permitted to appeal from outrages, and suspected judges, and in capital cases as well as those involving the loss of their property.

Given January 7, at Milan, in the consulship of Theodorus (399).

[31][198] Emperors Honorius and Theodosius Augusti to Asclepiodotus, Praetorian Prefect. pr. If an appeal is offered requiring an imperial hearing either by Your Amplitude or by the City Prefect but the judge below should not accept it, or if after accepting it he should refuse to make available the reports on an appeal (apostoli), the litigant may according to ancient law have one year after the verdict is rendered in which to make complaint of this iniquity and notify the opponent. Or if an appeal of this nature should not be accepted in cases in which an imperial hearing by lower judges is sought, the litigant shall have six months in which to do these things. 1. But if a judge arbitrator refuses to accept an appeal or make his report, the period granted is four months.

[195] = C.Th. 11.30.57, which is an abbreviated lex geminata of C.Th. 9.40.16. The beginning of §29 is repeated at C. 1.4.6. Combine with 1.3.11 and 12, 1.4.7; C.Th. 16.2.32.

[196] The text uses the Greek term synoditae, an alternative designation for cenoebitic monks in the fourth and fifth century CE.

[197] = C.Th. 11.30.58.

[198] = C.Th. 11.30.67. Combine with C. 7.51.3; C.Th. 11.31.9.

statuimus actitatis pareat appellator temporibus, quae de appellationibus definita noscuntur.

D. III k. April. Constantinopoli Asclepiodoto et Mariniano conss.

[32] Impp. Theodosius et Valentinianus AA. Cyro pp. pr. Praecipimus ex appellationibus spectabilium iudicum, quae per consultationes nostri numinis disceptationem implorant, non nostram ulterius audientiam expectari, ne nostris occupationibus, quibus pro utilitate mundi a singulorum nonnumquam negotiis avocamur, aliena fraudari commoda videantur.

1. Sed si a proconsulibus vel Augustali vel comite Orientis vel vicariis fuerit appellatum, virum illustrem praefectum praetorio, qui in nostro est comitatu, virum etiam illustrem quaestorem nostri palatii sacris iudiciis praesidentes disceptationem iubemus adripere eo ordine, ea observatione, isdem temporibus, quibus ceterae quoque lites fatali die post appellationem in sacris auditoriis terminantur. et hoc, licet quidam praedictorum spectabilium iudicum iure concesso ut sacri iudices appellationes acceperint. 1a. Quod si a duce fuerit appellatum, si idem et praeses sit, praefectura necessario tantum iure ordinario in sacro auditorio iudicabit.

2. In his autem omnibus iudiciis, quae consultationum introduximus loco, vel apostolos vel ea quae apud eum gesta sunt, contra cuius sententiam dicitur appellatum, suscipere ab appellatoribus et cognitiones inducere apud viros illustres praedictos iudices et ea quae geruntur excipere scribere scriptaque litigatoribus edere nostros epistulares praecipimus: officiis videlicet eorum, cum quibus vir illustris quaestor iudicat, exsequentibus iudicata.

3. Haec, si appellatio fuerit oblata iudici, qui non ex delegatione cognoscit. eorum enim sententiis appellatione suspensis, qui ex delegatione cognoscunt, necesse est eos aestimare, iuste nec ne fuerit appellatum, qui causas delegaverint iudicandas.

4. Huic saluberrimae legi illud etiam consultissime credidimus inserendum, ut, si privato, non illustri, uni pluribusve, ut adsolet, nostra serenitas adita delegaverit causam et eius eorumve definitio fuerit appellatione suspensa, vir quidem magnificus praefectus praetorio, qui in nostro est comitatu, cum viro illustri quaestore temporali iudicet

As you have been acting according to the measures We have established, the appellant must abide by the times that are recognized as applying to appeals.

Given March 30, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Asclepiodotus and Marinianus (423).

[32][199] Emperors THEODOSIUS and VALENTINIAN Augusti to Cyrus, Praetorian Prefect. pr. We direct that appeals from judges of spectabilis rank which seek a decision of Our Divine Majesty by the method of consultation must no longer expect Our hearing, in order that the benefit of others may not seem to suffer because of the preoccupations to which We are often summoned for the good of the world through the affairs of individuals.

1. Nevertheless, if an appeal is lodged from Proconsuls, or the Augustal Prefect, or the Count of the East, or Vicars, We order that the vir illustris Praetorian Prefect, who is in Our court, and the vir illustris Quaestor of Our Palace, both of whom preside over imperial courts, shall assume jurisdiction in the dispute in the same order, in the same form, and at the same times as other disputes are terminated within the normal time limit in imperial hearings on appeal. And this shall apply although the right has been granted to some of the aforesaid judges of spectabilis rank to accept appeals as imperial judges. 1a. But if an appeal is made from a Duke who is also a Provincial governor, the Prefect alone will of necessity give judgment in an imperial audience in the ordinary way.

2. Nevertheless, in all these appeals introduced in place of consultations, We order Our clerks of the correspondence bureau (epistulares) to accept from the appellants either the reports on appeal (apostoli) or the record of the proceedings held before the judge from whom the appeal is made, and to lay the case before the aforesaid judges of illustrious rank, and to take down, write out, and issue to the litigants their transcripts. Then the official staff of those with whom the vir illustris Quaestor adjudicates are to execute the judgment.

3. These provisions apply when an appeal is taken from a judge who did not try the case pursuant to special assignment. For if decisions of judges who tried a case pursuant to special assignment are suspended by appeal, the judges who assigned the cases to be tried must decide upon review, whether the appeal is justly or unjustly interposed.

4. We have deemed it expedient to add also to this salutary law, that if Our Serenity has been approached and has assigned a case for trial to a private, and not an illustris person, or to more than one, as is usual, and his or their finding is suspended by appeal, the vir magnificus Praetorian Prefect, who is in Our court, together with the vir illustris Quaestor, shall give judgment within the date for die. 4a. Nostri vero libellenses quae apud arbitros gesta sunt suscipiant, cognitiones inducant et ea quae geruntur excipiant scribant scriptaque litigatoribus edant: qui etiam apud arbitros, licet illustres sint, ex delegatione nostra cognoscentes excipiunt, si in sacratissimo nostri numinis comitatu causae dicantur.

[199] Combine with C. 3.4.1, 7.63.2, reporting a date of May 20 or 21, 440. Seeck gives May 20, 440.

5. Sane si illustrium ac magnificorum iudicum sententiae fuerint appellatione suspensae, eorum videlicet, quorum sententias licet appellatione suspendi, per consultationem nostram volumus audientiam expectari, licet antea privato homini, id est non illustri, lite a nobis delegata is postea tempore definitionis illustri decoratus dignitate reperiatur: eodem observando et si alter ei coniunctus sit arbiter, qui non illustrem meruit dignitatem. 6. Quidquid autem hac lege specialiter non videtur expressum, id veterum legum constitutionumque regulis omnes relictum intellegant.

[33] Idem AA. Cyro pp. Eo casu, quo apparitor magisteriae potestatis a curia vel officio cohortali de statu in provincia patiatur controversiam vel ut tributa vel functiones debens in provincia detinetur, si sententia rectoris provinciae fuerit appellatione suspensa, cum tua sublimitate viro quoque magnifico magistro militum cognoscente causae iubemus merita ponderari, licet magister militum rectori provinciae causam delegaverit perorandam.

D. prid. non. Mart. Constantinopoli Cyro vc. cons.

[34] Imp. Iustinus A. Demostheni pp. pr. Iubemus, si qua suggestio maioris vel minoris iudicis ad nostram referatur clementiam de negotio, quod iudicandum ei tradidimus vel de quo pro sua iurisdictione iudicaverit, petentis a nostro numine finem eidem imponi negotio, quod ab eo disceptatum est, sive additum sit eidem suggestioni, quid referenti placeat (dum id partibus per sententiae recitationem manifestum non fecit) sive nihil huiusmodi adiectum sit, sed simpliciter nostri numinis responsum expectat, non prius eam discerni, quam per sacram pragmaticam nostri numinis iussionem duo magnifici viri vel patricii vel consulares vel praefectorii, quos pro tempore nos elegerimus, iubeantur adiungi viro illustri pro tempore quaestori nostri palatii et una cum eo in scriptis relationem discernere (sive praesentibus partibus, si hoc appeal (temporali die). 4a. But Our clerks of the petition bureau (libellenses) shall receive the record of the proceedings before judge arbitrators, lay out the case, take down and write out the proceedings, and issue their transcripts to the litigants. They shall also take down the proceedings before judge arbitrators, though of illustris rank, who try a case upon special assignment by us, if the cases are heard in the court of Our Divine Majesty.

5. Of course, if verdicts by judges of illustris or magnificus rank shall have been suspended by appeal, that is to say the decisions of those whose sentences are allowed to be suspended by appeal, We wish to hear the case ourselves by consultation, although the case was originally assigned to a private and not to an illustris person, who, however, later had the illustris rank conferred upon him by the time of his decision. The same rule is to be applied if some other man who has not attained the illustris dignity, is associated with him in the trial of the case. 6. Anything that does not appear to be specifically mentioned in this law must be understood as still governed by the regulations of former laws and constitutions.

[33][200] The same Augusti to Cyrus, Praetorian Prefect. In case a subordinate official (apparitor) of the Master of the Soldiers (magisteriae potestates) endures a suit concerning his status in a province brought by a curia or the office staff of the governor (officium cohortale) or is detained in a province because he owes tribute or obligations, if the decision of the provincial governor is suspended by appeal, We order that the merits of the case must be reviewed by Your Sublimity together with the vir magnificus Master of the Soldiers, even if the Master of the Soldiers assigned the case to be heard by the provincial governor.

Given March 6, at Constantinople, in the consulship of the vir clarissimus Cyrus (441).

[34] Emperor Justin Augustus to Demosthenes, Praetorian Prefect. pr. If a query (suggestio) from a higher or inferior judge is referred to Our Clemency concerning a matter which We assigned to him for trial or which he tried pursuant to his inherent jurisdiction, and he is asking that a conclusion be imposed by Our Divine Majesty on that same matter that he tried, whether the judge referring the matter adds his decision to the query – if he did not make it known to the parties by reading it out – or adds nothing of the sort but simply awaits a response from Our Divine Majesty, We order that the query shall not be decided until, through a pragmatic order of Our Divine Majesty, We have elected for the occasion two men of magnificent rank – prospexerint, sive absentibus) et responsum relationi dandum sua sententia manifestare: ut tamen dispositio huiusmodi excellentissimorum iudicum omnimodo rata sit, nulli danda licentia provocationem contra eorum offerre sententiam vel aliam quamcumque dubitationem introducere. 1. Quam observationem non solum, si unus iudex suggestione vel relatione usus fuerit, tenere censemus, sed etiam si duobus vel amplioribus datis iudicibus in unam sententiam minime omnes convenerint, sed diversas suas sententias unusquisque nostrae mansuetudini rettulerit vel omnes nos consuluerint, quid decernendum sit.

[200] = Nov. Theod. 7.4.8 (giving Areobindus, Master of the Soldiers, as the recipient). Combine with C. 12.54.3. C. alters the Theodosian original significantly.

[35] Ἤδη τῆς τριακοστῆς διατάξεως εἰπούσης ἐπὶ πάντων τῶν ἀρχόντων τῶν ἰλλουστρίων, ἀφ᾽ ὧν ἐστιν ἔκκλητος, τὸν βασιλέα τῆς ἐκκλήτου ἀκροᾶσθαι, ἡ παροῦσα διάταξις εὑροῦσα νόμιμον ἐγνωσμένον, ὅτι κατὰ τῆς ἀποφάσεως τῶν ἐπάρχων ἔκκλητος μὲν οὐκ ἔστιν, ἀναψηλάφησις δὲ ἔστι, καὶ εἰ μὲν ἕτερός ἐστιν ἔπαρχος, πιθανόν ἐστιν, ὅτι ἀνατρέπει τὰ παρ᾽ ἑτέρῳ κριθέντα, ἐὰν δὲ ὁ αὐτὸς γένηται ἔπαρχος πάλιν ὁ ἤδη ψηφισάμενος, οὗτινος κατὰ τῆς ψήφου καὶ αἱ δεήσεις προσηνέχθησαν, ἐπειδὴ προείληπται ὑπὲρ τῆς παλαιᾶς αὐτοῦ ἀποφάσεως λέγειν, κελεύει ἡ διάταξις, ὥστε τὸν κοιαίστωρα συνακροᾶσθαι αὐτῷ δεύτερον ἢ τρίτον γενομένῳ ἐπάρχῳ καὶ ἐξετάζοντι τὰς ἐπὶ τῆς προτέρας αὐτοῦ ἀρχῆς γενομένας ἀποφάσεις, θεσπίζουσα, ὥστε μηδεμίαν εἶναι κατὰ τῶν τοιούτων ἀποφάσεων ἀναψηλάφησιν.

[36] Χρὴ μετὰ πᾶσαν τὴν δίκην τότε τὴν ἔκκλητον ἐπιδοθῆναι (οὐδὲ γὰρ βλάπτεταί τις, ἐὰν ἐν τῷ μεταξὺ ἐγένετο διαλαλιὰ ἀπαρνουμένη αὐτῷ δίκαιον ἁρμόζον αὐτῷ, τουτέστιν ἢ μαρτύρων παραγωγὴν ἢ ἀνάγνωσιν συμβολαίου. δύναται γὰρ ἐν τῇ ἐκκλήτῳ πάντα γυμνάσαι), ἵνα μὴ κατὰ τῆς μέσης διαλαλιᾶς ἐπιδεδομένης ἐκκλήτου μῆκος διδῶται ταῖς ὑπερθέσεσι, πολλάκις ἐν τῇ αὐτῇ ὑποθέσει ἐπιδεδομένης ἐκκλήτου καὶ ἐξεταζομένης, πάλιν ἄλλου κεφαλαίου γυμναζομένου καὶ πάλιν καὶ κατ᾽

patricians, consulars, or ex-prefects. And We order that these be joined to the vir illustris Quaestor of Our Palace at the time, and that together with him they examine the written report – either in the presence of the parties, if they think fit, or in their absence – and offer the response which in their judgment should be given to the report (relatio). Nevertheless, the disposition of the case made by these most excellent judges shall be final, and no one shall have the right to offer an appeal against their verdict or to raise any other doubts. 1. We determine that this rule shall be observed not only if one judge refers a matter to Us by query or report (suggestio vel relatio), but also when two or more judges specially appointed for a case cannot agree on a verdict, and each has referred his own different verdict to Our Mildness, or when all have asked Us what the decision should be.

<Without subscription (a. 520–524).>[201]

[35][202] The thirtieth[203] constitution already provides that appeals from all magistrates of illustris rank from whom an appeal is permitted will be heard by the Emperor. The present constitution finds it to be established law that no appeal can be made from the verdict of Prefects, but a retrial is possible. And if there is a new Prefect, it is plausible that he might overturn the judgment of his predecessor. But if the prefect is again the same as the one who gave judgment already and against whose verdict the appeals have been lodged, since it is assumed he will pronounce in favor of his earlier judgment, the constitution orders that the Quaestor hear the case together with the one who is Prefect for the second or third time and who is reviewing the judgments rendered under his earlier term of office. It ordains that there can be no retrial against such verdicts.

[36][204] It is necessary for an appeal to be lodged only after the entire case has been finished – for no one is harmed if in the middle of his case an interim order is given that denies him his due rights, like the summoning of witnesses or the recitation of a document, for it is possible to treat everything in the appeal – in order that the length of the proceedings may not be extended through postponements if appeals are interposed against interim reports,

[201] Lounghis et al. date to between June 521 and July 522.

[202] The preserved text is a Greek synopsis of the original constitution found at Bas. 9.1.125. Lounghis et al. date to between 522 and 527.

[203] Read "thirty-second."

[204] The preserved text is a Greek synopsis of the original constitution found at Bas. 9.1.126. Possibly to combine with C. 3.1.12; see 3.1.16. At C. 3.1.16 Justinian claims the provisions of this constitution as his own. Because, however, the inscription of the following constitution (37) does not identify Justinian as "the same," Krüger believes the instant constitution was issued under the joint rule of Justin and Justinian in 527. Lounghis et al. date to between April 4 and August 1, 527.

αὐτοῦ παρεχομένης ἐκκλήτου. Ἐὰν δὲ διαιτητής ἐστιν ὁ ἐν μέσῃ διαλαλιᾷ δίκαιόν τι αὐτοῖς ἀρνησάμενος, κελεύει ἐγγράφως τούτῳ ἐπισκήπτειν, ὥστε ἐν τῇ ἐκκλήτῳ φυλάττεσθαι αὐτοῖς τὴν περὶ τούτου δικαιολογίαν ἀπρόκριτον. εἰ δὲ παρὰ ταῦτα γένηται, μήτε δεχέσθω τὴν ἔκκληπτον ὁ δικαστὴς καὶ αὐτὸς ὁ ἐκκαλεσάμενος ὑπὲρ παραβάσεως πεντήκοντα λίτρας ἀργύρου παρεχέτω.

[37] Imp. Iustinianus A. Menae pp. pr. In offerendis provocationibus, ex quibus consultationum more negotium in nostrum sacrum palatium introduci solebat, hoc addendum esse censemus, ut, si quidem non excedat litis aestimatio decem librarum auri quantitatem, ex ipsa scilicet sententia iudicis discernenda, non duobus, sicut antea, magnificis iudicibus, sed uni tantummodo disceptatio negotii deputetur. 1. Sin vero memoratam excedens quantitatem viginti libris auri terminetur, duobus tradatur magnificis iudicibus, viris scilicet devotis epistularibus cognitionalia certamina excipientibus, ita tamen ut, si dissentirent, virum illustrem pro tempore quaestorem adhibeant, ut eo dubietatem dirimente finiatur negotium: 2. His videlicet litibus, quarum aestimatio viginti librarum auri quantitatem excedit, in commune auditorium florentissimorum sacri nostri palatii procerum introducendis: 3. Ut tamen secundum iam statuta liceat quidem non solum victo, sed etiam victori consultationem ad unum vel duos iudices mittendam intra biennii tempus ei vel eis intimare: post excessum enim memorati temporis huiusmodi licentiam amputamus. 4. Quae vero fuerint ab eo vel eis decreta, nulla provocatione suspendantur. 5. Novas etiam adsertiones a partibus apud eundem vel eosdem iudices addi ad exemplum consultationis ad sacrum nostrum palatium introducendae permittimus.

D. VIII id. April. Constantinopoli Decio cons.

[38] Idem A. Demostheni pp. Si quando duciano iudicio appellatio fuerit oblata, sive ab ipsa qualitate iudicis sive ex divina delegatione viro spectabili duci destinata, sive inter spectabiles idem dux connummeretur sive illustri dignitate decoratur sive etiam maiore, cum etiam magisteriae potestatis homines nec non consulares saepe utilitate publica poscente ad huiusmodi curam perveniunt, nullo discrimine habito non dignitatem, sed ducatus magistratum spectari et appellationem ex quocumque duce venientem non ut antea erat dispositum, sed apud since often in the same case an appeal is interposed and investigated, but then, when a new heading is treated, another appeal is offered in turn against it. If it is a judge arbitrator who denies someone his right in an interim report, it orders him to object to this in writing so that he safeguards his defense against this in his appeal. If the contrary occurs, the judge must not accept the appeal and the appellant himself must pay 50 pounds of silver because of his transgression.

<Without subscription (527?).>

[37][205] Emperor JUSTINIAN to Menas, Praetorian Prefect. pr. In offering appeals, through which an affair was customarily introduced into Our Imperial Palace in the manner of a consultation, We think the following additional provision should be made. If the estimated amount of the suit, to be determined by the decision of the judge, does not exceed 10 pounds of gold, the adjudication of the affair shall not be referred, as it used to be, to two judges of magnificus rank but only to one. 1. If, however, the amount involved exceeds that sum but not 20 pounds of gold, the matter shall be referred to two judges of magnificus rank, and Our devoted clerks of the correspondence bureau (epistulares) will take down the court proceedings. If, however, the two judges cannot agree, they shall summon the current vir illustris Quaestor, so that the he may settle any doubt and bring the affair to a close. 2. Suits in which the estimated amount involved exceeds 20 pounds of gold shall be heard in the collective court of most flourishing highest officials of Our imperial palace. 3. Nevertheless, in accord with previous statutes, with respect to a consultation that would need to be sent to one or two judges, not only the loser but also the winner is permitted to present it to him or them within two years' time. But We curtail this right after that time has lapsed. 4. The decision rendered by any such judge or judges shall not be suspended by any appeal. We also permit new allegations to be added by the parties before the judge or judges, after the example of a consultation introduced to Our imperial palace.

Given April 6, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Decius (529).

[38] The same Augustus to Demosthenes, Praetorian Prefect. If an appeal is at any time made from the decision of a Duke, whether it was rendered by him in his role as judge or from imperial assignment to a Duke of spectabilis rank, and with no distinction made as to whether the same Duke numbered among the spectabiles or was honored with the illustris rank or even higher – for even men of the rank of a magistrate and even consulars attain responsibilities of this sort when public utility demands – you must look not to his rank but to the magistracy of Dukedom and to the name itself no matter what level of Duke it virum sublimissimum magistrum officiorum nec non virum excellentissimum nostri palatii quaestorem communi audientia praeposita in sacro auditorio more consultationum, viris devotis epistularibus excipientibus ventilari: nulla veteris legis in hac causa observatione custodienda, sed apud eosdem tantummodo excellentissimos iudices causa trutinanda.

[205] Combine with C. 7.64.10.

[39] Idem A. Iuliano pp. pr. Ampliorem providentiam subiectis conferentes, quam forsitan ipsi vigilantes non inveniunt, antiquam observationem emendamus, cum in appellationum auditoriis is solus post sententiam iudicis emendationem meruerat, qui ad provocationis convolasset auxilium, altera parte, quae hoc non fecisset, sententiam sequi, qualiscumque fuisset, compellenda.

1. Sancimus itaque, si appellator semel in iudicium venerit et causas appellationis suae proposuerit, habere licentiam et adversarium eius, si quid iudicatis opponere maluerit, si praesto fuerit, hoc facere et iudiciale mereri praesidium: sin autem absens fuerit, nihilo minus iudicem per suum vigorem eius partes adimplere. 1a. In refutatoriis autem libellis, qui solent maxime in sacro auditorio prudentissimorum nostrorum procerum recitari, caveant tam litigatores quam libellorum dictatores verbosis uti adsertionibus et ea quae iam perorata sunt iterum resuscitare, sed haec sola eis inscribere, quae compendiosa narratione causas provocationis possunt explanare vel aliquid novi continent vel addere quod derelictum est: scituri, quod si hoc fuerit praetermissum, non deerit adversus libellorum conditores amplissimi iudicii competens indignatio, quod sufficiant gestorum volumina introducta et virorum spectabilium magistrorum scriniorum breves omnia apertissime ostendere.

2. Sed cum scimus legem nostram esse promulgatam, per quam more consultationum in causis quidem, quae usque ad decem libras auri extenduntur, unum iudicem sanximus superponi, viginti autem duos sublimissimos iudices, sed cum prima quidem facie lis videbatur non tantam summam excedere, in definitiva autem sententia apparebat iudici vel iudicibus etiam maiorem quantitatem debere imponere, non erat eis possibile formam qua erant conclusi excedere. 2a. Sed nos definimus et omnem eis damus facultatem, si hoc ita fuerit subsecutum, licere eis et ampliorem summam praefata quantitate in qua dati sunt iudices comes from, and you must air the case not as had been previously required, but before the most sublime Master of the Offices and the most excellent Quaestor of Our Palace in a collective hearing held in the imperial chamber after the fashion of consultations, with the devoted clerks of the correspondence bureau taking down the proceedings. In this case no observation of the old law is to be preserved, but the case must be weighed only before these same most excellent judges.

[39] The same Augustus to Julian, Praetorian Prefect. pr. Bestowing a fuller providence on Our subjects than perhaps even they themselves, if vigilant, will discover, We correct an ancient rule, since in the hearing of appeals only the one who sought the aid of the appeal had merited reparation following the verdict of a judge, while the party who did not appeal was compelled to abide by the decision, whatever it was.

1. We therefore ordain that when the appellant has come into court and has stated his reasons for the appeal, his opponent, if he wishes to object to any part of the decision, may do so if present, and shall receive legal recourse. But if he is absent, the judge shall, nevertheless, on his own motion, defend his side of the case. 1a. In connection with refutatory petitions which are customarily read chiefly in the imperial court of Our most prudent highest officials, both the litigants and those who draft such statements must be careful not to make use of verbose allegations or repeat what has already been stated. But they should take care to write in them only those things which can explain the reasons for the appeal in a succinct narrative or which contain something new or add something that was left out. They should know that, if they neglect to do this, the corresponding indignation of the most high court against the composers of such documents will not be lacking, because the books containing the record of the proceedings and the short abstract made by the viri spectabiles Masters of the Bureaus ought to be sufficient to show everything clearly.

2. Further, We know that We promulgated a law[206] in which We ordained that cases appealed in the manner of consultations which involve an amount up to 10 pounds of gold should be heard by one judge, and cases involving as high as 20 pounds by two most sublime judges. But if prima facie the suit did not seem to exceed the respective amounts mentioned, but the judge or judges in reaching a final verdict came to the conclusion that a judgment for a greater amount should be rendered, it was impossible for them to go outside of the format by which they were bound. 2a. But We direct and give them full power, if this should occur, to exceed the sum with one even greater than the amount they were originally assigned to judge, and to give a verdict not within the excedere, et non ad modum suae rationis, sed ad veritatis indaginem ferre sententiam, ne tanti iudices quasi vinculis praepediti non possint legum veritati et iudiciali vigori per omnia satisfacere.

[206] C. 7.62.37.

D. VI k. April. Constantinopoli Lampadio et Oreste vv. cc. conss.

LXIII De Temporibus et Reparationibus Appellationum seu Consultationum

[1] Imp. Constantinus A. ad Crispinum. Si quis per absentiam nominatus vel ad duumviratus aliorumque honorum infulas vel munus aliquod evocatus ad provocationis auxilium cucurrerit, ex eo die interponendae appellationis duorum mensum tempora ei computanda sunt, ex quo contra se celebratam nominationem didicisse monstraverit. nam praesenti, qui factam nominationem cognovit et appellare voluerit, statim debet duorum mensum spatium computari.

D. VIII id. Iul. Constantino A. VI et Constantio C. conss.

[2] Impp. Theodosius et Valentinianus AA. Cyro pp. pr. Tempora fatalium dierum pro saeculi nostri beatitudine credidimus emendanda ubique dilationum materias amputantes. et primi quidem fatalis diei tempora post appellationem, sive a viro clarissimo rectore provinciae sive a spectabili iudice fuerit appellatum, sex mensuum esse iubemus.
1. Quod si primo fatali die lapsus est appellator, tricesimum primum diem alterum volumus esse fatalem. quod si eo quoque appellator exciderit, tertium similiter totidem diebus intermissis fatalem observari decernimus. quod si tertius quoque lapsus fuerit temporalis, quartum etiam fatalem post tricesimum primum diem similiter observari decernimus.

2. Quod si ita contigerit, ut quattuor fatalibus diebus qui appellavit exciderit, tunc intra trium alium mensum spatium a nostro numine reparationem peti praecipimus: qua petita nec adversarium decernimus admoneri nec temporalem diem a petitione reparationis numerari, sed trium mensum spatio ex quarto fatali numerando causam induci praecipimus, licet ante unum diem reparatio fuerit impetrata, measure of their remit, but as the facts truly require, lest judges of this magnitude be fettered, as it were, by chains, and not be able to satisfy the truth of the law and judicial power in all respects.

Given March 27, at Constantinople, in the consulship of the viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestes (530).

Sixty-Third Title Time Periods and Their Reinstatements for Appeals and Consultations[207]

[1][208] Emperor CONSTANTINE Augustus to Crispinus. If anyone is appointed in his absence either to the duumvirate or to the badges of some other honor or called to some public service, and he has recourse to the aid of an appeal, the period of two months for interposing an appeal must be computed from the day on which he shows that he learned his appointment was announced. For if he was present and knew of his appointment and wanted to appeal, the period of two months ought to be computed beginning immediately.

Given July 8, in the consulship of Constantine Augustus, for the sixth time, and Constantius Caesar (320).

[2][209] Emperors THEODOSIUS and VALENTINIAN Augusti to Cyrus, Praetorian Prefect. pr. In keeping with the happiness of Our times, We believed that the deadlines for appeal (tempora fatalium dierum) should be corrected so as to curtail opportunities for delay. And We order that the first deadline after the appeal is taken shall be six months, whether the appeal is made from a vir clarissimus provincial governor or from a judge of spectabilis rank. 1. But if the appellant lets the first deadline lapse, then We want the thirty-first day thereafter to be the second deadline. But if the appellant also exceeds that, We decree that the third deadline shall be after the same number of days has passed. But if the third period has also lapsed, We decree that the fourth deadline shall likewise fall on the thirty-first day.

2. But if it happens that the appellant has exceeded four deadlines, We direct that he seek reinstatement (reparatio) of his right of appeal from Our Divine Majesty within the period of three additional months. We decree that the opponent need not be notified when a reinstatement is sought, nor need the deadline be computed from the date of the petition for reinstatement, but We instruct that the case be introduced within a space of three months to be calculated from the fourth deadline, even if the reinstatement was obtained one day

[207] See D. 49.4.
[208] = C.Th. 11.30.10. Seeck dates to July 8, 353.
[209] Combine with C. 3.4.1; 7.62.32.

licet adlegata in iudicio virorum illustrium praefectorum non fuerit. 3. Nec hoc parti nocebit adversae, cum non dubius, sed notus omnibus dies fatalis appareat. haec, si adversus viri clarissimi rectoris provinciae vel spectabilium iudicum sententias fuerit appellatum.

4. Quod si arbitro in provincia ex delegatione sacra disceptante appellatio subsequatur, post priorem fatalem lapsum tres alii tantum fatales dies similiter ut supra dictum est servabuntur, nulla reparatione a nostro numine postulanda, ita ut nonaginta tribus diebus elapsis iudicata congruae exsecutioni mandentur. 5. Sin autem ex sententia praetorianae praefecturae vel magistri officiorum vel alio illustri dignitate decorato arbiter in hac sacratissima civitate fuerit delegatus et appellatio contra definitionem vel sententiam eius subsecuta fuerit, primus quidem fatalis dies duorum mensum, alii vero tres ad similitudinem supra dictorum fatalium numerentur. 6. Qui vero delegatum vel a spectabili iudice seu praeside provinciae arbitrum appellaverit, primum quidem fatalem diem duorum mensum, tres vero alios ad similitudinem praedictorum fatalium dierum habeat.

7. Illud etiam circa observationem fatalium dierum custodiri decernimus, ut, si forte temporales in feriatos quoquo modo inciderint, praecedentes eos dies ut temporales a litigantibus observentur. quod si quis secus, ac iura praecipiunt, lapsus die fuerit temporali et hoc primo loco vel a praesente adversario vel etiam a iudice, si solus litigat, appellatori fuerit oppositum probatumque, pro eo habebitur appellator, ac si sententiam quoquo modo non coactus susceperit.

D. XII k. Iun. Valentiniano A. V et Anatolio conss.

[3] Imp. Iustinus A. Apioni pp. Nemo arbitretur in posterum licentiam futuram consultationibus ultra statuti temporis vivendi spatia neque per oblationem precum neque per sacrum rescriptum super reparatione temporum indulgendum neque sub praetextu quodam altero: sed omnibus incumbendum esse vigilanti diligentia, quo provocationes eorum intra statutum tempus introducantur, ita ut etiam gesta in iudicio, contra quod provocatum est, non prope finem temporis tradantur scrinio sacrarum epistularum, ne praepediatur per astutias fatalis rei terminus, sed aut statim, postquam appellatum sit, aut non minus earlier and even if it was not adduced in the court of the viri illustres Prefects. 3. Nor will this harm the adverse party, since the deadline is not in doubt but is known to all. These provisions apply in case of an appeal made from the verdicts of a vir clarissimus provincial governor or judges of spectabilis rank.

4. But if an appeal arises from a judge arbitrator who gave judgment in a province pursuant to an imperial assignment, only three additional deadlines shall be kept in the same manner as mentioned above, and no reinstatement can be demanded from Our Divine Majesty. In this way once ninety-three days have passed, the judgment should be ordered to be properly executed. 5. Nevertheless, if a judge arbitrator was appointed in this imperial city by orders of the Praetorian Prefect or of the Master of the Offices or of any other person of illustrious rank, and an appeal followed against his decision or verdict, the first deadline shall consist of two months, but the other three should be counted the same as the deadlines mentioned above. 6. And whoever appeals from a judge arbitrator appointed by a judge of spectabilis rank or by a provincial governor should have a first deadline of two months and three others the same as mentioned above.

7. We decree that this too must be complied with in connection with deadlines, that if the trial day falls on a holiday, the days immediately preceding shall be considered the trial days by the litigants. But if, contrary to what the laws direct, someone misses the trial day, and this is set up against the appellant in the first instance and proven, whether by the adversary, if present, or by the judge, if the person is litigating alone, the appellant shall be considered as having accepted the verdict without having been coerced in any way.

Given May 21, in the consulship of Valentinian Augustus, for the fifth time, and Anatolius (440).[210]

[3] Emperor J*USTIN* Augustus to Apion, Praetorian Prefect. No one need think that in future there will be a right to appeals by consultation beyond the period of time currently established, whether through the offering of petitions or through an imperial rescript granting indulgence for the reinstatement of periods of appeal or upon any other pretext. But it is incumbent on everyone to be vigilant that their appeals are introduced within the established time. And they should do it in such a way that the proceedings in the case from which an appeal is made should not be delivered to the imperial bureau for correspondence toward the end of the time fixed, which might cause the final deadline to lapse through trickery, but should deliver them immediately after an appeal is taken, or not later than when half of the period has expired, so that a tardy quam ante dimidiam partem temporis praebeantur scrinio, ne, quod per angustias contingit temporum, tardus appellationis fautor suo dispendio refutetur.

[210] Seeck dates this constitution to May 20, 440.

D. k. Dec. Constantinopoli Magno cons.

[4] Idem A. Tatiano magistro officiorum. pr. Per hanc divinam sanctionem decernimus, ut licentia quidem pateat in exercendis consultationibus tam appellatori quam adversae parti novis etiam adsertionibus utendi vel exceptionibus, quae non ad novum capitulum pertinent, sed ex illis oriuntur et illis coniunctae sunt, quae apud anteriorem iudicem noscuntur propositae. 1. Sed et si qua dicta quidem adlegatio monstrabitur vel instrumentum prolatum aliquod, probationes tamen illo quidem defuerunt tempore, verum apud sacros cognitores sine procrastinatione praeberi poterunt, id quoque eos admittere, quo exercitatis iam negotiis pleniore subveniatur veritatis lumine.

D. v k. Iun. Constantinopoli Rusticio cons.

[5] Imp. Iustinianus A. Triboniano quaestori sacri palatii. pr. Cum anterioribus legibus ex omni provincia ad hunc nostrum sacratissimum comitatum similis cursus ad appellationes exercendas impertitus est, necessarium nobis visum est huiusmodi spatiis iustum imponere libramentum.

1. Sancimus itaque, si quidem ab Aegyptiaco vel Libyco limite vel Orientali tractu usque ad utrasque Cilicias numerando vel Armeniis et gentibus et omni Illyrico causa fuerit more appellationum transmissa, primum semestre spatium in antiqua definitione permanere et nihil penitus neque deminui neque adcrescere. 1a. Sin autem ex aliis nostri imperii partibus sive Asianae sive Ponticae sive Thraciae dioeceseos lis provocatione suspensa in hanc regiam urbem perveniat, pro semestri spatio trium tantummodo mensum spatium eis indulgeri: aliis trium mensum spatiis, id est nonaginta tribus diebus simili modo sequentibus sive semestre tempus sive tres priores menses secundum locorum definitionem, quam designavimus. 1b. Sed et aliis tribus mensibus, qui ex reparatione ab aula concedi solent, in suo robore duraturis et prioribus accedentibus, ut partim annale numeretur, partim novem mensum spatium consequatur.

1c. Et cum antea in fine cuiusque temporis unus fatalis dies ex antiquis legibus constitutus est et saepe eveniebat (cum multae sunt occasiones mortales appellationum) vel aegritudine vel spatii prolixitate vel per alias causas, quas nec dici nec enumerari facile sit, eundem diem appellant will not be refuted at his own loss because of what happens when time runs short.

Given December 1, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Magnus (518).

[4] The same Augustus to Tatianus, Master of the Offices. We decree by this imperial sanction, that in appeals by consultation, both appellants and their opponents have the right to set up new claims or defenses which do not pertain to a new heading but arise out of or are connected to matters known to have been brought before the previous judge. 1. But even if some assertion is shown to have been made or a document to have been offered, yet proof for it was previously lacking, and if it can be furnished to the imperial judges without delay, they shall also admit this so that fuller light may be shed on affairs previously investigated.

Given May 28, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Rusticius (520).

[5] Emperor JUSTINIAN Augustus to Tribonianus, Quaestor of the Imperial Palace. pr. Since in previous laws a similar course was allotted for making appeals from all the provinces to this Our Imperial Court, it seemed necessary to Us to give proper measure to the time periods necessary for this.

1. We therefore ordain that, if a case should be sent on appeal from the Egyptian or Libyan frontier or the eastern reaches up to both Cilicias or from the Armenians and the Nations (gentes) and all of Illyricum, the first period of six months shall remain as in the old regulation[211] and shall in no way be increased or diminished. 1a. But if a suit suspended by appeal should reach this imperial city from other parts of Our empire, whether from the dioceses of Asiana, Pontica, or Thracia, instead of a six-month period, only a three-month span will be permitted for it. The other periods of three months, that is to say the ninety-three days, shall follow in similar fashion the six-month or three-month period according to the distinction We have assigned to the various places. 1b. The other period of three months, which is usually granted by the Emperor for reinstatement of the right of appeal shall, continue in force and be added to the prior ones. And so a one-year period is calculated in some places and a nine-month period occurs in others.

1c. And formerly a single deadline was established at the end of each time period following ancient laws, and it used to happen often – since men have many occasions for appeal – that, either through sickness or through great distance or for other reasons difficult to relate or recount, that same deadline was not observed, and suits expired, and people's property was endangered fatalem non observari et lites expirare et huiusmodi luctuosis infelicitatibus patrimonia hominum titubare: propter hoc fortunae relevantes insidias sancimus non in unum diem fatalem standum esse in posterum, sed sive ante quartum diem fatalis luminis et ipsum fatalem sive post quinque dies, ex quo ortus fatalis effluxerit, appellator venerit et litem instituendam curaverit et eam in competens iudicium deduxerit, legi videri satisfactum, ne ingemiscat mortuae causae dispendium, sed nostro gaudeat beneficio, cum nobis cognitum sit etiam ex errore calculi dierum quem officium habuit saepe esse causas periclitatas: quod in posterum non fieri ex remedio legis praesentis sperandum est. 1d. Eodem beneficio et in aliis omnibus fatalibus qui vel a pedaneis iudicibus vel ab aliis, quos leges suis sanctionibus enumeraverunt, custodiendo seu observando, ut decem fatales pro uno ubique instituantur.

[211] C. 7.63.2. As to "the Nations," see C. 1.29.5.

2. In his autem casibus, in quibus biennium constitutum est, quatenus more consultationum in regia urbe sub communi audientia florentissimorum nostri palatii procerum ventilentur, biennii metas unius anni terminis coartamus, ut intra eum et gesta colligere et ea viris devotis epistularibus tradere et refutatorios libellos, si voluerint, offerre et litem in sacrum nostrum consistorium introducere cogantur: nulli licentia deneganda victrici parti, si voluerit, secundum quod iam constitutum est, et praemature causam inducere neque annali spatio expectato. 3. Si tamen in sacro nostro consistorio lis exordium ceperit, etsi non fuerit in eodem die completa, tamen perpetuari eam concedimus, cum iniquum sit propter occupationes florentissimi ordinis, quas circa nostrae pietatis ministeria habere noscitur, causas hominum deperire.

4. Illud etiam merito addendum huic legi censemus, ut si qui fatali die apud appellationis iudicem introductus, sive ex una parte sive cognitionaliter causae appellationis imponat exordium, deinde relicta ea discedat et in desidia reliquum tempus permaneat et annale tempus post inchoatam litem praeterierit, victore neque sententiam ad effectum perducere valente propter litem iam inchoatam neque iam terminum accipere inveniente, cum appellatoris absentia eam finiri non facile concedit, huiusmodi iniquitatem amputantes (cum adversarius potest et minime praesente appellatore litem exercere, quia hoc speciale privilegium eius est, qui appellationi examinandae praesidet, posse ex una parte causam dirimere) iubemus eundem appellatorem, nisi observaverit iudicium et causam usque ad finem peregerit, sed per eum steterit, quominus omnia litis certamina impleantur, appellatione defraudari et sententiam contra by grievous misfortunes of this sort. For this reason We relieve the snares of fortune and ordain that in future there is no need to abide by a single deadline, but the law will be satisfied if the appellant approaches, sees to the establishment of his suit, and brings it before the appropriate court either up to four days before the deadline day, or on that day itself, or for the five days following sunset on the deadline. Thus he will not groan at the loss of an expired case, but will rejoice in Our beneficence, for it has come to Our attention that cases have often been threatened even by calculation errors committed by the official staff. It is hoped this will not happen in future because of the remedy of the present law. 1d. This benefit should also be kept and observed in all other deadlines both by delegated judges and others whom the laws enumerate in their sanctions, so that ten-day deadlines shall be established everywhere instead of one-day.

2. But in cases in which a period of two years is now established for airing an appeal by consultation in the Imperial City before a collective hearing of the most flourishing highest officials of Our palace, We restrict the boundary from two years to one year, so that appellants are compelled within this span to collect the proceedings and deliver these to the devoted clerks of the correspondence bureau, and to offer refutatory petitions, if they wish, and to introduce their suit into Our Imperial Court. Nor must the right be denied to the winning party, if he so desires, to introduce his case very early without waiting a year's time, in accordance with what has long been established.[212] 3. Nevertheless, if a suit is begun before Our Imperial Council, even if it should not be finished on the same day, We permit it to be continued, since it would be unjust if people's cases failed because of the preoccupations of the Most Flourishing Order while it is engaged in the service of Our Piety.

4. We think that the following should also be added to this law: if an appellant is brought before an appeals judge on the deadline day, whether he began the case for appeal as a single party or in the manner of an inquest, and if he then abandons it and departs and remains inactive for the time to come, and a year's time passes after the suit was begun, the winner will not be able to bring the verdict into effect on account of the suit having been begun but not yet finished, since the absence of the appellant hardly permits it to be concluded; curtailing such injustice We command that, if the appellant is not observant of the court and does not pursue his case to its end, and if because of him every dispute is not concluded in the suit, that same appellant will be deprived of his appeal and the verdict rendered against him will remain in force and be brought into effect as if he had never appealed in the first place; for his adversary is able to conduct his suit even if the appellant is not present, since it is the eum latam in suo robore durare et ad effectum perduci, tamquam si ab initio minime fuerit provocatum: nisi ipse appellator evidentissime probationibus possit ostendere se quidem summa ope nisum voluisse litem exercere, per iudicem autem stetisse vel aliam inexorabilem causam subsecutam, propter quam hoc facere minime valuit. tunc etenim aliud ei annale tempus indulgemus, quo effluente et lite minime finem accipiente cadere eum de appellatorio iuvamine disponimus, cum sit ei apertissima facultas et nostram adire maiestatem et tarditatem iudicis in querellam deducere et nostro beneficio perpotiri.

[212] See C. 7.62.37.2, 7.64.10.1.

5. Cui consentaneum est, ut et in sententiis omnium amplissimorum praefectorum praetorio ex divino oraculo retractandis eadem observatio, quae supra dicta est, post ingressum unius vel utriusque partis tam propter absentiam personarum quam propter statuta tempora teneat. 6. Sin autem partes inter se scriptura interveniente paciscendum esse crediderint nemini parti licere ad provocationis auxilium pervenire vel ullum fatalem observare, eorum pactionem firmam esse censemus. legum etenim austeritatem in hoc casu volumus pactis litigantium mitigari.

D. XV k. Dec. Chalcedone Decio vc. cons.

LXIIII Quando Provocare Necesse Non Est

[1] Imp. Alexander A. Apollinario et aliis. Datam sententiam dicitis, quam ideo vires non habere contenditis, quod contra res prius iudicatas, a quibus provocatum non est, lata sit. cuius rei probationem si promptam habetis, et citra provocationis adminiculum quod ita pronuntiatum est sententiae auctoritatem non obtinebit.

PP. VIII k. April. Alexandro A. cons.

[2] Idem A. Capitoni. pr. Si, cum inter te et aviam defuncti quaestio de successione esset, iudex datus a praeside provinciae pronuntiavit potuisse defunctum et minorem quattuordecim annis testamentum facere ac per hoc aviam potiorem esse, sententiam eius contra tam manifesti iuris formam datam nullas habere vires palam est et ideo in hac specie nec provocationis auxilium necessarium fuit. 1. Quod si, cum de aetate quaereretur, implesse defunctum quartum decimum annum ac per hoc iure factum testamentum pronuntiavit, nec provocasti aut post appellationem impletam causa destitisti, rem iudicatam retractare non debes.

<PP. XVI k. Apr. Alexandro A. II et Marcello? conss.>

special privilege of the person who presides over appeals courts to be able to adjudicate cases with only one party present; unless the appellant can clearly show that he wanted to use every effort to carry on the suit but was halted because of the judge or some other unavoidable cause through which he was unable to do so; for in that case We grant him one more year's time; but if that, too, passes and the suit is not terminated, We order that he should lose any relief from an appeal, since he has the fullest opportunity to come before Our Majesty, complain of the tardiness of the judge, and obtain Our beneficence.

5. It is proper that the above-stated rule should also be applied by all of Our Most High Praetorian Prefects when reviewing cases by imperial order after the appearance of one or both of the parties, both with regard to the absence of persons as well as to the times established. 6. If the parties deem it best, however, to make a pact in writing that neither party shall resort to the help of an appeal or pay attention to any deadline, We determine that their pact shall be valid. For We want the severity of the law to be mitigated in this case by the pacts of the litigants.

Given November 17, at Chalcedon, in the consulship of the vir clarissimus Decius (529).

Sixty-Fourth Title When It Is Not Necessary to Appeal[213]

[1] Emperor ALEXANDER Augustus to Apollinarius and others. You say that a decision was rendered which you contend to be without force because it was rendered contrary to matters previously adjudicated from which no appeal was taken. If you have the proof of that at hand, the pronouncement made in this way will not obtain the force of a verdict, even leaving aside the support of an appeal.

Posted March 25, in the consulship of Alexander Augustus (222).

[2] The same Augustus to Capito. pr. If, in a suit between you and the grandmother of the deceased about an inheritance, the judge appointed for the case by the provincial governor held that the decedent, though less than 14 years old, was capable of making a testament, and because of this the grandmother prevailed, his verdict was so clearly rendered contrary to the existing law that it obviously has no force and no appeal was necessary in such case. 1. But if, when the question of age was raised, he held that the deceased had passed his fourteenth year and that the testament was therefore valid, and you did not appeal or you abandoned the case after the appeal had been made, you must not reopen the matter once adjudicated.

Posted March 17, in the consulship of Alexander Augustus, for the second time <and Marcellus> (226).[214]

213 See D. 49.8.

214 The subscripts of this and the two following constitutions have been restored from the Vallicelliana fragments. See Corcoran, "New Subscripts."

[3] Imp. Gordianus A. Ingenuo. Si, ut proponis, suspensa apud amplissimos iudices cognitione provocationis, quam te ob id interposuisse dicis, quod decurio nominatus esses, ad duumviratum vocatus es, manifestum est praeiudicium futurae notioni memoratorum iudicum fieri non potuisse.

<PP. k. Mar. Sabino et Venusto? conss.>

[4] Impp. Valerianus et Gallienus AA. et Valerianus nob. C. Iuliano. Cum magistratus datos iudices et unum ex his pronuntiasse proponas, non videtur appellandi necessitas fuisse, cum sententia iure non teneat.

<PP. k. Iul. Aemiliano et Basso conss.>

[5] Imppp. Carus Carinus et Numerianus AAA. Domitiano. Certa ratione et fine multare praesides possunt. quod si aliter et contra legis statutum modum provinciae praeses multam vobis inrogaverit, dubium non est id, quod contra ius gestum videtur, firmitatem non tenere et sine appellatione posse rescindi.

PP. id. Ian. Caro et Carino conss.

[6] Idem AAA. Germano. Cum non eo die, quo praeses provinciae praecepit, iudex ab eodem datus pronuntiaverit, sed ductis diebus alieniore tempore sententiam dedisse proponatur, ne ambages frustra interpositae provocationis ulterius negotium protrahant, praeses provinciae superstitiosa appellatione submota ex integro inter vos cognoscet.

<PP. k. Dec. Carino et Numeriano conss.>

[7] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. Nicagorae. Venales sententias, quae in mercedem a corruptis iudicibus proferuntur, et citra interpositae provocationis auxilium iam pridem a divis principibus infirmas esse decretum est.

[3] Emperor GORDIAN Augustus to Ingenuus. If, as you state, the inquest into an appeal that you had interposed because you had been nominated as a decurion was pending before the most high judges, and you were then called to serve as duumvir, it is clear that this could not have prejudiced the upcoming trial by the above-mentioned judges.

Posted March 1, in the consulship of Sabinus <and Venustus> (240?).

[4] Emperors VALERIAN and GALLIENUS Augusti and Valerian the Most Noble Caesar to Julian. Since you state that the magistrates were appointed as judges and from these just one gave judgment, no appeal appears to have been necessary, since the verdict does not legally hold.

Posted July 1, in the consulship of Aemilianus and Bassus (259).

[5] Emperors CARUS, CARINUS, and NUMERIAN Augusti to Domitianus. Governors may impose fines under certain circumstances and within definite limits. But if the provincial governor has imposed a fine on you under other circumstances and beyond the limit fixed by law, there is no doubt that an act which appears to have been done contrary to law has no validity and can be annulled without appeal.

Posted January 13, in the consulship of Carus and Carinus (283).

[6] The same Augusti[215] to Germanus. Since the judge appointed by the provincial governor did not give his decision on the day when the governor ordered, but is said to have rendered his verdict after that date had been postponed and at a quite inappropriate time, the provincial governor should try the case between you anew, having set aside any superfluous appeal, lest the delays of an appeal interposed in vain should draw out the affair any further.

Posted December 1, in the consulship of Carinus and Numerian (284).

[7][216] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti to Nicogoras. Purchased verdicts given by corrupt judges for a price have long ago been declared by the deified emperors to be invalid, even without the assistance of an interposed appeal.

[215] The subscript of this constitution, which has been restored from the Vallicelliana fragments, dates it after the accession of Diocletian on November 20, 284. The heading is thus inaccurate, and this becomes the earliest known rescript of Diocletian.

[216] Possibly to combine with C. 6.34.2, with Corcoran, "New Subscripts" p. 417 on the date.

PP. v k. Ian. Diocletiano A. et Aristobulo conss.

[8] Idem AA. Constantio. Si pater tuus, cum decurio creareris, non consensit et quindecim annos aetatis agis, aditus praeses provinciae, si inhabilem te ad obeundum decurionatus honorem esse perspexerit, quando huiusmodi aetati etiam praetermissa appellatione subveniatur, iniquam nominationem removebit.

<PP. IIII k. Oct. ipsis IIII et III AA. conss.>

[9] Idem AA. et CC. Rufino. Veteranis, qui in legione vel vexillatione militantes post vicesima stipendia honestam vel causariam missionem consecuti sunt, onerum[vii] et munerum personalium vacationem concessimus. huius autem indulgentiae nostrae tenore remunerantes fidam devotionem militum nostrorum etiam provocandi necessitatem remisimus.

[10] Imp. Iustinianus A. Menae pp. pr. Omnem honorem salvum iudicibus reservantes, si quando una pars quasi laesa per definitivam eorum sententiam provocatione usa fuerit, interdicimus alteri parti quae vicit pro hoc tantummodo, quod nihil capere pro sumptibus litis et detrimentis vel minus quam oportuerat iussa est, provocationem offerre, cum ipsam decisionem litis recte factam esse confiteatur: iudicibus scilicet sive florentissimis proceribus sacri nostri palatii sive his, quibus pro minore litium aestimatione consultationes delegantur, si perspexerint adiuvandum esse victorem sumptuum perceptione, etiam sine provocatione eius hoc statuentibus et iustam eorundem sumptuum quantitatem definientibus. 1. Sed nec occasione consultationis introducendae victori provocare concedimus, cum et priscis legibus liceat ei et sine provocationis auxilio eandem consultationem differente suo adversario introducere et nos ei nihilo minus hoc permittimus, iniuriam ex supervacua provocatione iudicibus fieri prohibentes.

D. VIII id. April. Constantinopoli Decio vc. cons.

[vii] honorum, Vall.

Posted December 28, in the consulship of Diocletian Augustus and Aristobulus (285).[217]

[8] The same Augusti to Constantius. If your father did not give his consent when you were appointed as decurion and you are 15 years of age, and if, when you go before the provincial governor, he finds that you are incapable of assuming the office of the decurionate, he will annul the unfair appointment since persons of that age obtain relief even in the absence of an appeal.

Posted September 28, in the consulship of the same Augusti, for the fourth and third time (290).

[9] The same Augusti and the Caesars to Rufinus. We have granted veterans, if they have served in a legion or a cavalry squadron (vexillatio) and have obtained an honorable discharge or discharge for disability after twenty years of service, exemption from offices and personal services. But by this ruling of this Our Indulgence and in reward for the faithful devotion of Our soldiers We have also released them from the necessity of an appeal.

[10][218] Emperor J*ustinian Augustus to Menas, Praetorian Prefect.* pr. Preserving every honor due to judges, if one of the parties to a suit, feeling himself aggrieved by a final decision, resorted to an appeal, We forbid the other party, who was victorious, to make an appeal merely on the ground that he was ordered to receive nothing for the costs and damages of his suit or less than he ought to have, even though he acknowledges that the judgment of the suit is correct. In fact, the judges, whether they are the most flourishing highest officials of Our Imperial Palace or the sort to whom consultations are delegated for judgment of lesser suits, can establish this without an appeal and can delimit a fair amount for these same expenses if they foresee that the winner should be aided through the collection of his expenses. 1. Nor, however, do We permit the winner to appeal on the pretext of introducing a consultation, since it is permitted even in the previous laws to introduce a consultation without the aid of an appeal when his opponent is delaying, and We do permit him the same right, even as We forbid that any outrage be done to judges through a superfluous appeal.

Given April 6, at Constantinople, in the consulship of the vir clarissimus Decius (529).

[217] This subscript, as well as that for the next constitution, has been restored from the Vallicelliana fragments.

[218] Combine with C. 7.62.37.

LXV Quorum Appellationes Non Recipiantur

[1] Imp. Antoninus A. Sabino. Eius, qui per contumaciam absens, cum ad agendam causam vocatus esset, condemnatus est negotio prius summatim perscrutato, appellatio recipi non potest.

PP. non. Iul. Antonino A. IIII et Balbino conss.

[2] Imp. Constantius A. ad Hieroclem. pr. Observare curabis, ne quis homicidarum veneficorum maleficorum adulterorum itemque eorum, qui manifestam violentiam commiserunt, argumentis convictus, testibus superatus, voce etiam propria vitium scelusque confessus audiatu appellans. 1. Sicut enim haec ita observari disposuimus, ita aequum es testibus productis, instrumentis prolatis aliisque argumentis praestitis si sententia contra eum lata sit et ipse, qui condemnatus est aut minim voce sua confessus sit aut formidine tormentorum tentus contra se aliq uid dixerit, provocandi licentiam ei non denegari.

D. V id. Dec. Leontio et Sallustio conss.

[3] Impp. Valentinianus et Valens AA. ad Modestum pp. Nulli officia lium a sententia proprii iudicis provocatio tribuatur nisi in eo tantu negotio, quod ratione civili, super patrimonio forte, apud propriu iudicem inchoarit, scilicet ut in eo tantum negotio a sententia eius, c paret iudici, quisquis velit officialis appellet, quod per procuratore persequi iure tribuitur.

D. IIII id. Iun. Cyzico Valentiniano et Valente AA. conss.

[4] Idem et Gratianus AAA. ad Olybrium pu. Abstinendum prors appellatione sancimus, quotiens fiscalis calculi satisfactio postulatur a tributariae functionis sollemne munus exposcitur aut publici vel etia privati, dummodo evidentis atque convicti redhibitio debiti flagitat ut necessario in contumacem vigor iudiciarius excitetur.

Sixty-Fifth Title Whose Appeals May Not Be Accepted[219]

[1] Emperor ANTONINUS Augustus to Sabinus. If someone remained contumaciously absent when he was called to conduct his case and, after the affair was summarily investigated, he was condemned, his appeal cannot be accepted.

Posted July 7, in the consulship of Antoninus Augustus, for the fourth time, and Balbinus (213).

[2][220] Emperor CONSTANTIUS Augustus to Hierocles. pr. You will take care that no murderers, poisoners (venefici), magicians (malefici), adulterers, and persons committing open violence[221] shall be heard as an appellant when they have been convicted by proofs, have been proven guilty by witnesses, and have by their own testimony confessed their vice and wickedness. 1. Just as We order that rule to be followed, it is also fair that the right of appeal should not be denied to someone who, even after witnesses were produced, documents proffered, other proofs brought to bear, and a verdict rendered against him so that he was condemned, yet never confessed by his own testimony nor said anything against himself even when tested with the frightfulness of tortures.

Given December 9, in the consulship of Leontius and Sallustius (344).

[3][222] Emperors VALENTINIAN and VALENS Augusti to Modestus, Praetorian Prefect. No staff member has the right to appeal from the decision of his own judge, with the lone exception of a suit which he initiated before his own judge in a civil case, as for example concerning his property. That is to say, any given staff member (officialis) may appeal from a judge whom he serves only in a suit that can be legally prosecuted through a procurator.

Given June 10, at Cyzicus, in the consulship of Valentinian and Valens Augusti (373).

[4][223] The same and GRATIAN Augusti to Olybrius, City Prefect. We ordain that no appeal whatever shall be permitted when satisfaction of a Treasury account or of the customary obligation of a tributary service or when repayment of public or even private debt is demanded, provided it is clear and proven, in order that necessary judicial force can be brought to bear against contumacy.

[219] See D. 49.5.

[220] = C.Th. 11.36.7, attributing the constitution to Constantius II and Constans; Seeck dates it to April 24, 348. C. epitomates C.Th. and alters the wording dramatically; frag. 1 is probably interpolated.

[221] For qui manifestam violentiam commmiserunt, C.Th. 11.36.7 has raptorum argumento convictus, i.e., convicted for rape.

[222] = C.Th. 11.36.17. Seeck dates to June 10, 371; Schmidt-Hofner: posted June 10, 370 or 373.

[223] = C.Th. 11.36.19. Combine with C. 2.6.6. Seeck dates to August 18, 370.

PP. Romae xv k. Sept. Valentiniano et Valente II AA. conss.

[4a] Idem AAA. ad Claudium pu. Si clericus ante definitivam sententiam frustratoriae dilationis causa ad appellationis auxilium convolaverit, multam quinquaginta librarum argenti, quam contra huiusmodi appellatores sanctio generalis imponit, cogatur expendere. hoc autem non fisco nostro volumus accedere, sed pauperibus fideliter erogari.

D. VIII id. Iul. Valentiniano np. et Victore conss.

[5] Imppp. Valens Gratianus et Valentinianus AAA. ad Thalassium proconsulem Africae. pr. Ab exsecutione appellari non posse satis et iure et constitutionibus cautum est, nisi forte exsecutor sententiae modum iudicationis excedat. 1. A quo si fuerit appellatum, exsecutione suspensa decernendum putamus, ut, si res mobilis est, ad quam restituendam exsecutoris opera fuerit indulta, appellatione suscepta possessori res eadem detrahatur et idoneo collocetur reddenda ei parti, pro qua sacer cognitor iudicaverit. 2. Quod si de possessione vel de fundis exsecutio concessa erit et eam suspenderit provocatio, fructus omnes, qui tempore interpositae provocationis capti vel postea nati erunt, in deposito collocentur, iure fundi penes eum qui appellaverit constituto.

3. Sciant autem se provocatores vel ab exsecutione appellantes vel ab articulo, si eos perperam intentionem cognitoris suspendisse claruerit, quinquaginta librarum argenti animadversione multandos.

D. III k. Febr. Treviris Valente VI et Valentiniano II AA. conss.

[6] Imppp. Gratianus Valentinianus et Theodosius AAA. ad Hypatium pu. Quisquis, ne voluntas diem functi testamento scripta reseretur, vel ne hi, quos scriptos patuerit heredes, in possessionem mittantur, ausus fuerit provocare interpositamque appellationem is cuius de ea re notio Posted August 18, at Rome, in the consulship of Valentinian and Valens, for the second time, Augusti (368).

[4a][224] The same Augusti to Claudius, City Prefect. If a clergyman resorts to appeal for the purpose of delaying proceedings before a final ruling,[225] he shall be compelled to pay a fine of 50 pounds of silver, which the general decree[226] imposes on appellants of this kind. We desire that this sum not go to the Treasury but be faithfully spent on the poor.

Given July 8, in the consulship of Valentinian, Most Noble Boy, and Victor (369).

[5][227] Emperors VALENS, GRATIAN, and VALENTINIAN Augusti to Thalassius, Proconsul of Africa. pr. It is clearly enough provided by both the law and constitutions that no appeal may be taken from execution (of a judgment), unless the enforcement officer exceeds the bounds of the decision. 1. If an appeal is taken from him and the execution has been suspended, We think it right to direct that, if it is movable property that the execution officer was assigned to restore, that same property should be removed from the possessor once the appeal has been accepted and placed with a suitable person only to be restored later to that party in favor of whom the imperial judge (cognitor) decides. 2. But if the execution was issued against a landholding or farm and the appeal suspended it, all the fruits which have been captured at the time when the appeal was made and all that are produced subsequently should be placed in deposit, but the right to the farm should remain in the control of the appellant.

3. But appellants should know that if they appeal either from an execution or on a special point (articulus),[228] and it is clear that they have wrongly held up the intent of the judge, they shall be punished by a fine of 50 pounds of silver.

Given January 30, at Trier, in the consulship of Valens, for the sixth time, and Valentinian, for the second time, Augusti (378).

[6][229] Emperors GRATIAN, VALENTINIAN, and THEODOSIUS Augusti to Hypatius, City Prefect. If anyone ventures to appeal to prevent the opening of a will written as the testament of a deceased person, or to prevent those who appear to have been appointed as heirs from being put in possession, and if any [224] = C. 1.4.2; see C.Th. 11.36.20. Restored here on the authority of the Paratitla to Const. 3. Claudius was actually Proconsul of Africa; see PLRE I Petronius Claudius 10.

[225] That is, if he makes an appellatio frustratoria or moratoria.

[226] C.Th. 11.36.15–16.

[227] = C.Th. 11.36.25. Combine with C.Th. 11.30.37, 11.36.23, 24.

[228] C. has omitted a phrase from C.Th. 11.36.25 which clarifies: "appeal either from an execution or on a special point only from those cases from which we have ordered appeals to be accepted."

[229] = C.Th. 11.36.26.

erit recipiendam esse crediderit, viginti librarum argenti multa et litigatorem, qui tam importune appellaverit, et iudicem, qui tam ignave coniventiam adhibuerit, involvat.

D. non. April. Triveris Ausonio et Olybrio conss.

[7] Idem AA. et Arcadius A. ad Pelagium comitem rerum privatarum. Ante sententiae tempus et ordinem eventus nec a discussore nec a rationali appellare liceat.

D. XV k. Mart. Mediolani Arcadio A. et Bautone conss.

[8] Impp. Arcadius et Honorius AA. Apollodoro comiti rerum privatarum. Et publicarum necessitatum et privati aerarii deposcit utilitas, ne commoda, quae domui nostrae debentur, callidis debitorum artibus differantur. quamobrem eorum appellatione reiecta, qui aperte manifesteque convicti sunt, hoc observari praecepti huius auctoritate censemus, ut ei, quem constiterit esse publicum debitorem, appellationis beneficium denegetur.

D. IIII id. Aug. Mediolani Arcadio IIII et Honorio III AA. conss.

LXVI Si Pendente Appellatione Mors Intervenerit

[1] Imp. Alexander A. Iuliano. Etiam post mortem eius qui appellavit necesse est heredibus eius vel reddi causas provocationis vel statutis adquiescere.

PP. VI k. Nov. Alexandro A. cons.

[2] Idem A. Marcellinae. Eius, qui requirendus adnotatus appellaverat et ante actam causam mortuus est, bona ad successorem pertinere parentibus meis placuit.

PP. III non. Dec. Alexandro cons.

[3] Idem A. Ulpio. Si is, qui ademptis bonis in exilium datus appellaverit ac pendente provocatione defunctus est, quamvis crimen in persona eius evanuerit, tamen causam bonorum agi oportet. nam multum judge has jurisdiction over the matter and believes that such an appeal, once interposed, should be accepted, a fine of 20 pounds of silver shall ensnare both the litigant, who appealed so inappropriately, and the judge, who connived so indolently.

Given April 5, at Trier, in the consulship of Ausonius and Olybrius (379).

[7][230] The same Augusti and ARCADIUS Augustus to Pelagius, Count of the Privy Purse. Before the time of the decision and regular order of events, it is not permitted to appeal either from an Auditor (discussor) or a Comptroller.

Given February 15, at Milan, in the consulship of Arcadius Augustus and Bauto (385).

[8][231] Emperors ARCADIUS and HONORIUS Augusti to Apollodorus, Count of the Privy Purse. The utility of public needs and of Our private treasury demand that payment of debts due to Our Household should not be put off by the clever tricks of debtors. Hence, forbidding appeals on the part of those who are openly and clearly convicted, We direct by the authority of this order that the benefit of an appeal shall be denied to anyone who has clearly been established to be a public debtor.

Given August 10, at Milan, in the consulship of Arcadius, for the fourth time, and Honorius, for the third time, Augusti (396).

Sixty-Sixth Title If Death Intervenes While an Appeal is Pending[232]

[1] Emperor ALEXANDER Augustus to Julian. Even if an appellant has died, his heirs must either prove the grounds of appeal or acquiesce in what has been established.

Posted October 27, in the consulship of Alexander Augustus (222).

[2] The same Augustus to Marcellina. Our parents decided that the property of someone who had been branded as a fugitive from the court, but who had appealed and then died before the case was tried, belongs to his heir.

Posted December 3, in the consulship of Alexander (222).

[3] The same Augustus to Ulpius. If a person whose property was confiscated and who was sent into exile appealed and died with the appeal pending, although the charge becomes extinct insofar as it relates to his person, the case interest, utrum capitalis poena inrogata bona quoque rei adimat, quo casu morte eius extincto crimine nulla quaestio superesse potest, an vero non ex damnatione capitis, sed speciali praesidis sententia bona auferantur: tunc enim subducto reo sola capitis causa perimitur bonorum remanente quaestione.

[230] = C.Th. 11.36.29. Combine with 7.62.26.
[231] = C.Th. 11.36.32.
[232] See D. 49.13.

PP. v id. Mart. Modesto et Probo conss.

[4] Imp. Gordianus A. Alexandro. Si pater tuus ad decurionatum devocatus appellationem interposuit eaque pendente concessit in fatum, honoris eius quaestio morte finita est.

PP. prid. non. Oct. Pio et Pontiano conss.

[5] Idem A. Felici. Quamvis ancilla, de cuius dominio disceptabatur et a rectore provinciae contra te iudicatum fuerat, in fatum concesserit, tamen cum appellationem super ea interpositam fuisse et in numero cognitionum pendere proponas, ea provocatio suo ordine propter peculium ancillae audiri debet.

PP. vii k. Dec. Pio et Pontiano conss.

[6] Imp. Constantinus A. ad Bassum pu. Si unus ex litigatoribus adhuc pendente appellatione defunctus sit, non residuum tantum temporis heredes eius habent, sed etiam alios quattuor menses. sin autem ad deliberationem hereditatis certum tempus indulgetur, post elapsum eius idem tempus quattuor mensum numerabitur, ne ignorantes negotium vel etiam super adeunda hereditate dubitantes, priusquam aliquod commodum sentiant, damnis adfici compellantur.

D. xiii k. Iun. Sirmi Crispo ii et Constantino ii CC. conss.

LXVII De His Qui per Metum Iudicis Non Appellaverunt

[1] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. et CC. Diophani. Si contra te iure pronuntiatum est nec appellationis imploratum auxilium, intellegis adquiescere te statutis oportere. in sacro enim comitatu nostro timere nihil potuisti.

over his property ought still to be tried. For there is a great difference whether the capital penalty that was imposed also causes confiscation of the property of the accused – in which case, since the accusation becomes extinct by death, no further question remains – or whether the property is confiscated not as the result of the capital condemnation but by the special verdict of the governor. In the latter instance, only the capital case is extinguished with the death of the accused, while the question about his property remains.

Posted March 11, in the consulship of Modestus and Probus (228).

[4] Emperor GORDIAN Augustus to Alexander. If your father interposed an appeal after having been appointed to the decurionate and then died while it was pending, the question of his office is ended.

Posted October 6, in the consulship of Pius and Pontianus (238).

[5] The same Augustus to Felix. Although a female slave died, whose ownership was disputed in litigation in which the provincial governor gave judgment against you, still, since you state that an appeal concerning her was interposed and was pending on the court calendar, the appeal should be heard in proper order because of the peculium of the female slave.

Posted November 25, in the consulship of Pius and Pontianus (238).

[6][233] Emperor CONSTANTINE Augustus to Bassus, City Prefect. If one of the litigants dies with an appeal still pending, his heirs have not only the remainder of the legal time (for completing the appeal), but also four additional months. But if a certain time is granted for deliberation as to whether to accept an inheritance, the same period of four months shall be added after the time previously fixed has lapsed, lest they (the heirs) be compelled to suffer losses through ignorance of the affair or even hesitation about whether to enter on the inheritance before they know whether it will be of benefit.

Given May 20, at Sirmium, in the consulship of Crispus, for the second time, and Constantine, for the second time, Caesars (321).

Sixty-Seventh Title Those Who Did Not Appeal through Fear of the Judge

[1] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti and the Caesars to Diophanes. If a legal decision was given against you and you did not appeal, you understand that you must acquiesce in the decision. For you could not have feared anything in Our imperial court.

[233] = C.Th. 11.35.1. Combine with C.Th. 2.6.3. C. has entirely rewritten the Theodosian original. Seeck dates to May 19, 318.

S. xv k. Iul. Philippopoli AA. conss.

[2] Impp. Iulianus A. Germaniano pp. pr. His, qui tempore competenti non appellant, redintegrandae audientiae facultas denegetur. omnes igitur, qui contra praefectos urbi, magistros officiorum, magistros militum seu proconsules seu comites Orientis seu vicarios seu praefectos Augustales vel alium iudicem sub specie formidinis provocationem non arbitrantur interponendam, a revocanda lite pellantur. 1. Qui vero vim sustinuerunt contestatione publice proposita, intra dies videlicet legitimos, quibus appellare licet, causas appellationis evidenti adfirmatione distinguant, ut hoc facto tamquam interposita appellatione isdem aequitatis adminicula tribuantur.

Emissa xv k. Iul. Mamertino et Nevitta conss.

LXVIII Si Unus ex Pluribus Appellaverit

[1] Imp. Alexander A. Licinio. Si iudici probatum fuerit unam eandemque condemnationem eorum quoque, quorum appellatio iusta pronuntiata est, fuisse nec diversitate factorum separationem accipere, emolumentum victoriae secundum ea quae constituta sunt ad te quoque pertinere non ignorabit.

PP. xiii k. Sept. Maximo ii et Aeliano conss.

[2] Idem A. Sereno. Si in una eademque causa unus appellaverit eiusque iusta appellatio pronuntiata est, ei quoque prodest qui non appellaverit. quod si aetatis auxilio unus contra sententiam restitutionem impetravit, maiori, qui suo iure non appellaverit, hoc rescriptum non prodest.

S. iii id. Sept. Iuliano et Crispino conss.

LXVIIII Si de Momentaria Possessione Fuerit Appellatum

[1] Imppp. Valentinianus Theodosius et Arcadius AAA. ad Eusignium pp. Cum de possessione et eius momento causa dicatur, etsi appellatio Written June 17, at Philippopolis, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[2][234] Emperor JULIAN Augustus to Germanianus, Praetorian Prefect. pr. Persons who do not appeal within the appropriate time will be denied the opportunity of renewing a hearing. Therefore, all who under the pretense of fear do not think they should interpose an appeal against the Prefects of the City, Masters of the Offices, Masters of the Soldiers, or Proconsuls, Counts of the East, Vicars, Augustal Prefects, or any other judge will be refused renewal of the suit. 1. Those who in truth suffered force may post an attestation (contestatio) publicly, within the time fixed for taking an appeal of course, and set forth the grounds for appeal with clear proof, so that, by having done so, they may gain the benefits of equity as if an appeal had been interposed.

Issued (emissa) June 17, in the consulship of Mamertinus and Nevitta (362).

Sixty-Eighth Title If One Out of Many (Co-Litigants) Appeals

[1] Emperor ALEXANDER Augustus to Licinius. If it is proven to the judge that those whose appeal was pronounced just had (with you) one and the same judgment which did not undergo separation through any diversity of the facts, he will not ignore the fact that the benefit of victory applies to you as well according to previously established precedent.

Posted August 20, in the consulship of Maximus, for the second time, and Aelianus (223).

[2] The same Augustus to Serenus. If, in one and the same case, only one has appealed, and his appeal was pronounced just, it will also benefit the party who did not appeal. But if one person obtained a restoration of rights contrary to the verdict by reason of his age, this rescript will not benefit a person of legal age who did not appeal in his own right.

Written September 11, in the consulship of Julian and Crispinus (224).

Sixty-Ninth Title If Appeal Is Made from Provisional Possession

[1][235] Emperors VALENTINIAN, THEODOSIUS, and ARCADIUS Augusti to Eusignius, Praetorian Prefect. When a case involving possession and its [234] = C.Th. 11.30.30, but C. extends the list of magistrates.

[235] = C.Th. 11.37.1.

interposita fuerit, tamen lata sententia sortiatur effectum. ita tamen possessionis reformationem fieri oportet, ut integra omnis proprietatis causa servetur.

D. XIIII k. Dec. Mediolano Honorio np. et Euodio conss.

LXX Ne Liceat in Una Eademque Causa Tertio Provocare vel Post Duas Sententias Iudicum, Quas Definitio Praefectorum Roboraverit, Eas Retractare

[1] Imp. Iustinianus A. Menae pp. Si quis in quacumque lite iterum provocaverit, non licebit ei tertio in eadem lite super isdem capitulis provocatione uti vel sententias excellentissimorum praefectorum praetorio retractare: licentia danda litigatoribus arbitro dato ipsius audientiam qui eum dedit ante litis contestationem invocare et huiusmodi petitione minime provocationis vim obtinente.

D. k. Iul. Constantinopoli dn. Iustiniano A. II cons.

LXXI Qui Bonis Cedere Possunt

[1] Imp. Alexander A. Irenaeo. Qui bonis cesserint, nisi solidum creditor receperit, non sint liberati. in eo enim tantum hoc beneficium eis prodest, ne iudicati detrahantur in carcerem.

PP. X k. Dec. Maximo II et Aeliano conss.

[2] Imp. Philippus A. et Philippus C. Abascanto. Si quantitatem, quam (licet rei publicae) condemnatus debebas, inferre paratus es, frustra vereris, ne verbum bonorum cessionis temere a te prolatum privare te necdum distractis facultatibus iuris rationibus possit.

PP. XVI k. Febr. Philippo A. et Titiano conss.

[3] Impp. Valerianus et Gallienus AA. et Valerianus nobilissimus C. Lenillae. Si pater tuus bonis cessit propter onera civilia, ipsius facultates provisional grant is tried, even if an appeal should be interposed, a verdict once rendered should still be executed. But the restoration of possession ought to occur in such a way that the entire case for ownership should be kept whole.

Given November 18, at Milan, in the consulship of the Most Noble Boy Honorius and Euodius (386).

Seventieth Title It Is Not Permitted to Appeal a Third Time in One and the Same Case or to Reconsider Cases after Two Verdicts of Judges Which a Decision of the Prefects has Confirmed

[1] Emperor JUSTINIAN Augustus to Menas, Praetorian Prefect. If anyone has appealed a case for the second time, he shall not be permitted to appeal a third time on the same points or to reopen the verdicts of the most excellent Praetorian Prefects. But if a judge arbitrator was appointed, litigants should be given the right to seek a hearing from the judge who appointed him before joinder of issue, for in no way does a petition of this sort have the force of an appeal.

Given July 1, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Justinian Augustus, for the second time (528).

Seventy-First Title Who Can Surrender Property to Creditors[236]

[1] Emperor ALEXANDER Augustus to Irenaeus. Persons who have surrendered their property to creditors (cessio bonorum) are not released unless the creditor received his debt in full. Indeed, this benefits them only in as far as they are not carried to jail as judgment debtors.

Posted November 22, in the consulship of Maximus, for the second time, and Aelianus (223).

[2] Emperor PHILIP Augustus and Caesar PHILIP to Abascantus. If you are ready to pay the amount which you were condemned to pay and you owed – albeit to a municipality – you need not fear that the declaration you made hastily that you would surrender your property to creditors can by any rules of law deprive you of such property when it has not yet been sold.

Posted January 17, in the consulship of Philip Augustus and Titianus (245).

[3] Emperors VALERIAN and GALLIENUS Augusti and the Most Noble Caesar Valerianus to Lenilla. If your father surrendered his property to creditors because oportet inquiri, non patrimonium, quod tibi emancipatae quaesitum dicis, inquietari. quod ut fiat, implorare aequitatem praesidis debes.

[236] See D. 42.3.

PP. XIII k. Dec. Aemiliano et Basso conss.

[4] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. et CC. Chiloni. pr. Legis Iuliae de bonis cedendis beneficium constitutionibus divorum nostrorum parentium ad provincias porrectum esse, ut cessio bonorum admittatur, notum est: non tamen creditoribus sua auctoritate dividere haec bona et iure dominii tenere, sed venditionis remedio, quatenus substantia patitur, indemnitati suae consulere permissum est. 1. Cum itaque contra iuris rationem res iure dominii teneas eius qui bonis cessit creditorem te dicens, longi temporis praescriptione petitorem submoveri non posse manifestum est. quod si non bonis eum cessisse, sed res suas in solutum tibi dedisse monstretur, praeses provinciae poterit de proprietate tibi accommodare notionem.

[5] Idem AA. et CC. Myroni. Propter honorem municipalem vel munus bonis cedentium invidiosam admitti cessionem minime convenit, sed his obnoxios pro modo substantiae fungi.

[6] Apud acta imp. Theodosius A. dixit: In omni cessione bonorum ex qualibet causa facienda scrupulositate priorum legum explosa professio sola quaerenda est. Idem dixit: In omni cessione sufficit voluntatis sola professio.

D. k. Mai. Honorio np. et Euodio conss.

[7] Imp. Iustinianus A. Iuliano pp. Cum et filii familias possint habere substantias, quae patribus adquiri vetitae sunt, nec non peculium vel castrense vel quod patre volente possident, quare cessio bonorum eis deneganda sit? cum, etsi nihil in suo censu hi qui in potestate sunt parentum habeant, tamen, ne patiantur iniuriam, debet bonorum cessio of what he owed the city, an inquest into his finances should be made, but the property which you say you acquired after emancipation must not be disturbed. To ensure that this happens, you should implore the equity of the governor.

Posted November 19, in the consulship of Aemilianus and Bassus (259).

[4] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti and the Caesars to Chilo. pr. It is well known that the benefit of the Julian law on the surrender of property has been extended to the provinces by the constitutions of Our deified parents, so that surrender of property (to creditors) is permitted. It is not permitted, however, for creditors to divide that property on their own authority and to hold it by right of ownership, but they are permitted to indemnify themselves only through the remedy of a sale and up to the amount that the fortune permits. 1. Since, therefore, contrary to law you hold by right of ownership the property of the man who surrendered his property and whose creditor you say you are, it is clear that a claimant cannot be defeated by long-time prescription. But if it should be shown that the owner did not surrender his property to creditors but gave it to you in lieu of payment (in solutum), the provincial governor will be able to grant an inquest into the property for you.

[5] The same Augusti and the Caesars to Myron. It is right not to permit an odious surrender by those who surrender their property in order to avoid a municipal office or obligation, but rather for those subject to these (offices) to perform them in keeping with the size of their fortune.

[6][237] Emperor THEODOSIUS Augustus stated (dixit) among the records (apud acta): The technical requirements of former laws are abolished in connection with the surrender of property to creditors, regardless of the reason it is made, and a declaration alone is necessary. The same emperor stated: In every surrender of property to creditors, a declaration of intention alone suffices.

Given May 1, in the consulship of the Most Noble Boy Honorius and Euodius (386).

[7] Emperor JUSTINIAN Augustus to Julian, Praetorian Prefect. Since unemancipated sons (filiifamilias) may also have wealth which is forbidden to be acquired by their fathers, and they may also have a military peculium or a peculium that they possess by consent of their father, why should the right to make a surrender of property to creditors be denied them? Even if those in the power of their parents have nothing registered to them (nihil in suo censu habeant), the surrender of property to creditors should still be permitted them in order admitti. si enim et pater familias admittendus est propter iniuriarum timorem ad cessionis flebile veniens adiutorium, quare filiis familias utriusque sexus hoc ius denegamus? cum apertissimi iuris est et inter patres familias et alieno iuri subiectos, si quid postea eis pinguius accesserit, hoc iterum usque ad modum debiti posse a creditoribus legitimo modo avelli.

[237] = C.Th. 4.20.3, which omits the first clause (through "abolished").

D. x k. Mart. Constantinopoli post consulatum Lampadii et Orestis vv. cc.

[8] Idem A. Iohanni pp. pr. Cum solito more a nostra maiestate petitur, ut ad miserabilis cessionis bonorum homines veniant auxilium et electio detur creditoribus vel quinquennale spatium eis indulgere vel bonorum accipere cessionem, salva eorum videlicet existimatione et omni corporali cruciatu semoto: quotidie dubitabatur, si quidam ex creditoribus voluerint quinquennales dare indutias, alii autem iam nunc cessionem accipere velint, qui audiendi sunt.

1. In tali itaque dubitatione minime putamus esse ambiguum, quod sentimus et quod humaniorem sententiam pro duriore elegimus. et sancimus, ut vel ex cumulo debiti vel ex numero creditorum causa iudicetur. 2. Et si quidem unus creditor aliis omnibus gravior in summa debiti inveniatur, ut omnibus in unum coadunatis et debitis eorum computatis ipse alios antecellat, ipsius sententia obtineat, sive indulgere tempus sive cessionem accipere desiderat. 3. Si vero plures quidem sint creditores, ex diversis autem quantitatibus, et nunc amplior debiti cumulus minori summae praeferatur, sive par sive discrepans numerus est creditorum, cum non ex frequentissimo ordine feneratorum, sed ex quantitate debiti causa trutinatur. 4. Pari autem quantitate debiti invenienda, dispari vero creditorum numero, tunc amplior pars creditorum obtineat, ut, quod pluribus placeat, hoc statueretur. 5. Sin vero undique aequalitas emergat tam debiti quam numeri creditorum, tunc eos anteponi, qui ad humaniorem declinant sententiam non cessionem exigentes, sed indutias. 6. Nulla quidem differentia inter hypothecarios et alios creditores quantum ad hanc electionem observanda: in rebus autem officio iudicis partiendis suam vim singulis creditoribus habentibus, quam eis legum praestabit regula. 7. Nullo praeiudicio creditorum cuidam ex quinquennii dilatione circa temporalem praescriptionem generando.

that they may not suffer any outrage (iniuria). Indeed, if a paterfamilias in fear of outrages is permitted to resort to the lamentable aid of a surrender of property, why should We deny that right to unemancipated children of either sex. This is particularly true since the law is clear, both in the case of a paterfamilias and in that of persons subject to another's power, that if additional wealth later falls to them, this can be confiscated by the creditors in a lawful manner up to the extent of the debt.

Given February 20, at Constantinople, in the post-consulate of the viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestes (531).

[8] The same Augustus to John, Praetorian Prefect. pr. Since in the usual way it is often sought from Our Majesty that people might resort to the aid of a pitiable surrender of property to creditors, and a choice is given to the creditors whether to grant a five-year respite to these or to accept the surrender of their property, while of course keeping their good name intact and preventing any corporal punishment, there used to be daily disputes about who should be given preference if some of the creditors wanted to grant the five-year respite but others wished to receive the surrender of property immediately.

1. In such a dispute there is no ambiguity in what We feel and which decision We hold to be more humane and less harsh. And We ordain that the case be decided according to the amount of the debt or the number of creditors. 2. If one creditor is found to be owed more than all others from the total of the debt, so that, once all of these are assembled together and their share in the debt calculated, he exceeds the others, let his decision prevail, whether he decides to grant the respite or to accept the surrender of property. 3. But if there are many creditors each with a different amount, here too the greater portion of the debt shall have preference over the lesser sum, whether the number of creditors is equal or unequal, since the case shall be weighed out not by the number of lenders but by the amount of debt. 4. If the amount of the debt (on each side) is found to be equal but the number of creditors unequal, then the greater number of creditors shall prevail, and whatever the majority decides shall be done. 5. If equality emerges on all sides, both in point of debts as well as in the number of creditors, the parties who are more merciful and are in favor of giving respite instead of demanding an immediate surrender of property shall prevail. 6. There shall be no difference in making the choice, between secured and other creditors. But every creditor shall have his own right to divide property through the official staff of the judge as the regulations of the law permit. 7. The five-year respite shall not prejudice any creditor in connection with the period of prescription.

(531–532).[238]

[238] Lounghis et al. date to between 531 and 534.

LXXII De Bonis Auctoritate Iudicis Possidendis seu Venumdandis et de Separationibus

[1] Imp. Antoninus A. Atticae. In bonis mortui potiorem esse causam legatariorum, qui eum utpote heredem convenire potuerunt, quam eorum, quibus ipse legavit, manifestum est, cum prius legatum quasi aes alienum exigitur, legatum autem a mortuo relictum post debiti detractionem inducitur.

<PP. xv k. Iul. G(entiano?) et Basso conss.>

[2] Imp. Gordianus A. Aristoni. Est iurisdictionis tenor promptissimus indemnitatisque remedium edicto praetoris creditoribus hereditariis demonstratum, ut quotiens separationem bonorum postulant, causa cognita impetrent. praeoptabis igitur convenientem desiderii tui fructum, si te non heredum fidem secutum, sed ex necessitate ad iudicium eos provocare demonstraveris.

<PP. iii k. Feb. Gor. A. et Aviola conss.>

[3] Idem A. Claudianae. Ex contractu, qui cessionem rerum antecessit, debitorem contra iuris rationem conveniens, cum eum aequitas auxilio exceptionis muniat ac tunc demum iteratam possis desiderare conventionem, cum tantum postea quaesiit, quod praesidem ad eius rei licentiam debeat promovere.

<PP.? k. Mai. Gor. A. et ... conss.>

[4] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. et CC. Clearchianae. Incivile est, quod postulas, ut unus ex chirographariis creditoribus debitoris bona compellatur suscipere, satis ceteris eius creditoribus facturus.

<S. id. Apr. Biza. AA. conss.>

[5] Idem AA. et CC. Abydonio. Si bona debitoris tui vacare constet et haec a fisco non agnoscantur, in possessionem eorum mitti te a competenti iudice recte postulabis.

xvii k. Ian. AA. conss.

Seventy-Second Title The Possession and Sale of Property by the Authority of a Judge and Separations of Property[239]

[1] Emperor Antoninus Augustus to Attica. With the property of a decedent, it is clear that those legatees who could have sued the decedent as heir have a stronger case than those to whom he himself left a legacy. For the former of these legacies can be collected as a debt, though the legacy left by the decedent is met only after the deduction for debts.

Posted June 17, in the consulship of G(entianus?) and Bassus (211).[240]

[2] Emperor Gordian Augustus to Aristo. The promptest rendering of a decision and remedy for indemnification have been accorded to creditors of an inheritance by the Praetor's Edict, so that, whenever they demand separation of property (separatio bonorum), following a hearing they obtain it. Therefore you will choose an outcome suited to your wish if you should show that you did not rely on the good faith of the heirs, but of necessity summoned them to court.

Posted January 30, in the consulship of Gordian Augustus and Aviola (239).

[3] The same Augustus to Claudiana. You are suing the debtor contrary to the rule of law on a contract that preceded the surrender of property (cessio rerum), since equity protects him through the aid of a defense. But ultimately you can request that your suit be reintroduced after he has acquired so much property that the governor should be moved to grant you permission to sue.

... May 1, in the consulship of Gordian Augustus ... (239 or 241).

[4] Emperors Diocletian and Maximian Augusti and the Caesars to Clearchiana. What you ask is not lawful, namely that one of the promissory-note creditors (chirographarii creditores) should be forced to take over the property of the debtor and then pay his other creditors.

Written April 13, at Byzantium, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[5] The same Augusti and the Caesars to Abydonius.[241] If it appears that the property of your debtor is ownerless and is not claimed by the treasury, you will be right to ask that you be put in possession of it by the appropriate judge.

Written December 16, in the consulship of the Augusti (294).

[239] See D. 42.5–6.

[240] This subscript and those of the three following rescripts are restored from the Valicelliana Fragments, see Corcoran, "New Subscripts."

[241] This is the likeliest reading of the recipient's name. Corcoran, 420–422.

[6] Idem AA. et CC. Agathemero. pr. Pro debito creditores addici sibi bona debitoris non iure postulant. unde si quidem debitoris tui ceteri creditores pignori res acceperunt, potiores eos quam te chirographarium creditorem haberi non ambigitur. 1. Quod si specialiter vel generaliter nemini probentur obligatae ac sine successore communis debitor vel heres eius decessit, non dominii rerum vindicatione, sed possessione bonorum itemque venditione aequali portione pro rata debiti quantitate omnibus creditoribus consuli potest.

[7] Idem AA. et CC. Domno. Si uxor tua pro triente patruo suo heres extitit nec ab eo quicquam exigere prohibita est, debitum a coheredibus pro besse petere non prohibetur, cum ultra eam portionem qua successit actio non confundatur. sin autem coheredes solvendo non sint, separatio postulata nullum ei damnum fieri patiatur.

D. k. Dec. CC. conss.

[8] Idem AA. et CC. Aelidae. In possessionem rei servandae uxor defuncti vel alii creditores missi dominium ex hac causa tenentes adipisci minime possunt.

Sub die VI k. Ian. Nicomediae CC. conss.

[9] Idem AA. et CC. Aurelio Gerontio. Cum proponas eum contra quem supplicas ex administratione tibi negotiorum obligatum, hunc secundum iuris rationem adito rectore provinciae potes convenire. nam si ad circumscriptionem tui iuris latitat nec defendatur et eum tuum esse debitorem constat, ad exemplum edicti bonorum eius possessionem poteris impetrare. tempore autem transacto etiam venditionem eorum a competenti iudice postulare non prohiberis.

D. XIIII k. Sept. Diocletiano VII et Maximiano VI AA. conss.

[10] Imp. Iustinianus A. Iohanni pp. pr. Cum apud veteres quaestionem ortam invenimus super pecuniis debitis, pro quibus hypothecae non sunt constitutae, propter res ad debitorem pertinentes, dum is severiores

[6] The same Augusti and Caesars to Agathemerus. pr. Creditors cannot legally ask that the property of their debtor be adjudged to them for their debt. Hence if other creditors of your debtor had received property in pledge, there is no doubt that they have stronger claims than you, who are only an unsecured creditor. 1. But if it is shown that no property was specially or generally mortgaged to anyone and the common debtor or his heir died without a successor, the interests of all of the creditors can be equally protected in proportion to the amount of their debt, not by a suit on ownership of the property, but by an order for possession of the property (possessio bonorum) and its sale.

[7][242] The same Augusti and the Caesars to Domnus. If your wife is heir to one-third of the estate of her paternal uncle, and she was not forbidden to extract payment from him (of an independent debt he owed her), she is not prohibited from seeking two-thirds of the (uncle's) debt (to her) from her co-heirs, since beyond that portion by which she succeeded her right of action is not merged. But if they are insolvent, a requested separation (of property) will not allow any loss to accrue to her.

Given December 1, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[8] The same Augusti and the Caesars to Aelis. The wife of a decedent or other creditors who are put in possession of property to preserve it cannot acquire ownership by holding it for this reason.

Under the date December 27, at Nicomedia, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[9][243] The same Augusti and the Caesars to Aurelius Gerontius. Since you state that the man against whom you complain is indebted to you on account of management of affairs (administratio negotiorum), according to law you may go before the provincial governor and sue him. If he is hiding to defraud you of your rights, he shall not be defended and he is clearly your debtor; you may, according to the edict, obtain an order for possession of his property. And after the legal time has passed, you are not forbidden to demand from the appropriate judge an order for its sale.

Given August 19, in the consulship of Diocletian, for the seventh time, and Maximianus, for the sixth time, Augusti (299).

[10] Emperor JUSTINIAN Augustus to John, Praetorian Prefect. pr. We find that a dispute existed among the ancients as to debts for which no security arrangements (hypothecae) had been given: as regards the property belonging to the [242] = C. 4.16.6, with significant difference in the hypothetical ("wife" is the recipient's ward).

[243] Combine with C. 3.21.1, 4.50.7.

creditores formidans sese celaverit, et illi de rebus ad eum pertinentibus competentia ingrediantur iudicia postulentque in possessionem rerum sese transmitti, si etiam alii creditores, quibus obnoxius esse videtur, possint quandam habere communionem in rerum possessione:

huiusmodi dubitationem amputantes censemus per praesentem generalem divinam constitutionem, ut, si non omnes huiusmodi debita praetendentes, sed ex his certi ab iudiciali sententia in possessionem rerum mittantur, non solum hi, sed etiam alii omnes talia debita praetendentes eadem commoditate potiantur et possint cum prioribus rerum detentatoribus communionem habere in rebus, de quibus (sicut superius declaratur) prolata fuit sententia. quid enim iustius est, quam omnes, qui ad res debitoris mitti debent, esse participes huiusmodi commoditatis?

1. Ut autem non in perpetuum aliorum neglegentia illi, qui pro suis debitis alacriores creditoribus aliis ostenduntur fuisse, praegraventur, rectum nobis esse videtur tunc communionem habere in possessionem rerum alios creditores, qui non hoc peregisse noscuntur, cum praesentes quidem in una eademque degentes provincia, in qua et possessores rerum commorantur, intra duorum annorum spatia, absentes autem intra quadriennium creditoribus possessionem antelato modo detinentibus suum debitum certum faciant et expensas secundum quantitatem debitorum persolvant eis, qui sententias consecuti sunt, per sacramentum manifestandas eorum, qui eas adipiscendae gratia possessionis rerum sustinuerunt, quia et secundum debita satis eis fieri explorati iuris est. 1a. Post completum autem memoratum tempus nullam eis esse licentiam eos qui possessionem adepti sunt molestare vel quibusdam damnis adficere: actiones autem, quas ex legibus sibi competere putaverint, contra suos exercere debitores.

2. Sin autem hi qui detinent possessiones vel ex sententia iudicis res vendiderint vel alio quocumque legitimo modo omne ius, quod in isdem rebus habere noscuntur, in alias personas post definitum a nobis tempus transtulerint et certas pecunias acceperint, quidquid superfluum inventum fuerit vel amplius quam eis debetur, hoc modis omnibus necesse est eos praesentibus tabulariis signare et in cimeliarchio sanctae ecclesiae illius civitatis, in qua huiusmodi contractus celebratur, deponere: attestatione videlicet prius per memoratos tabularios conscribenda, praesente etiam eo qui res vendiderit vel in alias debtor, if he, in fear of harsh creditors, should conceal himself, and they should go before the appropriate tribunal concerning his property and ask to be put in possession of it, could the other creditors to whom the debtor was liable have any share in the possession of the property?

Curtailing any doubt on this matter, We decree by the present imperial constitution that, if all those who claim debts of this sort are not put in possession of the property by judicial verdict, but only certain ones of them, not only these latter but also all others claiming such debts shall gain the same benefit and can have a share in it with the earlier occupants of the property over which a verdict was rendered as mentioned above. For what could be more just than that all who are put into possession of the property of the debtor are sharers in this benefit?

1. Nevertheless, in order that those who are more diligent than other creditors in pursuit of debts owed to them may not in perpetuity be handicapped by the negligence of others, it seems right to Us that the other creditors who are not known to have pursued this matter can have a share in the possession of the property only when they have given notice of the debt they are owed to the creditors who are holding possession in the previously mentioned way within a period of two years – if they are present and reside in one and the same province in which the possessors of the property also reside – or within four years, if they are absent. They must also pay expenses to those who obtained verdicts according to their percentage of the debt, and these are to be made clear in an oath by those who sustained them in order to obtain possession of the property, since it is settled law that they must be satisfied according to the size of the debt. 1a. However, after the completion of the above-mentioned period, they will have no right to bother those who obtained possession or to afflict them with any damages. But actions which they think are legally valid for them must be brought against their own debtors.

2. Nevertheless, if those who occupy the possessions should either sell the property following a judicial verdict or should convey all rights they are known to have in this property to other persons in any other legal manner after the period defined by Us, and they shall have received a certain price (certae pecuniae), whatever is found to be residual or greater than what was owed to them, they must of utmost necessity seal up in the presence of secretaries and deposit in the treasury of the holy church of this city where this sort of contract is known to be kept. And of course a certificate must be written by the above-mentioned secretaries in the presence of the one who sold the property or conveyed it to other persons, in order that through this may be shown both the amount of money which was offered for the sale or conveyance of the property, as well as the sum of money that was found to be residual after the payment personas transtulerit, ut per eam manifestetur tam quantitas pecuniarum, quae pro venditione rerum vel translatione praestitae sunt, quam earum, quae superfluae post dissolutum debitum inveniantur, ut, si quis postea creditor apparuerit et debiti cautionem ostenderit, possit ex his satis sibi facere, prius scilicet rectore provinciae sine aliquo damno causae faciente examinationem et non concedente nec viros reverentissimos oeconomos vel cimeliarcham sanctae ecclesiae, in qua pecuniae deponuntur, aliquod detrimentum vel dispendium sustinere, per suam autem interlocutionem creditorem praecipiente secundum modum debiti ex depositis pecuniis suum accipere debitum.

3. Ut autem non liceat creditori in venditione vel translatione rerum dolum vel aliquam machinationem vel circumscriptionem facere, iubemus attestatione super hoc celebranda apud defensorem locorum gestis intervenientibus insinuari, sive tantum ex pretio, quantum debetur, sive plus sive minus colligitur, et praesentibus non tantum, sicut dictum est, tabulariis, sed etiam viro reverentissimo cimeliarcha, apud quem, si ita contigerit, superfluae pecuniae signatae deponendae sunt, iusiurandum sacrosanctis evangeliis propositis venditorem vel translatorem rerum praestare, quod neque per gratiam emptoris vel eius, ad quem res iure cessionis transferuntur, nec dolo aliquo interveniente minorem iusto rerum pretio quantitatem acceperit, sed eam, quam re vera cum omni studio potuerit invenire.

D. xv k. Nov. Constantinopoli post consulatum Lampadii et Orestis vv. cc. anno secundo.

LXXIII De Privilegio Fisci

[1] Imp. Antoninus A. Eutropiae. Bona mariti tui si ob reliqua administrationis primipili a fisco occupata sunt, res, quas tuas esse liquido probaveris, ab aliis separatae tibi restituuntur.

[2] Idem A. Valerianae. Quamvis ex causa dotis vir quondam tuus tibi sit condemnatus, tamen si prius, quam res eius tibi obligarentur, cum fisco contraxit, ius fisci causam tuam praevenit. quod si post bonorum eius obligationem rationibus meis coepit esse obligatus, in eius bona cessat privilegium fisci.

PP. xiiii k. Nov. Antonino A. iiii et Balbino conss.

of the debt. In this way, if some creditor later appears and shows a written promise (cautio) of debt, what is owed can be satisfied from this money. But first, of course, the provincial governor must conduct an examination that the case happens with no loss, and he must not allow either the most reverend stewards (oeconomi) or the treasurer (cimeliarcha) of the holy church in which the money was placed to sustain any loss or expense, but he must instruct the creditor through his interim order to accept what is owed in the manner of a debt paid from money on deposit.

3. But in order that the creditor not be allowed to perpetrate some deceit, trick, or fraud in the sale or conveyance of the property, We order that the certificate concerning this be made known before the defender of the place (defensor) and inserted into the public records detailing whether just as much was collected from the sale price as was owed, or whether more or less was collected. And not only should the secretaries be present, as We said, but also the most reverend treasurer before whom, if relevant, the residual money is sealed and deposited. And before these the seller or conveyor of the property must swear an oath on the Holy Gospel that neither through favoritism of the buyer or the one to whom the property was conveyed in a legal cession nor through some intervening deceit did he receive an amount less than the fair price of the property, but that it was the price that he was able to obtain with all true earnestness.

Given October 18, at Constantinople, in the second post-consulate of the viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestes (532).

Seventy-Third Title The Privilege of the Treasury

[1] Emperor ANTONINUS Augustus to Eutropia. If the property of your husband was seized by the Treasury on account of arrears in his account as chief centurion (primipilus), whatever property you clearly prove to be yours will be separated from the rest and restored to you.

[2] The same Augustus to Valeriana. Although judgment was rendered in your favor against your former husband in a case for recovery of dowry, still if he made a contract with the Treasury before his property became obligated to you, the right of the Treasury is superior to yours. But if he began to be obligated to My coffers subsequent to your lien on his property, the privilege of the Treasury in his property ceases.

Posted October 19, in the consulship of Antoninus Augustus, for the fourth time, and Balbinus (213).

[3] Idem A. Iulianae. Si, cum pecuniam pro marito solveres, neque ius fisci in te transferri impetrasti neque pignoris causa domum vel aliud quid ab eo accepisti, habes personalem actionem nec potes praeferri fisci rationibus, a quo dicis ei vectigal denuo locatum esse, cum eo pacto universa, quae habet habuitve eo tempore, quo ad conductionem accessit, pignoris iure fisco teneantur. salva igitur indemnitate fisci debitorem tuum pro pecunia, quam pro eo fisco solvisti, more solito convenire non prohiberis.

PP. III k. Ian. Antonino A. IIII et Balbino conss.

[4] Idem A. Quinto. Si debitor, cuius fundum fuisse et ipse confiteris, prius eum distraxit, quam fisco aliquid debuit, inquietandum te non esse procurator meus cognoscet. nam etsi postea debitor extitit, non ideo tamen ea, quae de dominio eius excesserunt, pignoris iure fisco potuerunt obligari.

PP. III k. Iul. Laeto II et Cereale conss.

[5] Imp. Alexander A. Magnae. Pecunia, quam creditor a debitore suo recepit, si postea ex iusta causa fisco restituenda erit, sine usuris debetur, quia non fenus contractum, sed suum recuperatum extraordinario iure aufertur.

PP. XV k. Iun. Fusco et Dextro conss.

[6] Imp. Gordianus A. Severianae. Cum patrem tuum fisci debitorem fuisse demonstres eumque nubenti tibi possessionem dedisse adleges, procuratorem ius fisci exsequentem eam iure pignoris revocare potuisse intellegis.

PP. non. Iul. Sabino et Venusto conss.

[7] Impp. Valerianus et Gallienus AA. et Valerianus C. Diodoro. Si in te ius fisci, cum reliqua debitoris, pro quo satisfaciebas, tibi competens iudex adscripsit et transtulit, ab his creditoribus, quibus fiscus potior habetur, res quas eo nomine tenes non possunt inquietari.

PP. XV k. Iun. Aemiliano et Basso conss.

[3] The same Augustus to Juliana. If you did not have the right of the Treasury transferred to you when you paid it money on behalf of your husband, and you received no lien on his house or other property, you have a personal action against him, but no preference over the accounts of the Treasury, which you say farmed the collection of customs duties (vectigal) out to him again, since under that contract all the property which he has or which he had at the time when he took on its lease is subject to a lien of the Treasury. But with the Treasury kept harmless from loss, you are not forbidden to sue him in the usual way as your debtor for the money which you paid for him to the Treasury.

Posted December 30, in the consulship of Antoninus Augustus, for the fourth time, and Balbinus (213).

[4] The same Augustus to Quintus. If the debtor whose farm it was, as even you admit, sold it (to you) before he owed anything to the Treasury, My procurator will find that you should not be disturbed. For although he became its debtor subsequently, that is no reason why things that had passed from his ownership should have been subject to a lien by the Treasury.

Posted June 29, in the consulship of Laetus, for the second time, and Cerealis (215).

[5] Emperor ALEXANDER Augustus to Magna. If money which a creditor received from a debtor must later be restored to the Treasury for some lawful reason, it is owing without interest, since it is not the contracted interest but the repayment of its debt which the Treasury confiscates through extraordinary law.

Posted May 18, in the consulship of Fuscus and Dexter (225).

[6] Emperor GORDIAN Augustus to Severiana. Since you show that your father was a debtor of the Treasury and that when you married he gave you the property, you understand that the procurator can confiscate it by a lien in pursing the right of the Treasury.

Posted July 7, in the consulship of Sabinus and Venustus (240).

[7] Emperors VALERIAN and GALLIENUS Augusti and Valerianus Caesar to Diodorus. If the appropriate judge assigned and transferred to you the right of the Treasury along with the balance of the debtor whose debt you paid, the property that you hold by that title cannot be disturbed by any creditors, over whom the Treasury has a superior right.

Posted May 18, in the consulship of Aemilianus and Bassus (259).

LXXIIII De Privilegio Dotis

[1] Impp. Severus et Antoninus AA. Firmo. Scire debes privilegium dotis, quo mulieres utuntur in actione de dote, ad heredes non transire.

PP. k. Mai. Pompeiano et Avito conss.

LXXV De Revocandis His Quae Per Fraudem Alienata Sunt

[1] Imp. Antoninus A. Caesiae. Si heres post aditam hereditatem ad eum cui cessit corpora hereditaria transtulit, creditoribus permansit obligatus. si igitur in fraudem tuam id fecit, bonis eius excussis usitatis actionibus, si tibi negotium fuerit[viii] gestum, ea quae in fraudem alienata probabuntur revocabis.

PP. II id. Oct. Antonino A. IIII et Balbino conss.

[2] Imp. Alexander A. Symphorianae. Si successione patris abstenta fuisti, ob ea quae in dotem data sunt convenire te creditores nequeunt, quibus pignerata in dotem data non docentur, nisi bonis defuncti non sufficientibus in fraudem creditorum dotem constitutam probabitur.

PP. x k. Iul. Probo et Maximo conss.

[3] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. Acyndino. Si paterna hereditate abstinuisti nec quicquam in fraudem creditorum ex bonis eius in te donationis iure transscriptum est, a privatis creditoribus praeses provinciae conveniri te non patietur.

PP. x k. Iul. ipsis IIII et III AA. conss.

[4] Idem AA. et CC. Epagatho. Filios debitoris ei succedentes velut in creditorum fraudem alienatorum facultatem revocandi non habere notissimi iuris est.

Subscripta x k. Mai. AA. conss.

[viii] offuerit (Krüger)

Seventy-Fourth Title The Privilege of Dowry

[1] Emperors SEVERUS and ANTONINUS Augusti to Firmus. You should know that the privilege of dowry, which wives enjoy in an action for recovery of dowry, does not pass to (a woman's) heirs.[244]

Posted May 1, in the consulship of Pompeianus and Avitus (209).

Seventy-Fifth Title The Recovery of Property Fraudulently Alienated[245]

[1] Emperor ANTONINUS Augustus to Caesia. If an heir, after accepting an inheritance, transferred its whole substance to a creditor to whom he surrendered his property (cui cessit), he remains obligated to its creditors. Therefore, if he did this to defraud you after his property had already been sued for (by the creditors) through the usual actions, (and) if (as a result) the transaction harmed you, you will recover whatever is proven to have been alienated fraudulently.

Posted October 14, in the consulship of Antoninus Augustus, for the fourth time, and Balbinus (213).

[2] Emperor ALEXANDER Augustus to Symphoriana. If you abstained from accepting your father's inheritance, the creditors cannot sue you because of the property given you as a dowry. They are not shown to have a lien on the property in the dowry, unless it shall be proven that the property of the deceased is insufficient to pay the debts and that the dowry was given to defraud creditors.

Posted June 22, in the consulship of Probus and Maximus (232?).

[3] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti to Acyndinus. If you refrained from accepting your father's inheritance, and none of his property was signed over to you as a gift to defraud creditors, the provincial governor will not permit you to be sued by his private creditors.

Posted June 22, in the consulship of the Augusti themselves, for the fourth and third time (290).

[4] The same Augusti and the Caesars to Epagathus. It is well known law that the sons of a debtor who succeed him have no right to reclaim property alienated to defraud creditors.

Subscribed April 22, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[244] This classical privilege, available against her husband's unsecured creditors, was substantially strengthened by Justinian: C. 5.13.1, 8.17.12; Nov. 97.3.

[245] See D. 42.8.

[5] Idem AA. et CC. Crescentino. Ignoti iuris non est adversus eum, qui sententia condemnatus intra statutum tempus satis non fecit nec defenditur, bonis possessis itemque distractis per actionem in factum contra emptorem, qui sciens fraudem comparavit, et eum, qui ex lucrativo titulo possidet, scientiae mentione detracta creditoribus esse consultum.

S. x k. Nov. AA. conss.

[6] Idem AA. et CC. Menandrae. Si actu sollemni praecedentem obligationem peremisti, perspicis adversus fraudatorem intra annum in quantum facere potest vel dolo malo fecit, quo minus possit, edicto perpetuo tantum actionem permitti.

[5] The same Augusti and Caesars to Crescentinus. It is not unknown law that, against someone who is condemned by a verdict but fails to pay within the legal time and has no defense, but sells the property that he possessed, the interests of his creditors are consulted through an actio in factum against any buyer who made the purchase knowing it was fraudulent, and (indeed) against anyone else who is in possession under a title that is profitable (ex lucrativo titulo), regardless of his knowledge.

Written October 23, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[6] The same Augusti and Caesars to Menandra. If you eliminated a previous obligation by using a solemn form, an action against the defrauder lies, according to the Perpetual Edict, only within a year for so much as he can pay, or used deceit (dolo malo) to make it so he could not pay.

THE CODEX OF JUSTINIAN

A New Annotated Translation, with Parallel Latin and Greek Text

BASED ON A TRANSLATION BY JUSTICE FRED H. BLUME

BRUCE W. FRIER, GENERAL EDITOR

EDITORS

Serena Connolly

Simon Corcoran

Michael Crawford

John Noël Dillon

Dennis P. Kehoe

Noel Lenski

Thomas A. J. McGinn

Charles F. Pazdernik

Benet Salway

With contributions by Timothy Kearley

Justice Fred H. Blume, circa 1921, the year he acceded to the Wyoming Supreme Court and shortly after he had begun his translation of the Codex of Justinian.

THE CODEX OF JUSTINIAN

A New Annotated Translation, with Parallel Latin and Greek Text

VOLUME 3

Books VIII–XII

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS

University Printing House, Cambridge CB2 8BS, United Kingdom

Cambridge University Press is part of the University of Cambridge.

It furthers the University's mission by disseminating knowledge in the pursuit of education, learning and research at the highest international levels of excellence.

www.cambridge.org
Information on this title: www.cambridge.org/9780521196826

© Cambridge University Press 2016

This publication is in copyright. Subject to statutory exception and to the provisions of relevant collective licensing agreements, no reproduction of any part may take place without the written permission of Cambridge University Press.

First published 2016

Printed in the United Kingdom by TJ International Ltd. Padstow Cornwall

A catalogue record for this publication is available from the British Library

Library of Congress Cataloging in Publication data
Codex (Corpus juris civilis). English.
The Codex of Justinian : a new annotated translation, with parallel Latin and Greek text based on a translation by Justice Fred H. Blume / Bruce W. Frier, General Editor ; Editors: Serena Connolly, Simon Corcoran, Michael Crawford, John Noël Dillon, Dennis P. Kehoe, Noel Lenski, Thomas A. J. McGinn, Charles F. Pazdernik, Benet Salway.
pages cm
Includes bibliographical references and index.
ISBN 978-0-521-19682-6 (hardback)
1. Codex (Corpus juris civilis). 2. Roman law – Sources. I. Blume, Fred H., 1875–1971, translator. II. Frier, Bruce W., 1943– editor. III. Connolly, Serena, editor. IV. Corcoran, Simon, editor. V. Crawford, Michael, editor. VI. Dillon, John Noel, editor. VII. Kehoe, Dennis P., editor. VIII. Lenski, Noel Emmanuel, editor. IX. McGinn, Thomas A. J., editor. X. Pazdernik, Charles Frederick, editor. XI. Salway, Benet, editor. XII. Title.
KJA1192.2 2016
340.5'4–dc23
2015015128

ISBN – 3 Volume Set 978-0-521-19682-6 Hardback
ISBN – Volume I 978-1-107-11975-8 Hardback
ISBN – Volume II 978-1-107-11981-9 Hardback
ISBN – Volume III 978-1-107-11982-6 Hardback

Cambridge University Press has no responsibility for the persistence or accuracy of URLs for external or third-party internet websites referred to in this publication, and does not guarantee that any content on such websites is, or will remain, accurate or appropriate.

Contents

VOLUME 1

VOLUME 2

VOLUME 3

Liber Octavus

I De Interdictis

[1] Imp. Alexander A. Apro evocato. Cum proponas radicibus arborum in vicina Agathangeli area positis crescentibus fundamentis domus tuae periculum adferri, praeses ad exemplum interdictorum, quae in albo proposita habet: 'si arbor in alienas aedes impendebit', item: 'si arbor in alienum agrum impendebit', quibus ostenditur ne per arboris quidem occasionem vicino nocere oportere, rem ad suam aequitatem rediget.
PP. VII k. April. Iuliano et Crispino conss.

[2] Impp. Valerianus et Gallienus AA. Messiae. Praeses provinciae in eum, qui eiusdem provinciae non est, nec ex interdicto potest cognoscere.
PP. VII k. Mai. Saeculare et Donato conss.

[3] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. et CC. Pompeiano. Incerti iuris non est orta proprietatis et possessionis lite prius possessionis decidi oportere quaestionem competentibus actionibus, ut ex hoc ordine facto de dominii disceptatione probationes ab eo qui de possessione victus est exigantur. interdicta autem licet in extraordinariis iudiciis proprie locum non habent, tamen ad exemplum eorum res agitur.
Subscripta V k. Ian. Sirmi AA. conss.

[4] Impp. Arcadius et Honorius AA. Aemiliano pu. Si quis quodlibet interdictum efflagitet, ruptis veteribus ambagibus inter ipsa

Eighth Book

edited by Bruce W. Frier

First Title Interdicts[1]

[1][2] Emperor ALEXANDER Augustus to Aper, a veteran. You claim that tree roots, which are situated and growing in the yard of your neighbor Agathangelus, threaten the foundations of your house. The governor will settle the matter equitably, on the pattern of the interdicts he has written in his album: "If a tree hangs over another's house" and "If a tree hangs over another's field."[3] These show that a neighbor should not be harmed even by the contingency of a tree.

Posted March 26, in the consulship of Julian and Crispinus (224).

[2][4] Emperors VALERIAN and GALLIENUS Augusti to Messia. A provincial governor cannot exercise jurisdiction against someone not of the same province, even pursuant to an interdict.

Posted April 25, in the consulship of Saecularis and Donatus (260).

[3] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti and the Caesars to Pompeianus. It is not doubtful law that when a lawsuit arises as to (both) ownership and (legal) possession (of property), the question of possession should be decided first by the relevant actions, so that thereafter, in regular order, proofs in the suit on ownership are demanded from the party who lost over possession.[5] For although interdicts have no formal place in extraordinary trials, procedure is nonetheless patterned after them.

Signed December 28, at Sirmium, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[4][6] Emperors ARCADIUS and HONORIUS Augusti to Aemilianus, City Prefect. If anyone demands any interdict whatsoever, the antiquated evasions (associated with Praetorian procedure) have been eliminated. He should be ordered

[1] See D. 43.1.
[2] Combine with C. 8.10.3, 8.52.1. The veteran's name only at 8.52.1.
[3] See D. 43.27.1 pr., 7.
[4] Combine with C. 3.20.1. As Blume observes, the rule in this text is too broadly stated.
[5] Blume: "i.e., the burden of proof is on him." See C. 3.32.13, 3.39.3, 7.62.1; D. 5.1.37.
[6] = C.Th. 2.4.6, which notes that the evasions concern denuntiationes, "notices."

cognitionum auspicia rationem exprimere ac suas adlegationes iubeatur proponere.

D. XIII k. Aug. Constantinopoli Arcadio A. VI et Probo conss.

II Quorum Bonorum

[1] Impp. Severus et Antoninus AA. Iusto. Hereditatem eius, quem patrem tuum fuisse dicis, petiturus iudicibus qui super ea re cognituri erunt de fide intentionis adlega. quamvis enim bonorum possessionem ut praeteritus agnovisti, tamen interdicto quorum bonorum non aliter possessor constitui poteris, quam si te defuncti filium esse et ad hereditatem vel bonorum possessionem admissum probaveris.

PP. VIII k. Ian. Laterano et Rufino conss.

[2] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. et CC. Marco. Si ex edicto sororis patruelis intestato sine liberis defunctae recte petita bonorum possessione quaesisti successionem ac negotium integrum est, quae cum moreretur eius fuerunt, secundum edicti[1] quorum bonorum tenorem ab his, qui pro herede vel pro possessore possident dolove malo fecerint, quo magis desierint possidere, tibi rector provinciae restitui efficiet.

S. VI k. April. CC. conss.

[3] Impp. Arcadius et Honorius AA. Petronio vicario. pr. Constat virum a bonis intestatae uxoris superstitibus consanguineis esse extraneum, cum prudentium omnium responsa et lex ipsa naturae successores eos faciat. 1. Ergo iubemus, ut omnibus frustrationibus amputatis per interdictum quorum bonorum in petitorem corpora transferantur, secundaria actione proprietatis non exclusa.

D. VI k. Aug. Mediolani Olybrio et Probino conss.

[1] interdicti

to state his claim (rationem exprimere) and make his allegations at the very outset of hearings.

Given July 20, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Arcadius Augustus, for the sixth time, and Probus (406).

Second Title The Interdict Granting Possession of Property (Bonorum Possessio)[7]

[1] Emperors Severus and Antoninus Augusti to Justus. When you come to seek your inheritance from the man you say was your father, provide (your evidence on) the truth of your claim to the judges who hear this matter. For although you accepted possession of the estate as (a son) passed over (in your father's will), nevertheless through the interdict quorum bonorum you cannot be constituted the (legal) possessor unless you prove that you are (in fact) the decedent's son and that you were admitted to the inheritance or possession of the estate.

Posted December 25, in the consulship of Lateranus and Rufinus (197).

[2] Emperors Diocletian and Maximian Augusti and the Caesars to Marcus. The daughter of your paternal uncle died intestate and without children. If, in accord with the Edict, you sought succession to her by properly claiming possession of the estate, and the matter is still unadjudicated, then, in accord with the tenor of the interdict quorum bonorum, the provincial governor will cause the property belonging to her at her death to be turned over to you by those who (now) hold possession as heirs or as possessors or who have deceitfully brought about their loss of possession.

Written March 27, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[3][8] Emperors Arcadius and Honorius Augusti to Petronius, Vicar. pr. It is clear that a husband is excluded from the estate of his intestate wife if she has surviving blood-relatives, since the responses of all jurists, along with the law of nature itself, make them her successors. 1. We order, therefore, that all hindrances be curtailed and that the property be transferred by the interdict quorum bonorum to the claimant, (although) without excluding a secondary action on ownership.

Given July 27, at Milan, in the consulship of Olybrius and Probinus (395).

[7] Blume: "The present interdictal action was given where the right of possession of an inheritance had been granted [by the Praetor], in order to make that right effective." The interdict is named from its opening words (quorum bonorum ... possessio data est, "For property the possession of which has been granted"). See D. 43.2.

[8] = C.Th. 4.21.1 (describing Petronius as Vicarius in Spain).

III Quod Legatorum

[1] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. et CC. Latinae. pr. Heredi scripto satis idonee lege Falcidia, si exhausta legatis successio probetur, per quartae retentionem prospectum est. 1. Unde si legatarius vel fideicommissarius non consentiente patre tuo, quem adseveras testatori successisse et bonorum possessionem accepisse, relicta sibi legata vel fideicommissa detinuit, secundum sententiam interdicti, quod adversus legatarios scriptis heredibus propositum est, oblata satisdatione, quam praestari oportet, in possessione constitui, ut ita retentione competenti utaris, experiri potes.

D. XVI k. Ian. AA. conss.

IIII Unde Vi

[1] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. Theodoro. Recte possidenti ad defendendam possessionem, quam sine vitio tenebat, inculpatae tutelae moderatione illatam vim propulsare licet.

PP. XV k. Dec. ipsis IIII et III AA. conss.

[2] Idem AA. et CC. Alexandro. Vi pulsos restituendos esse interdicti exemplo, si necdum annus excessit, certissimi iuris est, et heredes teneri in tantum, quantum ad eos pervenit.

S. AA. conss.

[3] Idem AA. et CC. Ulpiae et Proclinae. Auctoritatem vobis rescripti nostri tenendae possessionis, quam vos per violentiam adeptas profitemini, commodari nimis improbe postulatis.

S. VIII id. April. CC. conss.

[4] Idem AA. et CC. Hygino. Si de possessione vi deiectus es, eum et legis Iuliae vis privatae reum postulare et ad instar interdicti unde vi convenire potes, quo reum causam omnem praestare, in qua fructus etiam,

Third Title The Interdict on Legatees[9]

[1] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti and the Caesars to Latina. pr. The lex Falcidia made suitable provision for a person instituted heir by (allowing him) retention of a quarter if the succession is shown to be depleted by legacies. 1. So if, as you say, your father succeeded to the testator and took possession of the estate, and without his consent a legatee or trust beneficiary held a legacy or trust left to him, once you furnish the required security you may, in accord with the intent of the interdict provided for instituted heirs against legatees, sue to be placed in possession so that you may thus exercise the relevant retention (of the Falcidian quarter).

Given December 17, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

Fourth Title The Interdict on Dispossession by Force (Unde Vi)[10]

[1] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti to Theodorus. A person rightfully in possession is permitted to defend his possession, if it is held without fault, by repelling force brought to bear against it, (but only) under the constraint that his care is blameless (i.e., not excessive).[11]

Posted November 17, in the consulship of the Augusti themselves, Consuls for the fourth and third times, respectively (290).

[2] The same Augusti and the Caesars to Alexander. The law is quite settled that those driven out by force must, on the pattern of the interdict, be restored if a year has not yet passed; and the (disposessor's) heirs are liable to the extent that it (the property in question) comes to them.

Written in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[3] The same Augusti and Caesars to Ulpia and Proclina. The request you make, to use the authority of Our rescript in order to hold a possession which you admit having taken by force, is most unworthy (and hence denied).

Written April 6, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[4] The same Augusti and Caesars to Hyginus. If you were forcibly ejected from possession, you can accuse him (criminally) under the lex Julia on private violence, and also sue him on the pattern of the interdict unde vi, in which there is no doubt the defendant (must) proffer the entire case (i.e., make complete

[9] See D. 43.3. This interdict assisted the heir in distributing legacies under a will.
[10] See D. 43.3. This interdict (actually, three separate interdicts) applied only to land.
[11] Compare D. 43.16.1.2.7, 43.16.3.9; C. 8.4.7.

quos vetus possessor percipere potuit, non quos praedo percepit, venire non ambigitur.

S. IIII id. April. Sirmi CC. conss.

[5] Imp. Constantinus A. ad Tertullianum. Invasor locorum poena teneatur legitima, si tamen vi loca eundem invasisse constiterit. nam si per errorem aut incuriam domini loca ab aliis possessa sunt, sine poena possessio restitui debet.

D. VI k. Mart. Gallicano et Symmacho conss.

[6] Imppp. Gratianus Valentinianus et Theodosius AAA. Pancratio pu. pr. Meminerint cuncti, sive vulgato rescripto mansuetudinis nostrae sive sententia cuiuslibet iudicis utantur in causis, conveniendos dominos locorum esse aut, si forte defuerint, actores eorum ad insinuandas sententias procuratoresque quaerendos, ne inde iniuriarum nascatur occasio, unde iura nascuntur. quod si praecepta nostra implere neglexerint, omni negotio, de quo iurgare coeperant, privabuntur. 1. Sin autem habito plerumque colludio curatores vel tutores minorum his rem debitam ea occasione pervadant, ut pupillis vel adultis iurgandi copia et fructus adimatur, his eatenus subvenimus, ut eosdem non atterat damno culpa temeritatis alienae, sed ilico quidem possessio ei a quo est ablata reddatur, curatores autem vel tutores aeterna deportatione punitos bonorum quoque publicatio persequatur.

D. prid. non. April. Antonio et Syagrio conss.

[7] Imppp. Valentinianus Theodosius et Arcadius AAA. ad Messianum comitem rerum privatarum. Si quis in tantam furoris pervenit audaciam, ut possessionem rerum apud fiscum vel apud homines quoslibet constitutarum ante eventum iudicialis arbitrii violenter invaserit, dominus quidem constitutus possessionem quam abstulit restituat possessori et dominium eiusdem rei amittat: sin vero alienarum rerum possessionem invasit, non solum eam possidentibus reddat, verum etiam aestimationem earundem rerum restituere compellatur.

D. XVII k. Iul. Treviris Timasio et Promoto conss.

restitution), including the fruits (fructus) which the former possessor could have received (but did not), but not those which a robber (actually) received.

Written April 10, at Sirmium, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[5][12] Emperor CONSTANTINE Augustus to Tertullian. A person intruding on property shall be liable to the legal penalty, provided it is established he intruded forcibly. For if property was possessed by third parties through mistake or the owner's carelessness, possession should be restored (to the prior possessor, but) without penalty.

Given February 24, in the consulship of Gallicanus and Symmachus (330).

[6][13] Emperors GRATIAN, VALENTINIAN, and THEODOSIUS Augusti to Pancratius, City Prefect. pr. Everyone should remember that, whether they make use of a published rescript of Our Clemency or the verdict of any judge in (particular) cases, property owners must (first) be approached, or, if they happen to be absent, their managers (actores) and procurators must be found in order to report the decisions, to prevent the source of a right from providing the occasion for a wrong. If they neglect to carry out Our ordinances, they shall lose the entire business that they began to litigate over. 1. But if the curatores or tutores of minors, usually by collusion, at this opportunity enter forcibly on property owed to them (the minors), with the consequence that minor or adult wards are deprived of the opportunity and fruits of a lawsuit, We aid them to the extent that they not be afflicted with loss through the fault of another's impudence; rather, possession shall be immediately restored to the person from whom it was taken, and the curators and tutores shall be punished with permanent deportation and confiscation of their property.

Given April 4, in the consulship of Antonius and Syagrius (382).

[7][14] Emperors VALENTINIAN, THEODOSIUS, and ARCADIUS Augusti to Messianus, Count of the Privy Purse. If anyone reaches a point of such insane audacity that before the outcome of a judicial trial (is announced,) he violently enters property held by the Treasury or by any individuals, if he is established (in the trial) as owner he shall restore to the possessor the possession that he took and lose ownership of this property. But if indeed he forcibly entered on possession of another's property, he shall not only restore this to the possessors, but be also compelled to pay the assessed value of this property.

Given June 15, at Trier, in the consulship of Timasius and Promotus (389).

[12] = C.Th. 2.26.1; combine with C. 3.39.3. Seeck dates to February 22, 330.

[13] With the principium, combine C. 2.12.24. Section 1 = C.Th. 4.22.2 (but abbreviated and heavily rewritten).

[14] = C.Th. 4.22.3. Seeck dates to June 14, 389.

[8] Impp. Arcadius et Honorius AA. Pasiphilo. Momentariae possessionis interdictum, quod non semper ad vim publicam pertinet vel privatam, mox audiri, interdum etiam sine inscriptione, meretur.

D. VIII k. Ian. Mediolani Olybrio et Probino conss.

[9] Imp. Zeno A. Sebastiano pp. Si quando vis iudicio fuerit patefacta, dein super rebus abreptis vel invasis vel damno tempore impetus quaestio proponatur, si non potuerit qui vim sustinuit quae perdidit singula comprobare, taxatione ab iudice facta pro personarum atque negotii qualitate, sacramento aestimationem rerum quas perdidit manifestet nec ei liceat ultra taxationem ab iudice factam iurare: et quod huiusmodi iureiurando dato fuerit declaratum, iudicem condemnare oportet.

D. id. Dec. Constantinopoli post consulatum Armati vc.

[10] Idem A. Sebastiano pp. pr. Non ab re est, quemadmodum possessionis alienae invasores tam vetus quam praesens sacra constitutio censuit puniendos, nec conductoribus et possessionis alienae detentoribus impune procedere, si locatoribus forte vel possessionem rerum suarum, quam apud alios precario modo esse concesserant, recuperare secundum leges volentibus, cum nulla sibimet cognita legibus adlegatio competeret, duxerint resistendum, et non protinus, id est non expectato iudiciorum ordine, alienam possessionem recte eam recuperantibus cedere patiantur. 1. Eos namque iubemus pro tanta suae iniquitatis impudentia, si cognitionis iudiciariae eventu fuerint condemnati, rei, cuius possessionem sponte restituere usque ad definitivam sententiam minime passi sunt, aestimationem victrici parti una cum ipsa re praebere compelli.

D. v k. April. Constantinopoli Theodorico cons.

[11] Imp. Iustinianus A. Iohanni pp. pr. Cum quaerebatur inter Illyricianam advocationem, quid fieri oporteret propter eos, qui vacuam

[8][15] Emperors Arcadius and Honorius Augusti to Pasiphilus. The interdict (for recovery) of interim possession (momentaria possessio) is not always concerned with public or private force; (a request for) it merits being heard immediately, at times even without a written complaint (inscriptio).

Given December 25, at Milan, in the consulship of Olybrius and Probinus (395).

[9] Emperor Zeno Augustus to Sebastianus, Praetorian Prefect. Whenever in a trial the use of force is clear, and question then arises concerning property carried off or forcibly entered, or concerning damage at the time of the attack, if the victim of the force cannot prove (the value of) each particular thing he lost, the judge shall fix a maximum value (taxatio) depending on the nature of the individuals and of the incident. He (the victim) shall then under oath declare the estimated value (aestimatio) of the property he lost, not exceeding the maximum fixed by the judge. The judge shall then enter a condemnation for what was declared by such an oath.

Given December 13, at Constantinople, after the consulship of the vir clarissimus Armatus (477).

[10][16] The same Augustus to Sebastianus, Praetorian Prefect. pr. Just as both old and contemporary imperial constitutions have provided punishment for intruders on another's possession, so it is not inappropriate that lessees and the holders (detentores) of another's possession also not go unpunished if – when they have no legally recognized claim – they offer resistance to lessors, say, or to those wishing, in accord with law, to recover possession of their own property that they have allowed to be with third parties on sufferance (precario), and they do not immediately – that is, without waiting for judicial procedure – allow surrender of possession to those lawfully seeking to recover it. 1. We order that if they are condemned after a judicial hearing, they shall, in proportion to such reckless injustice of theirs, be compelled to hand over to the winning party the property itself as well as the estimated value of the property, the possession of which they refused to restore voluntarily until the final judgment (was rendered).

Given March 28, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Theodoric (484).

[11] Emperor Justinian Augustus to John, Praetorian Prefect. pr. A dispute has arisen among the Society of Advocates (advocatio) of Illyria concerning what ought to be done about those who, without judicial verdict, hold vacant

[15] = C.Th. 2.1.8; combine with C. 9.2.16, 9.37.1. Momentaria possessio is granted to one litigant until final judgment is rendered in a lawsuit. Seeck dates to January 6, 395.

[16] = C. 4.65.33, entirely reworded.

possessionem absentium sine iudiciali sententia detinuerunt, quia veteres leges nec unde vi interdictum nec quod vi aut clam vel aliam quandam actionem ad recipiendam talem possessionem definiebant, violentia in ablatam possessionem minime praecedente, nisi domino tantummodo in rem actionem exercere permittentes: nos non concedentes aliquem alienas res vel possessiones per suam auctoritatem usurpare sancimus talem possessorem ut praedonem intellegi et generali iurisdictione ea teneri, quae pro restituenda possessione contra huiusmodi personas veteribus declarata est legibus. ridiculum etenim est dicere vel audire, quod per ignorantiam alienam rem aliquis quasi propriam occupaverit. 1. Omnes autem scire debent, quod non suum est, hoc ad alios modis omnibus pertinere, cum talis dispositio in furti actione iam dudum veteribus legibus definita est dicentibus: si quis alienam rem adversus domini voluntatem attigerit, furti actione tenetur. 2. His videlicet, quae super recipienda possessione a nobis disposita sunt, locum habentibus, si non ex die, ex quo possessio detenta est, triginta annorum excesserunt curricula.

D. XV k. Nov. Constantinopoli post consulatum Lampadii et Orestis vv. cc. anno secundo.

V Si per Vim vel Alio Modo Absentis Perturbata Sit Possessio

[1] Imp. Constantinus A. Severo. pr. Iudices absentium, qui cuiuslibet rei possessione privati sunt, suscipiant in iure personam et auctoritatis suae formidabile ministerium obiciant atque ita tueantur absentes, ut id solum diligenter inquirant, an eius, qui quolibet modo peregrinatur, possessio ablata est, quam propinquus vel parens vel proximus vel amicus vel colonus vel libertus seu servus quolibet titulo retinebat, nec eos, qui deiecti sunt absentium nomine possidentes, quia minime ipsis dictio causae mandata sit, ab experiunda re secludant, nec, si servi sint, eorum reiciant in iure personas, quia huiusmodi condicionis hominibus causas orare fas non sit: sed post elapsa quoque spatia recuperandae possessionis legibus praestituta litigium eis inferentibus largiri convenit, ut eos momentariae perinde possessioni sine ulla cunctatione restituant, ac si reversus dominus litigasset.

1. Cui tamen quolibet tempore reverso actionem recuperandae possessionis indulgemus, quia fieri potest, ut restitutio propter servulos possession (vacua possessio) of (the property of) absent persons, in view of the fact that ancient law affords neither the interdict unde vi nor that quod vi aut clam nor any other action to recover such possession in the absence of (at least) slight preceding force against the property taken away. They (these remedies) only permitted the owner an action for property (i.e., a vindicatio). But We, not permitting anyone on his own authority to seize another's property or possessions, ordain that such a possessor be construed as a robber, and be liable under that general jurisdiction (iurisdictio generalis) which was declared in the old laws against such persons for restoration of possession. For it is outrageous to say or hear that someone through ignorance occupies another's property as his own. 1. On the contrary, all should know that what is not their own belongs in all cases to others, since in the action on theft this outcome was long ago defined by the old laws, as follows: if anyone takes another's property contrary to the owner's wish, he is liable in the action on theft. 2. These means that We have provided for recovery of possession shall apply, obviously, (only) if the course of thirty years from the day that possession was taken (i.e., long-time prescription) has not run.

Given October 18, at Constantinople, in the second post-consulate of the viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestes (532).

Fifth Title If the Possession of an Absent Person Was Disturbed Through Force or Otherwise

[1][17] Emperor Constantine Augustus to Severus. pr. Judges shall assume in court the role of absent persons who have been deprived of possession of any property, and by interposing the powerful assistance of their authority they shall protect the absent thus, by carefully inquiring about this alone, whether a person who for some reason is abroad lost possession that a relative or parent or neighbor or friend or tenant (colonus) or freedman or slave was retaining by any (color of) title. Nor, on the ground that they have no mandate to bring a lawsuit, shall they (the judges) bar those who were ejected while possessing in the name of absent persons from litigating the matter; nor, if they are slaves, reject them in court because it is improper (non fas) for persons of such station to plead cases. Indeed, even after the statutorily set time limit for recovering possession has elapsed, it is appropriate to be amenable to their bringing suit, (with the result) that they restore them to interim possession (momentaria possessio) with no delay, just as if the returned owner had sued.

1. Nevertheless, to the latter (i.e., the absent person), upon his return at any time, We grant the action for recovering possession, since it can happen that infideles vel neglegentes propinquos vel parentes vel proximos vel amicos et colonos vel libertos interea differatur. absentibus enim officere non debet tempus emensum, quod recuperandae possessioni legibus praestitutum est, sed reformato statu, qui per iniuriam sublatus est, omnia quae supererunt ad disceptationem litigii immutilata permaneant: iudicio servato iustis legitimisque personis, cum valde sufficiat possessionem tenentibus absentium nomine contra praesentium violentiam subveniri.

[17] = C.Th. 4.22.1.

D. x k. Nov. Mediolani Constantino A. VII et Constantio C. conss.

[2] Impp. Arcadius et Honorius AA. Petronio vicario Hispaniarum. Nec imperiale responsum, quod supplicatio litigatoris obtinuit, nec interlocutio cognitoris ex quacumque parte innovare possessionis statum eo qui rem tenet absente permittitur, quia negotiorum merita partium adsertione panduntur.

D. XV k. Ian. Mediolano Caesario et Attico conss.

VI Uti Possidetis

[1] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. et CC. Cyrillo. Uti possidetis fundum de quo agitur, cum ab altero nec vi nec clam nec precario possidetis, rector provinciae vim fieri prohibebit ac satisdationis vel transferendae possessionis edicti perpetui forma servata de proprietate cognoscet.

Subscripta III id. Oct. Nicomediae CC. conss.

VII De Tabulis Exhibendis

[1] Impp. Valerianus et Gallienus AA. Germano. Si in potestate patris fuerunt impuberes filii et vos eis estis substituti atque ita ad vos intra pubertatem illis decedentibus coepit hereditas pertinere, de exhibendis testamenti tabulis interdicto uti potestis.

PP. VII k. Mai. Saeculari et Donato conss.

in the meantime restitution (to him) is delayed because of faithless slaves or careless relatives or parents or neighbors or friends and tenants (coloni) or freedmen. For expiration of the time legally fixed for recovering possession should not prejudice absent persons. But after restoration of the state that was wrongfully disturbed, all other issues shall remain unaffected for trying the dispute (over ownership); a trial is preserved for the proper and lawful persons, since this fully suffices to assist those holding possession in the name of absent persons against the violence of those present.

Given October 23, at Milan, in the consulship of Constantine Augustus, for the seventh time, and the Caesar Constantius (326).

[2][18] Emperors Arcadius and Honorius Augusti to Petronius, Vicar in Spain. Neither an imperial response obtained at a litigant's request, nor a judge's interim order (interlocutio), is allowed to alter in any way the status of possession of an absent person who holds it, since the merits of the case are (best) revealed by the assertions of the parties (themselves).

Given December 18, at Milan, in the consulship of Caesarius and Atticus (397).

Sixth Title The Interdict Uti Possidetis[19]

[1] Emperors Diocletian and Maximian Augusti and the Caesars to Cyrillus. The provincial governor will forbid any force being used against your possession of the farm in question if you possess it neither by force nor stealth nor sufferance from another; after observing the Perpetual Edict's procedure on giving surety or transferring possession (to the other party), he will hear the case on ownership.

Signed October 13, at Nicomedia, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).[20]

Seventh Title Production of Documents[21]

[1] Emperors Valerian and Gallienus Augusti to Germanus. If minor children (impuberes filii) were in their father's power and you were their substitute heir, and thus, when they died before puberty, the inheritance came to belong to you, you can use the interdict to get production of the will documents.

Posted April 25, in the consulship of Saecularis and Donatus (260).

[18] = C.Th. 4.22.5; combine with C. 7.32.11.

[19] See D. 43.17. This interdict (named from its opening words) concerned retaining possession of real property, usually in dispute where it was uncertain which party had a superior claim to possession.

[20] Mommsen dates to December 11, 294.

[21] See D. 43.5. This is the interdict de tabulis exhibendis.

VIII De Liberis Exhibendis seu de Ducendis et de Homine Libero Exhibendo

[1] Imp. Antoninus A. Iustino. Si, ut proponis, cum tuae potestatis esses, super rebus matris obtinuisti, potes eos qui tibi condemnati sunt convenire. quod si extitit, qui te filium et in sua potestate esse contendit, interdicto in eam rem proposito de fide intentionis eius quaeretur.

PP. VI id. April. duobus Aspris conss.

[2] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. et CC. Cyrillae. Adi praesidem provinciae ac postula filios tuos exhiberi.

Subscripta V id. April. Byzantii AA. conss.

[3] Idem AA. et CC. Euodiae. Si ad instar interdicti de exhibenda filia Philippi eum conveniendum putaveris, rector aditus provinciae suam vobis accomodabit notionem.

S. XII k. Dec. Nicomediae AA. conss.

VIIII De Precario et de Salviano Interdicto

[1] Imp. Gordianus A. Aristoni. Si te non remittente pignus debitor tuus ea quae tibi obnoxia sunt venumdedit, integrum tibi ius est ea persequi, non interdicto Salviano (id enim tantummodo adversus conductorem debitoremve competit), sed Serviana actione vel quae ad exemplum eius instituitur utilis adversus emptorem exercenda.

PP. VI id. Sept. Pio et Pontiano conss.

[2] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. et CC. Fabricio. Habitantis precario heredes ad restituendum habitaculum teneri contra eos interdicto proposito manifeste declaratur.

S. k. Dec. Sirmi AA. conss.

Eighth Title Producing or Leading Away Children or Producing a Free Person[22]

[1] Emperor ANTONINUS Augustus to Justin. If, as you state, while you were in your own power (i.e., sui iuris), you prevailed (in a trial over succession) concerning your mother's property, you can sue those against whom you obtained judgment (to obtain execution of this judgment). But if someone appears who contends that you are his son and in his power, through an interdict on this matter a trial is (first) held concerning the truth of his claim.
Posted April 8, in the consulship of the two Aspri (212).

[2] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti and the Caesars to Cyrilla. Go before the province's governor and ask that your sons be produced (by the party who is holding them).
Signed April 9, at Byzantium, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[3] The same Augusti and Caesars to Euodia. If, on the pattern of the interdict, you think you should sue Philip over producing his daughter (your wife), the provincial governor, if approached, will adapt his jurisdiction to (assist) you.
Written November 20, at Nicomedia, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

Ninth Title Sufferance (Precarium) and the Salvian Interdict[23]

[1] Emperor GORDIAN Augustus to Aristo. If your debtor sold property that was obligated to you (as security) and you did not release this pledge (pignus), you have an unaltered right to pursue it, not by the Salvian interdict – for this lies only against a lessee or debtor – but by using the Servian action or the analogous action (utilis actio) established on its model against the buyer.
Posted September 8, in the consulship of Pius and Pontianus (238).

[2] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti and the Caesars to Fabricius. In the interdict that is provided against them, it is explicitly stated that the heirs of someone residing on sufferance (precario) are bound to restore the dwelling (to its owner).
Written December 1, at Sirmium, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[22] See D. 43.29 and 30. These are the interdicts de homine libero exhibendo and de libero exhibendo.
[23] See D. 43.26 and 33. Precarium is a legal arrangement in which one party holds (usually real) property without a contract, on its owner's mere sufferance. The Salvian interdict was adapted to assist an owner in recovering obligated property.

X De Aedificiis Privatis

[1] Impp. Antoninus et Verus AA. Tauro. Et balneum, ut desideras, instruere et aedificium ei superponere potes, observata tamen forma, qua ceteri super balnea aedificare permittuntur, id est ut concameratis superinstruas et ipsa concameres nec modum usitatum altitudinis excedas.

PP. sine die et consule.

[2] Imp. Alexander A. Diogeni. Negotiandi causa aedificia demoliri et marmora detrahere edicto divi Vespasiani et senatus consulto vetitum est. ceterum de alia domo in aliam transferre quaedam licere exceptum est: sed nec dominis ita transferre licet, ut integris aedificiis depositis publicus deformetur adspectus.

PP. XI k. Ian. Alexandro A. cons.

[3] Idem A. Apro evocato. An in totum ex ruina domus licuerit non eandem faciem in civitate restituere, sed in hortum convertere, et an hoc consensu tunc magistratuum non prohibentium, item vicinorum factum sit, praeses, probatis his quae in oppido frequenter in eodem genere controversiarum servata sunt, causa cognita statuet.

PP. VII k. April. Iuliano et Crispino conss.

[4] Imp. Philippus A. et Philippus C. Victori. Si, ut proponis, socius aedificii ad refectionem eius sumptus conferre detractat, non necessarie extra ordinem tibi subveniri desideras. etenim si solus aedificaveris nec intra quattuor mensuum tempora cum centesimis nummus pro portione socii erogatus restitutus fuerit vel, quo minus id fieret, per socium id stetisse constiterit, ius dominii pro solido vindicare vel obtinere iuxta placitum antiquitus poteris.

P. IIII k. April. Philippo A. et Titiano conss.

[5] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. Octavio. Si is, contra quem precem fundis, sciens prudensque soli partem ad te pertinere, non quasi socius vel collega communis operis sollicitudine solidam balneorum

Tenth Title Private Buildings

[1] Emperors ANTONINUS and VERUS Augusti to Taurus. Just as you wish, you can both construct a bath and put a building above it, provided you observe the regulation under which everyone else is permitted to build over baths, that is, that you use vaults for the superstructure and for it (the bath), and do not exceed the customary limit on height.

Posted without date and consul (161–169).

[2] Emperor ALEXANDER Augustus to Diogenes. By an edict of the deified Vespasian and a (prior) decree of the Senate,[24] it was forbidden to demolish buildings and strip off marble for speculation. But there is an exception permitting transfer of some things from one home to another (of the same owner); still, not even owners are allowed to transfer (materials) if the public vista is marred by entire buildings being torn down.

Posted December 22, in the consulship of Alexander Augustus (222).

[3][25] The same Augustus to Aper, a veteran. Whether, after a house collapses, it is permitted not entirely to restore the same urban exterior but to change it to a garden, and whether this was done with the consent of magistrates who did not prohibit it and (with that) of neighbors, after it is shown what has often been done in a city in this sort of dispute, the provincial governor will hear the case and decide.

Posted March 26, in the consulship of Julian and Crispinus (224).

[4] Emperor PHILIP Augustus and the Caesar PHILIP to Victor. If, as you state, your partner in a building refuses to contribute to its repair, you unnecessarily seek assistance through extraordinary procedure (extra ordinem). For if you build alone and (then) within four months the amount expended by you for your partner's portion is not repaid to you with 12 percent interest, or it is clear that this non-performance is the partner's fault, you can, by ancient doctrine, vindicate or acquire the right of ownership of the whole.[26]

Posted March 29, in the consulship of Philip Augustus and Titianus (245).

[5][27] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti to Octavius. If the person against whom you direct your petition knew and understood that part of the land belongs to you, and he undertook full reconstruction of baths not [24] The SC Hosidianum of 45 CE, largely repeated in the SC Volusianum of 56: see CIL 10.1.1401 (FIRA 1.45).

[25] = C. 8.52.1 (in part); combine with 8.1.1.

[26] Compare D. 17.2.52.10, 20.2.1: SC under Marcus Aurelius.

[27] Compare C. 5.16.4. With the holding, compare D. 3.5.5.5; C. 3.32.5.

extructionem ea mente, ut sumptus pro portione tua reciperet, adgressus est, sed totius loci dominium usurpare et collapsum balneum refabricare enisus est, cum aedificia quae alieno loco imponuntur solo cedant nec impensae his qui improbe id fecerint restitui debeant, antiquato divi Hadriani edicto praeses provinciae memor iuris publici in dirimenda disceptatione legum placita custodiet.

PP. VI non. Oct. ipsis IIII et III AA. conss.

[6] Imp. Constantinus A. Helpidio agenti vicem pp. pr. Si quis post hanc legem civitate spoliata ornatum, hoc est marmora vel columnas, ad rura transtulerit, privetur ea possessione, quam ita ornaverit. 1. Si quis autem ex alia in aliam civitatem labentium parietum marmora vel columnas de propriis domibus in proprias transferre voluerit, quoniam utrobique haec esse publicum decus est, licenter hoc faciat: data similiter facultate etiam de possessione ornatum huiusmodi ad possessionem aliam transferendi, quamvis per muros vel etiam per mediam civitatem ea transferri necesse sit, ita ut ea solummodo quae illata fuerint civitatibus exportentur.

D. VI k. Iun. Viminacii Crispo II et Constantino II conss.

[7] Imp. Iulianus A. ad Avitianum vicarium Africae. Nemini columnas vel statuas cuiuscumque materiae ex alia eademque provincia vel auferre liceat vel movere.

D. VI k. Nov. Iuliano A. IIII et Sallustio conss.

[8] Imppp. Valens Gratianus et Valentinianus AAA. ad Modestum pp. pr. Singularum urbium curiales etiam inviti vel reparare intra civitates quas olim habuerint domus vel ex novo aedificare cogantur, illic semper muniis inservituri et aucturi propriarum frequentiam civitatum. 1. Possessores vero, qui non erunt curiales, in urbibus, in quibus domus possident, easdem domos dirutas neglectasque reparent, iudiciaria ad conservandum hoc praeceptum auctoritate retinendi.

D. XIII k. Nov. Gratiano A. IIII et Merobaude conss.

as a partner or co-owner caring for jointly owned property (who was acting) with the intent to recover the expenses for your share, but (instead) he sought to take over ownership of the whole property and restore the collapsed bath, (then,) since buildings constructed on another's land become part of it and the expense (of such buildings) should not be repaid to those who incurred them dishonestly, the edict of deified Hadrian (granting reimbursement to the builder) is inapplicable and the provincial governor, mindful of public law, will apply the statutory provisions in ending the dispute.

Posted October 2, in the consulship of the Augusti themselves, Consuls for the fourth and third times, respectively (290).

[6] Emperor CONSTANTINE Augustus to Helpidius, Acting Praetorian Prefect. pr. If, after this law, anyone despoils a city by removing decoration, i.e., marble or columns, to the countryside, he shall be deprived of the possession he thus decorated. 1. But if anyone wishes to convey the marble or columns of shaky walls from his property in one city to that in another, he shall do so lawfully, since it is a public ornament that these be in one place or the other. Permission is similarly granted to convey such decoration from one possession to another, even if it must be conveyed through the (city) walls or even through the middle of the city, but only those things that are brought in may be removed from cities.

Given May 27, at Viminacium, in the consulship of Crispus, Consul for the second time, and Constantine, for the second time (321).

[7][28] Emperor JULIAN Augustus to Avitianus, Vicar of Africa. No one is permitted either to carry off or to move columns or statues of whatever material from another province or the same one.

Given October 27, in the consulship of Julian Augustus, for the fourth time, and Sallust (362).

[8] Emperors VALENS, GRATIAN, and VALENTINIAN Augusti to Modestus, Praetorian Prefect. pr. The decurions of every city, constantly focused on their duties there and endeavoring to increase the population of their own cities, are compelled, even against their will, either to repair or construct anew the homes that they have long had within these cities. 1. But in the cities where they have houses, possessors who are not decurions shall repair them (when) collapsed and neglected, being bound by judicial authority to act in accord with this ordinance.

Given October 20, in the consulship of Gratian Augustus, for the fourth time, and Merobaudes (377).

[28] Combine with C.Th. 8.5.15, 11.28.1 (with the correct and fullest subscription), 15.3.2. The apparent contradiction with the preceding constitution is variously explained. Seeck dates to October 26, 362.

[9] Imppp. Arcadius Honorius et Theodosius AAA. Aemiliano pu. Si cui loci proprietas aedificandi iuxta publicas aedes animum dederit, quindecim pedum spatio interiecto inter publica ac privata aedificia ita sibi noverit fabricandum, ut tali intervallo et publicae aedes a periculo vindicentur et privatus aedificator velut perperam fabricato loco destructionis quandoque futurae non timeat detrimentum.

D. XI k. Nov. Constantinopoli Arcadio A VI et Probo conss.

[10] Impp. Honorius et Theodosius AA. Monaxio pp. Per provincias Mesopotamiam Osroenam Euphratensem Syriam secundam Phoenicen Libanensem Ciliciam secundam utramque Armeniam utramque Cappadociam Pontum Polemoniacum atque Hellenopontum, ubi magis hoc desideratur, ceterasque provincias cunctis volentibus permittatur murali ambitu fundos proprios seu loca sui dominii constituta vallare.

D. III non. Mai. Constantinopoli Theodosio A. VIIII et Constantio III conss.

[11] Idem AA. Severino pp. pr. Maeniana, quae Graece ἐξώστας appellant, sive olim constructa sive in posterum in provinciis construenda, nisi spatium inter se per decem pedes liberi aeris habuerint, modis omnibus detruncentur. 1. In his vero locis, in quibus aedificia privatorum horreis publicis videntur obiecta, obstructione maenianorum quindecim pedum intervalla serventur. 2. Quem intercapedinis modum aedificaturis quoque proponimus, ita ut, si quis intra definitum spatium, id est decem pedum mensuram, aedificare vel intra quindecim pedum maenianum possidere temptaverit, sciat non solum fabricam demoliendam, sed etiam ipsam domum fisco nostro adscribendam.

D. III k. Oct. Asclepiodoto et Mariniano conss.

[12] Αὐτοκράτωρ Καῖσαρ Ζήνων εὐσεβὴς νικητὴς τροπαιοῦχος ἀεὶ μέγιστος ἀεὶ σεβαστὸς Αὔγουστος Ἀδαμαντίῳ ἐπάρχῳ πόλεως. pr. Καὶ δικῶν εἰρήνης ἀπολαύειν καὶ τῶν ἔξωθεν πολέμων ἀπαλλάττεσθαι τοὺς ὑπηκόους βουλόμενοι νουθετεῖν ἑκάστοτε προθυμούμεθα. διὸ καὶ τὸν παρόντα φέρομεν

[9][29] Emperors ARCADIUS, HONORIUS, and THEODOSIUS Augusti to Aemilianus, City Prefect. If anyone owning property next to a public building intends to build, he knows that it must be constructed with a space of 15 feet between public and private buildings, such that both the public building is protected from danger by such an interval and the private builder (if he complies) need not fear loss from some future demolition owing to the lot being improperly built up.

Given October 22, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Arcadius Augustus, for the sixth time, and Probus (406).

[10] Emperors HONORIUS and THEODOSIUS Augusti to Monaxius, Praetorian Prefect. Throughout the provinces of Mesopotamia, Osroena, Euphratensis, second Syria, Phoenicia Libanensis, second Cilicia, both Armenias, both Cappadocias, Pontus Polemoniacus, and Hellenopontus, where this is especially needed, and the other provinces: all persons who wish are permitted to surround their own farms or places they own with a wall circuit.

Given May 5, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Theodosius Augustus, for the ninth time, and Constantius, for the third time (420).

[11] The same Augusti[30] to Severinus, Praetorian Prefect. pr. Projecting balconies (maeniana), which the Greeks call exostai, whether constructed previously or hereafter in the provinces, will be lopped off in every case unless they have a free-air space of 10 feet between them. 1. But in those places where private structures appear to be built up against public granaries, 15-foot intervals shall be kept free from obstruction by balconies. 2. This measure of interruption We ordain also for future builders, such that if anyone attempts to build within the defined space, i.e., a measure of 10 feet, or to possess a balcony within 15 feet, he may know not just that his structure will be demolished, but that the house itself will be forfeit to the Treasury.

Given September 29, in the consulship of Asclepiodotus and Marinianus (423).

[12][31] Emperor Caesar ZENO, Pious Victor and Triumpher, Always Greatest and Always Venerable, Augustus, to Adamantius, City Prefect. pr. Wishing Our subjects both to enjoy respite from lawsuits and to be free of foreign wars, We always undertake to alert them in advance. We accordingly enact the present law, [29] = C.Th. 15.1.46; combine with C.Th. 15.1.45. Seeck dates to October 27, 406.

[30] Honorius had actually died on August 27, 423.

[31] This constitution (reconstituted from several Byzantine manuscripts of Greco-Roman law) appears to be a direct transcription of the original Greek text, rather than an abbreviation in the usual Codex form. Lounghis et al. date it to between 474 and 479. Leo's law, referred to in 1a, is not otherwise known.

νόμον ἱκανῶς ἀποδεικνύντα, ὡς καὶ ἡ σὴ μεγαλοπρέπεια δικαίως ἐδίδαξεν καὶ ἡμεῖς προνοητικῶς τὰ τὴν δυσχέρειαν λύοντα διορίζομεν. 1. Καὶ μικρὸν ἀποστάντες τῶν πρεπωδεστέρων τῇ πολιτείᾳ ῥημάτων τοῖς τῷ πλήθει γνωριμωτέροις χρησόμεθα, ὅπως ἂν ἕκαστος αὐτῶν ἐντυγχάνων τῷ νόμῳ μὴ δέοιτο ἑτέρου βοηθοῦ πρὸς τὴν οἰκείαν χρείαν.

1a. Ἔγνωμεν τοίνυν ἐκ τῶν ἐνεχθέντων παρὰ τοῦ σοῦ μεγέθους, ὡς ὁ θεῖος νόμος τοῦ τῆς ἀθανάτου μνήμης πατρὸς ἡμετέρου Λέοντος, ὃν ἔθετο περὶ τῶν ἐν τῇδε τῇ ἐνδόξῳ πόλει κτίζειν βουλομένων, ἀμφίβολος εἶναι κατά τινα μέρη δοκεῖ διὰ τὰς τῶν φαύλως ἑρμηνευόντων ἐπινοίας. προστάττομεν τοὺς τὰς ἰδίας οἰκίας ἀνανεοῦντας τὸ ἀρχαῖον σχῆμα μηδαμῶς παρεξιέναι, ὥστε μὴ τοὺς οἰκοδομοῦντας ἀφαιρεῖσθαι φῶτα ἢ ἄποψιν τῶν γειτόνων παρὰ τὸ πάλαι καθεστηκός. οὐ μὴν προσθήσω, ὅ τι δήποτε δέοι κρατεῖν, οἷον ὁ τῇ οἰκοδομίᾳ χρώμενος δίκαιον ἔχοι προσῆκον αὐτῷ ἐκ συμφώνου ἢ ἐπερωτήσεως, ἐπιτρέπον ἀμείνειν, εἰ βουληθείη, τὸ παλαιὸν σχῆμα. 1b. Διὸ θεσπίζομεν, εἰ σύμφωνον ἢ ἐπερώτησις βοηθοῖ τῷ κτίζοντι, ἐξεῖναι αὐτῷ κατὰ τὴν δύναμιν τοῦ συμφώνου ἢ τῆς ἐπερωτήσεως οἰκοδομεῖν, εἰ καὶ τοὺς γείτονας, οἷς ἐναντιοῦται τὸ σύμφωνον, ἐντεῦθεν βλάπτειν δοκοίη.

2. Τῆς δέ μου τῆς[ii] διατάξεως εἰπούσης καὶ δώδεκα ποδῶν χρῆναι καταλιμπάνειν μέσον τῆς τε ἰδίας καὶ τῆς τοῦ γείτονος οἰκίας τὸν οἰκοδομεῖν μέλλοντα καὶ τὸ πλέον ἢ ἔλαττον προσθείσης, ὃ μεγίστην ἀσφάλειαν[iii] εἰκότως ποιεῖ (τὸ γὰρ ἐνδοιάζον οὐκ ἐπιτήδειον εἰς ἀμφιβολίας ἀναίρεσιν), περιφανῶς κελεύομεν δυοκαίδεκα πόδας εἶναι μέσους ἑκατέρας οἰκίας, ἀρχομένους μὲν ἀπὸ τοῦ ἐπικειμένου τοῖς θεμελίοις οἰκοδομήματος, παραφυλαττομένους δὲ μέχρι πέρατος τοῦ ὕψους. καὶ τῷ τοῦτο τοῦ λοιποῦ παραφυλάττοντι ἐξεῖναι τὴν οἰκίαν ἐγείρειν ἐφ' ὅσον θελήσειεν ὕψος καὶ θυρίδας κατασκευάζειν τὰς καλουμένας παρακυπτικὰς καὶ φωταγωγοὺς κατὰ τὴν θείαν νομοθεσίαν, εἴτε νέαν οἰκίαν βούλοιτο κτίζειν εἴτε παλαιὰν ἀνανεοῦν εἴτε διαφθαρεῖσαν ἐκ πυρὸς οἰκοδομεῖν. 2a. Μηδανῶς ἐκ τούτου τοῦ διαστήματος συγχωρεῖσθαι ἀφαιρεῖν τοῦ γείτονος ἄποψιν θαλάσσης εὐθεῖαν καὶ οὐ βεβιασμένην ἐξ οἱουδήποτε πλευροῦ τῆς οἰκίας, ἣν ὁ γείτων ἑστὼς ἔνδον ἐν τοῖς ἰδίος ἢ καὶ καθήμενος ἔχει, μὴ παρατρέπων ἑαυτὸν ἐν τῷ παρακύπτειν εἰς τὸ πλάγιον καὶ βιαζόμενος, ὥσπερ ἰδεῖν θάλασσαν. 2b. Τὸ γὰρ τῶν κήπων τε καὶ τῶν δένδρων οὔτε περιείληπται τῇ προτέρᾳ νομοθεσίᾳ οὔτε τῇ παρούσῃ προστεθήσεται. οὔτε γὰρ προσήκει τοιαύτην δουλείαν κρατεῖν.

3. Μηδενὶ δὲ ἐξέστω κτίζοντι οἰκίαν, ἐν μέσῳ ὄντος στενωποῦ ἢ πλατείας ὑπὲρ τοὺς δεκαδύο πόδας, διὰ τοῦτο παραιρεῖσθαι μέρος τῆς πλατείας ἢ τοῦ στενωποῦ καὶ τῷ οἰκείῳ προσνέμειν οἰκοδομήματι. οὐ γὰρ τὰ τῷ δημοσίῳ προσήκοντα βλάπτειν βουλόμενοι καὶ τοῖς κτίζουσιν ἀπονέμειν δεκαδύο ποδῶν εἶναι διάστημα ἐν μέσῳ τῶν οἰκιῶν διωρίσαμεν, ἀλλ' ὥστε μὴ στενότερα εἶναι τὰ μεταξὺ τῶν οἰκιῶν διαστήματα, καὶ τὸ πλέον περιόν τι ἐῶντες ἔχειν ὡς ἔχει καὶ τοῦτο μειοῦσθαι μὴ συγχωροῦντες, ἵνα τῇ πόλει τὰ οἰκεῖα περισώζηται δίκαια. 3a. Εἰ δὲ τὸ παλαιὸν οἰκοδόμημα which sufficiently shows both how Your Magnificence rightly advises, and how We prudently establish, the solution to a problem. 1. And departing a bit from the more common (Latin) words used in government, We employ those more broadly familiar (Greek words), so that no one coming in contact with this law requires someone else's help (as an interpreter) for his own domestic needs.

[ii] τῆς δὲ αὐτῆς
[iii] ἀσάφειαν

1a. From the report made to Us by Your Magnificence, We have learned that the imperial law of Our father Leo of undying memory, which he enacted for those wishing to build in this renowned city (Constantinople), seems ambiguous in several particulars because of the inventions of bad interpreters, (as when it says:) "We prescribe that those restoring their own buildings exceed in no respect their former external appearance, to prevent builders depriving neighbors of their light or view contrary to the former situation" – without adding what should be done if the builder had a right accruing to him from a pact or stipulation to change the structure if he wishes. 1b. We therefore ordain that if the builder has a pact or stipulation, he may build in accord with the terms of the pact or stipulation even if he thereby appears to harm the neighbors against whom the pact is opposed.

2. The same constitution provides that a would-be builder should leave a space of 12 feet between his house and his neighbors, adding "more or less," which indeed causes the greatest obscurity – for an ambiguity is unsuited to removing doubt. We clearly order that there be 12 feet between each house, beginning from the structure overlying the foundations and maintained to the highest point (of the structure). A person who observes this hereafter can erect his house to whatever height he wishes and provide windows, both those they term "for view" and those "for light" in accord with imperial legislation, whether he wishes to build a new house or repair an old one or construct one destroyed by fire. 2a. Still, from this space it is not permitted to cut off the neighbor's direct and unobstructed view of the sea from any part of his house, whether the neighbor is standing or sitting in his house, and not twisting himself to view obliquely and, as if contorted, to observe the sea. 2b. The prior legislation makes no mention of gardens and trees, nor does this one; for it is agreed there should be no such servitude.

3. If a man builds a house and between (his property and his neighbor's) there is an alleyway or street wider than 12 feet, he is not on this account permitted to occupy part of the street or alleyway and annex it to his own property. For We provided for 12 feet of space between houses not out of a desire to prejudice public property and assign it to builders, but in order that spaces not be narrower between houses, thereby preserving space which exceeds the measure and not allowing it to be diminished, so that their rights are protected for cities. 3a. If the old building and the former plan is such that the space between καὶ τὸ ἀρχαῖον σχῆμα τοιοῦτον ἦν, ὥστε ἔλαττον εἶναι τῶν δεκαδύο ποδῶν μεταξὺ ἑκατέρας οἰκίας διάστημα, μὴ ἐξέστω παρὰ τὸ παλαιὸν σχῆμα ἢ ὑψοῦν τὸ οἰκοδόμημα ἢ θυρίδας ποιεῖν· εἰ μὴ δέκα πόδες εἶεν ἐν μέσῳ· τηνικαῦτα γὰρ παρακυπτικὰς μὲν ὁ κτίζων οὐ δυνήσεται ποιεῖν οὐκ οὔσας πάλαι, ὡς εἴρηται, φωταγωγοὺς δὲ ποιήσει ἀπὸ ἓξ ποδῶν τοῦ πάτου εἰς ὕψος, μηδαμῶς τὸ καλούμενον ψευδόπατον ποιεῖν ἐν τῷ ἑαυτοῦ οἰκήματι τολμῶντος, φωταγωγοῦ θυρίδος κατασκευασθείσης κατὰ τὸ εἰρημένον τῶν ἓξ ποδῶν ὕψος, καὶ σοφίζεσθαι τὸν νόμον. 3b. Εἰ γὰρ τοῦτο ἐξείη, πάλιν αἱ φωταγωγοὶ διὰ τοῦ ψευδοπάτου παρακυπτικῶν πληρώσουσι χρείαν καὶ τὸν γείτονα βλάψουσιν. ὅπερ γίνεσθαι κωλύομεν, οὐδαμοῦ τὴν ἐκ τῶν συμφώνων ἤτοι ἐπερωτημάτων ἁρμόζουσαν βοήθειαν, εἴπερ ὅλως ὑπάρχει τοιαύτη τις, ἀναιροῦντες.

4. Ἔτι δὲ τοῦ προτέρου νόμου κελεύοντος ἑκατὸν πόδας ἐξεῖναι τὰς οἰκίας εἰς ὕψος αἴρειν τὰς ὑπὸ τοῦ πυρὸς πρῴην διαφθαρείσας, εἰ καὶ περὶ θαλάσσης ἄποψιν ἕτερος βλάπτοιτο, καὶ ταύτην ἀναιροῦντες τὴν ἀμφιβολίαν θεσπίζομεν τοῦτο αὐτὸ κρατεῖν ἐπί τε τῶν ἐμπρησθεισῶν οἰκιῶν εἴτε[iv] τῶν ἀνανεουμένων καὶ ἐπὶ τῶν οὐκ οὐσῶν μὲν πρότερον, κτιζομένων δὲ νῦν, μετὰ τούτων καὶ ἐπὶ τῶν πυρὸς μὲν βλάβην μὴ δεξαμένων, διὰ παλαιότητα δὲ ἢ καὶ τινα οὖν ἄλλην αἰτίαν σαθρῶν γενομένων, ἵνα ἐπὶ πάσης οἰκίας οἰκοδομουμένης[v] ἑκατὸν ποδῶν εἴη διάστημα ἐν μέσῳ τῶν ἀμφιβαλλομένων τόπων, κωλύματος χωρὶς γένηται οἰκοδόμημα, εἰ καὶ τῆς ἄλλῳ διαφερούσης οἰκίας τὴν ἐπὶ θάλασσαν ἄποψιν λυμαίνηται. 4a. Τὰς δὲ ἀπὸ μόνων μαγειρείων ἢ τῶν καλουμένων ἀποπάτων ἢ ἀφεδρώνων ἢ κλιμάκων ἢ διαβάσεων πρὸς πάροδον μόνην χρησίμων ἢ καὶ τούτων, ἃ καλοῦσιν οἱ πολλοὶ βαστέρνια, ἀπόψεις εἰς θάλασσαν βλάπτειν ἐξέστω, κἂν ἐντὸς ἑκατὸν ποδῶν βούλοιτό τις οἰκοδομεῖν, δώδεκα μέντοι πόδες ἐν μέσῳ τυγχάνοιεν ὄντες. 4b. Ταῦτα δὲ παραφυλαχθῆναι θεσπίζομεν, ὅτε μὴ ὑπάρχει τινὶ σύμφωνον ἐπιτρέπον οἰκοδομεῖν· τηνικαῦτα γὰρ καὶ μὴ παραφυλαχθέντος διαστήματος κατὰ τὸ σύμφωνον ἐπιτρέπομεν ἐγείρεσθαι τὰς οἰκοδομάς, εἰ καὶ βλάπτοιεν περὶ θαλάσσης ἄποψιν τοὺς συμφωνήσαντας ἢ τοὺς τὰς ἐκείνων οἰκίας διαδεξαμένους, ἐπειδὴ τὰ ἤδη τισὶν ὑπάρχοντα ἐκ συμφώνων δίκαια οὐ προσήκει διὰ τῶν γενικῶν ἀναιρεῖσθαι νόμων.

5. Ἔτι δὲ θεσπίζομεν τὰ καλούμενα σωλάρια μετὰ τὸν παρόντα νόμον μὴ ἐκ μόνων ξύλων τε καὶ σανίδων γίνεσθαι, ἀλλὰ τῷ τῶν λεγομένων Ῥωμανισίων οἰκοδομεῖσθαι σχήματι, δέκα δὲ ποδῶν εἶναι διάστημα μετξὺ δύο σωλαρίων ἀντικρὺ ὄντων ἀλλήλων. 5a. Εἰ δὲ τοῦτο μὴ δυνατὸν εἴη διὰ στενοχωρίαν τοῦ τόπου, ἐκ παραλλαγῆς γίνεσθαι τὰ σωλάρια. 5b. Εἰ δὲ αὐτὸς ὁ στενωπὸς μὴ περαιτέρω δέκα ποδῶν εἴη, μηδ' ἐπιχειρεῖν ἐκ μηδετέρου μέρους σωλάρια ἤτοι ἐξώστας κατασκευάζειν. 5c. Καὶ τὰ γενόμενα δὲ ὃν εἴρηται τρόπον κελεύομεν ἀφεστάναι τοῦ ἐδάφους εἰς ὕψος ποδῶν δεκαπέντε διάστημα, καὶ μηδαμῶς κατὰ κάθετον αὐτῶν κίονας

[iv] ἐπί τε
[v] οἰκοδομουμένης εἰ

(it and) the other building is less than 12 feet, its height shall not be raised, nor shall windows be opened, unless there is 10 feet between. Even then the builder cannot make (windows) "for view" that were not there before, as stated; but he will make those "for light" 6 feet above the floor. But no one, after opening a window at the specified height of 6 feet, shall then dare to construct a so-called false floor in his home and (so) circumvent the law. 3b. For if this were permitted, because of the false floor those (windows) "for light" would serve for purposes of view and harm the neighbor (by intruding on his privacy). We forbid this to happen, but in no respect take away any right stemming from pacts or stipulations, should any such lie (in particular cases).

4. Further, since the earlier statute provided that houses previously consumed by fire might be reconstructed to a height of 100 feet even if another person is harmed in his view of the sea, We eliminate this ambiguity and order that this right exist both as to houses burned down and for those being repaired, and for houses not previously existing but now erected, and as well for those not damaged by fire but in ruins through age or some other cause. In constructing every house, if there is a distance of 100 feet from surrounding properties, building may proceed without stoppage even if the sea view is harmed from a house belonging to a third party. 4a. But it is permitted to obstruct sea views only from kitchens, so-called water closets, privies, staircases, from corridors useful only for passage, and from what they commonly call "enclosed litters" (basternia; internal hallways?), even if someone wishes to build within 100 feet, as long as there are 12 feet between. 4b. We ordain that these rules be observed as long as there is no agreement allowing (such) construction; for then We provide that the building may be constructed according to the terms even if no interval is left, and even if it harms the sea view of those who made the pact or their successors in the house, since rights acquired by pacts ought not to be nullified by general laws.

5. We likewise ordain that the so-called solaria (balconies exposed to sun) not hereafter be constructed from wooden beams and posts alone, but rather in the manner of those called "Roman"; and an interval of 10 feet shall be left between two juxtaposed solaria. 5a. If this is impossible owing to the narrowness of the space, the solaria shall be constructed alternately. 5b. But if the alleyway itself is not wider than 10 feet, from neither side shall they attempt to build solaria or projecting balconies. 5c. And We order that structures built according to this specification be 15 feet high from the ground, and in no way (in order to support them) shall stone or wooden columns be set vertically on the ground, or walls constructed, so that the air not be shut off under the λιθίνους ἢ ξυλίνους ἐπὶ τῷ ἐδάφει ἵστασθαι ἢ τοίχους κατασκευάζεσθαι, ὥστε μήτε τὸν ἀέρα τὸν ὑπὸ τοῖς ἐν τῷ ὕψει γινομένοις, ὡς εἴρηται, σωλαρίοις ἀποφράττεσθαι, μήτε ἐντεῦθεν στενότερον γίνεσθαι τὸν στενωπὸν καὶ τὴν δημοσίαν πάροδον. 5d. Κωλύομεν δὲ καὶ κλίμακας ἀπὸ τοῦ ἐδάφους ἀρχομένας τοῦ στενωποῦ γίνεσθαι, ἀναγούσας ἐπὶ τὰ σωλάρια, ὥστε ἔκ τε τῆς ἀσφαλεστέρας κατασκευῆς καὶ ἐκ τοῦ μὴ σφόδρα πλησιάζειν ἀλλήλοις τὰ σωλάρια κουφοτέρους καὶ σπανιωτέρους συμβαίνειν (ὃ μὴ συμβαίη ποτέ) καὶ εὐκολώτερον παύεσθαι τοὺς ἐκ τοῦ πυρὸς κινδύνους τῇ πόλει καὶ τοῖς ἔχουσιν τὰς οἰκίας. 5e. Εἰ δὲ καὶ παρὰ τὸν ἡμέτερον νόμον γένηται σωλάριον ἢ κλίμαξ, οὐ τὰ γενόμενα ἐκκοπήσεται μόνον, ἀλλὰ καὶ ὁ τῆς οἰκίας κύριος δέκα χρυσίου λιτρῶν ζημίαν ὑπομενεῖ, καὶ ὁ διατυπώσας ἀρχιτέκτων ἢ ἐργόλαβος ἑτέρας δέκα λίτρας καταθήσει, καὶ ὁ ἐργασάμενος τεχνίτης οὐχ οἷός τε ὢν διὰ πενίαν ζημιοῦσθαι τὸ σῶμα αἰκισθεὶς τῆς πόλεως ἐξελαθήσεται.

6. Πρὸς τούτοις παρακελευόμεθα μηδενὶ ἐξεῖναι πολλοὺς ἐφεξῆς κίονας ἐν ταῖς δημοσίαις στοαῖς ταῖς ἀπὸ τοῦ καλουμένου Μιλίου ἄχρι τοῦ Καπετωλίου ἀποφράττειν οἰκήμασιν ἐκ σανίδων μόνων ἢ καὶ ἄλλως ἐν μέσῳ τῶν κιόνων κατασκευαζομένοις. 6a. Ἀλλὰ μὴν τὰ τοιαῦτα οἰκήματα μὴ ὑπερβαίνειν πλάτους μὲν ποδῶν ἓξ σὺν τοῖς τοίχοις ἐπὶ τὴν πλατεῖαν, ὕψους δὲ ποδῶν ἑπτά, ἐκ παντὸς δὲ τρόπου διὰ τεσσάρων κιόνων τὰς παρόδους ἐλευθέρας καταλιμάνεσθαι τὰς ἀπὸ τῶν στοῶν ἐπὶ τὰς πλατείας. 6b. Καλλωπίζεσθαι δὲ τὰ τοιαῦτα οἰκήματα ἤτοι ἐργαστήρια μαρμάροις ἔξωθεν, ὥστε κάλλος μὲν διδόναι τῇ πόλει, ψυχαγωγὴν δὲ τοῖς βαδίζουσι. 6c. Τὰ δὲ ἐν τοῖς ἄλλοις μέρεσι τῆς πόλεως ἐν τοῖς μέσοις τῶν κιόνων τόποις κατασκευαζόμενα ἐργαστήρια, καθάπερ ἂν δοκιμάσειε τῇ πόλει συμφέρειν ἡ σὴ μεγαλοπρέπεια καὶ τοῦ μέτρου ἕνεκα καὶ τοῦ τρόπου, κατασκευάζεσθαι θεσπίζομεν· τῆς ἰσότητος δηλαδὴ πᾶσι φυλαττομένης, ὥστε μὴ ἐπί τινων γειτόνων ἐπιτραπὲν ἐφ' ἑτέρων κωλύεσθαι.

7. Κἀκεῖνο δὲ νομοθετοῦμεν, ὥστε μὴ τὰς τῶν συκοφαντῶν κακοτεχνίας τοῖς ἐπιεικέσι λυμαίνεσθαι. πολλοὶ γὰρ φθόνῳ δίκας οὐκ ἀδικήματός τινος τοῖς οἰκοδομεῖν βουλομένοις ὑφαίνοντες ἀναβολῶν αἴτιοι αὐτοῖς γίνονται, ὥστε τὸν οἰκοδομεῖν ἀρξάμενον, εἶτα κωλυθέντα καὶ τὸ ἔργον ἀτελὲς καταλιπεῖν ἠναφρασμένον καὶ πρὸς τὸ δικαστήφιον ἀφελκόμενον τὸ χρῆμα, ἐξ οὗ τὴν οἰκίαν ἐγείρειν ἤλπισεν, ἀναλίσκειν περὶ τὴν δικην, καὶ τὸ πάντων ἀτοπώτατον, μετὰ τὸ ψήφου νικώσης ἐπιτυχεῖν ἔτι καθάπερ ἀλύτοις τισὶ συμπεπλέχθαι δεσμοῖς, τοῦ κωλύσαντος τὸ ἔργον προσχήματι μὲν ἐφέσεως τὰς κυρίας ἀναμένοντος, τῷ δὲ ἐμποδὼν γίνεσθαι τῇ οἰκοδομίᾳ ἐπὶ ταῖς τοῦ γείτονος συμφοραῖς εὐφραινομένου. 7a. Προστάττομεν τοίνυν, ἐπὶ τῶν τοιούτων ὑποθέσεων εἰ ἔφεσις ἐπιδοθείη κατὰ τῶν τυπωθέντων παρὰ τοῦ διαγνώμονος, ἅμα τῷ δοθῆναι παρὰ τοῦ δικαστοῦ τὴν ἀναφορὰν ἤτοι τύπον ἔγγραφον καὶ μὴ παραφυλαχθείσης κυρίας ἐξεῖναι τῷ νενικηκότι solaria built at the specified height, and the alleyway or public passage not thereby be narrower. 5d. We also forbid making staircases starting from the alleyway's surface and leading to the solaria, so that both as a result of this safer structure and of solaria not being so close to each other, the dangers of fire, which threaten both the city and its householders, occur less severely and frequently – (although) they do sometimes occur – and end more easily. 5e. If a solarium or staircase is built contrary to Our law, not only shall it be torn out, but the householder shall be fined 10 pounds of gold, and the architect or contractor who started the project shall pay another 10 pounds, and if owing to poverty the builder cannot pay the fine, he shall be beaten with rods and expelled from the city.

6. Additionally, We order that, in the public porticoes from the so-called Mile-Marker (Milio) up to the Capitolium, no one hereafter be allowed to close off several columns (in a row) with booths constructed from posts alone or otherwise between the columns. 6a. But such booths shall not exceed 6 feet in width on their walls toward the street, and 7 feet in height, and passage through four columns from the portico to the street shall in any case be left free. 6b. Such booths or shops shall also be externally adorned with marble, so that they lend both beauty to the city and pleasure to passersby. 6c. We ordain that shops erected between columns in other parts of the city be constructed as Your Magnificence thinks suitable for the city in their size and form, preserving equality for all, obviously, so that what is allowed to some neighbors is not denied to others.

7. We also include in Our law that honest men not be harmed by the deceits of false accusers (calumniatores). For many persons, out of resentment despite suffering no harm, raise lawsuits against those who wish to build and (so) cause delay, with the result that the person starting construction is then enjoined and forced to leave the work unfinished, and by being dragged into court he also spends on litigation the money he hoped to use on constructing his house; and, the most absurd of all, having won a favorable decision, he is still enmeshed in, as it were, unbreakable chains, while the person who forbade the work through an appeal takes the time allowed for this and is glad to have obstructed the project with great injury to his neighbor. 7a. We therefore order that in such instances, if appeal is taken from the trial judge's decision, as soon as the report or a written draft is provided by the judge, the winner or loser, together with his adversary or alone, may approach the tribunal of Your Magnificence without waiting the prescribed time, and having summoned his adversary in the customary way, καὶ τῷ ἡττηθέντι ἅμα ἢ καταμόνας εἰς τὸ δικαστήριον τῆς σῆς εἰσιέναι μεγαλοπρεπείας, καὶ τοῦ ἀντιδίκου κληθέντος κατὰ τὸ συνηθές, εἰ ἄπεστι, τὸν ὅρον τοῦ διαιτητοῦ φανερὸν ποιεῖν, ἵνα πάσης ἀναβολῆς ἐκκοπείσης νόμιμον ἐπιτεθείη πέρας τῇ ὑποθέσει, καὶ μὴ χειμῶνος, εἰ τύχοι, παρόντος ἢ πλησιάζοντος, ἕως περιμένουσι τοὺς μακροὺς τῶν ἐμπροθέσμων χρόνους, τὸν οἰκοδομεῖν βουληθέντα καὶ μὴ δικαίως κωλυθέντα ζημίας ἀφορήτους ὑπομένιεν. 7b. Παραπλήσιον δέ, εἰ καί τις ὑποθέσει τοιαύτῃ ἐφεῖναι βουληθείη μεμφόμενος τοῖς παρὰ τῆς σῆς μεγαλοπρεπείας ἐψηφισμένοις, παραχρῆμα τὴν καλουμένην consultationa γίνεσθαι καὶ δίδοσθαι καὶ αὐτῷ καὶ τῷ νενικηκότι σκοπεῖσθαι κατὰ τὸ εἰωθὸς τὴν ψῆφον ἐν τῷ θείῳ ἡμῶν παλατίῳ, μηδεμιᾶς ἀναβολῆς γινομένης. 7c. Γινωσκέτωσαν δὲ πάντες, ὅσοι κωλύειν ἐπιχειροῦσι τοὺς οἰκοδομοῦντας, ὡς ἡττηθέντες καὶ τὰς ζημίας αὐτοῖς πάσας τὰς συμβάσας καταθήσουσι καὶ τὴν τῶν ὑλῶν τιμήν, ἃς εἰκὸς διαφθαρῆναι ἢ χείρους γίνεσθαι ἐν τῷ τῆς δίκης χρόνῳ· καὶ τῶν οὐ δικαίως ἐπιχειρησάντων οἰκοδομεῖν, εἰ ἡττηθεῖεν, καὶ τὰς ζημίας τῷ κεκωλυκότι τὸ οἰκοδόμημα καὶ δίκην εἰπεῖν περὶ τούτων ἠναγκασμένῳ κατατιθέντων.

8. Πᾶσαν μέντοι τοιαύτην δίκην ἐξ ἀποφάσεως μόνου τοῦ δικαστηρίου τοῦ σοῦ μεγέθους κρίνεσθαι κελεύομεν, καὶ μήτε ἄλλον τινὰ τῶν ἐνδόξων ἀρχόντων ἀκροάσασθαι τοιαύτης ὑποθέσεως μήτε τινὰς τῶν ἀγωνιζομένων τοιαύτην ὑπόθεσιν στρατείας ἢ φόρου χρῆσθαι παραγραφῇ ἕνεκα τοῦ μὴ δικάσασθαι ἢ μὴ καταθεῖναι τὰς ζημίας, ὅσας δοῦναι τῇ ψήφῳ τοῦ ἐνδοξοτάτου ἐπάργου τῆς πόλεως ἢ τοῦ παρ' αὐτοῦ δοθέντος διαιτητοῦ προσταχθείη, ἀλλὰ τὴν ἀπαίτησιν ὑπομένειν τὸν ἡττηθέντα διὰ τῆς τάξεως τῆς σῆς μεγαλοπρεπείας, μηδενὸς ἐπὶ τούτῳ χρωμένου φόρου παραγραφῇ.

9. Προνοείτω δὲ ἡ σὴ μεγαλοπρέπεια τοῦ μή τινας τῶν ἐργολάβων ἢ τεχνιτῶν ἀρξαμένους ἔργου τοῦτο καταλιμπάνειν ἀτελές, ἀλλ' αὐτὸν μὲν τὸν ἀρξάμενον λαμβάνοντα τὸν μισθὸν ἀναγκαζέτω πληροῦν τὸ ἔργον[vi] ἢ διδόναι τὴν ἐντεῦθεν συμβαίνουσαν ζημίαν τῷ οἰκοδομοῦντι καὶ πᾶσαν τὴν ἐκ τοῦ μὴ τὸ ἔργον γινομένην βλάβην, εἰ δὲ πένης τε εἴη τυχὸν ὁ τοῦτο ἁμαρτών, πληγάς τε λαμβανέτω καὶ ἐκβαλλέσθω τῆς πόλεως. 9a. Μὴ κωλυέσθω δὲ ἕτερος τῆς αὐτῆς τέχνης τὸ παρ' ἑτέρου ἀρχθὲν ἐκκληροῦν, ὅπερ ἔγνωμεν τολμᾶσθαι κατὰ τῶν οἰκοδομούντων οἰκίας παρὰ τῶν ἐργολάβων ἢ τεχνιτῶν, οὔτε αὐτῶν τὸ τέλειον ἐπιτιθέντων οἷς ἤρξαντο ἐργάζεσθαι, οὐδὲ ἑτέρους τὰ αὐτὰ ἔργα ἀναπληροῦν συγχωρούντων, ἀλλὰ ἐνεγκεῖν ἀφόρητον ζημίαν ἐντεῦθεν τοῖς τὰς οἰκίας κατασκευάζουσι μηχανωμένων. 9b. Ὁ δὲ παραιτούμενος τὸ παρ' ἑτέρου ἀρχθὲν ἐκκληρῶσαι δι' αὐτὸ τοῦτο, ὅτι ἕτερος ἤρξατο, καὶ αὐτὸς παραπλησίαν τῷ καταλιπόντι τὸ ἔργον ὑπεχέτω δίκην.

[13] Imp. Iustinianus A. Iohanni pp. Cum dubitabatur, utrum constitutio Zenonis divae memoriae ad Adamantium praefectum urbis scripta, quae de servitutibus loquitur, localis est et huic florentissimae urbi

[vi] ἔργον ⟨τελεσθῆναι⟩

if he (the adversary) is absent, he may lay the judge's decision before you so that the cause may be lawfully ended without delay, and, if winter is at hand or near, he who wished to build and was illegally forbidden does not sustain unbearable loss while waiting the long period allocated for appeals. 7b. Similarly, if someone in such a dispute objects to Your Magnificence's decree and wishes to appeal, let the so-called consultation (consultatio)[32] take place at once; and with no delay both winner and loser may debate the verdict in Our imperial palace in the usual manner. 7c. And all attempting to stop those who build should know that if defeated, they must make good to them all consequential loss, including the cost of materials that in all probability deteriorated or became worse during the course of the trial. But those who attempt to build illegally, if they lose, must make good the losses of the person who forbade construction and was forced to go to trial about this matter.

8. We further direct that every such suit be determined by the verdict of the court of Your Greatness alone, and that no other of the illustrious magistrates hear such a case; nor shall any of those who engage in such litigation employ a defense based on imperial service or jurisdiction (praescriptio militiae aut fori) to avoid trial or not pay the damages ordered by the verdict of the most glorious City Prefect or the judge he appointed. The defeated party shall be forced by Your Magnificence's staff to pay, without the right to object to jurisdiction (praescriptio fori).

9. Your Magnificence shall see to it that none of the contractors or artisans leave unfinished a project they began after receiving their fee, but compel anyone who begins a project to complete it or pay damages the builder thereby incurs, plus all the loss from the work not (being completed); and if the defaulting (contractor) is a pauper, let him be whipped and expelled from the city. 9a. Another man of the same trade shall not be prevented from completing the project begun by someone else – something that, We have learned, contractors or artisans have attempted against those building when they themselves did not finish work they began and did not allow the same project to be completed by others, but contrived to inflict intolerable loss on owners who prepared to build. 9b. And a person who refuses to complete a project begun by another, on the ground that another began it, shall himself undergo a trial like that of the one who abandoned the project.

[13] Emperor Justinian Augustus to John, Praetorian Prefect. Doubt has arisen as to whether the constitution of Zeno of blessed memory addressed to Adamantius the City Prefect,[33] which discusses servitudes, is local and confined to this most flourishing city (Constantinople) where alone its rules ought to be dedicata et debent illius quidem iura in hac observari, antiqua vero, quae contraria sunt, locum habere in provinciis: indignum esse nostro tempore putantes aliud ius in hac regia civitate de huiusmodi observari, aliud apud nostros esse provinciales, sancimus eandem constitutionem in omnibus urbibus Romani imperii obtinere et secundum eius definitionem omnia procedere et, si quid ius ex ea lege innovatum est a vetere dispositione, et hoc in provinciis a praesidibus earum observari: ceteris videlicet omnibus, quae non per Zenonianam legem innovata sunt, sed veteribus legibus comprehensa, in sua firmitate in omni loco manentibus.

[32] See C. 7.62.
[33] See 12 above.

D. k. Sept. Constantinopoli post consulatum Lampadii et Orestis vv. cc.

[14] Idem A. Iohanni pp. pr. De operis novi nuntiatione quandam antiquis ortam fuisse dubitationem nostra cognovit tranquillitas, dicentibus, si quis denuntiationem ad inhibendum opus miserit, non posse eum post annum elapsum, ex quo denuntiatio missa est, iterum aedificationem prohibere. 1. Quod dupliciter iniquum nobis esse videtur. sive etenim non recte opus prohibuerit, decet non per totum annum hoc impediri, sive recte denuntiationem emiserit, etiam post annum licentiam habere aedificationem prohibere. 2. Talem igitur iniquitatem inhibentes sancimus, si quis denuntiationem emiserit, in hac quidem regia urbe praefectum urbi festinare, in provincia vero rectorem eius, intra trium mensum spatium causam dirimere: sin vero aliquid fuerit quocumque modo ad decisionem ambiguitatis impedimentum, licentiam habere eum, qui aedificationem deproperat, opus de quo agitur efficere, prius fideiussore ab eo dato officio urbicariae praefecturae vel provinciali, ut, si non recte aedificaverit, omne opus, quod post denuntiationem fecerit, suis sumptibus destruet. sic enim et opera non per inanes denuntiationes prohibebuntur et recte denuntiantibus consuletur.

D. XII k. Nov. Constantinopoli post consulatum Lampadii et Orestis vv. cc. anno secundo.

XI De Operibus Publicis

[1] Impp. Constantinus et Constans AA. ad Catullinum. Plurimi immunitates operum publicorum concessione iudicum adepti sunt: et ideo iubemus in posterum illicitas immunitates nullius esse momenti.

D. VI k. Aug. Sirmi Urso et Polemio conss.

observed, while the old rules, where they differ, are in force in the provinces. Deeming it unworthy of Our time that one rule on such matters be observed in this Imperial City and another among the provincials, We ordain that this same constitution is valid in all cities of the Roman empire and that all proceed according to its ruling. If any rule from this law is a change from the old law, let it also be enforced in the provinces by their governors. All other things, which are not changed through Zeno's law but included in the ancient laws, shall remain in full force everywhere.

Given September 1, at Constantinople, in the post-consulate of the viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestes (531).

[14] The same Augustus to John, Praetorian Prefect. pr. Concerning the protest against new construction (operis novi nuntiatio), Our Tranquility has learned that some doubt arose among the ancients, to the effect that if someone sent a protest to stop a project, he could not again stop construction even after a year had elapsed from when the protest was sent. 1. This appears to Us doubly iniquitous. For if he improperly obstructed the project, it ought not to be stopped for an entire year; and if he rightly sent the protest, even after a year he should have permission to prohibit the building. 2. Therefore, to restrain such unfairness, We ordain that if anyone sends a protest, in this Imperial City the Urban Prefect shall decide the case within three months, and in a province, its governor. But if there arises an ambiguity that somehow hinders decision, the person who hastens to build has permission to complete the project in question after he first provides a surety to the City Prefecture or the provincial (court) that, if he does not build lawfully, everything he does after the notice he will tear down at his own expense. In this way, construction will not be stopped through foolish complaints but attention is also duly paid to those making protests.

Given October 18,[34] at Constantinople, in the second post-consulate of the viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestis (532).

Eleventh Title Public Works

[1][35] Emperors Constantine and Constans Augusti to Catullinus. By judicial grant, many have received exemption from (making contributions to) public works. We therefore order that unlawful exemptions hereafter have no force.

Given July 27, at Sirmium, in the consulship of Ursus and Polemius (338).

[34] So Lenel, followed by Lounghis et al.; the manuscripts have October 21.

[35] = C.Th. 15,1,5; combine, probably, with C. 10.48.7 (of Constantius).

[2] Idem AA. ad Marcellinum comitem Orientis. Quae operibus publicis impensa constiterit, accepto ferri oportere cognoscas.

D. v non. Oct. Constantinopoli Limenio et Catullino conss.

[3] [Αὐτοκράτωρ Ἰουλιανὸς Α.] Ὁ εἰς τόπον τῆς πόλεως κτίσας οἰκείοις ἀναλώμασιν, ἐν ᾧ μὴ βλάπτῃ τὴν πόλιν, ἴδιον αὐτοῦ ἐχέτω τὸ κτισθὲν καὶ μᾶλλον εὐχαριστείσθω ὡς τὴν πόλιν κοσμιῶν.

[4] Idem A. Ecdicio praefecto Aegypti. Praetoria iudicum et domos publicas oportet publico iuri atque usui semper vindicari.

PP. IIII non. Dec. Antiochiae Mamertino et Nevitta conss.

[5] Impp. Valentinianus et Valens AA. ad Symmachum pu. pr. Intra urbem Romam veterem et novam nullus iudicum novum opus informet, quotiens serenitatis nostrae arbitria cessabunt, nisi ex suis pecuniis huiusmodi opus construere voluerit. 1. Ea tamen instaurandi, quae iam deformibus ruinis intercidisse dicuntur, universis licentiam damus.

D. VIII k. Iun. Philippis divo Ioviano et Varroniano conss.

[6] Imppp. Gratianus Valentinianus et Theodosius AAA. ad Proculum. Praescriptio temporis iuri publico non debet obsistere, sed nec rescripta quidem. atque ideo diruenda sunt omnia, quae per diversas urbes vel in foro vel in quocumque publico loco contra ornatum et commodum ac decoram faciem civitatis extructa noscuntur.

D. III id. Iun. Constantinopoli Merobaude II et Saturnino conss.

[7] Idem AAA. Cynegio pp. Ad portus et aquae ductus et murorum instaurationem sive extructionem omnes certatim facta operarum

[2][36] The same Augusti to Marcellinus, Count of the East. You should know that amounts demonstrably spent on public works ought to be credited (to the officials who have properly expended them).

Given October 3, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Limenius and Catullinus (349).

[3][37] <Emperor JULIAN Augustus.> Anyone building on city property with his own funds, if he does not harm the city thereby, may have the building as his own, and public thanks should be given to him for adorning the city.

(362).

[4][38] The same Augustus to Ecdicius, Prefect of Egypt. The quarters of judges (i.e., officials) and public guest-houses ought always to be reserved for public authority and use.

Posted December 2, at Antioch, in the consulship of Mamertinus and Nevitta (362).

[5][39] Emperors VALENTINIAN and VALENS Augusti to Symmachus, Urban Prefect. pr. Within the old and the new city of Rome, no judge (i.e., official) shall construct a new project if an order (therefor) from Our Serenity is lacking, unless he wishes to build such a project with his own money. 1. But We give all the freedom to restore those which now are said to have fallen down in unsightly ruins.

Given May 25, at Philippi, in the consulship of Jovian of blessed memory and Varronianus (464).

[6][40] Emperors GRATIAN, VALENTINIAN, and THEODOSIUS Augusti to Proculus. Long-time prescription (praescriptio longi temporis) should be no defense to a public right, nor should even rescripts. Therefore all structures in the various cities either in the forum or in other public places, if found to spoil the city's adornment and convenience and proper appearance, should be torn down.

Given June 11, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Merobaudes, for the second time, and Saturninus (383).

[7][41] The same Augusti to Cynegius, Praetorian Prefect. In repairing or constructing a port, aqueduct, or walls, all should zealously participate in the [36] = C.Th. 15.1.6; combine with C. 10.37.1. On the content, see C.Th. 15.1.27–28.

[37] This constitution comes from the Basilika; see C.Th. 15.1.9, probably the Latin version of the law. The inscription and date are restored from the following constitution. Seeck dates to December 2, 362.

[38] = C.Th. 15.1.8; combine with C.Th. 15.1.9.

[39] = C.Th. 15.1.11; combine with C.Th. 8.5.19.

[40] = C.Th. 15.1.22.

[41] = C.Th. 15.1.23; combine with C. 10.76.1.

collatione instare debent neque aliquis ab huiusmodi consortio dignitatis privilegiis excusari.

D. XV k. Febr. Constantinopoli Ricomere et Clearcho conss.

[8] Idem AAA. et Arcadius A. Cynegio pp. Omnes, quibus vel cura mandata fuerit operum publicorum vel pecunia ad extructionem solito more credita, usque ad annos quindecim ab opere perfecto cum suis heredibus teneantur obnoxii, ita ut, si quid vitii in aedificatione intra praestitutum tempus provenerit, de eorum patrimonio (exceptis tamen his casibus, qui sunt fortuiti) reformetur.

D. III non. Febr. Constantinopoli Arcadio A. et Bautone conss.

[9] Imppp. Theodosius Arcadius et Honorius AAA. Aureliano pu. pr. Si quando concessa a nobis licentia fuerit extruendi, id sublimis magnificentia tua sciat esse servandum, ut nulla domus inchoandae publicae fabricae gratia diruatur, nisi usque ad quinquaginta libras argenti pretii aestimatione taxabitur. 1. De aedificiis vero maioris pretii ad nostram scientiam referatur, ut, ubi amplior poscitur quantitas, imperialis extet auctoritas.

D. III k. Mart. Constantinopoli Theodosio A. III et Abundantio conss.

[10] Idem AAA. Rufino pp. Si qui iudices perfecto publicis pecuniis operi suum nomen sine nostri numinis mentione scripserint, maiestatis teneantur obnoxii.

D. III non. Iul. Constantinopoli Arcadio III et Honorio II AA. conss.

[11] Impp. Arcadius et Honorius AA. Eusebio comiti sacrarum largitionum. Ne splendidissimae urbes vel oppida vetustate labantur, de reditibus fundorum iuris rei publicae tertiam partem reparationi publicorum moenium et thermarum subustioni deputamus.

D. XI k. Iul. Mediolani Olybrio et Probino conss.

sharing of services, nor should anyone be excused from this common duty by privileges of rank.

Given January 18, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Richomer and Clearchus (384).

[8][42] The same Augusti and Arcadius Augustus to Cynegius, Praetorian Prefect. All who are entrusted with the care of public works (as curatores) or who are decreed money in the usual way for their construction, are liable, with their heirs, for fifteen years from the completion of the project, such that, if any defect in construction appears within the stated time, it shall be repaired from their estates, except for unavoidable accidents.

Given February 3, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Arcadius Augustus and Bauto (385).

[9][43] Emperors Theodosius, Arcadius, and Honorius Augusti to Aurelian, City Prefect. pr. If at any time permission to build (new public works) is granted by Us, Your Sublime Magnificence should see to it that this rule is observed: let no house be torn down to begin construction of a public work unless its assessed value is less than 50 pounds of silver. 1. But as for buildings of greater value, bring it to Our knowledge so that when a higher amount is asked, there is imperial authorization.

Given February 27, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Theodosius Augustus, for the third time, and Abundantius (393).

[10][44] The same Augusti to Rufinus, Praetorian Prefect. If any judges (i.e., governors) inscribe their own name on works completed with public money, without mention of Our Divine Majesty, they are held guilty of high treason (maiestas).

Given July 5, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Arcadius, for the third time, and Honorius, for the second time, Augusti (394).

[11][45] Emperors Arcadius and Honorius Augusti to Eusebius, Count of Imperial Finances. To prevent Our splendid cities and towns from falling into ruin through age, from the revenues of farms belonging to municipalities We assign one-third to the repair of public walls and to the heating of baths.

Given June 21, at Milan, in the consulship of Olybrius and Probinus (395).

[42] = C.Th. 15.1.24.
[43] = C.Th. 15.1.30; combine with C.Th. 1.1.3, 1.28.4, 6.3.1, 6.4.26, 12.1.130–132, 14.17.11(?), 15.1.29–30.
[44] = C.Th. 15.1.31 pr.
[45] = C.Th. 15.1.32.

[12] Idem AA. Caesario pp. Omnes provinciarum rectores litteris moneantur, ut sciant ordines atque incolas urbium singularum muros vel novos debere facere vel veteres firmius renovare: scilicet hoc pacto impendiis ordinandis, ut adscriptio currat pro viribus singulorum, deinde adscribantur pro aestimatione futuri operis territoria civium, ne plus poscatur aliquid, quam necessitas imperaverit, neve minus, ne instans impediatur effectus: oportet namque per singula non sterilia iuga certa quaeque distribui, ut par cunctis praebendorum sumptuum necessitas imponatur: nemini excusatione vel alia praesumptione ab huiusmodi immunitate praebenda.

D. VIIII k. April. Arcadio IIII et Honorio III AA. conss.

[13] Idem AA. Theodoro pp. pr. Nemo iudicum in id temeritatis erumpat, ut inconsulta pietate nostra novi aliquid operis existimet inchoandum, vel ex diversis operibus ornamenta aut marmora vel quamlibet speciem, quae fuisse in usu vel ornatu probabitur civitatis, eripere vel alio transferre sine iussu tuae sublimitatis audeat. etenim si quis contra fecerit, sex libris auri multabitur. 1. Similis etiam condemnatio ordines civitatum manebit, nisi ornamentum genitalis patriae decreti huius auctoritate defenderint. 2. Horreorum autem vel stabulorum fabricas arbitratu proprio provinciarum iudices studio laudandae devotionis adripiant.

D. k. Ian. Mediolani Honorio A. IIII et Eutychiano conss.

[14] Idem AA. Severo pu. Aedificia, quae vulgo parapessia nuncupantur, vel si qua alia opera moenibus vel publicis operibus sociata cohaerent, ut ex his incendium vel insidias vicinitas reformidet aut angustentur spatia platearum vel minuatur porticibus latitudo, dirui ac prosterni praecipimus.

D. V id. Oct. Constantinopoli Honorio A. IIII et Eutychiano conss.

[15] Idem AA. Eutychiano pp. Si aliquando homines emergant, qui a nostra clementia opus publicum sibi praeberi postulaverint, non nisi diruta penitusque destructa et quae parum sunt in usu civitatium

[12][46] The same Augusti to Caesarius, Praetorian Prefect. All provincial governors should be cautioned by letters to know that the senates and inhabitants of each city ought either to build new walls or make the old ones stronger. The expenses (for this) should of course be apportioned (among landowners) according to the resources of each. In proportion to the estimate of future work, the lands of citizens shall be apportioned such that no more is demanded than is necessary, nor less than their urgent completion requires. A definite sum should be assessed against each tax unit (iugum) that is not barren, so that the burden of defraying expenses is imposed equally on all, with no one being afforded excuse or other defense arising from such exemption.

Given March 24, in the consulship of Arcadius, for the fourth time, and Honorius, for the third time, Augusti (396).

[13][47] The same Augusti to Theodorus, Praetorian Prefect. pr. Let no judge (i.e., governor) have the temerity to commence any new work without consulting Our Piety, or dare to rip out from various structures adornments or marbles or any other material which is shown to be useful or ornamental to the city, or transfer it elsewhere, without the order of Your Sublimity. If anyone violates (this regulation), he will be fined 6 pounds of gold. 1. A like penalty will befall the senates of cities unless they defend the adornment of their native city through the authority of this decree. 2. But at their own discretion, in their zeal of praiseworthy devotion to duty, provincial judges may seize the opportunity to construct granaries and stables.

Given January 1, at Milan, in the consulship of Honorius Augustus, for the fourth time, and Eutychianus (398).

[14][48] The same Augusti to Severus, City Prefect. If buildings commonly called parapessia (abutments) or any other structures are so joined and attached to walls or public buildings that the neighborhood fears fire or ambush, or the street space is narrowed or the width diminished for porticoes, We order them to be torn down and destroyed.

Given October 11, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Honorius Augustus, for the fourth time, and Eutychianus (398).

[15][49] The same Augusti to Eutychianus, Praetorian Prefect. If at any time persons appear who ask from Our Clemency that a public building be furnished to them, they should receive only those which are torn down and completely

[46] = C.Th. 15.1.34.
[47] = C.Th. 15.1.37; combine with C. 1.24.1. Seeck dates to December 21, 398.
[48] = C.Th. 15.1.39.
[49] = C.Th. 15.1.40.

percipiant: intimandis huiusmodi rescriptis iudicio amplissimae tuae sedis.

D. id. Dec. Honorio A. IIII et Eutychiano conss.

[16] Idem AA. et Theodosius A. Aemiliano pu. Si quando usus exegerit vel porticus vel quaslibet aedes aetatis senio seu fortuitis concussas casibus reparari, liceat etiam inconsulta clementia nostra cum reverentia sui imaginem deponere vel nostram vel retro principum, reportatamque post refecta aedificia loco proprio denuo collocare.

D. V k. Iul. Constantinopoli Arcadio A. VI et Probo conss.

[17] Impp. Honorius et Theodosius AA. Monaxio pu. Quicumque locus in palatio huius urbis privatis aedificiis incommode occupatus est, is quam primum subrutis omnibus quae in eo sunt aedificiis palatio reformetur, quod privatorum non est parietibus coartandum (nam imperio magna ab universis secreta debentur), ut hi tantum locum habeant habitandi, quos legitimus maiestatis nostrae usus et rei publicae disciplina delegit: in futurum etiam universis ab huiusmodi usurpatione prohibendis.

D. VIIII k. Mart. Constantinopoli Honorio VIII et Theodosio III AA. conss.

[18] Idem AA. Anthemio pp. pr. Turres novi muri, qui ad munitionem splendidissimae urbis extructus est, completo opere praecipimus eorum usui deputari, per quorum terras idem murus studio ac provisione tuae magnitudinis ex nostrae serenitatis arbitrio celebratur. 1. Eadem lege in perpetuum et condicione servanda, ut annis singulis hi vel ad quorum iura terrulae demigraverint, proprio sumptu eorum instaurationem sibimet intellegant procurandam, eorumque usu publico beneficio potientes curam reparationis ac sollicitudinem ad se non ambigant pertinere. 2. Ita enim et splendor operis et civitatis munitio cum privatorum usu et utilitate servabitur.

D. prid. non. April. Lucio vc. cons.

razed and of little use to cities. Such rescripts (making these grants) should be registered in the court of your magnificent office.

Given December 13, in the consulship of Honorius Augustus, for the fourth time, and Eutychianus (398).

[16][50] The same Augusti and THEODOSIUS Augustus to Aemilianus, City Prefect. If at any time there is need to repair either porticoes or any buildings that are in bad condition from age or unavoidable accidents, it is permitted, even without consulting Our Clemency, to reverently remove Our likeness or that of earlier emperors, and after the building's repair to restore it back to its proper place.

Given June 27, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Arcadius Augustus, for the sixth time, and Probus (406).

[17][51] Emperors HONORIUS and THEODOSIUS Augusti to Monaxius, City Prefect. If any place within this city's palace is inconveniently occupied by private buildings, let it be restored to the palace as soon as possible after destroying all the buildings thereon. It is not to be encroached upon by the walls of private persons, for places important for the Empire should be segregated from others; so that the only persons having this dwelling place are those whom the lawful needs of Our Majesty and the custom of the state have chosen. In the future as well, everyone shall be prohibited from such usurpation.

Given February 21, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Honorius, for the eighth time, and Theodosius, for the third time, Augusti (409).

[18][52] The same Augusti to Anthemius, Praetorian Prefect. pr. We order that the towers of the new wall, which was constructed to fortify this splendid city (Constantinople), after completion of the project be assigned for the use of those through whose land this wall was run through the zeal and foresight of Your Greatness and by the decision of Our Serenity. 1. This regulation and condition shall be preserved in perpetuity, in order that they, along with those to whom title to these lands may pass, understand that repair must be undertaken by them each year at their own expense, and that in taking on the use of them by public grant, they are not in doubt that the care and concern for repair (also) falls to them. 2. For in this way both the splendor of the work and the fortification of the city will be preserved simultaneously with the use and benefit of private persons.

Given April 4, in the consulship of the vir clarissimus Lucius (413).

[50] = C.Th. 15.1.44.
[51] = C.Th. 15.1.47.
[52] = C.Th. 15.1.51. On the content, see C. 12.40.7.

[19] Imp. Theodosius A. Severino pu. Quia plurimae domus cum officinis suis in porticibus Zeuxippi esse memorantur, reditus memoratorum locorum pro quantitate, quae placuit, ad praebenda luminaria et aedificia ac tecta reparanda regiae huius urbis lavacro sine aliqua iubemus excusatione conferri.

D. v id. Ian. Victore vc. cons.

[20] Impp. Theodosius et Valentinianus AA. Cyro pu. Qui sine auctoritate divini rescripti ad iudicium tuae celsitudinis destinandi angiportus integros vel partes suis domibus incluserint seu porticus usurparint, procul dubio iura pristina sacratissimae reddere civitati iubemus: multa auri quinquaginta librarum non defutura, si quis posthac in similem audaciam prodire temptaverit.

D. k. Nov. Theodosio A. XVII et Festo conss.

[21] Idem AA. Cyro pu. pr. Basilicam inauratam et marmoribus decoratam liberam in perpetuum manere neque alicuius imaginis pictarum cuiuslibet honoris tabularum adumbratione fuscari iubemus, neque in aliqua parte eiusdem basilicae tabulato quicquam[vii] opere stationes ergasteriave constitui sancimus. 1. Illud quoque decernimus, ne in eam equos liceat intromitti vel nuptias celebrari.

D. XI k. Febr. Constantinopoli Valentiniano A. V et Anatolio conss.

[22] Imp. Leo A. Erythrio pp. Nemini iudicum liceat in hac inclita urbe vel in provinciis nova opera inchoare, priusquam ea, quae coepta invenerit a decessore vel praedecessoribus suis, vetustate diruta aut desidia derelicta diligenti studio instantiaque compleverit, cum ex hoc plurimum laudis adquirat, si ea culta et perfecta reddiderit, quae vetusta sunt et instaurationem requirunt quaeque ab aliis initiata et imperfecta resederant.

D. II k. Mart. Constantinopoli Marciano cons.

[vii] cuiquam

[19][53] Emperor Theodosius Augustus to Severinus, City Prefect. Because a great many homes with their shops are said to be in the porticoes of Zeuxippus, We order that the income from the aforementioned places, in the amount that was determined, be devoted, with no exemption (on the part of the rate payers), to furnishing lamps and repairing buildings and roofs for the bath of this Imperial City.

Given January 9, in the consulship of the vir clarissimus Victor (424).

[20] Emperors Theodosius and Valentinian Augusti to Cyrus, City Prefect. We order that those who, without the authorization of an imperial rescript addressed to the court of Your Highness, shut off entire alleyways or parts of them with their houses, or usurped porticoes, must without question restore to this Imperial City its ancient rights. A fine of 50 pounds of gold will not be lacking if anyone hereafter rashly tries something similar.

Given November 1, in the consulship of Theodosius Augustus, for the seventeenth time, and Festus (439).

[21] The same Augusti to Cyrus, City Prefect. pr. We order that the basilica, gilded and adorned with marble,[54] remain free and clear in perpetuity and not be darkened by the outline of an image of some official's painted tablets, and that in some part of the same basilica no quarters or workshops be erected from any boards. 1. We also decree that it not be permitted to bring in horses or to celebrate weddings there.

Given January 22, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Valentinian Augustus, for the fifth time, and Anatolius (440).

[22][55] Emperor Leo Augustus to Erythrius, Praetorian Prefect. No judge (i.e., governor) is permitted to begin new works in this famous city (Constantinople) or in the provinces before he has, with strenuous zeal and perseverance, completed the structures that were begun by his predecessor or predecessors, which have collapsed through age or been abandoned through neglect; for he acquires the greatest praise from restoring structures that are old and in need of repair, as well as those begun by others but left incomplete, to a state of care and completion.

Given February 29, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Marcian (472).

[53] = C.Th. 15.1.52.

[54] Presumably Constantine's Curia, in a basilica on the east side of Augustaeum Square.

[55] Combine with C. 11.32.3. After this one, a Greek constitution (numbered as 23) has been entirely lost, but may have been related to C. 1.4.26.

XII De Ratiociniis Operum Publicorum et de Patribus Civitatum

[1] Imp. Zeno A. Arcadio pp. pr. Iubemus provinciarum quidem rectores et singulae dioeceseos viros spectabiles iudices, id est praefectum Augustalem et comitem Orientis et utrosque proconsules et vicarios una cum suis apparitoribus pro tenore generalium magnificae tuae sedis dispositionum discutiendis publicis operibus vel aquae ductibus, qui ex civilibus reditibus vel a quolibet spontanea munificentia facti sunt vel fuerint, modis omnibus abstinere, nec aliquid quolibet modo quolibet tempore in discutiendo civiles reditus vel facta opera vel quae fieri adsolent, unam siliquam sibi ex singulis erogandis solidis vindicando aut quodcumque lucrum captando, cum huiusmodi rebus habere commune, utpote patribus civitatium et curae eorum deputatis. 1. Qui vero opus aliquod pro sua liberalitate se facturos promiserint, licet certum sit eos ex sola pollicitatione ad implendum suae munificentiae opus necessitate iuris teneri, nullam tamen eos vel heredes eorum super facto opere ratiocinium vel discussionem aut aliquam (utpote non in integrum promissa quantitate in id opus erogata vel inutiliter facto opere, aut alia qua ratione) quocumque modo quocumque tempore inquietudinem sustinere concedimus. 2. Quod si vir clarissimus provinciae moderator vel eius officium reditus publicos vel opera publica contra vetitum discutiendo vel unam siliquam aut quodlibet ex isdem reditibus vel operibus vindicando sacratissimae nostrae legis praecepta transierint, quinque quidem officii primates exilio damnati perpetuo bona sua civitati quam laeserint non dubitent vindicanda, rector vero provinciae quinquaginta librarum auri ferietur dispendio: hac eadem poena spectabilibus quoque iudicibus, licet illustri dignitate fuerint decorati, et eorum officiis, sicut superius distinctum est, imminenda.

D. …

XIII De Pignoribus

[1] Impp. Severus et Antoninus AA. Timotheo. Debitor, qui pignoribus profitetur se creditoribus cedere, nihilo magis liberabitur.

Twelfth Title Accounts for Public Buildings and the Leaders of Cities

[1] Emperor Zeno Augustus to Arcadius, Praetorian Prefect. pr. In accord with the tenor of the general orders of your magnificent office, We order that the provincial governors and the viri spectabiles judges of each diocese, i.e., the Augustal Prefect, the Count of the Orient, and both of the Proconsuls and deputies, together with their subordinates, refrain in every way from auditing (the accounts of) public buildings or aqueducts that are or will be erected from municipal funds or by anyone's spontaneous generosity, and keep away from such matters altogether and always when auditing municipal income or existing structures or customary works, by claiming for themselves a siliqua from each gold solidus paid (i.e., a tax of one-twenty-fourth), or by taking any profit at all, since these matters are delegated to the leaders of cities (patres civitatium) and their care. 1. But although it is certain that those who, in accord with their generosity, promise to make some construction, are through force of law bound just by their promise (pollicitatio) to complete the project of their munificence, still We permit them and their heirs to undergo no accounting or audit or (even) some anxiety over their construction – as that the quantity promised for this work was not entirely expended, or that the work was badly made, or some such reason – altogether and always. 2. If the vir clarissimus governor of the province or his staff disobey the precepts of this Our imperial law by auditing public accounts or public works contrary to what is forbidden, or by claiming one siliqua or anything from these same accounts or works, the five ranking staff officials, condemned to permanent exile, should not doubt that their property will be claimed for the city they harmed; but the provincial governor will be punished with the loss of 50 pounds of gold. This same penalty should be visited also on the spectabiles judges even if they are adorned with illustrious rank, and on their staffs, as determined above.

Given ... (485–486?).[56]

Thirteenth Title Pledges (Pignora)[57]

[1] Emperors Severus and Antoninus Augusti to Timotheus. A debtor who declares, as to his pledges, that he cedes (ownership of them) to his creditors, nonetheless will not be released (from the underlying debt).

[56] Lounghis et al. date to 490.

[57] See D. 20.1. This and the ensuing titles deal with real security for payment of debt. The Latin terminology is confusing. In some texts, pignus (translated "pledge") refers to debtor's property given to secure a debt but held by the creditor, while hypotheca ("hypothec") refers to property that remains in the debtor's control. But in the sources as preserved, these terms are at times used interchangeably, and the exact property arrangement must therefore be deduced from the context of each source. (The term "mortgage" should be avoided.)

PP. v k. Mart. Severo A. II et Albino conss.

[2] Idem AA. Lucio. pr. Quamvis constet specialiter quaedam et universa bona generaliter adversarium tuum pignori accepisse et aequale ius in omnibus habere, iurisdictio tamen temperanda est. 1. Ideoque si certum est posse eum ex his, quae nominatim ei pignori obligata sunt, universum redigere debitum, ea, quae postea ex isdem bonis pignori accepisti, interim non auferri praeses iubebit.

PP. II k. Iun. Cilone et Libone conss.

[3] Idem AA. Maximo. Creditores, qui non reddita sibi pecunia conventionis legem ingressi possessionem exercent, vim quidem facere non videntur, attamen auctoritate praesidis possessionem adipisci debent.

PP. k. Mai Antonino A. II et Geta II conss.

[4] Idem AA. Bellio. Cum te pecuniam accepisse et agros tuos obligasse fateris, non habet rationem, quod quereris vi te coactum pignori dare. si igitur recipere vis rem tuam, solve creditori pecuniam debitam.

D. III k. Iun. Antonino A. III et Geta III conss.

[5] Imp. Antoninus A. Domitio. Praeses provinciae vir clarissimus ius pignoris tui exsequentem te audiet. nec tibi oberit sententia adversus debitorem tuum dicta, si eum collusisse cum adversario suo aut, ut dicis, non causa cognita, sed praescriptione superatum esse constiterit.

PP. id. Mai. Romae duobus Aspris conss.

[6] Idem A. Quinto. In summa debiti computabitur etiam id, quod propter possessiones pignori datas ad collationem viarum muniendarum vel quod aliud necessarium obsequium praestitisse creditorem constiterit.

Posted February 25, in the consulship of Severus Augustus, for the second time, and Albinus (194).

[2] The same Augusti to Lucius. pr. Although it is clear that your adversary (in a trial) accepted as a pledge (from a third party debtor) some property specifically as well as all his goods generally, and he has an equal right to all of it, nevertheless the law should be applied with restraint. 1. So if it is certain that he can collect the entire debt from property pledged to him specifically, the governor will order that the property you afterwards received as a pledge from the same goods not be taken from you in the meantime.[58]

Posted May 31, in the consulship of Cilo and Libo (204).

[3] The same Augusti to Maximus. Creditors who, when money is not paid to them, take possession (of pledged property) according to the agreement (with their debtors), are not deemed to use force; still, they ought to acquire possession with a governor's authorization.[59]

Posted May 1, in the consulship of Antoninus Augustus, for the second time, and Geta, for the second time (205).

[4] The same Augusti to Bellius. Since you acknowledge that you received money (from a creditor) and obligated your lands (as a pledge to him), your complaint that you were forcibly compelled to give the pledge is unreasonable. So if you wish to recover your property, pay your creditor the money owed.

Given May 30, in the consulship of Antoninus Augustus, for the third time, and Geta, for the third time (208).

[5] Emperor ANTONINUS Augustus to Domitius. The vir clarissimus provincial governor will hear you when you demand your right to (obtain) a pledge. Nor are you prejudiced by the (previous) decision given against your debtor if it is clear (either) that he colluded with your adversary or, as you say, the case was not fully heard and he was defeated by a defense (praescriptio).[60]

Posted May 15, at Rome, in the consulship of the two Aspri (212).

[6] The same Augustus to Quintus. Included in the amount of the debt will also be what the creditor is shown to have paid, on possessions given as pledges, for the road-building assessment or any other necessary service.

[58] To creditor A, the third party debtor pledged first some specific property, and then his entire estate generally. He then pledged other property in his estate to Lucius. A sues to recover this property from Lucius.

[59] The final clause reflects later law; see C. 4.24.11.

[60] As it seems, a third party (the "adversary") sued Domitius' debtor over the ownership of the pledged property and won. This decision, if improperly obtained, is not decisive as to Domitius' pledge rights.

PP. III k. Aug. Antonino A. IIII et Balbino conss.

[7] Imp. Gordianus A. Marciano. Usucapio pignoris conventionem non extinguit.

PP. non. Sept. Pio et Pontiano conss.

[8] Idem A. Festo. Quamvis personali actione expertus adversus reum vel fideiussores seu mandatores eius feceris condemnationem, pignoris tamen adhuc habes persecutionem.

PP. id. Mart. Gordiano A. et Aviola conss.

[9] Idem A. Attico. Si dominium eius possessionis, quae cum[viii] pignori data esset, a debitrice donatu ad te translatum est, eamque postea creditor vel eius heredes detinere coeperunt, vindica eam, praeside provinciae curante, ut, fructuum deducta ratione residuoque a te oblato si fuerit satisfactum, ea possessio tibi reddatur.

PP. III k. Oct. Gordiano A. et Aviola conss.

[10] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. Alexandro. Debitores praesentes prius denuntiationibus conveniendi sunt. igitur si conventi debito satis non fecerint, persequenti tibi pignora seu hypothecas, quas instrumento specialiter comprehensas esse dicis, competentibus actionibus rector provinciae auctoritatis suae auxilium impertire non dubitabit.

D. XVIII k. Febr. ipsis IIII et III AA. conss.

[11] Idem AA. et CC. Euphrosyno. Nominatori pignori capere sine praesidis auctoritate res nominati non licet.

S. III k. Mart. AA. conss.

[12] Idem AA. et CC. Eusebio. Si uxor tua pro pecunia quam accepit mutuo res proprias obligavit pignori eique tu successisti, licet in instrumentum

[viii] cui

Posted July 30, in the consulship of Antoninus Augustus, for the fourth time, and Balbinus (213).

[7] Emperor GORDIAN Augustus to Marcianus. Usucapion (by a third party) does not extinguish a pledge agreement (i.e., the creditor still has a pledge right).

Posted September 5, in the consulship of Pius and Pontianus (238).

[8][61] The same Augustus to Festus. Although you obtained judgment in an action in personam against the defendant (debtor) or his sureties or mandators, you still can pursue the pledge (itself) as well.

Posted March 15, in the consulship of Gordian Augustus and Aviola (239).

[9] The same Augustus to Atticus. If ownership of real estate, which had been given as a pledge to someone, was transferred to you by the female debtor as a gift, and the creditor or his heirs afterwards began to hold it, bring a suit on ownership (vindicatio) and the provincial governor will see to it that the property is restored to you after taking account of its produce and after you pay any balance, (thereby) satisfying the debt in full.

Posted September 29, in the consulship of Gordian Augustus and Aviola (239).

[10] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti to Alexander. Debtors who are available should first be presented with notices (to pay, prior to the creditor seizing or selling a pledge). If they are presented (with notice) and do not satisfy the debt, the provincial governor will not hesitate to lend you the aid of his authority, through relevant remedies, as you pursue the pledges or hypothecs that you say were specially provided for in a document.

Given January 15, in the consulship of the Augusti themselves, Consuls for the fourth and third times (290).

[11] The same Augusti and the Caesars to Euphrosynus. Without the governor's authorization, a sponsor (nominator, of another for an office) is not permitted to seize as a pledge the property of the person he sponsored.

Written February 27, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[12] The same Augusti and Caesars to Eusebius. If your wife pledged her own property for money which she received on loan, and you are her heir, then even eius facti testimonium collatum non sit, soluto debito creditorem de his tibi reddendis sollemni iure conveni.

[61] = C. 8.26.1.

S. v k. April. AA. conss.

[13] Idem AA. et CC. Matronae. Cum dominam non minorem viginti et quinque annis ea quae obligaverat tibi iure dominii possidere permisisse et in solutum dedisse precibus significes, dominae contractus et voluntas ad firmitatem tibi sufficit.

S. III k. Mai. Heracliae AA. conss.

[14] Idem AA. et CC. Appiano. Distractis a debitore pignoribus creditores in potestate habere, utrumne personali obligatos sibi, an pignora possidentes in rem actione convenire velint, non est incerti iuris.

S. k. Mai. Heracliae AA. conss.

[15] Idem AA. et CC. Basilidae. Debitorem neque vendentem neque donantem neque legantem vel per fideicommissum relinquentem posse deteriorem facere creditoris condicionem certissimum est. unde si tibi obligatam rem probare posse confidis, pignora persequi debes.

S. V non. Mai. Heracliae AA. conss.

[16] Idem AA. et CC. Heraidi. Etsi frater tuus non suam, sed ad te pertinentem pecuniam mutuam suo nomine dedit ac pignus accepit, tamen tibi pignoris obligationem quaerere non potuit.

S. IIII id. Mai Hadrianopoli AA. conss.

[17] Idem AA. et CC. Pontiae. Quamvis ea pecunia, quam a te mutuo frater tuus accepit, comparavit praedium, tamen nisi specialiter vel generaliter hoc obligavit, tuae pecuniae numeratio in causam pignoris non deduxit. sane personali actione debitum apud praesidem petere non prohiberis.

S. XV k. Iun. AA. conss.

[18] Idem AA. et CC. Euodio. Pignoris vel hypothecae persecutio in rem est.

S. k. Dec. Sirmi AA. conss.

though in the pledge document no reference to this fact was made, after the debt is paid sue the creditor formally for return of this property to you.

Written March 28, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[13] The same Augusti and Caesars to Matrona. Since you indicate in your petition that a sui iuris woman over age 25 allowed you to possess as owner the property that she had pledged to you, and she gave it (to you) as payment, the owner's contract and wish provides sufficient confirmation (of your right to the property).

Written April 29, at Heraclea, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[14] The same Augusti and Caesars to Appianus. When the debtor has sold pledged property (to third parties), the law is undisputed that the creditors have the option to sue either their debtors through an action in personam or the persons who possess the pledges by an action in rem.

Written May 1, at Heraclea, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[15] The same Augusti and Caesars to Basilidas. It is quite certain that a debtor cannot make his creditor's (legal) position worse by the sale or gift or legacy or testamentary trust (of a pledged object). So if you are sure you can prove that the property is obligated to you, you should pursue the pledges (against a third party recipient).

Written May 3, at Heraclea, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).[62]

[16] The same Augusti and Caesars to Herais. Although your brother loaned in his own name money belonging not to him but to you, and took a pledge (from the borrower for its repayment), still he could not acquire for you the pledge obligation.

Written May 12, at Hadrianopolis, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[17] The same Augusti and Caesars to Pontia. Although your brother bought land with money he took on loan from you, still unless he obligated it (as a pledge) specifically or generally, the fact that your money was paid (by him to the seller) does not provide a basis for pledge. Of course, you are not prevented from claiming the debt by an action in personam before the governor.

Written May 18, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[18] The same Augusti and Caesars to Euodius. Suit (by a creditor) to recover a pledge or hypothec is in rem (and so can be brought against any current possessor).

Written December 1, at Sirmium, in the consulship of the Augusti.

[62] More likely issued at Adrianople (Connolly).

[19] Idem AA. et CC. Maximo. Sicut vim maiorem pignorum creditor praestare necesse non habet, ita dolum et culpam, sed et custodiam exhibere cogitur.
S. XVII k. Ian. AA. conss.

[20] Idem AA. et CC. Alexandro. Creditor ad petitionem urgueri iure minime potest. quapropter eo, quod vos heredibus Euodiani debere confiditis, oblato et, si nolint accipere, consignato atque deposito de reddendo pignore hos praesidali notione convenite.
PP. XVIII k. Febr. CC. conss.

[21] Idem AA. et CC. Vito. Res obligatas exterus debito soluto liberando datum petere, non earum dominium adipisci potest.
S. III k. Nov. Retiariae CC. conss.

[22] Idem AA. et CC. Antiochiano. Secundus creditor offerendo priori debitum confirmat sibi pignus et a debitore sortem eiusque tantum usuras, quae fuissent praestandae, non etiam usurarum usuras accipit.
S. III id. Dec. Nicomediae CC. conss.

[23] Idem AA. et CC. Macedonio. Maior annis viginti quinque pignoris conventione remissa, cum hoc solum pactum vel iurisdictio secundum ipsius voluntatem tueatur, persequi non potest.
S. XVII k. Ian. Nicomediae CC. conss.

[24] Idem AA. et CC. Marco. Persecutione pignoris omissa debitores actione personali convenire creditor urgueri non potest.
S. XV k. Ian. Nicomediae CC. conss.

[25] Idem AA. et CC. Dracontio. Servo, qui fuerat pignori obligatus, defuncto debiti permanet integra petitio.
S. VII k. Ian. Nicomediae CC. conss.

[19] The same Augusti and Caesars to Maximus. Just as a pledge creditor (in possession) is not responsible for (damage caused by) higher force (vis maior), so he must assume responsibility for malice and fault (dolus et culpa), but also safekeeping (custodia).

Posted December 16, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[20] The same Augusti and Caesars to Alexander. A creditor can hardly be legally pressed to sue (for payment of the debt). So when what you are sure you owe to the heirs of Euodianus has been tendered and, if they decline to accept it, been sealed and deposited, sue them in the governor's court for return of the pledge.

Posted January 15, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[21] The same Augusti and Caesars to Vitus. A third party (exterus), by paying an owed debt, can claim obligated property, but cannot acquire ownership of it.

Written October 30,[63] at Ratiaria, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[22] The same Augusti and Caesars to Antiochianus. A subsequent creditor, by offering (repayment of) the debt to a prior one, strengthens his (claim to a) pledge (given to the prior creditor and then to him); and he receives from the debtor the principal and interest only on what should have been paid, not also interest on the interest (i.e., compound interest).

Written December 11, at Nicomedia, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[23] The same Augusti and Caesars to Macedonius. A person over age 25 who releases a pledge agreement cannot pursue (the pledge later), since the Edict (iurisdictio) upholds this pact alone, in accord with his wish.

Written December 16, at Nicomedia, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[24] The same Augusti and Caesars to Marcus. A creditor cannot be pressed to drop a claim for a pledge and (instead) sue the debtors by an action in personam (for the debt).

Written December 18, at Nicomedia, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[25] The same Augusti and Caesars to Dracontius. When a slave who was obligated as a pledge then dies, the claim for the debt remains unimpaired.

Written December 26, at Nicomedia, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[63] More probably around October 10, 294 (so Mommsen), compare C. 3.32.21, 4.33.5, 6.59.8, 7.60.3.

[26] Idem AA. et CC. Mauricio. Si tibi notarium pignoris titulo debitor tuus obligavit, eum, a quo mancipium abreptum proponis, apud rectorem provinciae conveni.

S. VI k. Ian. Sirmi CC. conss.

[27] Imp. Iustinianus A. Menae pp. pr. Super hypothecis, quas argenti distractores vel metaxarii vel alii quarumcumque specierum negotiatores pecunias sibi credentibus dare solent, hoc specialiter super amputanda omni machinatione sancimus, ut, si post huiusmodi contractum liberis suis vel alio modo cognatis quamcumque militiam idem negotiatores adquisierint, ea tamen[ix] vendi vel ad heredes sub certa definitione transmitti potest, liceat creditoribus eorum, etiam non probantibus ex pecuniis eorundem negotiatorum liberos eorum vel cognatos militasse (dum tamen contrarium non probetur alios e suo patrimonio dedisse pecunias), creditum ab his qui militarunt exigere vel tantum eos efflagitare, quanti vendi eadem militia possit.

1. Quod ita obtinere sancimus, et si extraneis quibusdam idem negotiatores de suis pecuniis huiusmodi militiam adquisisse probentur, ut, quod generaliter in ipsis debitoribus militantibus talem militiam, quae vendi vel ad heredes transmitti potest, permissum est, ut liceat creditoribus et adhuc viventium debitorum iure hypothecae vindicare militias, nisi satis sibi fiat, et post mortem eorum exigere, quod pro isdem militiis pro tenore communis militantium placiti vel divinae sanctionis tale praestantis beneficium dari solet, hoc in negotiatorum personis, licet ipsi militantes minime debito obnoxii sint, integrum creditoribus eorum servetur.

2. Quod scilicet in futuris militiis, non etiam in his, quas liberi vel cognati eorundem negotiatorum vel extranei pecuniis eorum meruerunt, tenere sancimus.

D. k. Iun. dn. Iustiniano A. pp. II cons.

XIIII In Quibus Causis Pignus Tacite Contrahitur

[1] Imp. Antoninus A. Sperato. Universa bona eorum qui censentur vice pignorum tributis obligata sunt.

[ix] eam tamen quae

[26][64] The same Augusti and Caesars to Mauricius. If a debtor obligated to you a stenographer (notarius) as a pledge, bring suit before the provincial governor against the person who you assert stole the slave.

Written December 27, at Sirmium, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[27] Emperor JUSTINIAN Augustus to Menas, Praetorian Prefect. pr. As to the hypothecs that the moneychangers, silk dealers, and other tradesmen in various wares commonly give to those lending money to them, We specially ordain, in order to end all fraud, that if, after making such a contract, the same tradesmen acquire for their own children or other relatives some imperial office (militia) – one which, however, under specific rules can be sold or transmitted to heirs – then even if their creditors do not prove that their children or relatives took office by means of the money of such traders, and as long as the opposite is not proved, (namely,) that others had given the money from their patrimonies, they (the creditors) are allowed to demand their debt from those holding the office, or press them, (but) only for as much as that same office can be sold.

1. We ordain that this rule similarly applies also if the traders are proven to have acquired such a post for any third parties from their own money, so that what is generally permitted in the case of debtors themselves when buying such an office that can be sold or transmitted to heirs, (namely) that even from living debtors creditors can claim the offices by the law of hypothec unless they are satisfied (as to the debt), and that after their death (they can) demand the benefit usually granted in connection with such offices pursuant to the tenor of the general legal policy for office-holders and the imperial sanction granting such a benefit – this (right) is preserved intact for their creditors, although those actually serving are scarcely liable for the debt.

2. We ordain that this (order) holds, obviously, for future state offices, not also for those which the children or relatives of these traders or third parties have (previously) acquired with their own money.[65]

Given June 1, in the consulship of Our Lord Justinian, Ever Augustus, for the second time (528).

Fourteenth Title Cases in Which an Implied Pledge Is Contracted[66]

[1] Emperor ANTONINUS Augustus to Speratus. The entire estate (bona) of persons who are assessed (for taxation) is obligated as a pledge for taxes (tributa).

[64] Possibly to be combined with C. 4.10.6 (December 24, 293), the preferable date.

[65] Blume: "Ordinarily property acquired by any one – as by the children etc. here – though acquired with another's money, belonged to him, and no one else had a right thereto, or a lien thereon, but Justinian made an exception here, as he did in some other cases."

[66] See D. 10.2.

PP. k. Iun. Antonino A. IIII et Balbino conss.

[2] Idem A. Proculo. Certum est eius qui cum fisco contrahit bona veluti pignoris titulo obligari, quamvis specialiter id non exprimitur.

D. VI k. Mart. Messala et Sabino conss.

[3] Pars ex rescripto imp. Alexandri A. Quamvis fructus pignori datorum praediorum, etsi id aperte non sit expressum, et ipsi pignori credantur tacita pactione esse, praedia tamen, quae emuntur ex fructuum pretio, ad eandem causam venire nulli prudentium placuit.

PP. id. Oct. Maximo II et Aeliano conss.

[4] Imppp. Carus Carinus et Numerianus AAA. Satis notum est et idem constitutum bona earum in dotem data, quae nuptae sunt his qui primipili sarcinam subeunt, obnoxia necessitati ei teneri: verum certo ordine, ut scilicet tunc demum ad hoc mulieris patrimonium periculum respiciat, si universis viri ac nominatorum facultatibus exhaustis nihil residuum inveniatur.

D. V id. Aug. Caro et Carino AA. conss.

[5] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. et CC. Corinthiae. Si non in inductis et illatis in fundum, quae pignoris teneri causa placuerat, mancipia fuissent nec haec specialiter obligata monstrentur, rector provinciae ea restitui iubebit. nec enim praetextu debiti pensionum restitutionem horum morari potest, cum, si quid sibi deberi domina fundi ex pensionibus vel quacumque ratione probare possit, huius solutionem sollemniter fieri conveniat.

Subscr. XII k. Febr. CC. conss.

[6] Impp. Theodosius et Valentinianus AA. ad Florentium pp. Si mater legitima liberorum tutela suscepta ad secundas contra sacramentum praestitum adspiraverit nuptias, antequam ei tutorem alium fecerit Posted June 1, in the consulship of Antoninus Augustus, for the fourth time, and Balbinus (213).

[2] The same Augustus to Proculus. It is settled that the estate of a person who contracts with the Treasury is obligated as if it were a pledge, even if this is not specifically stated.

Given February 24, in the consulship of Messala and Sabinus (214).

[3] Part of a rescript of Emperor ALEXANDER Augustus. Although the produce (fructus) of pledged land, even when this is not expressly stated, is also considered as impliedly included in this pledge, nevertheless no jurist has held that land purchased with the money derived from such produce is also included for the same purpose.

Posted October 15, in the consulship of Maximus, for the second time, and Aelianus (223).

[4] The Emperors CARUS, CARINUS, and NUMERIANUS Augusti. It is sufficiently known and established that the dowry property of women who are married to men undertaking the burden of Chief Centurion (primipili sarcina) is held bound (as a pledge) for (conduct of) this official duty, but with the fixed rule that this risk obviously applies to the woman's patrimony only if nothing is found to remain when all the resources of the husband and his sponsors (nominatores) have (first) been exhausted.

Given August 9, in the consulship of Carus and Carinus Augusti (283).

[5] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti and the Caesars to Corinthia. If the slaves were not among the property brought and moved (invecta et illata) onto a farm – (i.e.,) property long held to be subject to (tacit) pledge – nor are they shown to have been specially obligated, the provincial governor will order them restored (to the tenant). Nor can she (the owner and landlord) delay their restitution on the pretext of unpaid rent, since, if the farm's owner can prove that anything is owed to her as rent or otherwise, it is proper that the payment be made through legal processes.

Signed January 21, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[6][67] Emperors THEODOSIUS and VALENTIAN Augusti to Florentius, Praetorian Prefect. If a mother, after undertaking the statutory guardianship of her children, entered into a second marriage in violation of her proffered oath (not to [67] = C. 6.56.6 and Nov. Theod. 11.1.2; combine with C. 6.58.10. On the oath not to remarry, see C. Th. 3.17.4. The final ruling seems unlikely law.

ordinari eique quod debetur ex ratione tutelae gestae persolverit, mariti quoque eius praeteritae tutelae ratiociniis bona iure pignoris tenebuntur obnoxia.

D. VI id. Iul. Constantinopoli Theodosio A. XVII et Festo conss.

[7] Imp. Iustinianus A. Iohanni pp. Sancimus de invectis a conductore rebus et illatis, quae domino pro pensionibus tacite obligantur, non solum in utraque Roma et territorio earum hoc ius locum habere, sed etiam in nostris provinciis. tali enim iusta praesumptione etiam omnes nostros provinciales perpotiri desideramus.

D. XV k. Nov. post consulatum Lampadii et Orestis vv. cc. anno secundo.

XV Si Aliena Res Pignori Data Sit

[1] Impp. Severus et Antoninus AA. Carpo. Procurator citra domini voluntatem domum pignori frustra dedit. si tamen pecuniam creditoris in rem domini versam constabit, non inutilis erit exceptio dumtaxat quod numeratum est exsolvi desideranti.

PP. XI k. Nov. Severo A. II et Albino conss.

[2] Idem AA. Latinae. Si probaveris praesidi hortos de quibus agebatur tuos esse, intellegis obligari eos creditori ab alio non potuisse, si non sciens hoc agi in fraudem creditoris ignorantis dissimulasti.

PP. prid. id. Oct. Antonino A. II et Geta II conss.

[3] Imp. Antoninus A. Marciae. Curator adulti vel tutor pupilli propriam rem mobilem eius, cuius negotia tuetur, pignoris iure obligare non potest, nisi in rem eius pecuniam mutuam accipiat.

PP. VI k. Febr. duobus Aspris conss.

[4] Imp. Alexander A. Secundo. Nec si maior annis viginti quinque fuisset filius tuus, qui in potestate tua erat, te invito rem tuam obligare potuit.

PP. V k. Nov. Maximo II et Aeliano conss.

remarry) and before she got another tutor appointed for him (her child) and paid to him the amount due from her management of the guardianship, the property also of her husband is held as a pledge for the accounting on this prior guardianship.

Given July 10, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Theodosius Augustus, for the seventeenth time, and Festus (439).

[7] Emperor JUSTINIAN Augustus to John, Praetorian Prefect. Concerning property brought and moved in (invecta et illata) by an (urban) tenant, which is impliedly obligated to the landlord for rent, We ordain that this rule shall prevail not only in both Romes and their territories, but also in Our provinces. For We wish that all Our provincials gain the advantage of such a just presumption.

Given October 18, in the second post-consulate of the viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestes (532).

Fifteenth Title If Another Person's Property Is Pledged

[1] Emperors SEVERUS and ANTONINUS Augusti to Carpus. Without the owner's consent, a pledge of his house made by his procurator is ineffective. But if it becomes clear that the creditor's money benefited the owner, a defense (against the owner seeking to recover the pledge) will not be useless to the person (creditor) seeking payment up to the amount he paid out.

Posted October 22, in the consulship of Severus Augustus, for the second time, and Albinus (194).

[2] The same Augusti to Latina. If you prove to the governor that the gardens in question are yours, you are aware that they could not be obligated to a creditor by a third party unless you knew this was being done and feigned ignorance in order to deceive an innocent creditor.

Posted October 14, in the consulship of Antoninus Augustus, for the second time, and Geta, for the second time (205).

[3] Emperor ANTONINUS Augustus to Marcia. The curator of an adult ward or the tutor of a minor ward cannot obligate as a pledge the movable property of the person whose affairs he manages, except if he receives a loan for his (the ward's) benefit.

Posted January 27, in the consulship of the two Aspri (212).

[4] Emperor ALEXANDER Augustus to Secundus. Even if your son was over age 25 and in your power, he could not obligate your property without your consent.

Posted October 28, in the Consulship of Maximus, for the second time and Aelianus (223).

[5] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. Eutycho. Cum res, quae necdum in bonis debitoris est, pignori data ab eo postea in bonis eius esse incipiat, ordinariam quidem actionem super pignore non competere manifestum est, sed tamen aequitatem facere, ut facile utilis persecutio exemplo pignoraticiae daretur.

PP. XIII k. Iun. Maximo II et Aquilino conss.

[6] Idem AA. et CC. Zosimo. Quae praedium in filios a se titulo donationis translatum creditori suo dat pignori, se magis contrario pigneraticio obligavit iudicio, quam quicquam dominis nocet, cum Serviana etiam actio declarat evidenter iure pignoris teneri non posse, nisi quae obligantis in bonis fuerint, et per alium alienam rem invito domino pignori obligari non posse certissimum est.

S. V id. Iul. Philippopoli AA. conss.

[7] Idem AA. et CC. Corneliae. Si in rem suam accepta pecunia mutua tutor mancipium tuum pignori dedit nec huic post perfectam aetatem consensum accommodasti, pignori res obligari non potuit.

S. VI k. Ian. AA. conss.

[8] Impp. Honorius et Theodosius AA. Iohanni pp. Nexum non facit praediorum nisi persona, quae iure potuit obligare. per servum aut procuratorem[x] colonum vel actorem seu conductorem praeiudicium possessioni invito vel inscio domino imponi non posse et iure et legum auctoritatibus decantatur.

D. V id. Iul. Ravennae Honorio XIII et Theodosio X AA. conss.

XVI Quae Res Pignori Obligari Possunt vel Non et Qualiter Pignus Contrahatur

[1] Impp. Severus et Antoninus AA. Optato. Alumnos tuos et ceteras res, quas neminem credibile est pignori specialiter daturum fuisse, generali

[x] procuratorem vel

[5] Emperors Diocletian and Maximian Augusti to Eutychus. When a debtor gives as a pledge property not yet in his estate (bona) and it afterwards begins to be in his estate, it is obvious the ordinary action on pledge does not lie, but fairness still brings it about that a claim analogous to that on pledge is readily granted.

Posted May 20, in the consulship of Maximus, for the second time, and Aquilinus (286).

[6] The same Augusti and the Caesars to Zosimus. A woman who gave land to her sons as a gift and then gave it as a pledge to her creditor obligates herself in a counteraction on pledge (brought by the creditor), but causes no (legal) harm to the owners (her sons), since also the Servian action on pledge states that nothing can be held as pledged property except what is in the estate (bona) of the person obligating it, and it is quite certain that another's property cannot be obligated as a pledge by a third party without the owner's consent.

Written July 11, at Philippopolis, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[7] The same Augusti and Caesars to Cornelia. If your tutor borrowed money for his own benefit and gave your slave as a pledge (for its repayment), and you did not give your consent (to this arrangement) after you came of age, the property cannot be obligated as a pledge.

Written December 27, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[8][68] Emperors Honorius and Theodosius Augusti to John, Praetorian Prefect. No one creates a lien (nexus) on land except a person who could legally obligate it. It is often repeated both in law and by statutory authority that a slave or procurator or tenant (colonus) or manager or lessee cannot impose a prejudice on possession by an owner who is unwilling or unaware.

Given July 15, at Ravenna, in the consulship of Honorius, for the thirteenth time, and Theodosius, for the tenth time, Augusti (422).

Sixteenth Title What Property Can and Cannot Be Pledged, and How a Pledge Is Contracted[69]

[1] Emperors Severus and Antoninus Augusti to Optatus. It accords with reason that your foster-children (alumni), along with other property that it [68] = C.Th. 2.30.2 (July 11), C. 11.48.17 (in part); combine with C. 2.13.2, 4.4.1, 4.26.13, 12.60.4. Seeck gives July 11, 422.

[69] See D. 20.3.

pacti conventione, quae de bonis tuis facta est, in causam pignoris non fuisse rationis est.

PP. XII k. April. Laterano et Rufino conss.

[2] Idem AA. Rogato. Cum constet pignus consensu contrahi, non dubitamus eum, qui emptiones agrorum suorum pignori posuit, de ipsis agris obligandis cogitasse.

PP. V k. Iul. Apro et Maximo conss.

[3] Imp. Antoninus A. Restituto. Si monumento corpus filiae tuae intulisti, religiosum id fecisti: quo facto obligari a quoquam prohibente iuris religione non posse in dubium non venit.

PP. III k. April. Laeto II et Cereale conss.

[4] Imp. Alexander A. ... evocato. Nomen quoque debitoris pignerari et generaliter et specialiter posse pridem placuit. quare si debitor is satis non facit, cui tu credidisti, ille, cuius nomen tibi pignori datum est, nisi ei cui debuit solvit nondum certior a te de obligatione tua factus, utilibus actionibus satis tibi facere usque ad id, quod tibi deberi a creditore eius probaveris, compelletur, quatenus tamen ipse debet.

PP. prid. k. Mart. Fusco et Dextro conss.

[5] Idem A. Septimio. Spem eorum praemiorum, quae pro coronis athletis pensitanda sunt, privata pactione pignerare minime admittendum est: et ideo nec si generale pactum de omnibus bonis pignori obligandis intervenerit, tenet.

PP. III k. Mai. Maximo II et Paterno conss.

[6] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. et CC. Rufo. Qui filios vestros vel liberos homines pro pecunia quam vobis credebat pignoris titulo accepit, dissimulatione iuris se circumvenit, cum sit manifestum not credible anyone would specifically pledge, are not included as pledges in a general agreement made about your estate (bona).

Posted March 21, in the consulship of Lateranus and Rufinus (197).

[2] The same Augusti to Rogatus. Since it is clear that a pledge is contracted by agreement, We do not doubt that a person who pledged the "purchases" (emptiones) of his land had intended to obligate the land itself.

Posted June 27, in the consulship of Aper and Maximus (207).

[3] Emperor ANTONINUS Augustus to Restitutus. If you interred the body of your daughter in a sepulcher, you consecrated it. There arises no doubt that when this is done, it cannot be obligated (as a pledge) by anyone, since the sanctity of law forbids this.

Posted March 30, in the consulship of Laetus, for the second time, and Cerealis (215).

[4] Emperor ALEXANDER Augustus to a veteran. It has long been considered the law that an account (owed to him) can be pledged by a debtor both generally and specifically. So if a debtor to whom you extended credit does not give satisfaction (to you), the person whose account was given to you as a pledge, unless he paid his creditor before learning from you of your obligation (that you had acquired against him), is compelled by analogous actions to give satisfaction to you up to the amount that you prove was owed to you by his creditor, but within the amount he himself owes.[70]

Posted February 28, in the consulship of Fuscus and Dexter (225).

[5][71] The same Augustus to Septimius. It should hardly be allowed that a person pledges by private arrangement his expectation of (receiving) the prizes that are paid to athletes for (winning) crowns. And so it (a pledge of such an expectation) does not hold (also) if a general pact was made about obligating all one's property as a pledge.

Posted April 29, in the consulship of Maximus, for the second time, and Paternus (233).

[6] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti and the Caesars to Rufus. A person who took as a pledge your children or free men for money which he loaned to you, deceived himself by disregarding the law, since it is obvious that [70] You are owed money by debtor A, who gave you security in the form of a debt owed to him by B. If A fails to pay, you can proceed against B within the indicated limits.

[71] Combine with C. 8.17.5.

obligationem pignoris non consistere nisi in his, quae quis de bonis suis facit obnoxia.

S. k. Mai. Heracliae AA. conss.

[7] Imp. Constantinus A. ad universos provinciales. pr. Exsecutores a quocumque iudice dati ad exigenda debita ea, quae civiliter poscuntur, servos aratores aut boves aratorios aut instrumentum aratorium pignoris causa de possessionibus abstrahunt, ex quo tributorum illatio retardatur. 1. Si quis igitur intercessor aut creditor vel praefectus pagi vel vici vel decurio in hac re fuerit detectus, aestimando a iudice supplicio subiugetur.

D. III non. Iun. Sirmi Constantino A. IIII et Licinio IIII conss.

[8] Impp. Honorius et Theodosius AA. Probo comiti sacrarum largitionum. Pignorum gratia aliquid quod ad culturam agri pertinet auferri non convenit.

D. III id. Iun. Constante et Constantio conss.

[9] Imp. Iustinianus A. Menae pp. pr. Si quis in cuiuscumque contractus instrumento ea verba posuerit: 'fide et periculo rerum ad me pertinentium' vel 'per earum exactionem satisfieri tibi permitto', sufficere ea verba ad rerum tam earum quas in praesenti debitor habet quam futurarum hypothecam, nec ex prioribus sanctionibus minus habere speciali hypothecae memoria videri, cum sit iustum voluntates contrahentium magis quam verborum conceptionem inspicere. 1. Super qua generali hypotheca illud quoque ad conservandam contrahentium voluntatem sancimus, ut et, si 'res suas' supponere debitor dixerit, non adiecto 'tam praesentes quam futuras', ius tamen generalis hypothecae etiam ad futuras res producatur.

D. III id. Dec. Constantinopoli dn. Iustiniano A. pp. II cons.

XVII Qui Potiores in Pignore Habeantur

[1] Impp. Severus et Antoninus AA. Secundo. Qui pignus secundo loco accepit, ita ius suum confirmare potest, si priori creditori debitam a pledge obligation does not arise except as to property which a person obligates from his (actual) estate (bona).

Written May 1, at Heraclea, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[7][72] Emperor Constantine Augustus to all provincials. pr. Bailiffs (exsecutores), given by any judge (i.e., governor) to collect debts demanded in civil proceedings, are dragging away from possessions the slave farmers, plough oxen, and farming equipment as pledges, and in consequence tax collection is being hindered. 1. So if some mediator or creditor or a district or village prefect or a decurion is found to be doing this, he shall be subjected to a punishment fixed by the judge.

Given June 3, at Sirmium, in the consulship of Constantine Augustus, for the fourth time, and Licinius, for the fourth time (315).

[8][73] Emperors Honorius and Theodosius Augusti to Probus, Count of Imperial Finances. It is improper that anything which is used for cultivating land be taken away as a pledge.

Given June 11, in the consulship of Constans and Constantius (414).

[9] Emperor Justinian to Menas, Praetorian Prefect. pr. If in any contract document someone uses these words: "On the faith and risk of the property belonging to me," or "I permit you to satisfy yourself by seizing these things," (We hold that) these words suffice for a hypothec both of property the debtor has at present and of future things; nor, as in earlier ordinances, does it seem less forceful than the special record of a hypothec, since it is right to consider the intent of the contracting parties more significant than their verbal formulation. 1. Concerning this general hypothec, in order to preserve the intent of the contracting parties We additionally ordain this, that even if the debtor says he pledges "his property," without adding "both present and future," a right of general hypothec is created also for future property.

Given December 11, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Our Lord Justinian, Ever Augustus, for the second time (528).

Seventeenth Title Those Whose Rights in a Pledge Are Superior[74]

[1] Emperors Severus and Antoninus Augusti to Secundus. A person who takes a pledge in second place can strengthen his own right (to it) if he paid

[72] = C.Th. 2.30.1.
[73] Combine with C. 11.48.15, 11.59.13 (both slightly differently dated). Seeck dates to January 10, 414.
[74] See D. 20.4. The same piece of property could be pledged successively to multiple creditors. This title deals with legal problems stemming from the priority of creditors' claims to the pledge.

pecuniam solverit aut, cum obtulisset isque accipere noluisset, eam obsignavit et deposuit nec in usus suos convertit.

PP. k. Febr. Laterano et Rufino conss.

[2] Imp. Antoninus A. Chresto. Si decreto praetoris, qui de fideicommisso ius dixit, in possessionem fundi hereditarii fideicommissi condicionalis servandi gratia prius inducti estis, quam adversarius vester in causa iudicati eiusdem fundi pignus occupavit iussu eius, qui iure sententiam exsequebatur, tempore potiores estis. nam cum de pignore utraque pars contendat, praevalet iure, qui praevenit tempore.

PP. v id. Mai. duobus Aspris conss.

[3] Idem A. Varo. Si fundum pignori accepisti, antequam rei publicae obligaretur, sicut prior es tempore, ita potior iure.

PP. v id. Oct. Antonino A. IIII et Balbino conss.

[4] Idem A. Silvano. Cum rem publicam Heliopolitanorum propter emolumentum sententiae in rerum tam heredis quam hereditariarum possessionem missam esse proponas, intellegis, quamvis pater tuus cum Sossiano contraxerit, tamen, si personali actione eum habuit obligatum, praeponi rem publicam iure pignoris, quae ex auctoritate eius qui iubere potuit servandi iudicati causa occupavit.

PP. v id. Dec. Laeto II et Cereale conss.

[5] Imp. Alexander A. Septimio. Prior quidem creditor compelli non potest tibi, qui posteriore loco pignus accepisti, debitum offerre: sed si tu ei omne quod debetur solveris, pignoris tui causa firmabitur.

PP. III k. Mai. Maximo II et Paterno conss.

the money owed to the prior creditor, or, when he tendered it and that person declined to accept, he sealed and deposited it without turning it to his own use.

Posted February 1, in the consulship of Lateranus and Rufinus (197).

[2] Emperor ANTONINUS Augustus to Chrestus. If, by decree of the Praetor who handles the law of trusts (fideicommissa), you were put into possession of a farm, which was in an inheritance, for the purpose of preserving a trust left to you upon a condition, (and this happened) before your adversary, in order to satisfy a judgment (against the heir), seized the pledge of this same farm by order of a person who was rightfully executing a judgment (i.e., a judge), you are prior (to your opponent) by reason of time. For when two parties contest a pledge, the one who is prior in time has the stronger right.[75]

Posted May 11, in the consulship of the two Aspri (212).

[3] The same Augustus to Varus. If you received a farm as a pledge before it became obligated to a municipality, since you are prior in time, you are superior in right.

Posted October 11, in the consulship of Antoninus Augustus, for the fourth time, and Balbinus (213).

[4] The same Augustus to Silvanus. Since you state that the municipality of Heliopolis was, through benefit of a verdict, given possession both of the heir's property and of the inheritance (that came to this heir), you realize that, although your father had a contract with Sossianus (the decedent), still, if he (Sossianus) was obligated (only) through an action in personam, the municipality, which seized (the property) to enforce the judgment (against the heir) on the authorization of one entitled to order this, is preferred (over you) by the law of pledge.

Posted December 9, in the consulship of Laetus, for the second time, and Cerealis (215).

[5][76] Emperor ALEXANDER Augustus to Septimius. You received the pledge in a subordinate position, and the prior creditor (with the same pledge) cannot be forced to pay you your debt. But if you pay him all that is owed (to him), the case for your (right to the) pledge will be strengthened.

Posted April 29, in the consulship of Maximus, Consul for the second time, and Paternus (233).

[75] In this case, the judgment creditor, Chrestus' opponent, through an order of execution obtained a general lien on the decedent's property. But Chrestus beat him to this specific farm, which Chrestus is permitted to hold until the decedent's condition on the trust is fulfilled.

[76] Combine with C. 8.16.5.

[6] Impp. Valerianus et Gallienus AA. Philoxeno. Si generaliter bona sint obligata et postea res alii specialiter pignori dentur, quoniam ex generali obligatione potior habetur creditor qui ante contraxit, si ab illo tu comparasti, non oportet te ab eo qui postea credidit inquietari.

PP. prid. id. Mai. Saeculare II et Donato conss.

[7] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. et CC. Iuliano. Licet isdem pignoribus multis creditoribus diversis temporibus datis priores habeantur potiores, tamen eum, cuius pecunia praedium comparatum probatur, quod ei pignori esse specialiter statim convenit, omnibus anteferri iuris auctoritate declaratur.

Subscripta XVII k. Febr. AA. conss.

[8] Idem AA. et CC. Fabricio. Diversis temporibus eadem re duobus iure pignoris obligata eum, qui prior data mutua pecunia pignus accepit, potiorem haberi certi ac manifesti iuris est, nec alias secundum distrahendi potestatem huius pignoris consequi, nisi superiori creditori debita fuerit soluta quantitas.

S. prid. k. Mai Heracliae AA. conss.

[9] Idem AA. et CC. Asclepiodoto. Eos qui acceperunt pignora, cum in rem habeant actionem, privilegiis omnibus, quae personalibus actionibus competunt, praeferri constitit.

S. IIII non. Dec. CC. conss.

[10] Idem AA. et CC. Polydeucae. Cum tibi pro dote quam acceperat res maritus obligavit, eo mortuo hi, quibus easdem pignori dederat, non offerentes debitum nulla possunt persequi ratione. nam chirographarios creditores nec in rem nec in personam eos, qui debitori non probantur successisse, ulla ratione convenire posse manifestum est.

PP. non. Dec. CC. conss.

[11] Imp. Leo A. Erythrio pp. pr. Scripturas, quae saepe adsolent a quibusdam secrete fieri, intervenientibus amicis nec ne, transigendi vel

[6] Emperors VALERIAN and GALLIENUS Augusti to Philoxenus. If property is generally obligated, and subsequently (particular) items are specifically given as pledges to a third party, since the creditor who contracted first with a general obligation (of pledge) is considered stronger, if you purchased from him you must not be disturbed (in possession) by the subsequent creditor.

Posted May 14, in the consulship of Saecularis, for the second time, and Donatus (260).

[7] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti and the Caesars to Julian. When the same pledges are given to many creditors at different times, although those earlier in time are considered stronger, still the authority of law declares that if land that is shown to have been purchased with a person's money was at the same time specially pledged to him (for repayment of the loaned sale price), he is preferred over all others (as to this land).

Signed January 16, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[8] The same Augusti and Caesars to Fabricius. The law is settled and obvious that when the same property is obligated as a pledge at different times to two persons, the one who first received the pledge when lending money is considered superior, nor otherwise does the second person acquire the power of selling this pledge (distractio) unless the amount owed is (first) paid to the prior creditor.

Written April 30, at Heraclea, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[9] The same Augusti and Caesars to Asclepiodotus. It is clear that those who took pledges, when they have an action in rem, are preferred to all privileges which lie through actions in personam.

Written December 2, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[10] The same Augusti and Caesars to Polydeuca. Since your husband obligated property in return for the dowry he had received, and he is dead, those to whom he pledged this same property cannot in any way claim it if they do not (first) pay the debt (to you). For it is obvious that creditors with (only) a written bond can in no manner sue in rem or in personam those who are not shown to be the debtor's heirs.[77]

Posted December 5, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[11][78] Emperor LEO Augustus to Erythrius, Praetorian Prefect. pr. We decree that the writings that some persons customarily draw up secretly, in the [77] The husband pledged property for return of the dowry to Polydeuca. Although evidently she was not his heir, her claim to the pledged property defeats creditors of the estate to whom the same property is pledged.

[78] Combine with C. 2.4.42.

paciscendi seu fenerandi vel societatis coeundae gratia seu de aliis quibuscumque causis vel contractibus conficiuntur, quae idiochira Graece appellantur, sive tota series eorum manu contrahentium vel notarii aut alterius cuiuslibet scripta fuerit, ipsorum tamen habeant subscriptiones, sive testibus adhibitis sive non, licet condicionales sint, quos vulgo tabularios appellant, sive non, quasi publice scriptas, si personalis actio exerceatur, suum robur habere decernimus. 1. Sin autem ius pignoris vel hypothecae ex huiusmodi instrumentis vindicare quis sibi contenderit, eum qui instrumentis publice confectis nititur praeponi, etiamsi posterior dies his contineatur, nisi forte probatae atque integrae opinionis trium vel amplius virorum subscriptiones isdem idiochiris contineantur: tunc enim quasi publice confecta accipiuntur.

D. k. Iul. Constantinopoli Marciano cons.

[12] Imp. Iustinianus A. Iohanni pp. pr. Adsiduis aditionibus mulierum inquietati sumus, per quas suas dotes deperditas esse lugebant et ab anterioribus creditoribus substantias maritorum detentas. 1. Nos itaque ad antiquas leges perspeximus[xi] in personalibus actionibus rei uxoriae actioni, quam in praesenti sustulimus, magnam praerogativam praestantes, ut contra omnes paene personales actiones habeat privilegia et creditores alios antecedat, licet fuerant anteriores. 2. Et haec cum in personalibus statuerant actionibus, si hypothecam respiciebant, ilico iustitiae vigorem relaxabant et senioribus hypothecis novas mulieris hypothecas, si habebat actiones, expellebant, nec ad fragilitatem muliebrem respicientes nec quod et corpore et substantia et omni vita sua marito fungitur, cum paene mulieribus tota substantia in dote constituta est. 3. Oportebat enim disponi maritos creditoribus suis ex sua substantia satisfacere, non dote muliebri, quam ad suos victus suasque alimonias mulier possidet, vel a semet ipsa data vel pro ea ab alio.

4. Ad haec omnia respicientes et reminiscentes, quod et alias duas constitutiones fecimus pro dotibus mulieribus subvenientes, et omnia in unum colligentes sancimus ex stipulatu actionem, quam mulieribus iam pro dote instituendam dedimus cuique etiam tacitam donavimus inesse hypothecam, potiora iura contra omnes habere mariti creditors, presence of friends or not, in order to settle controversies, make pacts, lend money, form partnerships, or for any other causes, or that are drafted for contracts, what in Greek are called idiochira (handwritten documents) – whether the entire series of them was written in the hand of the contracting parties or in that of a notary or anyone else as long as they have the signatures of the (contracting parties), and whether witnesses were summoned or not, although they are the bound slaves (condicionales) commonly called bookkeepers or not – (these writings) have the legal force of publicly executed documents in any action in personam. 1. But if anyone seeks to claim for himself the right of pledge or hypothec under such documents, the one who uses publicly executed documents is preferred even if there is a later date on them, except perhaps if the signatures of three or more men of approved high reputation are on the same idiochira; for then they are accepted as if publicly executed documents.

[xi] respeximus

Given July 1, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Marcianus (472).

[12] Emperor JUSTINIAN Augustus to John, Praetorian Prefect. pr. We have been disturbed by the continual complaints of women, in which they decry the loss of their dowries and the seizure of their husband's property by prior creditors. 1. So We have looked into the ancient statutes giving great preference, among actions in personam, to the action for recovering dowry (actio rei uxoriae) – recently abolished by Us[79] – that she (an ex-wife) had a preferred position against almost all actions in personam and preceded other creditors even though prior in time. 2. And while they established this for actions in personam, they relaxed the force of justice when it came to hypothec, and in favor of earlier hypothecs they excluded the woman's (more) recent hypothecs, if she had a right of action, neither looking to the frailty of women nor that she expends her body and estate and all her life for her husband, since almost all that women have consists of their dowry. 3. It should be provided that husbands satisfy their creditors from their own estate, not from their wives' dowry, which a wife possesses for her own nourishment and maintenance, whether it is given by her herself or for her by another.

4. Considering all these things and remembering that We have also ordained two other constitutions protecting the dowries of women,[80] and embracing all these into one, We ordain that the action on stipulation, which We now gave to be brought by women for their dowry[81] and to which We accorded the presence of an implicit hypothec, has legal priority against all the creditors of a husband, even if they are defended by the privilege of temporal priority. 5. For since, as licet anterioris sint temporis privilegio vallati. 5. Cum enim in personalibus actionibus secundum quod diximus tali privilegio utebatur res uxoria, quapropter non et in hypothecam hoc mulieri et nunc indulgemus beneficium, licet res dotales vel ex his aliae comparatae non extent, sed quocumque modo vel dissipatae vel consumptae sunt, si tamen re ipsa fuerint parti mariti datae? quis enim eas non miseretur propter obsequia, quae maritis praestant, propter partus periculum et ipsam liberorum creationem, pro qua multa nostris legibus inventa sunt privilegia? 6. Ideo quod antiquitas quidem dare incepit, ad effectum autem non pertulit, nos pleno legis articulo consummavimus et, sive liberos habet mulier sive ab initio non habuit sive progenitos amisit, hoc ei privilegium indulgemus.

[79] C. 5.13.1.
[80] C. 5.12.30–31.
[81] C. 5.13.1.1.

7. Exceptis videlicet contra novercas anterioris matrimonii filiis, quibus pro dote matris suae iam quidem dedimus hypothecas contra paternas res vel eius creditores, in praesenti autem similem praerogativam servamus, ne, quod posteriori datum est uxori, hoc anteriori denegetur, sed sic maneat eis ius incorruptum, quasi adhuc vivente matre eorum: duabus enim dotibus ab eadem substantia debitis ex tempore praerogativam manere volumus.

8. Haec autem tantum ad dotem sancimus, non ad ante nuptias donationem, quam suo tempori servire disponimus et habere inter creditores sui temporis ordinem. non enim pro lucro fovemus mulieres, sed ne damnum patiantur suisque rebus defraudentur curamus. 9. Quam legem ex praesenti tempore locum habere sancimus et non retrorsus referimus.

D. v k. Dec. Constantinopoli post consulatum Lampadii et Orestis vv. cc.

XVIII De His Qui in Priorum Creditorum Locum Succedunt

[1] Impp. Severus et Antoninus AA. Marcellinae. pr. Non omnimodo succedunt in locum hypothecarii creditoris hi, quorum pecunia ad creditorem transit. hoc enim tunc observatur, cum is, qui pecuniam postea dat, sub hoc pacto credat, ut idem pignus ei obligetur et in locum eius succedat. 1. Quod cum in tua persona factum non sit (iudicatum est enim te pignora non accepisse), frustra putas tibi auxilio opus esse constitutionis nostrae ad eam rem pertinentis.

PP. id. Iul. Pompeiano et Avito conss.

We have said, return of the dowry enjoyed such preference in actions in personam, why should We not also now grant to a woman this benefit also against a hypothec, even though the dowry property or other things purchased from it no longer exist, but are somehow either dispersed or consumed, provided that in fact it (the dowry) was given to the husband's side? For who does not have compassion for them on account of the services rendered to their husbands, the risk of childbirth and the very creation of children, on behalf of which many privileges have been found in Our laws? 6. Accordingly, what antiquity indeed commenced but did not bring to conclusion, We complete through the full provision of this law, and grant her this privilege whether the wife has children or did not have them from the beginning (of her marriage) or lost the ones she bore.

7. Excepted, obviously, are the children of a prior marriage against their stepmothers; to these (children) We have already given[82] hypothecs for their (natural) mother's dowry against their father's property and his creditors. Now We preserve a similar preference, lest what was given to the former wife be denied to the later one; but let this rule thus remain unaltered for them (the children), as if their mother still lived: if two dowries are owed from the same estate, We wish the temporal preference to remain.

8. We ordain these rules only for dowry, not for a gift before marriage (donatio ante nuptias), which We arranged to preserve its own time and to have the order of its time among creditors. For We do not favor women for the purpose of (their) gain, but We take care lest that they not suffer damage and be defrauded of their property. 9. We ordain that this law apply from now on, but do not extend it retroactively.

Given November 27, at Constantinople, in the post-consulate of the viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestes (531).

Eighteenth Title Those Who Succeed to the Position of Prior Creditors

[1] Emperors Severus and Antoninus Augusti to Marcellina. pr. Those whose money goes to a (pledge) creditor do not always succeed into the position of the creditor holding a hypothec. For this occurs when a person who subsequently gives money (to the first creditor) extends credit under a pact (with the first creditor) that the same pledge is obligated to him and he succeeds into his (the first creditor's) place. 1. Since this did not take place in your case – for it was adjudged that you had not accepted the pledges – you think in vain that Our constitution concerning that matter is of help to you.

Posted July 15, in the consulship of Pompeianus and Avitus (209).

[82] C. 5.9.8.4.

[2] Imp. Antoninus A. Felici. pr. Cum pro patre, in cuius potestate non eras, pecuniam fisco intuleris, et iure privilegio eius successisti et eius locum cui pecuniam numerasti consecutus es, nec hi creditores patris tui, qui personalem habuerunt actionem vel cum eo postea sub pignoribus contraxerunt, pignora tua te ignorante distrahendo iuri tuo aliquid derogaverunt. 1. Unde intellegis, si quid tuo nomine te absente ab actoribus tuis solutum est, ut indebitum numeratum restitui pignoraque tibi nexa persequi te posse.

PP. k. Oct. Romae Sabino II et Anullino conss.

[3] Imp. Alexander A. Valenti. Si potiores creditores pecunia tua dimissi sunt, quibus obligata fuit possessio, quam emisse te dicis, ita ut pretium perveniret ad eosdem priores creditores, in ius eorum successisti et contra eos, qui infirmiores illis fuerunt, iusta defensione te tueri potes.

PP. k. Febr. Iuliano et Crispino conss.

[4] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. Carpophoro. Si prior res publica contraxit fundusque ei est obligatus, tibi secundo creditori offerendi pecuniam potestas est, ut succedas etiam in ius rei publicae.

PP. XV k. Iun. Maximo II et Aquilino conss.

XVIIII Si Antiquior Creditor Pignus Vendiderit

[1] Imp. Alexander A. Athenioni. pr. Si vendidit is qui ante pignus accepit, persecutio tibi hypothecaria superesse non potest. 1. Cum autem debitor ipsi priori creditori eadem pignora in solutum dederit vel vendiderit, non magis tibi persecutio adempta est, quam si aliis easdem res debitor venumdedisset: sed ita persequens res obligatas audieris, si, quod eidem possessori propter praecedentis contractus auctoritatem debitum est, obtuleris.

PP. V id. Mai. Agricola et Clemente conss.

[2] Emperor ANTONINUS Augustus to Felix. pr. When you paid money to the Treasury on behalf of your father who did not have you in his power, you (thereby) simultaneously succeeded legally to its privilege and obtained the position of the one to whom you paid the money. Nor do those creditors of your father, whether they (previously) had an action in personam or subsequently contracted with him under pledges, prejudice your rights in any way by selling your pledges without your knowledge. 1. Hence, you know that if on your account anything was paid by your managers (actores) in your absence (for redemption of the property), you can sue for restitution of an unowed payment and to get the pledges that are bound to you.[83]

Posted October 1, at Rome, in the consulship of Sabinus, for the second time, and Anullinus (216).

[3] Emperor ALEXANDER Augustus to Valens. If stronger creditors were paid with your money, and a possession was obligated to them (as a pledge) which you say you bought in such a way that the price came to these same prior creditors, you succeeded into their right and you can protect yourself by a legal defense against those who were weaker than they.

Posted February 1, in the consulship of Julian and Crispinus (224).

[4] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti to Carpophorus. If a municipality had a prior contract and a farm was obligated to it, you as a subsequent creditor have the power of offering the money (due to the municipality) in order to step into the municipality's right.[84]

Posted May 18, in the consulship of Maximus, for the second time, and Aquilinus (286).

Nineteenth Title If a Prior Creditor Sells a Pledge

[1] Emperor ALEXANDER Augustus to Athenio. pr. If a prior pledgee sold the pledge, there survives to you (as a subsequent pledgee) no claim for the hypothec. 1. But since the debtor gave the prior creditor these same pledges as payment, or sold them (to him), you are not barred from claiming them, any more than if the debtor sold the same things to third parties. But if you claim the obligated property, you will be heard only if you offer what was owed to the same possessor by virtue of his prior contract.

Posted May 11, in the consulship of Agricola and Clemens (230).

[83] The emancipated son, by paying off his father's debt to the Treasury, thereby acquires the Treasury's lien on his father's property; and this lien has priority over pledges the father had made, or will make, with private creditors.

[84] Blume: "See C. 11.30.2. It is probably assumed that the subsequent creditor had a lien."

[2] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. et CC. Endemiae. Obligata pignoris iure creditore recte distrahente post debitor emptori pretium offerens vel creditori quod debuit evincere non potest.

S. XVI k. Ian. AA. conss.

[3] Idem AA. et CC. Theophilo. Quominus creditor, qui ante pignus accepit, distrahat, non offerendo secundus priori debitum interpellare non potest.

D. VI k. April. CC. conss.

XX Si Communis Res Pignorata Sit

[1] Imp. Antoninus A. Venusto. Frater tuus, sicut vobis invitis portionem vobis competentem obligare non potuit, ita suam dando obligationem creditori quaesiit. unde intellegis nullum praeiudicium dominio vestro contractum eius facere potuisse.

Accepta XIIII k. Dec. Messalla et Sabino conss.

XXI De Praetorio Pignore et Ut in Actionibus Etiam Debitorum Missio Praetorii Pignoris Procedat

[1] Imp. Iustinianus A. Menae pp. Si praetorium pignus quicumque iudices dandum alicui perspexerint, non solum super rebus mobilibus et immobilibus et se moventibus, sed etiam super actionibus quae debitori competunt praecipimus hoc eis licere decernere.

D. k. April. Constantinopoli Decio vc. cons.

[2] Idem A. Iuliano pp. pr. Veteris iuris dubitationem decidentes ad duplum genus hypothecarum respeximus, unum quidem, quod ex conventionibus et pactis hominum nascitur, aliud, quod a iudicibus datur et praetorium nuncupatur. 1. Et cum invenimus in conventionalibus pignoribus vel hypothecis non solum tenentem creditorem adiuvari, sed etiam si ab eo cadat, sive sua culpa sive non sive fortuito casu, humanius esse perspeximus et in praetorio pignore dare

[2] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti and the Caesars to Endemia. When a creditor lawfully sells property obligated as a pledge, the debtor cannot (legally) recover it afterwards by offering its price to the buyer or what he owed to the creditor.

Written December 17, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[3] The same Augusti and Caesars to Theophilus. A subsequent creditor who does not tender the debt to a prior one cannot prevent the creditor who received the earlier pledge from selling it.

Given March 27, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

Twentieth Title If Property Held in Common Is Pledged

[1] Emperor ANTONINUS Augustus to Venustus. Just as your brother could not obligate the portion (of jointly owned property) belonging to you without your consent, so by giving his own (portion as a pledge) he acquired an obligation to the creditor (for his portion alone). So you understand that his contract could not prejudice your ownership.

Accepted November 18, in the consulship of Messalla and Sabinus (214).

Twenty-First Title The Praetorian Pledge, and That Also in the Actions of Debtors the Grant of a Praetorian Pledge May Occur[85]

[1] Emperor JUSTINIAN Augustus to Menas, Praetorian Prefect. If any judges perceive that a Praetorian pledge should be given to someone, We direct that they may decree it not only for movable and immovable and self-moving (animate) property, but also for actions that belong to the debtor.

Given April 1, at Constantinople, in the consulship of the vir clarissimus Decius (529).

[2] The same Augustus to Julian, Praetorian Prefect. pr. Dispelling the uncertainty in the old law, We have considered two types of hypothec, one which arises from agreements and pacts between persons, the other which is given by judges and is called Praetorian. 1. And since We found, in connection with agreed pledges or hypothecs, that a creditor is aided not only when in possession, but also if it slips away from him whether or not by his own fault or by unavoidable accident, We deemed it more generous to give the creditor recovery also in the case of a Praetorian pledge, no matter how he loses possession recuperationem creditori, quocumque modo possessionem amittat, sive culpa sua sive non sive fortuito casu. 2. Licet enim debuerat incumbere suo pignori, ne aliquam patiatur iacturam, tamen, ne quid amarum in creditoribus consequatur, benignius causam interpretamur et ei recuperationem donamus.

[85] A pignus praetorium is a judicial order authorizing a judgment creditor to seize a debtor's property as a pledge.

D. k. Aug. Constantinopoli Lampadio et Oreste vv. cc. conss.

XXII Si in Causa Iudicati Pignus Captum Sit

[1] Imp. Antoninus A. Gabinio. Res ob causam iudicati eius iussu, cui ius iubendi fuit, pignoris iure teneri ac distrahi posse saepe rescriptum est. nam in vicem iustae obligationis succedit ex causa contractus auctoritas iubentis.

PP. v k. Aug. Romae Antonino A. IIII et Balbino conss.

[2] Imp. Alexander A. Valeriano. pr. Cum in causa iudicati aliqua res pignori capitur, per officium eius qui ita decrevit venumdari solet, non per eum, qui iudicatum fieri postulavit. 1. Et si alio emptore non existente, vel existente quidem, sed non dignum pretium offerente is cui iudicatus satis non fecit ad licitationem secundum constituta fuerit admissus, cuiuslibet alterius vice ex officio emere debet.

PP. VI k. Mai. Maximo II et Aeliano conss.

[3] Imp. Gordianus A. Antigono. In causa iudicati pignora ex auctoritate praesidis capta potius distrahi quam iure dominii possideri consuerunt. si tamen per calliditatem condemnati emptor inveniri non potest, tunc auctoritate principis dominium creditori addici solet.

PP. id. Aug. Gordiano A. et Aviola conss.

XXIII Si Pignus Pignori Datum Sit

[1] Imp. Gordianus A. Lamponi. pr. Etiam id quod pignori obligatum est a creditore pignori obstringi posse iam dudum placuit, scilicet ut sequenti creditori utilis actio detur tamdiuque eum is qui ius repraesentat tueatur, quamdiu in causa pignoris manet eius qui dedit. 1. Sed si vos usum fructum possessionis tantummodo pignori dedistis, isque qui whether or not by his own fault or by unavoidable accident. 2. For although he ought to take care to avoid any loss to his own pledge, still, in order to prevent a harsh result for creditors, We interpret the matter more generously and give him the right of recovery.

Given August 1, at Constantinople, in the consulship of the viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestes (530).

Twenty-Second Title If Property Is Seized to Enforce a Judgment

[1] Emperor ANTONINUS Augustus to Gabinius. Rescripts have often held that, upon the order of one having the right to order, property can be seized and sold as a pledge to enforce a judgment.

Posted July 28, at Rome, in the consulship of Antoninus Augustus, for the fourth time, and Balbinus (213).

[2] Emperor ALEXANDER Augustus to Valerianus. pr. When something is taken as a pledge to execute a judgment, it is usually sold through the staff of the person who gives the order, not through the person who sought enforcement. 1. If there is no other buyer (than the judgment creditor), or there is one who does not offer a satisfactory price, the judgment creditor will, in accord with rules, be admitted to the bidding and should buy from the staff like anyone else.

Posted April 26, in the consulship of Maximus, for the second time, and Aelianus (223).

[3] Emperor GORDIAN Augustus to Antigonus. Pledges seized on a governor's authorization to execute a judgment are usually sold rather than possessed by right of ownership. But if no buyer can be found owing to the judgment debtor's guile, then on the Emperor's authorization ownership is usually assigned to the creditor.

Posted August 13, in the consulship of Gordian Augustus and Aviola (239).

Twenty-Third Title If a Pledge is Given as a Pledge

[1] Emperor GORDIAN Augustus to Lampo. pr. It has long been accepted that pledged property can be bound by a creditor as a pledge (for his own debt), obviously in order that an analogous action (on the pledge) be given to the subsequent creditor; and the one giving the right (the earlier creditor) should protect him (the subsequent creditor) as long as it remains as a pledge of the (original) giver. 1. But if you gave as a pledge only the usufruct of property, and accepit alii eam possessionem, cuius usum fructum nexum habebat, sine vestra voluntate pigneravit, creditor eius in id, quo[xii] pignoris vinculum non constitit, distrahens dominio vos privare nequivit. 2. Quod si non fuit vestro creditori usus fructus, sed ipsa possessio pignerata, et ante exsolutam a domino pecuniam creditor secundus pignus acceptum vendidit, non posse venditionem post soluta pecunia rescindi divorum principum placitis continetur.

PP. id. Sept. Pio et Pontiano conss.

[2] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. Gemello. Si creditor possessionem, quae a parentibus tuis pignoris iure fuerat obligata, non vendidit, sed alii creditori pignori dedit, examinata fide veri poteris eam soluto eo, quod ex hac causa creditori debetur, intercessu praesidis provinciae recuperare.

PP. XIII k. Ian. ipsis IIII et III AA. conss.

XXIIII De Partu Pignoris et Omni Causa

[1] Imp. Alexander A. Mestriano. Partus pigneratae ancillae in pari causa qua mater esse olim placuit.

PP. id. Mai. Agricola et Clemente conss.

[2] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. et CC. Nonnoso et Antonino. Cum pignoris titulo mancipia vos obligasse pro mutua quam accepistis pecunia proponatis, horum mancipiorum operis, quas creditor accepit vel quas percipere potuit, in usuras computatis et post in sortem, extenuato debito residuum offerentibus vel, si non accipiat, consignatum deponentibus mancipia vobis praeses provinciae restitui iubebit.

S. V k. Ian. AA. conss.

XXV De Remissione Pignoris

[1] Impp. Severus et Antoninus AA. Proculo. Si te manumissum et in libertate moratum sciente ea, cui pignoris nomine obligatus diceris, praesidi probaveris, ex consensu creditricis remissam pignoris obligationem without your consent the recipient pledged possession to a third party when he (only) had the obligated usufruct, his creditor, by (later) selling what was not covered by the bond of the (original) pledge, cannot deprive you of its ownership. 2. However, if not the usufruct but the property itself was pledged to your creditor, and before the money was paid by the owner (i.e., you), the second pledgee sold the pledge he received, it is established through the constitutions of deified emperors that the sale cannot be set aside when money is paid.

[xii] in id in quo

Posted September 13, in the consulship of Pius and Pontianus (238).

[2] Emperors Diocletian and Maximian Augusti to Gemellus. If a creditor did not sell the possession that was obligated as a pledge by your parents, but (instead) gave it as a pledge to another creditor, you can, after the truth of the matter is examined (in court), pay what is owed on this account to the creditor and recover it (the pledge) through the intervention of the provincial governor.

Posted December 20, in the consulship of the Augusti themselves, Consuls for the fourth and third times, respectively (290).

Twenty-Fourth Title Offspring to a Pledge, and Accessions Generally

[1] Emperor Alexander to Mestrianus. It has long been held that the offspring of a pledged female slave has the same (legal) position as the mother.

Posted May 15, in the consulship of Agricola and Clemens (230).

[2] Emperors Diocletian and Maximian Augusti and the Caesars to Nonnosus and Antoninus. Since you state that you obligated your slaves as a pledge for a loan of money you received, the earnings (operae) of these slaves which the creditor received or could have received are applied first to the interest and then to the principal; and if you, after making these deductions, offer him the remainder or deposit it under seal if he does not accept it, the provincial governor will order their restoration to you.

Written December 28, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

Twenty-Fifth Title Release of a Pledge

[1][86] Emperors Severus and Antoninus to Proculus. If you prove to the governor that you were manumitted (by the debtor) and lived in freedom with the knowledge of the woman to whom you were said to have been pledged, the apparebit, et per hoc iure te manumissum nec ab herede debitricis[xiii] in servitutem peti posse certum est.

[86] Combine with C. 7.8.1.

PP. XII k. Mai. Antonino A. II et Geta II conss.

[2] Imp. Antoninus A. Materno. Si probaveris te fundum mercatum possessionemque eius tibi traditam sciente et consentiente ea, quae sibi eum a venditore obligatum dicit, eam exceptione removebis. nam obligatio pignoris consensu et contrahitur et dissolvitur.

PP. II id. Febr. Antonino A. III et Geta III conss.

[3] Imp. Alexander A. Tauro. Si ignorante vel invito te debitor tuus, qui universa bona sua ob pecuniam debitam tibi obligaverat, etsi cum re publica, postea contraxit, ius tuum non laesit.

PP. III id. April. Albino et Maximo conss.

[4] Imp. Gordianus A. Aquilino. Cum te a debitore mercatum proponas eam rem, quae alii pignerata erat, si sciente eo ac pignus suum remittente eam mercatus es, cum eius consensu nexus pignoris evanuerit, si non nova voluntas intercessit, quae denuo obligationem pignoris constitueret, ea res veluti obstricta non potest vindicari.

PP. XI k. Mai. Gordiano A. et Aviola conss.

[5] Idem A. Asclepiadi. Debitum, cuius meministi, quod per pacti conventionem inutiliter factam remisisti, etiam nunc petere non vetaris et usitato more pignora vindicare.

PP. VI id. Sept. Gordiano A. II et Pompeiano conss.

[6] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. Argio. Si eo tempore, quo praedium distrahebatur, programmate admoniti creditores, cum praesentes essent, ius suum exsecuti non sunt, possunt videri obligationem pignoris amisisse.

PP. III id. Febr. Maximo II et Aquilino conss.

[xiii] [debitricis] <creditoris>

pledge obligation will apparently have been released with the creditor's consent, and thereby it is assured that you were legally manumitted and cannot be reclaimed into servitude by the creditor's heir.

Posted April 20, in the consulship of Antoninus Augustus, for the second time, and Geta, for the second time (205).

[2] Emperor ANTONINUS Augustus to Maternus. If you prove that a farm was sold and its possession handed over to you with the knowledge and consent of the woman who says that it was pledged to her by the seller, you will defeat her by using a defense. For the pledge obligation is both contracted and dissolved by agreement.

Posted February 12, in the consulship of Antoninus Augustus, for the third time, and Geta, for the third time (208).

[3] Emperor ALEXANDER Augustus to Taurus. If your debtor obligated his entire estate to you as a pledge for money owed, and without your knowledge or consent afterwards made a contract even with a municipality, he did not harm your right (to the pledge).

Posted April 11, in the consulship of Albinus and Maximus (227).

[4] Emperor GORDIAN Augustus to Aquilinus. Since you state that you bought from a debtor this property which had been pledged to a third party, if you bought it with his (the pledgee's) knowledge and release of his pledge, the pledge bond disappeared with his consent. If no new agreement intervened that established afresh the pledge obligation, a claim to ownership cannot be brought on the pledge.

Posted April 21, in the consulship of Gordian Augustus and Aviola (239).

[5] The same Augustus to Asclepiades. You are not fordidden from still seeking the debt you mention, which you released through an invalidly formed agreement, and you can claim ownership of the pledges in the usual manner.

Posted August 27, in the consulship of Gordian Augustus, for the second time, and Pompeianus (241).

[6] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti to Argius. If, at the time the (pledged) land was being sold, the creditors were notified by an edictal announcement (programma) when they were present and did not pursue their rights, they can be held to have lost the pledge obligation (by consent).

Posted February 11, in the consulship of Maximus, for the second time, and Aquilinus (286).

[7] Idem AA. Paulo. Creditricem patrui tui sub obligatione fundi, qui per chirographum nexus pignori fuerat, iubentem eandem cautionem reddi pignoris etiam ius remisisse videri manifestum est.

PP. v id. Sept. Diocletiano III et Maximiano AA. conss.

[8] Idem AA. Apollonio. Si hypothecas fisco distrahente creditores silentio tradiderunt negotium, palam est actionem suam amisisse eos, quam in rem habebant. nam fiscalis hastae fides facile convelli non debet.

PP. XIII k. Sept. ipsis IIII et III AA. conss.

[9] Idem AA. Hermiano. pr. Cum ex causa mandati pro socero tuo te fenebrem pecuniam exsolvisse proponas, curabit praeses provinciae in restituenda pecunia, quam pro eo exsolvisti, nec non etiam usuris eius indemnitati tuae prospicere. 1. Nam si recepta a creditore mancipia, quae pignori fuerant data, hac mente socero tuo tradidisti, ut pignoris vinculum dissolvatur, obligatio semel extincta instaurari non potest.

PP. X k. Oct. ipsis IIII et III AA. conss.

[10] Idem AA. et CC. Quintillae. Res pignoris hypothecaeve iure creditoribus obnoxias citra consensum eorum debitores alienantes praecedentem non dissolvunt obligationem.

D. k. Dec. AA. conss.

[11] Imp. Iustinianus A. Iohanni pp. pr. Solita providentia utimur etiam de pignoribus vel hypothecis rerum, quae quibusdam creditoribus suppositae postea a debitoribus venduntur vel alio modo transferuntur creditore suum consensum contractui praebente et quodam legitimo postea modo ad priorem dominum revertuntur. 1. In hoc etenim casu diversae sententiae legum prudentibus habitae sunt, quibusdam dicentibus ius pignoris creditori renovari propter verbum 'futurarum rerum', quod in generalibus hypothecis poni solitum est, aliis penitus extingui. 2. Nobis autem visum est eum, qui semel consensit alienationi

[7] The same Augusti to Paulus. Your paternal uncle's female creditor, who had an encumbrance on a farm bound as a pledge through a promissory note (chirographum), ordered the same document returned (to him). It is evident that she is also held to have released her pledge right.

Posted September 9, in the consulship of Diocletian, for the third time, and Maximian, Augusti (287).

[8] The same Augusti to Apollonius. If the Treasury sold hypothecs and the (other) creditors let this event pass in silence, clearly they have lost any right of action they had in rem. For (a buyer's) reliance on a Treasury sale should not lightly be overturned.

Posted August 20, in the consulship of the Augusti themselves, Consuls for the fourth and third times, respectively (290).

[9] The same Augusti to Hermianus. pr. Since you state that acting on a mandate you repaid an interest-bearing loan for your father-in-law, the provincial governor will take care to look to your indemnification through recovery of the money you paid for him, as well as the interest on it. 1. For if slaves given as pledges (by your father-in-law) were received (by you) from the creditor, and you handed them over to your father-in-law with the intention that the pledge bond be released, the obligation once extinguished cannot be revived (and so your claim to the slaves is lost).

Posted September 22, in the consulship of the Augusti themselves, Consuls for the fourth and third times, respectively (290).

[10] The same Augusti and the Caesars to Quintilla. Debtors who alienate property legally bound to creditors as a pledge or hypothec, without their consent, do not release the preceding obligation.

Given December 1, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[11] Emperor Justinian Augustus to John, Praetorian Prefect. pr. We exercise Our usual watchfulness in connection with pledges and hypothecs that are encumbered to some creditors and afterwards sold or otherwise transferred by debtors with the creditor providing his consent to the contract, should they thereafter in some lawful manner return to their prior owner (the original debtor). 1. For in this case the jurists had different opinions, some saying that the creditor's pledge right is renewed on account of the phrase "of future property" that is usually placed in general hypothecs, and others, that it (the lien) is entirely extinguished (for this particular property).[87] 2. It appears best to Us that when a creditor has once agreed to alienation of a hypothec and thereby hypothecae et hoc modo suum ius respuit, indignum esse eandem rem utpote ab initio ei suppositam vindicare vel tenentem inquietare.

[87] For the former view, see Paul, D. 20.6.10.

D. xv k. Nov. Constantinopoli post consulatum Lampadii et Orestis vv. cc. anno secundo.

XXVI Etiam ob Chirographariam Pecuniam Pignus Teneri

[1] Imp. Gordianus A. Festo. pr. Pignus intercidit, si novatione facta in alium ius obligationis transtulisti nec, ut ea res pignoris nomine teneretur, cautum est. 1. Quod si pactum inter te eumque, qui postea dominus fundi constitutus novam obligationem susceperat, intercessit, ut idem fundus tibi pignoris nomine teneatur, quamvis personali actione expertus feceris condemnationem, pignoris tamen habes persecutionem. 2. Ac si in possessione fueris constitutus, nisi ea quoque pecunia tibi a debitore reddatur vel offeratur, quae sine pignore debetur, eam restituere propter exceptionem doli mali non cogeris. iure enim contendis debitores eam solam pecuniam, cuius nomine pignora obligaverunt, offerentes audiri non oportere, nisi pro illa etiam satisfecerint, quam mutuam simpliciter acceperint. 3. Quod in secundo creditore locum non habet: nec enim necessitas ei imponitur chirographarium etiam debitum priori creditori offerre.

PP. id. Mart. Gordiano A. et Aviola conss.

XXVII De Distractione Pignorum

[1] Imp. Alexander A. Pacatae. Fundum pignori obligatum, si creditor ex fructibus debitum persecutus est, cum ipso iure pignus obligatione liberatum sit, distrahere minime potest.

PP. id. Ian. Maximo II et Aeliano conss.

spurned his own right to it, it is inappropriate that he claim ownership of the same property as pledged to him from the outset, or disturb its holder.

Given October 18, at Constantinople, in the second post-consulate of the viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestes (532).

Twenty-Sixth Title A Pledge Is Also Held for a Debt by Promissory Note (Chirographum)

[1][88] Emperor G*ORDIAN Augustus to Festus.* pr. A (right to a) pledge is lost if by novation (novatio) you transferred to a third party a right from an obligation, but it was not (also) provided that this property be held as a pledge (for the obligation). 1. But if the person who afterwards became owner of the farm and (through a novation) undertook a new obligation (to pay you), made a pact that the same farm be bound to you as a pledge, then although you obtained a judgment in an action in personam (against this person), you can still pursue the pledge. 2. And if you were put into possession (of the farm), (then) unless the debtor returns or tenders to you the money that is owed without a pledge, on the basis of the defense of deceit you are not compelled to restore it. For you rightly contend that when debtors tender only the money for which they have obligated pledges, they should not be heard (by the judge) unless they give satisfaction also for that which they take on a simple loan (without security). 3. This rule does not apply to a subsequent creditor; for he is also not obligated to tender to the prior creditor a debt based on a promissory note (chirographum).

Posted March 15, in the consulship of Gordian Augustus and Aviola (239).

Twenty-Seventh Title Sale of Pledges[89]

[1] Emperor A*LEXANDER Augustus to Pacata.* If a creditor recoups his debt from the fruits of a farm pledged to him, since the pledge is (thereby) freed by operation of law from the obligation, he can hardly sell it.

Posted January 13, in the consulship of Maximus, for the second time, and Aelianus (223).

[88] = C. 8.13.8 (in part). Blume: "The case supposed [in the principium] is as follows: A, debtor of B and owner of property pledged to the latter, sold the land to C and the agreement was made [through a novation] that C should be held for the debt. Here was a new debtor, and in order to keep the lien alive, agreement to that effect was required to be made with C. See also D. 20.4.3 pr." The remainder of the fragment explores variations on this scenario. In section 3, chirographaria pecunia is an unsecured debt, evidenced only by a duebill without security. Blume: "Not only was the property bound for the debt expressly secured thereby, but it was also bound, in case the property was delivered into the possession of the creditor, for an unsecured debt, as against a demand made by the debtor."

[89] Distractio pignorum; see D. 20.5. Upon the debtor's default, the seller is frequently allowed to dispose of the pledge by selling it.

[2] Idem A. Maximo. Creditor, qui hypothecae seu pignori rem sibi nexam vendiderit, rem litigiosam non videtur vendere, quia precario debitor possidet.

PP. XII k. Oct. Maximo II et Aeliano conss.

[3] Idem A. Luciano. Hypothecis vel pignoribus a creditore venumdatis in id quod deest adversus reum vel fideiussorem actio competit.

PP. III non. Nov. Maximo II et Aeliano conss.

[4] Idem A. Crescenti. Creditor hypothecas sive pignus cum proscribit, notum debitori facere, si bona fide rem gerit et quando licet testato dicere debet. si quid itaque per fraudem in pignore villae venditae commissum probare potes, ut inferatur actio, quae eo nomine competit, adi eum cuius de ea re notio est.

PP. k. Iun. Fusco et Dextro conss.

[5] Idem A. Sossiano. Si residuum debiti paratus es solvere, praeses provinciae dabit arbitrum, apud quem, quantum sit quod superest ex debito, examinabitur: et sive ad iudicem venire diversa pars cessaverit sive oblato superfluo ad venditionem prosiluerit, improba alienatio proprietatis tuae ius non auferet.

PP. XII k. Aug. Pompeiano et Peligno conss.

[6] Imp. Gordianus A. Rogato. Quamdiu non est integra pecunia creditori numerata, etiamsi pro parte maiore eam consecutus sit, distrahendi rem obligatam non amittit facultatem.

PP. XIII k. Sept. Pio et Pontiano conss.

[7] Idem A. Caro. Si cessante solutione creditor non reluctante lege contractus ea quae pignori sibi nexa erant distraxit, revocari venditionem iniquum est, cum, si quid in ea re fraudulenter fecerit, non emptor a te, sed creditor conveniendus sit.

PP. V k. Nov. Pio et Pontiano conss.

[8] Idem A. Maximo. Si prius, quam distraheretur pignorata possessio, pecuniam creditori obtulisti, eoque non accipiente contestatione facta eam deposuisti et hodieque in eadem causa permanet, pignoris

[2] The same Augustus to Maximus. A creditor who sells property that is bound to him as a hypothec or pledge is not held to sell property in litigation, since the debtor (only) possesses it on sufferance (precario).

Posted September 20, in the consulship of Maximus, for the second time, and Aelianus (223).

[3] The same Augustus to Lucianus. When hypothecs or pledges are sold by a creditor, an action lies against the debtor or his surety for the amount that remains due.

Posted November 3, in the consulship of Maximus, for the second time, and Aelianus (223)

[4] The same Augustus to Crescens. When a creditor advertises (the sale of) hypothecs or pledges, if he acts in good faith he should make this known to the debtor, and, if possible, in the presence of witnesses. So if you can prove that anything fraudulent occurred in the pledge of the villa that was sold, go before the person with jurisdiction in order to bring the action that lies on this account.

Posted June 1, in the consulship of Fuscus and Dexter (225).

[5] The same Augustus to Sossianus. If you are prepared to pay the remainder of the debt, the provincial governor will appoint an arbitrator before whom an examination will be held as to the remainder due. And whether your adversary failed to come before the judge or proceeded to sell after tender of the remainder, this improper alienation of your property does not take away your right.

Posted July 21, in the consulship of Pompeianus and Pelignus (231).

[6] Emperor Gordian Augustus to Rogatus. As long as the entire amount due has not been paid to the creditor, even if he has obtained the larger part of it, he does not lose the right to sell the obligated property.

Posted August 20, in the consulship of Pius and Pontianus (238).

[7] The same Augustus to Carus. If a debt remained unpaid and the creditor, without violating the contract's terms, sold the property obligated as a pledge, it is unjust that the sale be rescinded, since, if he (the creditor) acted at all fraudulently in this matter, you (as the debtor) must sue not the buyer but the creditor.

Posted October 28, in the consulship of Pius and Pontianus (238).

[8] The same Augustus to Maximus. If you tendered the money to the creditor before the pledged possession was sold, and when he refused (to take it) you deposited it in the presence of witnesses (contestatio) and it also remains today in the same condition, the sale of the pledge is invalid. But if he exercised the distractio non valet. quod si prius, quam offerres, legem venditionis exercuit, quod iure subsistit revocari non debet.

PP. III non. April. Gordiano A. et Aviola conss.

[9] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. Cyrillo. Quae specialiter vobis obligata sunt, debitoribus detractantibus solutionem bona fide debetis et sollemniter vendere: ita enim parebit, an ex pretio pignoris debito satisfieri potest. quod si quid deerit, non prohibemini etiam cetera bona iure conventionis consequi.

PP. XIII k. Iun. Diocletiano III et Maximiano AA. conss.

[10] Idem AA. Rufino. pr. Et qui sub imagine alterius personae, quam supposuerat, iugiter tenet, cum sibi negotium gerat, alienasse non videtur. iure enim pignoris obligatum praedium neque si per subiectam personam creditor comparaverit neque si sibi addixerit, debitori adfert praeiudicium, sed in eadem causa permanet, in qua fuit ante huiusmodi collusionem. 1. Sane si debitore distrahente comparaverit, consensu emptionem perfectam, si neque dolus adversarii neque metus causa gesta arguentur, revocari exemplo grave est. 2. Si igitur poteris evidentibus probationibus monstrare creditorem per suppositam imaginarii emptoris personam semper possessionem tenuisse nec vendita bona fide praedia postea sinceriter comparasse, potes oblata pecunia cum usuris ad restitutionem creditorem compellere.

PP. III non. Oct. ipsis IIII et III AA. conss.

[11] Idem AA. et CC. Rufinae. Mulier licet res specialiter pignori dederit pro alio, creditor eas distrahendi non habet facultatem, nisi dissimulatione, marito obligante velut proprias, creditoris ignorantiam circumscripserit.

PP. V k. Mai. Heracliae AA. conss.

[12] Idem AA. et CC. Zotico. Si debitor rem tibi iure pignoris obligatam te non consentiente distraxit, dominium cum sua causa transtulit ad emptorem.

S. prid. k. Mai. Heracliae AA. conss.

(right of) sale of the pledge before you tendered (repayment), what took place legally should not be rescinded.

Posted April 3, in the consulship of Gordian Augustus and Aviola (239).

[9] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti to Cyrillus. As to property specially obligated to you, if debtors refuse to pay you should sell it in good faith and with due process; for in this way it will appear whether the debt can be satisfied from the price of the pledge. But if anything remains due, you are not prevented by the agreement's terms from pursuing the remaining property.[90]

Posted May 20, in the consulship of Diocletian, for the third time, and Maximian, Augusti (287).

[10] The same Augusti to Rufinus. pr. A person who (pretends to sell a pledge but) continues to hold it under the name of another person whom he has substituted (for himself), is not held to have alienated since he only negotiated with himself. So if through a suppositious person a creditor purchases property obligated as a pledge, or if he knocks it down to himself (in an auction), he does not prejudice the debtor; it remains in the same condition as it was before such collusion. 1. Of course, if he bought it when the debtor was seller, and if the sale was made by agreement and without allegations of the other party's deceit or duress, it is a bad example to rescind it. 2. If, therefore, you can show by clear evidence that the creditor, through the suppositious person of an imaginary buyer, had held continuous possession and had not later truthfully bought the property in good faith, you can force restitution from the creditor by tendering the money with interest.

Posted October 5, in the consulship of the Augusti themselves, Consuls for the fourth and third times, respectively (290).

[11] The same Augusti and the Caesars to Rufina. Although on behalf of a third party a woman gives a specific item as a pledge, the creditor lacks the right to sell it unless she cheated an innocent creditor through a pretense, (e.g.,) when her husband pledged the property as if he was his own.

Posted April 27, at Heraclea, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[12] The same Augusti and Caesars to Zoticus. If without your consent a debtor sold property obligated as a pledge to you, he transferred ownership to the buyer with this lien against it (cum sua causa).

Written April 30, at Heraclea, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[90] Reference is to a process called distractio bonorum, available to creditors against defaulting debtors. The pledge agreement does not protect the debtor's other property from possible subsequent seizure.

[13] Idem AA. et CC. Theodotae. Qui praedium obligatum a creditore comparavit, si in vacuam possessionem inductus non est, nullam in rem actionem habet.

[14] Idem AA. et CC. Modesto. Si in hoc quod iure debetur tibi satisfactum non fuit, et debitoribus res obligatas tenentibus aditus praeses provinciae tibi distrahendi iubebit fieri facultatem.

PP. XVI k. Dec. Sirmi AA. conss.

[15] Idem AA. et CC. Avianae. Obligatis pignori mancipiis a creditore distractis ac traditis si post debitor quondam haec sollicitaverit, non venditori, sed emptori contra possidentem in rem competit actio.

D. k. Mart. Sirmi CC. conss.

[16] Idem AA. et CC. Silvano. Unus ex multis debitoris qui pignora tradiderat heredibus, quod ab eo personali actione peti potuit, solvendo res obligatas distrahendi creditori facultatem non ademit.

S. III non. April. CC. conss.

[17] Idem AA. et CC. Agapae. Rei creditor obligatae generali sive speciali conventione per creditorem alium, cui non fuerat nexa, venumdatae non amittit persecutionem.

D. prid. non. April. CC. conss.

[18] Idem AA. et CC. Gaiano. Qui a creditore pignori obligatum iure emit, de proprietate vinci non potest.

Subscripta VI k. Mai. CC. conss.

[19] Idem AA. et CC. Liviae. Si maritus tuus mutuam, licet tuam, dedit pecuniam, eorum, quae pignoris titulo accepit, si ei non successisti, distrahendi nomine tuo nullam habes facultatem.

S. VI id. Nov. Heracliae CC. conss.

[20] Idem AA. et CC. Sabino. Secundum placiti fidem, si nihil convenit specialiter, pignoribus a creditore maiore quam ei debebatur pretio distractis, licet ex eo fundus comparatus sit, non super hoc in rem, sed in personam, id est pigneraticia, de superfluo competit actio.

S. IIII id. Nov. Byzantio CC. conss.

[13] The same Augusti and Caesars to Theodota. A person who bought obligated property from a creditor, if he is not put into quiet possession, has no action in rem.

[14] The same Augusti and Caesars to Modestus. If you had not been satisfied as to the amount lawfully due you, and the debtors hold the obligated property, the provincial governor will direct that you have the legal opportunity to sell it.
Posted November 16, at Sirmium, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[15] The same Augusti and Caesars to Aviana. When slaves obligated as pledges were sold and handed over by the creditor, if the debtor then incites them (to run away), the action in rem against the possessor falls not to the seller but to the buyer.
Given March 1, at Sirmium, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[16] The same Augusti and Caesars to Silvanus. One from among many heirs of a debtor who had handed over pledges (to a creditor) does not remove the creditor's right to sell the obligated property by paying what could be claimed from him in an action in personam.
Written April 3, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[17] The same Augusti and Caesars to Agapa. A creditor to whom a thing is obligated by a general or specific agreement does not lose the right to pursue it when it is sold by another creditor to whom it had not been bound.
Given April 4, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[18] The same Augusti and Caesars to Gaianus. A person who lawfully buys pledged property from a creditor cannot be defeated as to ownership.
Signed April 26, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[19] The same Augusti and Caesars to Livia. If your husband made a loan of money although it was yours, unless you are his heir you have no right to sell in your own name the property he received as a pledge.
Written November 8, at Heraclea, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[20] The same Augusti and Caesars to Sabinus. If, pursuant to an agreement, pledges were sold by the creditor for a larger amount than was owed, and there was no special agreement (on this point), no action in rem lies on this even though a farm was purchased from it (the surplus); but there is an action in personam, i.e., on the pledge, for the surplus.
Written November 10, at Byzantium, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

XXVIII Debitorem Venditionem Pignorum Impedire Non Posse

[1] Impp. Severus et Antoninus AA. Marcello. Si sunt, qui emere praedia tibi obligata velint, non impediuntur scriptura testamenti, qua complexus est debitor nulla a se praedia venumdari et poenam addidit, ut fisci fierent. nec enim potuisse eum huiusmodi lege ius creditoris facere deterius manifestum est.

D. VI k. Mai. Apro et Maximo conss.

[2] Imp. Gordianus A. Nepoti. pr. Debitoris denuntiatio, qui creditori suo, ne sibi rem pignori obligatam distrahat, vel his qui ab eo volunt comparare denuntiat, ita demum efficax est, si universum tam sortis quam usurarum offerat debitum creditori eoque non accipiente idonea fide probationis ita ut oportet depositum ostendat. 1. Nam si vel modicum de sorte vel usuris in debito perseveret, distractio rei obligatae non potest impediri, neque ea ratione emptor, tametsi sciat interpositam a debitore creditori denuntiationem, mala fide fit possessor.

PP. III non. Aug. Gordiano A. et Aviola conss.

XXVIIII Si Vendito Pignore Agatur

[1] Imp. Alexander A. Agrippae. pr. Praeses provinciae aditus, si probatum fuerit tuum creditorem, cui ius distrahendi pignora fuit, dolo malo fundum vendidisse, quanti tua interest restituere tibi eundem creditorem iubebit. 1. Quod si de bonis creditoris condemnati solvi pecunia non potuerit et probatum fuerit emptorem mala fide emisse, offerenti pecuniam cum usuris, quanti fundus veniit, restituere tibi fundum cum fructibus malae fidei emptorem iubebit.

PP. k. Sept. Alexandro A. cons.

[2] Idem A. Aemilio. Servos, quos nullo iure a creditore venisse dicis, pater tuus vel tu, si hereditas eius ad te pertinet, a possessoribus petere potes. quod si usucapti sunt, petat pater tuus pretium eorum a creditore, qui non iure eos servos vendidit.

PP. III k. Ian. Alexandro A. cons.

Twenty-Eighth Title A Debtor Cannot Prevent the Sale of Pledges

[1] Emperors SEVERUS and ANTONINUS Augusti to Marcellus. If there are parties wishing to buy the land obligated to you, they are not prevented (from doing so) by a provision in the debtor's will stating that no land be sold by him (the creditor) and adding as a penalty that (if this condition is violated) it becomes the Treasury's. For it is obvious that he could not diminish the creditor's right by such a directive.

Given April 26, in the consulship of Aper and Maximus (207).

[2] Emperor GORDIAN Augustus to Nepos. pr. A notice from a debtor warning his creditor not to sell property obligated as a pledge, or those who wish to buy from him (not to do so), is effective only if he offers his creditor the entire debt, both principal and interest, or, if he (the creditor) does not accept, he shows with sufficiently convincing proof that it was properly deposited (in escrow). 1. For if even a small amount of debt remains from the principal or interest, sale of the obligated property cannot be prevented, nor does the buyer become for this reason a possessor in bad faith even if he knows of the notice given to the creditor by the debtor.

Posted August 3, in the consulship of Gordian Augustus and Aviola (239).

Twenty-Ninth Title If Suit Is Brought After a Pledge Is Sold

[1] Emperor ALEXANDER Augustus to Agrippa. pr. If it is proven that your creditor, who had a right to sell pledges, fraudulently sold a (pledged) farm, the provincial governor, if approached, will order the same creditor to restore your interest (quanti tua interest) to you (as damages). 1. But if the money (damages) cannot be (fully) paid from the condemned creditor's estate, (then) if you offer (to the buyer) as much money as the farm was sold for along with with interest on it, he will order a buyer in bad faith to restore to you the farm along with the fruits (from it).

Posted September 1, in the consulship of Alexander Augustus (222).

[2] The same Augustus to Aemilius. Your father, or you if his inheritance comes to you, can claim from their possessors the slaves that you say were sold by a creditor without any right. But if they were usucapted, your father should claim their price from the creditor who unrightfully sold these slaves.

Posted December 30, in the consulship of Alexander Augustus (222).

[3] Idem A. Claudio. Si uxor tua praesidi probaverit, cum aureos triginta deberet, servos suos amplioris pretii per gratiam aureis viginti creditorem venumdedisse eumque solvendo non fuisse, iubebit emptores recepto pretio restituere servos.
PP. XVI k. Oct. Maximo II et Aeliano conss.

[4] Imp. Gordianus A. Eudemo. Cum contra bonam fidem venditionem obligatae possessionis a creditore factam adleges, non observatis, quae in distrahendis pignoribus celebrari consueverunt, adito praeside provinciae experire actione competenti non tantum adversus creditorem, verum etiam adversus possessorem, si fraudem eum participasse cum creditore potueris docere, ut revocatis, quae mala fide gesta constiterit, et fructuum ratio et damni quod inrogatum apparuerit haberi possit.
PP. k. April. Sabino II et Venusto conss.

[5] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. et CC. Nonnae. Si creditore pignus priusquam ei satisfieret distrahente non per collusionem emptor comparavit, successor eius de superfluo, non emptoris heres, qui rem possidet, conveniendus est.
S. XVI k. Ian. Nicomediae CC. conss.

XXX De Luitione Pignoris

[1] Impp. Severus et Antoninus AA. Antiochiae. Qui pro parte heres extitit, nisi totum debitum exsolvat, suam portionem ex pignoribus recipere non potest.
PP. III k. April. Albino et Aemiliano conss.

[2] Imp. Gordianus A. Domitio. Intellegere debes vincula pignoris durare personali actione submota.
PP. XII k. Iun. Sabino II et Venusto conss.

[3] The same Augustus to Claudius. If your wife proves to the governor that when she owed 30 gold pieces, her creditor through favoritism sold her (pledged) slaves, worth more, for 20 gold pieces, and that he is (now) insolvent, he (the governor) will order the buyers to restore the slaves when they receive their price.

Posted September 16, in the consulship of Maximus, for the second time, and Aelianus (223).

[4] Emperor GORDIAN Augustus to Eudemus. Since you allege that obligated property was sold by your creditor contrary to good faith, the customary practices in selling pledges having been ignored, go before the provincial governor to bring the proper action not just against the creditor, but also against the possessor if you can show that he conspired with the creditor in the fraud, in order that whatever it is established was done in bad faith can be revoked, and an accounting be made both of the fruits (fructus) and of the loss apparently inflicted.

Posted April 1, in the consulship of Sabinus, for the second time, and Venustus (240).

[5] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti and the Caesars to Nonna. If a seller sold a pledge before he was satisfied (as to the debt) and a buyer purchased it without collusion, his (the creditor's) successor, and not the buyer's heir who possesses the property, should be sued concerning a surplus (from the sale).

Written December 17, at Nicomedia, in the consulship of the Caesars (294)

Thirtieth Title Redemption of a Pledge[91]

[1] Emperors SEVERUS and ANTONINUS Augusti to Antiochia. An heir to a portion (of an estate) cannot recover his portion of the pledges (held by the decedent's creditor) unless he pays off the entire debt.

Posted March 30, in the consulship of Albinus and Aemilianus (206).

[2] Emperor GORDIAN Augustus to Domitius. You should realize that the lien of a pledge remains in force when an action in personam (for the debt) is barred (by limitation).

Posted May 21, in the consulship of Sabinus, for the second time, and Venustus (240).

[91] See D. 20.5.

[3] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. et CC. Floro. Si reddita debita quantitate vel rebus in solutum datis sive distractis compensato pretio satis ei contra quem supplicas factum adito praeside probaveris, vel, si quod residuum debetur, obtuleris ac, si non acceperit, deposueris consignatum, restitui tibi res pacto pignoris obligatas providebit, cum etiam edicto perpetuo, actione proposita pecunia soluta creditori vel si per eum factum sit, quominus solveretur, ad reddenda quae pignoris acceperat iure eum satis evidenter urgueri manifestum sit.

S. VI id. Oct. AA. conss.

XXXI Si Unus ex Pluribus Heredibus Creditoris vel Debitoris Partem Suam Debiti Solverit vel Acceperit

[1] Impp. Valerianus et Gallienus AA. Tauro. Manifesti et indubitati iuris est defuncto creditore multis relictis heredibus actionem quidem personalem inter eos ex lege duodecim tabularum dividi, pignus vero in solidum unicuique teneri.

D. XV k. Mai. ipsis IIII et III AA. conss.

[2] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. et CC. Claudiae. Actio quidem personalis inter heredes pro singulis portionibus quaesita scinditur, pignoris autem iure multis obligatis rebus, quas diversi possident, cum eius vindicatio non personam obliget, sed rem sequitur qui possident, tenentes non pro modo singularum substantiae conveniuntur, sed in solidum, ut vel totum debitum reddant vel eo quod detinent cedant.

S. V k. Nov. Anchiali CC. conss.

XXXII Si Pignoris Conventionem Numeratio Secuta Non Sit

[1] Impp. Severus et Antoninus AA. Hilaro. Si pecuniam tibi non esse numeratam atque ideo frustra cautionem emissam et pignus datum probaturus es, in rem experiri potes: nam intentio dati pignoris neque

[3] Emperors Diocletian and Maximian Augusti and the Caesars to Florus. If you approach the governor and prove that you satisfied the party against whom you petition (i.e., your creditor) by paying the amount owed or by giving property in payment or by selling it for an offsetting price, or if you tender the remainder due and, if he does not accept it, deposit it under seal, he (the governor) will see to it that the property obligated by the pledge pact is restored to you, since also under the Perpetual Edict it is clear that if money has been paid to the creditor or if he is at fault for its non-payment, he may, through the promised action, quite manifestly be compelled at law to return what he took as a pledge.

Written October 10, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

Thirty-First Title If One or More Heirs of a Creditor or Debtor Pays or Receives His Share of a Debt

[1] Emperors Valerian and Gallienus to Taurus. The law is clear and undisputed that when a creditor dies leaving many heirs, an action in personam is indeed apportioned among them by the law of the Twelve Tables,[92] but a pledge is held jointly (in solidum) for each of them.

Given April 17, in the consulship of the Augusti themselves, Consuls for the fourth and third times, respectively (257).

[2] Emperors Diocletian and Maximian Augusti and the Caesars to Claudia. An action in personam brought among the heirs is apportioned according to their individual shares, but when many things, possessed by various persons, are obligated as pledges, since an ownership claim (vindicatio) does not bind the person (i.e., is not in personam) but follows the object, the possessing holders are sued not proportionately to their individual assets, but jointly (in solidum), that they either pay the entire debt or surrender what they hold.

Written October 28, at Anchialus, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

Thirty-Second Title If Payment Does Not Follow a Pledge Agreement

[1][93] Emperors Severus and Antoninus Augusti to Hilarus. If you will have shown that the money (that a third party agreed to lend you) was not paid and that therefore your written promise (of repayment; cautio) and a pledge were [92] XII Tab. 5.9.

[93] = C. 4.30.1.

redditae pecuniae non aliter tenebit, quam si de fide debiti constiterit. eademque ratione veritas servetur, si te possidente pignus adversarius tuus agere coeperit.

PP. k. Sept. Laterano et Rufino conss.

[2] Imp. Alexander A. Peregrino. Si, ut nunc adseveras, nihil creditor numeravit uxori tuae quae pignus dedit, sed inanem extorsit cautionem, mendaci scriptura contra fidem veritatis obligari eius res non potest.

S. sine die et conss.

XXXIII De Iure Dominii Impetrando

[1] Imp. Alexander A. Nicolaae. Dominii iure pignora possidere desiderans nomina debitorum, quos in solutione cessare dicis, exprimere et, an sollemnia peregisti, significare debuisti, dummodo scias omnia bona debitoris, qui pignori dedit, ut universa dominio tuo generaliter addicantur, impetrare te non posse.

PP. XIII k. Dec. Alexandro A. III et Dione conss.

[2] Imp. Gordianus A. Iustae. Si creditor pignus iure dominii a nostra serenitate possidere petiit et post formam praescripti alio anno usuras a vobis accepit, a beneficio impetrato recessisse videtur.

PP. prid. non. Dec. Pio et Pontiano conss.

[3] Imp. Iustinianus A. Demostheni pp. pr. Vetustissimam observationem, quae nullatenus in ipsis rerum claruit documentis, penitus esse duximus amputandam, immo magis clarioribus remediis corrigendam. igitur in pignoribus, quae iure dominii possidere aliquis cupiebat, given (to him) without a basis, you can sue in rem (to recover the pledge). For a claim that a pledge was given but the money not repaid (by the debtor) is only effective if there is no doubt as to the debt. For the same reason the truth will be upheld if your adversary commences an action against you while you possess the pledge.

Posted September 1, in the consulship of Lateranus and Rufinus (197).

[2] Emperor ALEXANDER Augustus to Peregrinus. If, as you now allege, a creditor paid nothing to your wife after she gave him a pledge, but extracted a written promise (cautio) without legal foundation, her property cannot be obligated by a deceitful writing that is contrary to the truth.[94]

Written without day and year (222–235).

Thirty-Third Title Acquiring Ownership (of a Pledge)

[1] Emperor ALEXANDER Augustus to Nicolaa. Since you want to possess pledges as their owner, you should write out the names of the debtors who you claim have defaulted on payment, and indicate whether you have fulfilled the legal requirements – as long as you realize that you cannot (in fact) acquire the entire estate of a debtor who gave a pledge that it all be generally assigned to your ownership.[95]

Posted November 19, in the consulship of Alexander Augustus, for the third time, and Dio (229).

[2] Emperor GORDIAN Augustus to Justa. If a creditor sought from Our Serenity to possess a pledge as its owner and he (then) received interest from you for another year after issuance of a ruling,[96] he seems to have abandoned the privilege that he obtained.

Posted December 4, in the consulship of Pius and Pontianus (238).

[3] Emperor JUSTINIAN Augustus to Demosthenes, Praetorian Prefect.[97] pr. An ancient observance, which was nowhere patent in the documentary evidence, We hold should be thoroughly abolished, or rather corrected through clearer remedies. So in the case of pledges that someone wanted to possess as owner, public advertisement and the obsolete year for redemption were introduced [94] On this subject, see more fully C. 4.30.

[95] Blume: "The right of the emperor to give the ownership of pledged property to a pledgee or mortgagee, if no purchaser could be found, was one of the peculiar provisions of the Roman law ... The emperor would not ... set over all of the property of a debtor if a lien had been given thereon, but he would assign only a specific portion, which would equal the debt."

[96] Meaning uncertain; possibly post formam rescripti should be read.

[97] If the date in the subscription is correct, the addressee should be Julian, not Demosthenes.

ipsi debitori servatum. 4c. Et ne ex communicatione fiat aliqua difficultas, licentia dabitur creditori seu domino aestimationem superflui debitori vel creditori debitoris cum competenti cautela in eum exponenda offerre.

5. Sin vero creditor, postquam iure dominii hoc possideat, vendere hoc maluerit, liceat quidem ei hoc facere, si quid autem superfluum sit, debitori servare. 5a. Sin autem dubitatio exorta fuerit pro venditione utpote viliore pretio facta, sacramenti religionem creditor praestare compellatur, quod nulla machinatione vel circumscriptione usus est, sed tanti vendidit rem, quanti potuerit venire: et hoc tantummodo reddi, quod ex iuramento superfluum fuerit visum. 5b. Sin autem ex iureiurando etiam minus habuisse creditor inveniatur, in residuo habeat integram actionem. 6. Aestimationem autem pignoris, donec apud creditorem eundemque dominum permaneat, sive amplioris sive minoris quantum ad debitum quantitatis est, iudicialis esse volumus disceptationis, ut, quod iudex super hoc statuerit, hoc in aestimatione pignoris obtineat.

D. xv k. April. Constantinopoli Lampadio et Oreste vv. cc. conss.

XXXIIII De Pactis Pignorum et de Commissoria Lege in Pignoribus Rescindenda

[1] Imp. Alexander A. Victorino. Qui pactus est, nisi intra certum tempus pecuniam quam mutuam accepit solveret, cessurum creditoribus, hypothecae venditionem non contraxit, sed id comprehendit, quod iure suo creditor in adipiscendo pignore habiturus erat. communi itaque iure creditor hypothecam vendere debet.

PP. id. Oct. Alexandro A. cons.

[2] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. et CC. Dionysio. Si fundi nomine, quem vendideras, emptori ab alio mota proprietatis quaestione alterum fundum pro eius evictione pignoris hypothecaeve titulo emptionis instrumentis ea lege dedisti, ut, quem secundo tradideras, si is quem vendideras evictus non fuerit, obtineas, de hoc contra eum qui moverat quaestionem lata sententia emptori parata securitate, circa eum quem obligaveras restituendum conventionis fidem impleri, si negotium integrum est, praeses iubebit.

S. k. Dec. Sirmi AA. conss.

debtor or the debtor himself. 4c. And to prevent some difficulty arising from their shared interest (in the value of the pledge), the creditor or owner will have permission to tender (to the debtor) an assessment of the excess, or (else) to the debtor's creditor with an adequate guarantee given to him (the debtor).

5. But if the creditor, after he possesses it as owner, prefers to sell it, he may do so while preserving to the debtor any excess. 5a. But if question is raised about a sale being for a cheaper price (than the pledge was worth), the creditor shall be forced to take an oath that he employed no ruse or fraud, but sold the object for as much as it was possible to get; and what is returned is only that which appears from his oath to be excess. 5b. But if from his oath the creditor is found to have less (than the debt), he has his full right of action as to the remainder. 6. As long as the property remains with the creditor and simultaneous owner, We wish the assessment of its value, whether at an amount more or less than the debt, to be a matter for judicial determination, so that what the judge fixes as to it shall be considered the value of the pledge.

Given March 18, at Constantinople, in the consulship of the viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestes.

Thirty-Fourth Title Pledge Agreements and Abolition of the Forfeiture Clause for Pledges[98]

[1] Emperor ALEXANDER Augustus to Victorinus. A person who agreed that unless within a fixed time he repaid a loan he received, he would yield (pledges) to his creditors, did not contract the sale of a hypothec, but achieved (only) what the creditor would rightfully have (anyway) in getting the pledge. The creditor, accordingly, should sell the hypothec by the general law (for pledges).

Posted October 15, in the consulship of Alexander Augustus (222).

[2] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti and the Caesars to Dionysius. You sold a farm and a third party then raised a dispute over its ownership with the buyer. To provide against eviction, you gave (the buyer) a second farm as a pledge or hypothec, (as stated) in the sale documents, on this condition: that if the farm you sold was not evicted, you would recover the second one you had handed over. If a decision on this went against the person who raised the dispute, with security (thereby) having been provided to the buyer, the governor will order, regarding restoration of the farm you had obligated, that the agreement be fulfilled if the matter remains (still) in the status quo.

Written December 1, at Sirmium, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[98] A lex commissoria was a condition allowing the pledge's forfeiture to the creditor if payment was not made within the time set. It is abolished by 3 below. See D. 20.1.

[3] Imp. Constantinus A. ad populum. pr. Quoniam inter alias captiones praecipue commissoriae pignorum legis crescit asperitas, placet infirmari eam et in posterum omnem eius memoriam aboleri. 1. Si quis igitur tali contractu laborat, hac sanctione respiret, quae cum praeteritis praesentia quoque depellit et futura prohibet. creditores enim re amissa iubemus recuperare quod dederunt.

D. II k. Febr. Serdicae Constantino A. VII et Constantio C. conss.

XXXV De Exceptionibus sive Praescriptionibus

[1] Imp. Antoninus A. Claudio. Debitores quidem hereditarii unicuique heredum pro portione hereditaria antiqua lege obligati sunt. sed si eis heredibus omnem pecuniam exsolvisti, quibus nomen patris tui testator in divisione adscripserat, doli mali exceptione adversus alios agentes tueri te potes.

PP. XV k. Aug. duobus Aspris conss.

[2] Idem A. Iulio. Pro portione tua, qua domum ad te pertinere dicis, si iudicatum non est, actiones dirigere potes. nam exceptio rei iudicatae ei demum obstat vel successoribus eius, inter quos cognitum super ea re et pronuntiatum est.

PP. XV k. Mart. Antonino A. IIII et Balbino conss.

[3] Idem A. Vitali. Adversus fratrem tuum quondam tutorem legitimum tutelae iudicio si expertus non es, proposita actione consiste. nec timueris exceptionem pacti, si in eo fraudem dolumque admissum probare potes: nam replicatio doli opposita bonae fidei iudicium facit et commentum fraudis repellit.

[4] Imp. Alexander A. Iunio et aliis. Cum nondum finitam sententia causam, sed dilatam adlegetis, non est dubium omnes integras defensiones vobis esse.

[3][99] Emperor Constantine Augustus to the people. pr. Since, among other frauds, the harshness of the forfeiture clause (lex commissoria) for pledges has grown conspicuously, it is held that it is void and that all remembrance of it is permanently abolished. 1. If, therefore, anyone is burdened with such a contract, he may recover his breath through the present enactment which invalidates both current and past (agreements) and prohibits future ones. For We order that creditors lose the (obligated) property while recovering what they gave.

Given January 31, at Serdica, in the consulship of Constantine Augustus, for the seventh time, and Constantius Caesar (326).

Thirty-Fifth Title Defenses or Prescriptions[100]

[1] Emperor Antoninus Augustus to Claudius. By ancient law, debtors of an inheritance are obligated to each of the heirs proportionally to their share. But if you have paid all the money (that is due) to those heirs to whom the testator bequeathed your father's account in his division (of the estate), by the defense of deceit (exceptio doli mali) you can protect yourself against a suit by third parties (i.e., other heirs).

Posted July 18, in the consulship of the two Aspri (212).

[2] The same Augustus to Julius. If this has not been (specifically) adjudicated, you can bring actions for your share in the home that you say belongs to you. For the defense of previous adjudication (exceptio rei iudicatae) is good only against a man and his heirs among whom a case has been tried and a decision rendered on this matter.

Posted February 15, in the consulship of Antoninus, for the fourth time, and Balbinus (213).

[3] The same Augustus to Vitalis. If you have not previously brought suit against your brother and your former statutory tutor, then persist in the pending action. Nor need you fear the defense of a pact (exceptio pacti) if you can prove it was made through fraud and deceit, for juxtaposing the counterdefense of deceit (replicatio doli) makes the action one of good faith and defeats the fraudulent invention.[101]

[4] Emperor Alexander Augustus to Junius and others. Since you allege that your case is not yet ended with a judgment, but is (only) continued, there is no doubt that you have all defenses unimpaired.

[99] = C.Th. 3.2.1; combine with C. 8.57.1 and 10.19.2, C.Th. 4.11.3 (but the subscriptions vary).

[100] "Defenses" (exceptiones) are often mingled, in later Roman civil procedure, with "prescriptions" (praescriptiones) limiting the scope of judicial formulas. "Counterdefenses" (replicationes) are plaintiff responses to defenses. See D. 44.1; Inst. 4.13.

[101] Blume: "This law deals with the defense of a pact not to sue, and the replication of fraud."

PP. II non. Oct. Maximo II et Aeliano conss.

[5] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. et CC. Basilio. Licet unde vi interdictum intra annum locum habet, tamen exceptione perpetua ei succurri, qui per vim expulsus post retinuit possessionem, auctoritate iuris manifestatur.

S. k. Mai. Trallis AA. conss.

[6] Idem AA. et CC. Helenae. Si pactum intercessit, in exceptione sine temporis praefinitione de dolo replicari potest.

S. k. Sept. Viminacii AA. conss.

[7] Idem AA. et CC. Menandrae. Si ex maiore debiti quantitate minor tibi soluta est nec liberationem debitori tuo praestitisti, petere quod non probatur redditum, contra exceptionem pacti replicatione tuam adiuvans intentionem, minime prohiberis.

S. II k. Mart. CC. conss.

[8] Idem AA. et CC. Aurelio. Praescriptionem peremptoriam, quam ante contestari sufficit, vel omissam, priusquam sententia feratur, obicere quandoque licet.

S. XV k. Nov. CC. conss.

[9] Idem AA. et CC. Muciano. Si quidem intentionem actoris probatione deficere confidis, nulla tibi defensio necessaria est. si vero de hac confitendo exceptione te munitum adseveres, de hac tantum agi convenit. nam si etiam de intentione dubitas, habita de exceptione contestatione tunc demum, cum intentionem secundum adseverationem suam petitor probaverit, huic esse locum monstrari convenit.

S. III non. Nov. Burtudizi CC. conss.

[10] Idem AA. et CC. Aquilinae. Non exceptionibus actores, quibus reis auxilium tribuitur certis ex causis, sed replicationibus suam intentionem, si quam habent, muniunt.

S. k. Dec. Nicomediae CC. conss.

Posted October 6, in the consulship of Maximus, for the second time, and Aelianus (223).

[5] Emperors Diocletian and Maximian Augusti and the Caesars to Basilius. Although the interdict unde vi (on violent dispossession) lies within one year, still the authority of law plainly shows that a person who was expelled by force but then regained possession is protected by a permanent defense (based on the interdict).

Written May 1, at Tralles, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[6] The same Augusti and Caesars to Helena. If there was a pact (not to reclaim property), then against a defense (based on the pact; exceptio pacti) the counterdefense of deceit (replicatio doli) is available without time limit.

Written September 1, at Viminacium, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[7] The same Augusti and Caesars to Menandra. If less than half of a debt was paid to you and you did not give a release to your debtor, you are hardly prevented from suing for the amount shown not to have been paid, assisting your claim with the counterdefense (of deceit) against the defense of a pact.

Written February 28, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[8] The same Augusti and Caesars to Aurelius. An absolute defense (praescriptio peremptoria), which it suffices to introduce before (a trial begins), may also, if it is omitted, be (subsequently) raised at any time before the judgment.

Written October 18, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[9] The same Augusti and Caesars to Mucianus. If indeed you are confident that the plaintiff's claim lacks proof, you need set up no defense. But if you admit it (the plaintiff's claim) and allege that you are protected by a defense, it is proper that the trial concerns it alone. For even if you are uncertain about the (plaintiff's) claim, and you declare your defense only when the plaintiff proves his claim according to his affirmation, it is properly ruled that there is room for this (procedure).

Written November 3, at Burtudizum, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[10] The same Augusti and Caesars to Aquilina. Plaintiffs protect their claim, if they have one, not through defenses (exceptiones), which in particular cases assist defendants, but through counterdefenses (replicationes).

Written December 1, at Nicomedia, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[11] Idem AA. et CC. Neoni. Defensiones sive exceptiones ad intercessores extendi, quibus reus principalis integro manente statu munitus est, constat.

Sub die XV k. Ian.

[12] Imp. Iulianus A. ad Iulianum comitem Orientis. Si quis advocatus inter exordia litis praetermissam dilatoriam praescriptionem postea voluerit exercere et ab huiusmodi opitulatione submotus nihilo minus perseveret atque praeposterae defensioni institerit, unius librae auri condemnatione multetur.

D. VII id. Mart. Antiochiae Iuliano A. IIII et Sallustio conss.

[13] Impp. Honorius et Theodosius AA. Symmacho proconsuli Africae. Praescriptiones fori in principio a litigatoribus opponendas esse legum decrevit auctoritas.

D. V k. Sept. Ravennae Honorio X et Theodosio VI AA. conss.

XXXVI De Litigiosis

[1] Impp. Severus et Antoninus AA. Paulinae. Cum creditor pignus vendit, non potest videri litigiosae rei emptio contrahi, etsi debitor interdicat, ne venditio perficiatur.

PP. k. Mai. Apro et Maximo conss.

[2] Imp. Constantinus A. ad provinciales. Lite pendente actiones, quae in iudicium deductae sunt, vel res, pro quibus actor a reo detentis intendit, in coniunctam personam vel extraneam donationibus vel emptionibus vel quibuslibet aliis contractibus minime transferri ab eodem actore liceat, tamquam si nihil factum sit, lite nihilo minus peragenda.

D. k. Aug. Basso et Ablabio conss.

[11] The same Augusti and Caesars to Neo. It is settled that the defenses or exceptions, by which the principal defendant was protected, are available also to those backing his debt (intercessores) as long as his legal position is unchanged.

On December 18 (294).

[12] Emperor JULIAN Augustus to Julian, Count of the East. If any advocate, after failing at the outset of a trial to raise a delaying defense (praescriptio dilatoria),[102] wishes to do this subsequently, and, when deprived of such assistance, he nonetheless continues insisting on his tardily asserted defense, he shall be punished with a fine of one pound of gold.

Given March 9, at Antioch, in the consulship of Julian Augustus, for the fourth time, and Sallustius (363).[103]

[13][104] Emperors HONORIUS and THEODOSIUS Augusti to Symmachus, Proconsul of Africa. The authority of the laws has decreed that litigators must set up defenses of (lack of) jurisdiction (praescriptiones fori) at the outset (of litigation).

Given August 28, at Ravenna, in the consulship of Honorius, for the tenth time, and Theodosius, for the sixth time (415).

Thirty-Sixth Title Property in a Pending Lawsuit[105]

[1] Emperors SEVERUS and ANTONINUS Augusti to Paulina. When a creditor sells a pledge, this cannot be deemed the sale of property in a pending suit even if the debtor brings an interdict against the sale's completion.

Posted May 1, in the consulship of Aper and Maximus (207).

[2][106] Emperor CONSTANTINE Augustus to the provincials. While a lawsuit is pending, rights of action that have been made part of the trial, or property that the plaintiff claims and that is held by the defendant, may in no way be transferred by this plaintiff to anyone whether acquainted with him or not, (either) by gifts or sales or any other contracts, and the suit shall nevertheless be prosecuted to conclusion as if nothing had happened.

Given August 1, in the consulship of Bassus and Ablabius (331).

[102] A dilatory defense (exceptio dilatoria) is one that is good only for a set period of time.
[103] Seeck dates to February 23, 363.
[104] = C.Th. 11.30.65.
[105] Res litigiosae. See D. 44.6.
[106] = C.Th. 4.5.1; combine with C. 1.21.3, 1.40.3, 3.13.4 (?), 3.19.2, 7.62.19, 8.36.2, and C.Th. 2.26.3, 3.30.4, 11.30.17, 11.34.1.

[3] Imppp. Gratianus Valentinianus et Theodosius AAA. Tatiano pp. pr. Quicumque rem litigiosam vel ambiguum chirographum, quodlibet denique mobile vel immobile fisco nostro vel potentiori seu aliis personis in testamento sive codicillo legaverit fideive commiserit aut per hereditatem reliquerit, nullam fiscus noster vel alia persona licentiam habeat iurgiorum, nec iudicium subeat, sed aestimatio eius litis ineatur praestanda his, quibus actiones vel res litigiosae relictae sunt. 1. Eandem litem ipsi heredes peragant, suarum actionum periculo ea quae litigiosa relicta fuerant vindicantes. 2. Quod et de chirographis placet, ut heredes relictorum fisco vel aliis personis praesentem pecuniam numerent et iudicio eos, quos obnoxios existimant, persequantur.

D. XV k. Iul. Thessalonicae Gratiano V et Theodosio AA. conss.

[4] ...

XIII k. Ian. Constantinopoli Pompeio et Avieno conss.

[5] Imp. Iustinianus A. Iohanni pp. pr. Censemus, ut, si quis lite pendente vel actiones vel res quas possidet ad alium quendam transtulerit sive scientem sive ignorantem, vitio litigiosi contractus subiacere: distinctione quadam inter contrahentes observanda, ut, si quis sciens vel ad venditiones vel donationes seu ad alios contractus accesserit, cognoscat se compellendum non tantum rem redhibere, sed etiam pretio eius privari, non ut lucro cedat ei qui rem alienavit, sed ut etiam alia tanta quantitas ab eo fisci viribus inferatur. 1. Sin autem ignorans rem litigiosam emerit vel per aliam speciem contractus eam acceperit, tunc irrita rei alienatione facta pretium cum alia tertia parte recipiat. iustum est etenim propter dolosam mentem et absconditam machinationem, cum non emptori manifestaverit rem in iudicium deductam fuisse, tertia parte pretii, sicut iam disposuimus, eum puniri. 2. Tali videlicet poena non solum in aliis contractibus, verum etiam in donationibus porrigenda, ut vera aestimatione facta, cum pretii datio non

[3][107] Emperors GRATIAN, VALENTINIAN, and THEODOSIUS Augusti to Tatianus, Praetorian Prefect. pr. If anyone in his will or a codicil, through a legacy or a testamentary trust or an inheritance, leaves property in litigation – whether movable or immovable – or a contested promissory note (chirographum) to Our Treasury or to a powerful man or other persons, Our Treasury and anyone else shall have no license to dispute or enter a (resulting) lawsuit. Instead, an appraisal of the suit's value shall be made and presented to those to whom the rights of action or property in litigation were left. 1. The heirs themselves shall carry the suit to conclusion, claiming the property in litigation through actions at their own risk. 2. Also as to promissory notes, it is held that the heirs shall pay to the Treasury or other persons the present money value of those left to them, and (then) pursue in court the persons they consider obligated.

Given June 17, at Thessalonica, in the Consulship of Gratian, for the fifth time, and Theodosius, Augusti (380).

[4] <The substance is lost.>[108]

December 20, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Pompeius and Avienus (501).

[5] Emperor JUSTINIAN Augustus to John, Praetorian Prefect. pr. We hold that if, during the pendency of a suit, a man transfers either claims or things he possesses to any third party whether the latter is knowing or not, (such) contracts on matters in litigation are defective. A distinction among contracting parties should be observed, (however,) that if someone knowingly enters on sales or gifts or other contracts, he shall know that he will be compelled not just to return the property, but also to lose its price, not that it accrue to the profit of the person who alienated the property, but that a sum equal to it also be paid by him to the Treasury. 1. But if he unknowingly purchases property in litigation or receives it through some other form of contract, then the thing's alienation is void and he shall recover the price with an additional third (as penalty). For it is just that the seller, because of his fraudulent intent and underhanded trickery when he fails to reveal to the buyer that the property was subject to litigation, be punished by a third part of the price, as We have ordered. 2. And, obviously, such a penalty shall be exacted not only in other contracts, but also for gifts, so that the person transferring it to another is punished with its true

[107] On other portions of this constitution, see C. 5.1.3. Seeck dates to June 17, 379; but PLRE 1, p. 877 Fl. Eutolmius Tatianus 5 dates to June 17, 380.

[108] The content of the missing constitution is probably summarized by the Basilika (27.1.3): "If a person who possesses an immoveable is sued by someone and defeated, let him surrender it in the interim. If he has alienated it, the plaintiff may be placed in possession of it. If the current possessor wishes to answer, let him speak before the same judge, with no defense on the basis of jurisdiction or his dignity or rank." A recently discovered Codex fragment dates this constitution to XVI k. Ian. (= 17, Dec. 501). (Information from Simon Corcoran.)

est, rem ad alium transferens multetur: omnibus instrumentis, quae super hoc constituuntur, nullam vim obtinentibus. 3. Exceptis videlicet huius sanctionis dispositione his, qui vel dotis nomine vel ante nuptias donationis vel transactionis aut divisionis rerum hereditariarum factae vel per legati vel fideicommissi causam tales res vel actiones dederint vel acceperint.

D. xv k. Nov. Constantinopoli post consulatum Lampadii et Orestis vv. cc. anno secundo.

XXXVII De Contrahenda et Committenda Stipulatione

[1] Impp. Severus et Antoninus AA. Secundo. Licet epistulae, quam libello inseruisti, additum non sit stipulatum esse eum cui cavebatur, tamen si res inter praesentes gesta est, credendum est praecedente stipulatione vocem spondentis secutam.

Accepta xvii k. Mai. Severo iii[xv] et Victorino conss.

[2] Idem AA. Diocleti. Si filiae tuae, quam in potestate habebas, pecuniam dari stipulatus es, paratam obligationem exercere non prohiberis.

PP. prid. non. Nov. Faustino et Rufino conss.

[3] Imp. Antoninus A. Hadriano. pr. Si, cum tuam pecuniam crederes accommodato nomine Iuliani, stipulatio in personam eius absentis directa est, cum nihil sit actum ea verborum conceptione, intellegis superfuisse tibi rei contractae obligationem. 1. Ac propterea si pecuniam a debitore tuo Iulianus exegit eamque solutionem ratam habuisti, habes adversus eum negotiorum gestorum actionem.

PP. vi k. Mart. Praesente et Extricato conss.

[4] Imp. Alexander A. Sabinae. Secundum responsum Domitii Ulpiani praefecti annonae iuris consulti amici mei ea, quae stipulata est, cum appraised value when no price was paid; and the documents made in this connection have no force. 3. Excepted, however, from the provisions of this law are those who gave or accepted such property or rights of actions either as dowry or a pre-nuptial gift (donatio ante nuptias) or a settlement or a division of an inheritance or on the basis of a legacy or trust.

[xv] ii

Given October 18, at Constantinople, in the second post-consulate of the viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestes (532).

Thirty-Seventh Title Contracting a Stipulation and Bringing It into Effect[109]

[1] Emperors SEVERUS and ANTONINUS Augusti to Secundus. Although it was not added to the letter you inserted into your petition that the stipulation was exacted by the promisee, nevertheless, if the transaction took place in the parties' presence, it should be assumed that the voice of the promisor followed a preceding question (stipulatio).

Accepted April 15, in the consulship of Severus, for the second time, and Victorinus (200).

[2] The same Augusti to Diocles. If you exacted a stipulation that money be paid to your daughter whom you have in your power, you are not prevented from enforcing the obligation you acquired (through her).

Posted November 4, in the consulship of Faustinus and Rufinus (210).

[3][110] Emperor ANTONINUS Augustus to Hadrian. pr. If, when you loaned your money, you used the name of Julian and the stipulation (for repayment) was directed towards him in his absence, although nothing is achieved (as to Julian) by this verbal formulation, you do realize that the obligation in this matter has remained valid for you. 1. And therefore if Julian collected money from your debtor and you ratified this payment, you have an action on management of affairs (negotiorum gestio) against him.

Posted February 24, in the consulship of Praesens and Extricatus (217).

[4] Emperor ALEXANDER Augustus to Sabina. According to the response of Domitius Ulpianus – Prefect of the Food Supply, a jurist, and my friend – a woman who exacted (from her husband) a stipulation that she leave half of her dowry to whom she wishes when she dies, is understood (only) to have been [109] See D. 45.1. A stipulation concluded under a condition becomes effective when the condition occurs (stipulatio committitur). In this title, stipulator is at times translated "promisee" to avoid confusion.

[110] §1 = C. 2.18.9, addressed to Sallustius.

moreretur, partem dimidiam dotis cui velit relinquere, reddi sibi, cum moreretur, eam partem dotis stipulata videtur.
PP. II k. April. Alexandro A. cons.

[5] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. et CC. Isidorae. pr. Nuda pollicitatione secundum ea, quae saepe constituta sunt, ad praestanda quae promiserat urgueri quemquam non semper iura permittunt. 1. Verum quoniam praeterea, si contra pactum fecerit, quanti ea res est, tibi dari stipulanti adversarium tuum promisisse proponas, huius etiam obligationis post motam litem extitisse condicionem et eius summae, quae in hac quoque stipulatione continetur, petitioni locum factum convenit.
S. V k. Dec. AA. conss.

[6] Idem AA. et CC. Erotio. Scire debuisti, quae sub transactione dari placita sunt, certi vel incerti stipulatione subsecuta peti posse.
S. XVI k. Ian. Sirmi AA. conss.

[7] Idem AA. et CC. Antonino. Neque tutoris neque curatoris absentia quicquam stipulationi nocet, cum et feminam minorem viginti quinque annis absente curatore stipulari posse non ambigitur.
S. XVII k. Febr. CC. conss.

[8] Idem AA. et CC. Posidonio. Non moriturum praestari servum impossibilis promissio est. post mortem autem eius stipulatus recte solutionem postulat.
S. XII k. Mart. CC. conss.

[9] Idem AA. et CC. Capitoni. Si quidem Zenoni stipulanti mortis vel cruciatus corporis territus timore spopondisti, adversus experientem exceptione proposita defendi potes. 1. Si vero nihil tale probetur, accusationis institutae vel futurae praetextu non ob turpem, sed probabilem causam habita stipulatione promissio non infirmatur. 2. Sin autem ob non instituendam accusationem criminis pecunia promissa sit, cum de huiusmodi causis pacisci non liceat, petitio negatur.
S. III id. Oct. Varianae CC. conss.

promised that this portion of her dowry be returned to her upon her death (and therefore the stipulation is valid).

Posted March 31, in the consulship of Alexander Augustus (222).

[5] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti and the Caesars to Isidora. pr. As has often been stated, the laws do not always permit anyone to be forced to fulfill what he undertook by a bare donative promise (pollicitatio). 1. But since you state that your adversary also entered into a stipulation that, if he did anything contrary to his pact (not to sue), he would give you what this matter was worth (as damages), it is clear that the condition on this obligation occurred once a lawsuit began, and (so) there is room for a suit for the amount in this stipulation as well.

Written November 27, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[6] The same Augusti and Caesars to Erotius. You should have known that what was agreed be given in a settlement (transactio) can be claimed (in court) when a stipulation for a definite or indefinite amount followed.

Written December 17, at Sirmium, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[7][m] The same Augusti and Caesars to Antoninus. The absence of a tutor or curator does not prejudice in any way a stipulation, since there is no doubt that also a woman less than age 25 may receive a stipulation when her curator is absent.

Written January 16, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[8] The same Augusti and Caesars to Posidonius. A promise to provide that a slave will not die is impossible. But a person who extracted this stipulation after his (the slave's) death rightly demands payment (under a penalty clause).

Written February 18, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[9] The same Augusti and Caesars to Capito. pr. If, while terrified by your fear of death or great bodily injury, you made a solemn promise to Zeno by stipulation, you can defend against his lawsuit by raising the defense (of duress; exceptio metus). 1. But if nothing of this sort is proven, a promise is not weakened if the stipulation rests only on the pretext of a pending or intended lawsuit, a consideration not disgraceful but worthy. 2. But if the money was promised (as a bribe) for not bringing a criminal accusation, the claim (to recover it) is denied because pacts on such matters are impermissible.

Written October 13, at Variana, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[m] = C. 5.59.1 (addressed to Antonianus, without date and year), which adds that the stipulation must be "given on the ward's behalf."

[10] Imp. Leo A. Erythrio pp. Omnes stipulationes, etiamsi non sollemnibus vel directis, sed quibuscumque verbis pro consensu contrahentium compositae sint, legibus cognitae suam habeant firmitatem.
D. k. Ian. Constantinopoli Marciano cons.

[11] Imp. Iustinianus A. Menae pp. Scrupulosam inquisitionem, utrum post mortem an cum morietur vel pridie quam morietur stipulatus sit aliquis vel in testamento legati vel fideicommissi nomine aliquid dereliquerit, penitus amputantes omnia, quae vel in quocumque contractu stipulati vel pacti sunt contrahentes, vel testator in suo testamento disposuit, etiamsi post mortem vel pridie quam morietur scripta esse noscuntur, nihilo minus pro tenore contractus vel testamenti valere praecipimus.
D. III id. Dec. Constantinopoli dn. Iustiniano pp. A. II cons.

[12] Idem A. Menae pp. Magnam legum veterum obscuritatem, quae protrahendarum litium maximam occasionem usque adhuc praebebat, amputantes sancimus, ut, si quis certo tempore facturum se aliquid vel daturum se stipuletur vel[xvi] quae stipulator voluit promiserit et addiderit, quod, si statuto tempore minime haec perfecta fuerint, certam poenam dabit, sciat, minime posse ad evitandam poenam adicere, quod nullus eum admonuit: sed etiam citra ullam admonitionem eidem poenae pro tenore stipulationis fiet obnoxius, cum ea quae promisit ipse in memoria sua servare, non ab aliis sibi manifestari poscere debeat.
D. VIIII [xvii] id. April. Constantinopoli Decio vc. cons.

[13] Idem A. Iuliano pp. pr. Veteris iuris altercationes decidentes generaliter sancimus omnem stipulationem, sive in dando sive in faciendo sive mixta ex dando et faciendo inveniatur, et ad heredes et contra heredes transmitti, sive specialis heredum fiat mentio sive non: cur enim, quod in principalibus personis iustum est, non ad heredes et adversus eos transmittatur? 1. Et sic existimentur huiusmodi stipulationes, quasi tantummodo in dandum fuerant conceptae, cum nihilo minus et heredes factum possint adimplere: illa subtili et supervacua scrupulositate

[xvi] [stipuletur vel]
[xvii] VIII

[10] Emperor Leo Augustus to Erythrius, Praetorian Prefect. All stipulations recognized by law have their own validity even if they are composed not in formal or unambiguous words, but in any words whatsoever that express theagreement of the contracting parties.

Given January 1, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Marcianus (472).

[11][112] Emperor Justinian Augustus to Menas, Praetorian Prefect. Completely dispensing with subtle inquiry as to whether a person may extract a stipulation (to take effect) "after his (the promisor's) death," or "when he dies," or "the day before he dies," or leave something in a will as a legacy or trust (in this manner), We direct that whatever the contracting parties have arranged in any contract of stipulation or pact, or a testator has ordered in his will, nevertheless is valid according to the tenor of the contract or will, even if "after death" or "the day before he dies" appears to have been written.

Given December 11, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Our Lord Justinian, Ever Augustus, for the second time (528).

[12] The same Augustus to Menas, Praetorian Prefect. Dispensing with a great obscurity of the ancient law, which until now provided a large opportunity for prolonging lawsuits, We ordain that if anyone promises under a stipulation to do or give something definite within a fixed time, or what the promisee wishes, and adds that, if these things are not at least done within a set time, he will pay a fixed penalty, let him know that he can hardly add, in order to avoid the penalty (should he later be sued), that no one reminded him (of his obligation). Rather, in accord with the tenor of the stipulation, he shall be subject to this penalty despite lack of reminder, since he ought to keep in mind what he promised, not ask that he be apprised of it by others.

Given April 6, at Constantinople, in the consulship of the vir clarissimus Decius (529).

[13] The same Augustus to Julian, Praetorian Prefect. pr. Deciding a dispute in the ancient law, We generally ordain that every stipulation, whether it consists in giving or in doing or in a mixture of giving and doing, is transmitted both to heirs and against heirs, whether special mention (is made) of heirs or not. For why should what is just in the case of principals not be transmitted to and against heirs? 1. And such stipulations (to do something) shall be evaluated as if they had been framed only for giving, since heirs can just as well fulfill an act; disapproved (thereby) is the technical and useless quibbling according

[112] Combine with C. 6.23.25. Blume: "A promise for performance so many days before the death of either party was void. See C. 4.44.1 ... " explosa, per quam putabant non esse possibile factum ab alio compleri, quod alii impositum est. 2. Et quare, cum paene similis omnium natura est, non et facta omnes vel plus vel paulo minus adimplere possint, ne ex huiusmodi subtilitate cadant hominum voluntates?

D. k. Aug. Constantinopoli Lampadio et Oreste vv. cc. conss.

[14] Idem A. Iohanni pp. pr. Optimam quaestionem et frequenter in iudiciis versatam satis humanum est saltem in praesenti dirimere, ne diutius nostram rem publicam molestare concedatur. in multis etenim contractibus et maxime in feneraticiis cautionibus solitum est adscribi, stipulationes per certos servos celebrari. sed quidam indevotione tenti ex hoc materiam altercationis acceperunt: et alii quidem non esse servum adhibitum contendebant, alii vero non eius esse servum, ad quem pertinere scriptura protestabatur: et si non per servum, sed inter praesentes celebratam esse rem fuerit scriptum, et hoc iterum dubitabatur, debere ostendi partes esse praesentes.

1. Cum itaque satis utile est in contractibus et servos adhiberi et praesentes esse personas adscribi, forte propter personas dignitate excelsas vel mulieres, quas naturalis pudor non omnibus perperam sese manifestare concedit, sancimus tales scripturas omnifariam esse credendas et, sive adscriptus fuerit servus et ad quandam personam dicitur pertinere, credi omnimodo et servum adesse et fecisse stipulationem et eam esse scripto domino adquisitam et non dubitari, si servus ipse praesto fuerit vel eius domini fuit is, pro quo scriptus est fecisse stipulationem: 2. Et si inter praesentes partes res acta esse dicitur, et hoc esse credendum, si tamen in eadem civitate utraque persona in eo die commanet, in quo huiusmodi instrumentum scriptum est, nisi is, qui dicit sese vel adversarium abesse, liquidis ac manifestissimis probationibus et melius quidem, si per scripturam, sed saltem per testes undique idoneos et omni exceptione maiores ostenderit sese vel adversarium suum eo die civitate afuisse: sed huiusmodi scripturas propter utilitatem contrahentium esse credendas.

D. k. Nov. post consulatum Lampadii et Orestis vv. cc.

to which it is impossible that an act imposed on one person be carried out by another. 2. Since the nature of all humans is quite similar, why should not all be able more or less to carry out acts, so that human intentions not fail because of such a technicality?

Given August 1, at Constantinople, in the consulship of the viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestes (530).

[14][113] The same Augustus to John, Praetorian Prefect. pr. At least now it is humane to decide an important question, one often arising in courts, so that it not be permitted to disturb our State further. For in many contracts, especially in promissory notes for loans at interest (cautiones feneraticiae), it is customary to add that the stipulations were executed through specified slaves. But certain persons, motivated by lack of respect, have used this as fuel for disputes, some contending that no slave was present (in making the stipulation), others that the slave did not belong to the person to whom the writing states he belongs. And if it is written that the business was conducted not through a slave but in the presence of the principals, this too is again disputed (by claiming) that the parties ought to be shown to be present.

1. So since it is quite useful in contracts both that slaves be called in and that persons be mentioned as present – e.g., on account of persons of high status, or women whom natural modesty forbids to display themselves improperly to everyone – We ordain that such writings should be universally valid; and if a slave is mentioned and is stated to belong to some person, it is always accepted as true that the slave was present and made the stipulation and it was acquired by the master mentioned, and it is not questioned if the slave himself was present or belonged to the master for whom he is described as making the stipulation. 2. And if the transaction is said to have taken place in the presence of the parties, this too is to be believed, provided that both persons were in the same city on that day on which this document was composed, unless the party who says that he or his opponent was away shows by clear and evident proofs – and best of all through writing, but at least through entirely credible witnesses to whom no exception can be taken – that he or his adversary were away from the city on that day. But such documents should (as a rule) be given credence because of their usefulness to contracting parties.

Given November 1, in the post-consulate of the viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestes (531).

[113] See also Inst. 3.19.12, which says this was written to the Society of Advocates at Caesarea.

[15] Idem A. Iohanni pp. pr. Si quis spoponderat insulam, cum moriebatur, aedificare stipulatori, impossibilis veteribus videbatur huiusmodi stipulatio. sed nobis sensum contrahentium discutientibus veri simile esse videtur hoc inter eos actum, ut incipiat quidem contra morientem obligatio, immineat autem heredibus eius, donec ad effectum perducatur. nemo enim ita stultus invenitur, ut tali animo faceret stipulationem, ut putaret posse tantum aedificium in uno momento horae extollere, vel eum qui moritur talem habere sensum, quod ipse sufficiet ad huiusmodi operis completionem. 1. Sancimus itaque, si quid tale evenerit, heredes teneri, ut factum, quod mortis tempore facere promisit, hoc heredes eius adimpleant quasi speciali heredis mentione habita, licet hoc minime fuerit expressum. quemadmodum enim, si in dando fuerit stipulatio, et contra heredes transmittebatur, ita et si in faciendo est, licet in mortis tempus colligatur, attamen ad similitudinem in dando conceptae stipulationis et heredes obligari, ut non discrepet factum a datione, sed sit lex nostra per omnia sibi consentanea. 2. Quod et in legatis simili modo relictis observari censemus.

D. XV k. Nov. Constantinopoli post consulatum Lampadii et Orestis vv. cc. anno secundo.

XXXVIII De Inutilibus Stipulationibus

[1] Imp. Antoninus A. Paulino. Ex stipulatione, in qua impubes sine tutore auctore spopondisti, non es obligatus.

PP. k. Iul. Romae Laeto II et Cereale conss.

[2] Imp. Alexander A. Menophilo. Libera matrimonia esse antiquitus placuit. ideoque pacta, ne liceret divertere, non valere et stipulationes, quibus poenae inrogarentur ei qui divortium fecisset, ratas non haberi constat.

PP. III non. Febr. Maximo II et Aeliano conss.

[3] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. Isidoro. pr. Ut inter absentes verborum obligatio contrahi non potest, ita alteri, cuius iuri subiectus non est, aliquid dari vel restitui, nisi sua intersit, nemo stipulari potest.

[15] The same Augustus to John, Praetorian Prefect. pr. If someone promised by stipulation to build a city block (insula) for the promisee when he (the promisor) was dying, such a stipulation seemed impossible to the ancients. But if We analyze the intent of the contracting parties, it seems probable that they meant that the obligation actually begin against the dying man (the promisor), but fall on his heirs until it is entirely executed. For there is no one so foolish as to think he can erect such a building in an hour's time, or that the decedent intended that he (alone) was in a position to complete such a project. 1. So We have ordained that if such a thing occurs, the heirs are liable, so that the act that he promised to do at the time of his death be carried out by his heirs, as though special mention of the heir was made although this was not express. For as a stipulation that involves giving is transmitted also against heirs, so also if it involves doing, although (only) if framed at the time of death, nevertheless the heirs are also obligated on the model of a stipulation framed around giving, so that doing is not different from giving, but Our law is harmonious with itself in everything. 2. For legacies as well We decree that this rule be observed similarly.

Given October 18, at Constantinople, in the second post-consulate of the viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestes (532).

Thirty-Eighth Title Invalid Stipulations[114]

[1] Emperor A*NTONINUS Augustus to Paulinus.* You are not bound by a stipulation in which you made a promise, when below the age of puberty, without the authorization of your tutor.

Posted July 1, at Rome, in the consulship of Laetus, for the second time, and Cerealis (215).

[2] Emperor A*LEXANDER Augustus to Menophilus.* Long-standing tradition holds that marriages are free. So it is settled that agreements preventing divorce are invalid, and stipulations imposing penalties on the party who divorced are not considered licit.

Posted February 3, in the consulship of Maximus, for the second time, and Aelianus (223).

[3] Emperors D*IOCLETIAN and* M*AXIMIAN Augusti to Isidorus.* pr. Just as a verbal obligation (i.e., a stipulation) cannot be contracted between absent parties, so no one can effectively exact a stipulation that something be given or delivered to a third party to whose power he is not subject, unless he has an

[114] See Inst. 3.19.

1. Cum igitur, defuncta in matrimonio filia tua, superstitis filii nomine partem dimidiam dotis a marito detineri, alteram vero partem nepoti tuo vel, si is in rebus humanis non esset, Iuliano restitui per pactum convenisse proponas, praeventoque morte nepote etiam stipulationem ad Iulianum factam ob absentiam eius non valuisse significes, ac propterea ex persona ac stipulatione tua, qua restitui cuncta iuxta pactorum tenorem provideras, reddi tibi desideres: super stipulatu tuo adi praesidem provinciae, ut examinatis partium adlegationibus, quantum constituerit interesse tua, iuxta placiti fidem dotis portionem Iuliano restitutam fuisse, ob incertae actionis effectum concludat condemnationem taxatae quantitatis.

PP. id. Dec. ipsis IIII et III AA. conss.

[4] Idem AA. et CC. Domnae. Ex eo instrumento nullam vos habere actionem, quia contra bonos mores de successione futura interposita fuit stipulatio, manifestum est, cum omnia, quae contra bonos mores vel in pacto vel in stipulatione deducuntur, nullius momenti sint.

PP. III k. Mai. AA. conss.

[5] Idem AA. et CC. Aquilinae. Dolo vel metu adhibito actio quidem nascitur, si subdita stipulatio sit, per doli tamen vel metus exceptionem submoveri petitio debet.

S. XIII k. Oct. AA. conss.

[6] Idem AA. et CC. Septimio et Eustolio. Si avia vestra sibi et Eustolio, quam mutuam dederat pecuniam, dari fuit stipulata, nihil ei, cuius subiecta iuri non fuerit, quaerere potuit. sane si ipse quod ei solvi placuerat in stipulatione suo nomine deduxit, obligationem in eius etiam personam constitisse non ambigitur.

S. V k. Oct. CC. conss.

interest in this (occurring). 1. Since, therefore, you state that your daughter died during marriage and that her husband kept half the dowry in the name of a surviving son, while it was agreed (between you and the husband, by stipulation) that the remainder be turned over to your grandson or, if he were not living, to Julian; and since you indicate that, your grandson being dead, the stipulation made for Julian's benefit was also invalid because of his absence (when the stipulation was made); and that therefore, on the basis of your person (as paterfamilias) and of the stipulation in which you had provided that everything be returned in accord with the tenor of the pacts, you want it delivered to you – approach the provincial governor concerning your stipulation, in order that, once he examines the allegations of the parties and determines the extent of your own interest that a portion of the dowry be restored to Julian in accord with the agreement, because of the effect of an action for an indefinite amount (actio incerta) he may determine the highest value for the condemnation (of the ex-husband).[115]

Posted December 13, in the consulship of the Augusti themselves, Consuls for the fourth and third times, respectively (290).

[4] The same Augusti and the Caesars to Domna. It is obvious that you have no right of action on this document, since, contrary to good morals, a stipulation was entered into regarding future inheritance, for everything contained in a pact or stipulation that is contrary to good morals has no legal consequence.

Posted April 29, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[5] The same Augusti and Caesars to Aquilina. When deceit or duress was used, an action (still) does arise if a stipulation was added, but the claim should be defeated through the defense of deceit or of duress (exceptio doli vel metus).

Written September 19, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[6] The same Augusti and Caesars to Septimius and Eustolius. If, for the benefit of herself and Eustolius, your grandmother exacted a stipulation that the loan she had given be paid, she could acquire nothing for him (Eustolius) to whose power she was not subject. Of course, if he himself in his own name exacted a stipulation that it be paid to him, there is no doubt that an obligation arose as to him as well.

Written September 27, in the consulship of the Caesars (294)

[115] Blume: "The daughter of Isidorus died in marriage and Isidorus had made a contract with his son-in-law … to the following effect: One-half of the dowry was to remain with the son-in-law, as a provision for the son of the marriage; the other half was to go to the grandson of Isidorus, if alive, if not, to Julianus. A stipulation was added."

XXXVIIII De Duobus Reis Stipulandi et Duobus Reis Promittendi

[1] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. Diogeni. pr. Creditor prohiberi non potest exigere debitum, cum sint duo rei promittendi eiusdem pecuniae, a quo velit. 1. Et ideo, si probaveris te conventum in solidum exsolvisse, rector provinciae iuvare te adversus eum, cum quo communiter mutuam pecuniam accepisti, non cunctabitur.

PP. v k. Mart. Diocletiano III et Maximiano AA. conss.

[2] Idem AA. et CC. Fabricio. Exprimere debueras tuis precibus, utrumne in partem an in solidum singuli vos obligaveritis ac duo rei promittendi extiteritis, cum, si quidem ab initio unusquisque pro parte sit obligatus, egredi contractus fidem non possit, si vero in solidum, electio rescripto adimi non debeat.

S. id. April. Byzantii AA. conss.

[3] Idem AA. et CC. Andronico. Propter mutuam uni datam pecuniam aliis reis promittendi factis, ob non numeratam sibi pecuniam obligationem remitti desiderio postulantium iura refragantur.

S. v id. Febr. Sirmi CC. conss.

[4] Imp. Iustinianus A. Iohanni pp. pr. Cum quidam rei stipulandi certos habebant reos promittendi, vel unus forte creditor duos vel plures debitores habebat, vel contrario multi creditores unum debitorem, et alii ex reis promittendi ad certos creditores debitum agnoverint vel per solutionem vel per alios modos, quos in anterioribus sanctionibus interruptionibus et invenimus positos et nos ampliavimus, vel forte ad unum creditorem quidam ex debitoribus devotionem suam ostenderunt, vel cum plures essent creditores, debitor qui solus existeret ad unum ex his vel quosdam debitum agnovit, et quaerebatur, si eis vel ei datur licentia adversus alios indevotionem suam exercere et quasi tempore emenso

Thirty-Ninth Title Joint Promisees and Joint Promisors[116]

[1] Emperors Diocletian and Maximian Augusti to Diogenes. pr. When there are two promisors (rei promittendi) of the same money, a creditor cannot be prevented from demanding payment from whom he wishes. 1. And so, if you prove that you were sued (as a joint promisor) and paid the entire debt (in solidum), the provincial governor will not hesitate to lend you his assistance against the party with whom you received the loaned money jointly.

Posted February 25, in the consulship of Diocletian, for the third time, and Maximian, Augusti (287).

[2] The same Augusti and the Caesars to Fabricius. In your petition, you ought to have stated whether you obligated yourselves for part (of a debt) or (instead) you were two joint promisors for the entirety, since, if each was obligated from the start for a part, he (the creditor) cannot overstep the contract's terms; but if for the entirety, his choice (to sue you or to sue your co-debtor for the entirety) should not be taken away by rescript.

Written April 13, at Byzantium, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[3] The same Augusti and Caesars to Andronicus. When a money loan is given to one person, but others became joint promisors (for its repayment), the rights (to recovery) are destroyed if the obligation (of the others) is remitted, pursuant to their request (to a judge), on the ground that they received no money themselves.

Written February 9, at Sirmium, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[4] Emperor Justinian Augustus to John, Praetorian Prefect. pr. When multiple joint promisees (creditors) have specified joint promisors (debtors), or when, say, one creditor has two or more debtors, or on the contrary many creditors have one debtor; and some of the promisors acknowledge the debt to certain of the creditors either by paying it or by the other means that We noted in earlier laws and have increased for interruptions (of the statute of limitations),[117] or, say, some of the debtors display to one creditor their willingness to perform, or, when there are several creditors, the sole debtor acknowledged the debt to one or some of them; a question was raised whether they or he had leave to display their non-compliance toward the others and to refuse payment by reason of the lapse of the period (of limitation), or whether, when some of the [116] See D. 45.2; Inst. 3.16. In a long note, Krüger discusses a constitution, issued by Diocletian and Maximian to Paulina on December 3, 386, which was restored at the outset of this title by Haloander, whose source is uncertain (possibly the Gregorian Codex); the constitution is not in the manuscript tradition for Justinian's Codex. It translates: "If two or more persons jointly accept delivery of something as an entirety (in solidum), and an accident occurs, each person has an action for the entirety as long as the property remains in the same legal condition (in eadem causa)."

[117] See C. 2.55.5.3, 7.40.2–3.

exactionem recusare, vel quibusdam ex debitoribus debitum agnoscentibus vel in iudicio pulsatis debent et alii ab omni contradictione repelli:

1. Nobis pietate suggerente videtur esse humanum semel in uno eodemque contractu qualicumque interruptione vel agnitione adhibita omnes simul compelli ad debitum persolvendum, sive plures sint rei sive unus, sive plures creditores vel non amplius quam unus. 2. Sancimus in omnibus casibus, quos noster sermo complexus est, aliorum devotionem vel agnitionem vel ex libello admonitionem aliis debitoribus praeiudicare et aliis prodesse creditoribus. 3. Sit itaque generalis devotio et nemini liceat alienam indevotionem sequi, cum ex una stirpe unoque fonte unus effluxit contractus vel debiti causa ex eadem actione apparuit.

D. k. Sept. Constantinopoli post consulatum Lampadii et Orestis vv. cc.

XXXX De Fideiussoribus et Mandatoribus

[1] Impp. Severus et Antoninus AA. Lysiae. Si Lysias adempta parte bonorum exulare iussus est, non nisi pro parte quam retinuerit creditoribus obligatus est. verum qui pro eo fidem suam adstrinxerint, iure pristino conveniri possunt.

PP. id. Oct. Severo A. III et Victorino conss.

[2] Idem AA. Plotio. pr. Creditori, qui pro eodem debito et pignora et fideiussorem accepit, licet, si malit, fideiussorem convenire in eam pecuniam, in qua se obligaverit. quod cum facit, debet ius pignorum in eum transferre. 1. Sed cum in alia quoque causa eadem pignora vel hypothecas habet obligatas, non prius compellendus est transferre pignora, quam omne debitum exsolvatur.

D. V k. Febr. Apro et Maximo conss.

debtors acknowledge the debt or are defeated in a trial, the others also should be prevented from (raising) any objection (to the claim):

1. As fidelity (to contracts; pietas) suggests to Us, it seems just that, when some interruption or acknowledgment once occurs in one and the same contract, all are simultaneously forced to pay the debt, whether there are several promisors or one, and whether there are many creditors or no more than one. 2. We ordain that in all cases embraced by Our discussion, the willingness to perform or the acknowledgment of some (debtors), or their notice resulting from a complaint (libellus), prejudices the other debtors and benefits the other creditors. 3. So let the duty to perform be general, and let no one be allowed to rely on another's non-performance, when one contract has flowed from a single root and source, or the (underlying) reason for a debt appeared in one and the same action.[118]

Given September 1, at Constantinople, after the consulate of the viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestes (531).

Fortieth Title Sureties (Fideiussores) and Mandators[119]

[1] Emperors Severus and Antoninus Augusti to Lysias. If part of his property was confiscated and Lysias was ordered into exile, he was not obligated to his creditors except for the part he retained. But those who bound their own credit (by becoming sureties) for him can be sued by the former right (even prior to his exile; i.e., they are still fully liable).

Posted October 15, in the consulship of Severus Augustus, for the third time, and Victorinus (200).

[2] The same Augusti to Plotius. pr. A creditor who, (as security) for the same debt, receives both pledges and a surety may, if he prefers, sue the surety for the money that he obligated himself to pay. When he does this, he should transfer the pledge rights to him (the surety, to assist him in getting repayment). 1. But when he has the same pledges or hypothecs obligated also in another case (of debt from the same debtor), he should not be forced to transfer the pledges before the entire debt is paid.

Given January 28, in the consulship of Aper and Maximus (207).

[118] Blume: "The substance of this law is that if one of two or more joint-debtors does any act whereby the prescriptive period is interrupted as to him, even in relation to only one of the joint-creditors – of more than one – this interruption of the prescriptive period, is good as against all the debtors, and benefits all the creditors ... The prescriptive period might be interrupted by acknowledgment, by payment of interest or part of the principal, by execution of a new duebill, or suit against one of the debtors."

[119] See D. 46.1; Inst. 3.20. A fideiussor is a surety bound for another's debt through a special form of stipulation (an adpromissio). A mandator assumes liability for another's debt by informally directing a third party to extend credit to the debtor, in an arrangement resembling a rudimentary letter of credit. The principal practical difference between suretyship and mandate lies in how the relationship is created.

[3] Idem AA. Maximo. pr. Non recte procuratores nostri, si adlegationi tuae fides adesset, audire te noluerunt ex bonis fideiussoris quae ad fiscum pervenerunt pecuniam repetentem, sed reum principalem convenire iusserunt, cum electionis potestas permittatur creditori. 1. Sed cum tu duos fideiussores accepisse te proponas, si et alter idoneus est, intellegis te divisa quantitate partem competentem a procuratore petere debere et adversus alium fideiussorem experiri. 2. Nam licet significes adiectum in obligatione, ut singuli in solidum tenerentur, tamen nihil haec res mutat condicionem iuris et constitutionem. nam et cum hoc non adiciatur, singuli tamen in solidum tenentur: sed ubi sunt omnes idonei, in portionem obligatio dividitur.

PP. XVII k. Sept. Antonino A. III et Geta III conss.

[4] Imp. Antoninus A. Rufae. Novatione legitime perfecta debiti in alium translati, prioris contractus fideiussores vel mandatores liberatos non ambigitur, si modo in sequenti se non obligaverunt.

PP. XV k. Oct. Antonino A. IIII et Balbino conss.

[5] Idem A. Potamoni. Iure nostro est potestas creditori relicto reo eligendi fideiussores, nisi inter contrahentes aliud placitum doceatur.

PP. VI non. Mai Messala et Sabino conss.

[6] Idem A. Pollae. Si pater tuus pro Cornelio, cum pecuniam mutuam acciperet, se non obligavit, frustra ex eo, quod tabulas obligationis ut testis adsignavit, conveniris.

PP. XI k. Iul. Messala et Sabino conss.

[7] Idem A. Eroti. Si creditor condicioni mandato adscriptae, cum pecuniam mutuam daret, in accipiendis hypothecis non paruit, frustra te iudicio mandati convenit, quando non alias te obligasse intellegaris, quam si pignoribus contraheretur obligatio.

PP. k. Iul. Laeto II et Cereale conss.

[8] Imp. Alexander A. Longo. Filius familias, qui pro patre, quamvis in venditione fundi, fideiussit, tenetur.

PP. II id. Oct. Maximo II et Aeliano conss.

[3] The same Augusti to Maximus. pr. If your allegation is true, Our procurators wrongly refused to hear your demand for money from a surety's property that had fallen to the Treasury, but (instead) ordered you to sue the principal debtor. 1. But since you state that you received two sureties, then, if the other is solvent, you know that, having divided the amount, you should claim the proper portion from the (imperial) procurator and sue the other surety (for the rest); for a creditor is allowed the power to choose. 2. For although you state that it was added in the contract that each was liable for the entirety (in solidum), nevertheless this does not change your legal situation or this provision. Even should this not be added (expressly), each party is still liable for the entirety; but when all are solvent, the obligation is divided into shares.

Posted August 16, in the consulship of Antoninus Augustus, for the third time, and Geta, for the third time (298).

[4] Emperor Antoninus Augustus to Rufa. If a debt is transferred to a third party (debtor) through a legally made novation, there is no doubt that the sureties or mandators of the previous contract are released unless they obligated themselves also for the second.

Posted September 17, in the consulship of Antoninus Augustus, for the fourth time, and Balbinus (213).

[5] The same Augustus to Potamo. Under Our law, a creditor has the option to leave the principal alone and proceed against the sureties, unless some other agreement is shown between the contracting parties.

Posted May 2, in the consulship of Messala and Sabinus (214).

[6] The same Augustus to Polla. If your father did not obligate himself for Cornelius when he (Cornelius) received a money loan, a suit against you (as his heir)on the grounds that he signed the document as a witness is useless.

Posted June 21, in the consulship of Messala and Sabinus (214).

[7] The same Augustus to Eros. If a creditor did not observe the condition attached to the mandate by taking hypothecs when he gave the money loan (authorized by the mandate), he sues you ineffectually in a trial on mandate, since you understood yourself as obligated only if the obligation was contracted with pledges.

Posted July 1, in the consulship of Laetus, for the second time, and Cerealis (215).

[8] Emperor Alexander Augustus to Longus. A son in his father's power who goes surety for his father, albeit for the sale of a farm, is (personally) liable.

Posted October 14, in the consulship of Maximus, for the second time, and Aelianus (223).

[9] Idem A. Aristocrati. Etiamsi de iure obligationis pignorum actum fuerit, fideiussoribus liberatio non contingit.
PP. V k. Dec. Maximo II et Aeliano conss.

[10] Idem A. Vitali. pr. Fideiussor seu mandator si in usuras quoque obligatus est, iustam causam recusandi solvere eas non habet. 1. Ut autem is, qui cum altero fideiussit, non solus conveniatur, sed dividatur actio inter eos qui solvendo sunt, ante condemnationem ex ordine postulari solet.
PP.

[11] Idem A. Sallustio. pr. Cum alter ex fideiussoribus in solidum debito satisfaciat, actio ei adversus eum qui una fideiussit non competit. 1. Potuisti sane, cum fisco solveres, desiderare, ut ius pignoris quod fiscus habuit in te transferretur, et si hoc ita factum est, cessis actionibus uti poteris. quod et in privatis debitis observandum est.
PP. VII k. Nov. Alexandro A. III et Dione conss.

[12] Idem A. Theodoto. Blanditus tibi est, qui non teneri te persuasit, quod, cum pro alio intervenires, ἐγγυῶμαι dixisti, cum et his verbis obligationem verborum contrahi pridem receptum est.
PP. VI k. Sept. Agricola et Clemente conss.

[13] Pars ex epistula Gordiani A. Si Barsagoram latronem Lysanias decurio inventurum se spopondisset, aut exhibere compellendus est aut transmittendus ad praefectum praetorio vel ad praesidem provinciae.

[14] Idem A. Salvio. pr. Mandati actio personalis est. quae si nomine fideiussoris vel adversus debitorem seu heredes eius competit, praeses provinciae quae deberi compererit reddi iubebit. 1. Pignora etenim, quae reo stipulandi nexa fuerunt, ita demum ad vos transeunt, si facta nominis redemptione solutio celebrata est vobisque mandatae sunt actiones. 2. Quod si factum est, ea quoque vobis persequentibus adversus possessores extraordinariam iurisdictionem idem vir clarissimus impertiet.
PP. III non. Iul. Gordiano A. et Aviola conss.

[9] The same Augustus to Aristocrates. A lawsuit brought on legally obligated pledges does not free the sureties (from liability on the debt).

Posted November 27, in the consulship of Maximus, for the second time, and Aelianus (223).

[10] The same Augustus to Vitalis. pr. A surety or mandator, if obligated also for interest (on the principal debt), has no just basis to refuse to pay it. 1. But it is properly and commonly requested prior to a condemnation that a person who went surety with another not be sued alone, but that the action be divided among those who are solvent.

Posted ...

[11] The same Augustus to Sallustius. pr. When one of the sureties has satisfied the debt in full, he has no right of action against his co-surety. 1. You could, of course, have demanded, when you paid the Treasury, that the Treasury transfer to you the pledge right it had, and if this was so done, you can use the actions ceded to you. This should also be applied to private debts.[120]

Posted October 26, in the consulship of Alexander, for the third time, and Dio (229).

[12] The same Augustus to Theodotus. In backing another's debt, you said (in Greek), "I bind myself." The person who persuaded you that you were not liable was (just) being affable, since it has long been recognized that a verbal obligation (obligatio verborum) is contracted by such words.

Posted August 27, in the consulship of Agricola and Clemens (230).

[13] Part of a letter of GORDIAN Augustus. If the decurion Lysanias solemnly promised that he would find the bandit Barsagoras, he should be compelled either to produce him or be sent to the Praetorian Prefect or the provincial governor (for punishment).

[14] The same Augustus to Salvius. pr. The action on mandate is in personam. If it lies in a surety's name or against a debtor or his heirs, the provincial governor will order repayment of what he finds is due. 1. Pledges that were obligated to the promisee pass to you as long as release was effected by paying off the account and the actions were mandated to you (by the principal creditor). 2. If this was done, the same vir clarissimus will extend extraordinary jurisdiction to you as you pursue them (the pledges) against their (current) possessors.

Posted July 5, in the consulship of Gordian Augustus and Aviola (239).

[120] See D. 46.1.39. Blume: "The rule seems harsh and has been the subject of considerable controversy."

[15] Idem A. Claudiano. pr. Si indebitam pecuniam quasi ex causa fideiussionis obstrictus in cautionem per errorem deduxisti, tam doli mali exceptione uti quam condicere, ut obligatio tibi accepto feratur, potes. 1. Non est autem dubium fideiussorem, rei promittendi bonis ad fiscum devolutis si idem fiscus ob debitum restituendum fuerit conventus et solverit, liberari.

PP. v k. Dec. Gordiano A. et Aviola conss.

[16] Idem A. Maximo. Fuit liberum, antequam adversus omnes fideiussores lis contestaretur, unum eorum eligere creditori, si modo ceteros minus idoneos existimaret. at nunc post litis contestationem petitionem divisam redintegrari iuris ratio non patitur.

PP. II id. Iun. Gordiano A. II et Pompeiano conss.

[17] Idem A. Brasidae. Omissis quoque pignoribus fideiussorem a creditoribus utiliter conveniri, nisi in id quod ex his refici non potuerit acceptus sit, explorati iuris est.

PP. VI id. Mart. Attico et Praetextato conss.

[18] Imp. Philippus A. et Philippus C. Smyrnae. Si, ut proponis, fundum ob debitum obligatum non iusto pretio vendidisti, residuam quantitatem, quam ex pretio eiusdem servare potuisses, refundi tibi a fideiussore non iure poscis.

PP. v k. Aug. Peregrino et Aemiliano conss.

[19] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. et CC. Sabiniano. Si alienam reo principaliter constituto obligationem suscepisti vel fideiussorio sive mandatorio vel quocumque alieno nomine pro debitore intercessisti, non posse urgueri creditorem, eum qui mutuam accepit pecuniam quam te convenire, scire debueras, cum, si hoc in initio contractus specialiter non placuit, habeat liberam electionem.

S. II k. Mai. AA. conss.

[20] Idem AA. et CC. Aurelio. Sententia bonorum omnium ademptionem continente rei damnati principalis intercessores eligendi creditori potestas non adimitur.

[15] The same Augustus to Claudianus. pr. If, believing yourself a surety, you erroneously included unowed money in a written promise (to pay), you can use both the defense of fraud (if the promisee sues you on the note) and an action in personam that the obligation be handed over to you as "received" (acceptum). 1. Further, there is no doubt that a surety is released if, after the promisor's property fell to the Treasury, this same Treasury was sued for repayment of the debt and paid it.

Posted November 27, in the consulship of Gordian Augustus and Aviola (239).

[16] The same Augustus to Maximus. Before joinder of issue (litis contestatio) occurred against all the sureties, the creditor was free to choose one of them if he thought the others less solvent. But now, after joinder of issue, the logic of law (iuris ratio) does not allow that the divided claim be made whole again.

Posted June 12, in the consulship of Gordian Augustus, for the second time, and Pompeianus (241).

[17] The same Augustus to Brasidas. The law is certain that creditors may also ignore the pledges and (instead) effectively sue a surety, unless he was taken (as a surety) for what could not be realized from them.

Posted March 10, in the consulship of Atticus and Praetextatus (242).

[18] Emperor Philip Augustus and the Caesar Philip to Smyrna. If, as you state, you (as a creditor) did not get a just price (pretium iustum) when selling a farm obligated for a debt, you cannot legally demand that the surety make good the deficiency of the debt that you could have recovered from its price.

Posted July 28, in the consulship of Peregrinus and Aemilianus (244).

[19] Emperors Diocletian and Maximian Augusti and the Caesars to Sabinianus. If you assumed another person's obligation after the principal debtor was established, or you intervened on a debtor's behalf as a surety or a mandator or on some other basis, you ought to have known that the creditor cannot be pressed to sue the person who accepted the money loan rather than you, since, if this was not specifically agreed upon at the outset of the contract, he had a free choice (on whom to sue).[121]

Written April 30, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[20] The same Augusti and Caesars to Aurelius. When a verdict deprives someone of all his goods, his creditor's power is not taken away to choose (whom to sue among) the sureties (intercessores) of the condemned defendant.

[121] This constitution was later modified by Nov. 4.

[21] Idem AA. et CC. Iuliano. Sicut eligendi fideiussores creditor habet potestatem, ita intercessorem postulantem cedi sibi hypothecae sive pignori obligata iure non prius ad solutionem, nisi mandata super hac re fuerit persecutio, convenit urgueri.

S. XI k. Nov. AA. conss.

[22] Idem AA. et CC. Hermiano. Si ultra hoc, quod accepit ea, pro qua te mandatorio nomine intercessisse commemoras, daturum te scripsisti,[xviii] praeses provinciae ex hoc, quod ultra mandatum tuum numeratum est, a te nihil exigi patietur.

S. XII k. Mai. CC. conss.

[23] Idem AA. et CC. Antipatro. Reos principales vel mandatores simpliciter acceptos eligere vel pro parte convenire vel, satis non faciente contra quem egeras primo, post ad alium reverti, cum nullus de his electione liberetur, licet.

S. non. Dec. Nicomediae CC. conss.

[24] Idem AA. et CC. Pergamio. Fideiussoris quidem heres exemplo rei principalis tenetur. sed si idem utrisque succedat, intercessionis obligatione finita velut principalis tantum debitoris heres conveniri potest.

S. XI k. Ian. CC. conss.

[25] Idem AA. et CC. Philippo. Pignoribus datis a reo principali distractis nec post longi temporis intervallum residuum a fideiussore creditor petere prohibetur.

S. VI k. Ian. CC. conss.

[26] Imp. Iustinianus A. Iuliano pp. pr. Sancimus, si quis pro alio spoponderit, quatenus eum intra certum tempus tradat vel certam quantitatem pecuniarum pro eo inferat, et tempore statuto iam effluente non poterit eum repraesentare, non statim pecunias pro eo stipulatas inferre, sed competere quidem post temporis lapsum omnimodo poenalem actionem, non autem statim summam, pro qua fideiussor admissus est, profligari. 1. Sed si quidem usque ad sex mensuum spatium tempus statutum sit, aliud tantum ei indulgeri, intra quod si possit personam exhibere et eam tradere, poena sit liberatus. 2. Sin autem amplius quam sex mensuum tempus ab initio constitutum est, tunc, quanticumque

[xviii] Si ultra hoc quod daturum te scripsisti ea, pro qua te mandatorio nomine intercessisse commemoras, accepit, ...

[21] The same Augusti and Caesars to Julian. Just as a creditor has the option to chose (to sue) the sureties, so it is proper that a surety, if he asks that property obligated as a pledge or hypothec be assigned to him, not be pressed to pay before the right to claim it is mandated to him (by the creditor).

Written October 22, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[22] The same Augusti and Caesars to Hermianus. If the woman, for whom you say you interceded as a mandator, received more (as a loan) than you wrote that you would give (to guarantee the loan), the provincial governor will not permit you to be sued for the amount paid to her beyond what was stated in your mandate.

Written April 20, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[23] The same Augusti and Caesars to Antipater. He (the creditor) is allowed to choose (to sue) either the principal debtors, or the mandators who were accepted unconditionally, or to sue for a portion (of the debt), or, if the first person you had sued does not satisfy the debt, to have recourse to another, since none of them is freed by the (initial) choice.

Written December 5, at Nicomedia, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[24] The same Augusti and Caesars to Pergamius. The surety's heir is, indeed, liable on the pattern of the principal debtor. But if the same person becomes heir to both, the surety obligation ends and he can be sued only as the heir of the principal debtor.

Written December 22, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[25] The same Augusti and Caesars to Philip. When the pledges given by the principal debtor were sold, the creditor is not prevented from claiming the remainder from the surety even after the lapse of a long time.

Written December 27, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[26] Emperor J*USTINIAN* Augustus to Julian, Praetorian Prefect. pr. We ordain that if someone solemnly promises on another's behalf to produce him (for appearance in court) within a specified time or pay a specified amount of money for him, and after the time limit expires he is unable to present him, he does not at once pay the stipulated money for him. The action for the penalty does indeed lie in any case after the lapse of such time, but the amount for which he was admitted as surety is not exacted at once. 1. But if the time limit was fixed up to six months, another equal time period is granted to him, within which, if he can produce and deliver the person, he is released from the penalty. 2. But if from the outset a time of more than six months was set, then whatever extent of time was given, still after its lapse he shall have just a temporis curricula data sunt, tamen post lapsum eorum semenstres tantum habere eum indutias, intra quas sit ei licentia personam et non pecunias reddere. 3. Sin autem et secunda adiectio temporis excedat, tunc omnimodo poenam pecuniariam persolvat. 4. Sed si quidem post statutum ab initio tempus completum maluerit reum pro quo convenitur defendere, licere ei hoc facere, nisi pacti tenor ad hoc reclamaverit, si forsitan sine defensione facienda pro eo fideiussit: sed si defensionem subierit, eam usque ad finem adimplere, nulla ei licentia concedenda in medio personam tradere et pecuniarum dationem effugere. 5. Sin autem et secundum tempus effluxerit, nullo modo ei licentia concedatur nec ad defensionis venire praesidium, sed omnimodo poenam conferat, nisi intra primum tempus quod statutum est reus principalis ab hac luce fuerit subtractus: tunc enim penitus ab exactione poenae liberum eum custodiri oportet. 6. Quod si secundo tempore instante mortuus fuerit, nihilo minus poena iam commissa a fideiussore exigatur. 7. Omnibus, quae in fideiussores, quando tali poenae fuerint illigati, statuimus, et in heredes pro utilitate eorum obtinentibus.

D. VI k. April. Constantinopoli Lampadio et Oreste vv. cc. conss.

[27] Idem A. Iuliano pp. pr. Si fideiussor nullam quidem cautionem faciat ostendens se fideiussorem extitisse, praesentibus autem tabulariis hoc confessus est, quod in fide sua eum suscepit, dubitabatur a Palaestina advocatione, utrumne post duos menses liberatur quasi sine scriptis fideiussione facta, secundum generalia edicta sublimissimae praetorianae sedis, an utpote scriptura interveniente teneatur: et divisio alia introducebatur, si id iuris esse debet tam in publicis causis quam in privatis.

1. Sancimus itaque, nisi confessio litteris exposita fuerit a fideiussoribus ex repraesentatione personarum, licet attestatio super hoc praecesserit, attamen adhuc sine scriptis esse fideiussionem, videlicet in causis privatis, existimari et duobus mensibus effluentibus ab huiusmodi nexu fideiussores liberari, nisi in tempus certum data est fideiussio: tunc enim in tantum eam extendi, in quantum etiam attestatio fuerit expressa. 2. Sin autem publica causa interveniat, tunc omnimodo attestationem pro scriptura haberi. multis etenim privilegiis propter publicas necessitates publico iuri praestitis non ab re est et nos huiusmodi praerogativam ei condonare.

D. X k. Mart. Constantinopoli post consulatum Lampadii et Orestis vv. cc.

six-month truce within which he has leave to produce the person rather than the money. 3. But if the second time limit passes, then he shall pay the money penalty in any case. 4. But if, indeed, after lapse of the time originally set, he prefers to defend the defendant on account of whom he is sued, he is permitted to do this unless the tenor of the pact cries out against this, e.g., if perhaps his form of suretyship lacks the right of defense. But if he undertakes a defense, he must carry it out to the end, and he is not permitted in the middle (of the lawsuit) to hand over the person and escape paying money. 5. But if the second time limit also has elapsed, in no way is he given this leave, but he shall pay the penalty in any case, unless the defendant died within the originally fixed time limit; for then he must be kept entirely free from exaction of a penalty. 6. But if he died during the second period, the penalty that is now due shall be nevertheless exacted from the surety. 7. All these things which We provide for sureties when they are subject to such a penalty, apply also to heirs because of their benefit (from inheriting).

Given March 27, at Constantinople, in the consulship of the viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestes (530).

[27] The same Augustus to Julian, Praetorian Prefect. pr. If, indeed, a surety should execute no written document showing that he was a surety, but in the presence of scribes he has acknowledged that he undertook suretyship for him (for his appearance in court), the question was raised by the Society of Advocates (advocatio) in Palestine as to whether after two months, in accord with the general edicts of the sublime Praetorian office, he is released on the ground that the suretyship (itself) was not in writing; or is he bound inasmuch as there is a written record (of his acknowledgment)? And a further distinction was introduced: should this be the law in public as well as in private cases?

1. We therefore ordain that unless the acknowledgment is set out in writing by the sureties for production of persons (in court), and even if an oral statement on this preceded, nevertheless it is still considered to be an unwritten suretyship at least for private cases, and after two months sureties are released from such an obligation unless the suretyship was given for a definite time; for then it lasts for as long as the acknowledgment stated. 2. But in a public case an (oral) acknowledgment before witnesses is generally considered the same as a writing. For it is not inappropriate that since many advantages are accorded to public law because of public requirements, We Ourselves also grant such an advantage to it.

Given February 20, at Constantinople, in the post-consulate of the viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestes (531).

[28] Idem A. Iohanni pp. pr. Generaliter sancimus, quemadmodum in mandatoribus statutum est, ut contestatione contra unum ex his facta alter non liberetur, ita et in fideiussoribus observari. 1. Invenimus enim et in fideiussorum cautionibus plerumque ex pacto huiusmodi causae esse prospectum, et ideo generali lege sancimus nullo modo electione unius ex fideiussoribus vel ipsius rei alterum liberari, vel ipsum reum fideiussoribus vel uno ex his electo liberationem mereri, nisi satisf*iat* creditori, sed manere ius integrum, donec in solidum ei pecuniae persolvantur vel alio modo satis ei fiat. 2. Idemque in duobus reis promittendi constituimus, ex unius rei electione praeiudicium creditori adversus alium fieri non concedentes, sed remanere et ipsi creditori actiones integras et personales et hypothecarias, donec per omnia ei satisfiat. 3. Si enim pactis conventis hoc fieri conceditur et in usu quotidiano semper hoc versari adspicimus, quare non ipsa legis auctoritate hoc permittatur, ut nec simplicitas suscipientium contractus ex quacumque parte possit ius creditoris mutilare?

D. XV k. Nov. Constantinopoli post consulatum Lampadii et Orestis vv. cc.

[29] Ἐάν τις ἐγγυήσηται ἐπὶ τόκοις, μὴ μόνον εἰς διετίαν κατέχεσθαι, ἀλλὰ τοσοῦτον χρόνον, ὅσον σύνθηται. ὅσον οὖν θέλει χρόνον ὁριζέτω, μόνον εἰ μὴ ὑπὲρ τὸ διπλοῦν συνάγεται ἐν αὐτῷ.

XXXXI De Novationibus et Delegationibus

[1] Imp. Alexander A. Quintiano et Timotheo. Delegatio debiti nisi consentiente et stipulanti promittente debitore iure perfici non potest: nominis autem venditio et ignorante vel invito eo, adversus quem actiones mandantur, contrahi solet.

PP. V id. Febr. Maximo II et Aeliano conss.

[28] The same Augustus to John, Praetorian Prefect. pr. We ordain generally that the rule decreed for mandators, namely that when there is joinder of issue against one of them, the other is not released, be applied also to sureties. 1. For We find that in the written contracts of sureties this point is often foreseen through a pact providing for this. Therefore, We ordain by a general law that a surety is in no way released when suit is brought against another surety for this matter, nor does the defendant (the principal debtor) win release when suit is brought against one of the sureties or the principal himself, unless the creditor is satisfied; rather, his right remains unaffected until the money is paid to him in its entirety or he is satisfied otherwise. 2. Our decision is the same as to joint promisors: We do not permit action against one of them to prejudice action against another. Rather, the creditor retains his full rights of action, both in personam and on a hypothec, until he is entirely satisfied. 3. For if it is allowed to do this in agreements and We (also) see this constantly occurring in daily usage, why is it not allowed by legal authority itself, so that the contracting parties' naiveté cannot damage a creditor's rights in any respect?

Given October 18, at Constantinople, in the post-consulate of the viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestes (531).

[29][122] If someone goes surety for interest (on a debt), he is liable not just for two years, but for as much time as he contracted. So he may set whatever time limit he wishes, as long as he is not bound above twice (the principal).

Forty-First Title Novations and Delegations[123]

[1][124] Emperor Alexander Augustus to Quintianus and Timotheus. The delegation of a debt cannot be legally accomplished unless the debtor agrees and promises the (new) creditor by stipulation. However, the sale of an account commonly occurs even when the person against whom the actions are mandated (i.e., the debtor) is unaware or unwilling.

Posted February 9, in the consulship of Maximus, for the second time, and Aelianus (223).

[122] The text of this constitution is taken from the Basilika (26.1.93). It lacks a salutation and subscription.

[123] See D. 46.2. A novation (novatio) is the merging and transfer of a prior debt into another obligation, in such a way as to destroy the former debt. In Roman law, one way to accomplish this is through delegatio, whereby the old creditor assigns the debtor to a new creditor and directs the debtor to promise by stipulation to pay the new creditor; thereby, the old debt is replaced by a new one.

[124] = C. 4.39.3, in part.

[2] Imp. Gordianus A. Firmino. Ex contractu pecuniae creditae actio inefficax dirigitur, si delegatione personae rite facta iure novationis vetustior contractus evanuit.

PP. k. Sept. Pio et Pontiano conss.

[3] Idem A. Muciano. pr. Si delegatio non est interposita debitoris tui ac propterea actiones apud te remanserunt, quamvis creditori tuo adversus eum solutionis causa mandaveris actiones, tamen, antequam lis contestetur vel aliquid ex debito accipiat vel debitori tuo denuntiaverit, exigere a debitore tuo debitam quantitatem non vetaris et eo modo tui creditoris exactionem contra eum inhibere. 1. Quod si delegatione facta iure novationis tu liberatus es, frustra vereris, ne eo, quod quasi a cliente suo non faciat exactionem, ad te periculum redundet, cum per verborum obligationem voluntate novationis interposita debito liberatus sis.

PP. v id. Iun. Gordiano A. et Aviola conss.

[4] Idem A. Stratonico. Non abstulit tibi procurator tuus actionem, si, cum ei mandasses exactionem pecuniae, quam hi tibi debebant, contra quos supplicas, parte accepta de reliquo eos liberavit, cum neque contra voluntatem tuam novationem facere neque in eo quod non solvebatur eos liberare potuerit.

PP. id. Nov. Gordiano A. et Aviola conss.

[5] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. et CC. Septimiae. Si pater tuus, cui te successisse proponis, creditori pro Alexandro suscepto nomine certam pecuniam stipulanti spopondit, licet per improbitatem Alexander ei satis non fecit, tamen summae repromissae nimis improbe solutio negatur.

S. II id. April. Sirmi CC. conss.

[6] Idem AA. et CC. Ziparo. Nec creditoris creditori quisquam invitus delegari potest.

S. XII k. Nov. Dorostolo[xix] CC. conss.

[7] Idem AA. et CC. Zoilo. Si solvere tibi pecuniam delegatus Eucarpus dare spopondit vel debitum constituit, suo nomine conveniri potest.

[xix] Durostoro

[2] Emperor GORDIAN Augustus to Firminus. An action for money owed on a contract is brought ineffectually if a delegation of the person (of the debtor) was properly made and the prior contract disappeared by the law of novation.

Posted September 1, in the consulship of Pius and Pontianus (238).

[3] The same Augustus to Mucianus. pr. If there was no delegation of your debtor and therefore the rights of action remained with you, then even if you mandate to your creditor your actions against him for payment, prior to joinder of issue (litis contestatio) or his (the creditor's) receiving some of the debt or his giving notice (demanding payment) to your debtor you are not forbidden from demanding from your debtor the amount owed and thereby obstructing your creditor's collection from him. 1. But if a delegation was made and you are released by the law of novation, you needlessly fear that the risk falls on you should he fail to collect as if from a client; you (as the former creditor) are released from the debt through a verbal obligation (the stipulation) made with the intent of novation.

Posted June 9, in the consulship of Gordian Augustus and Aviola (239).

[4] The same Augustus to Stratonicus. Your procurator did not deprive you of your right of action if, when you gave him a mandate to collect money owed to you by the objects of your complaint, he accepted part and released them from the rest, since he could neither make a novation against your will nor release them as to the unpaid portion.

Posted November 13, in the consulship of Gordian Augustus and Aviola (239).

[5] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti and the Caesars to Septimia. If your father, whose heir you say you are, took up an account and, on behalf of Alexander, solemnly promised his creditor by stipulation a specified sum of money, then even if Alexander dishonestly did not satisfy him (your father), nevertheless (the novation succeeds and so your) payment of the re-promised amount is not rightly refused.

Written April 12, at Sirmium, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[6][125] The same Augusti and Caesars to Ziparus. No debtor can be delegated unwillingly to a creditor's creditor.

Written October 21, at Durostorum, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[7] The same Augusti and Caesars to Zoilus. If Eucarpus, who (as a debtor) was delegated to pay you money, (either) solemnly promised by stipulation to give alioquin adversus eum experiri pro chirographario debitore tuo frustra conaris.

[125] Combine with C. 4.5.8.

S. XVII k. Ian. CC. conss.

[8] Imp. Iustinianus A. ad senatum. pr. Novationum nocentia corrigentes volumina et veteris iuris ambiguitates resecantes sancimus, si quis vel aliam personam adhibuerit vel mutaverit vel pignus acceperit vel quantitatem augendam vel minuendam esse crediderit vel condicionem seu tempus addiderit vel detraxerit vel cautionem iuniorem acceperit vel aliquid fecerit, ex quo veteris iuris conditores introducebant novationes, nihil penitus priori cautelae innovari, sed anteriora stare et posteriora incrementum illis accedere, nisi ipsi specialiter remiserint quidem priorem obligationem et hoc expresserint, quod secundam magis pro anterioribus elegerint. 1. Et generaliter definimus voluntate solum esse, non lege novandum, etsi non verbis exprimatur, ut sine novatione, quod solito vocabulo ἀνοβατεύτως[ix] dicunt, causa procedat: hoc enim naturalibus inesse rebus volumus et non verbis extrinsecus supervenire.

D. XI k. Aug. Constantinopoli Lampadio et Oreste vv. cc. conss.

XXXXII De Solutionibus et Liberationibus

[1] Imp. Antoninus A. Aristaenetae. In potestate eius est, qui ex pluribus contractibus pecuniam debet, tempore solutionis exprimere, in quam causam reddat. quod si debitor id non fecit, convertitur electio ad eum qui accepit. si neuter voluntatem suam expressit, prius in usuras id quod solvitur, deinde in sortem accepto feretur.

PP. prid. non. Iun. duobus Aspris conss.

[2] Imp. Alexander A. Bassae. Liberari fideiussores, quotiens fiscus tam creditori quam debitori, licet diversis stationibus, succedit, ius certum est. quod et in tua persona procuratores mei custodient.

S. k. Iun. Lupo et Maximo conss.

[ix] ἀναβατεύτως

it or informally promised the debt (through a constitutum debiti), he can be sued on his own account. Otherwise your attempt to sue him on behalf of your debtor by a promissory note is ineffective.[126]

Written December 16, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[8] Emperor JUSTINIAN Augustus to the Senate. pr. To correct harmful writings on novations and clear up the doubts in ancient law, We ordain that if anyone either summons an additional person, or changes something, or receives a pledge, or allows the amount (of the debt) to be increased or diminished, or adds or removes a condition or time limit, or receives a subsequent promissory note, or does anything that the founders of the ancient law considered novations, none of these things changes the earlier security provision in any way; instead, the prior ones remain and the later ones accrue as an increment to them, unless they themselves expressly remit the earlier obligation and state that they opt for the subsequent one in place of the earlier ones. 1. And generally We provide that novation must occur only by consent and not by operation of law, even if it is not expressly stated that the transaction occurs without a novation – what they call by the usual (Greek) expression "through a rider." For We wish this to occur in the natural course of things, and that it not appear through words (imposed) from without.[127]

Given July 22, at Constantinople, in the consulship of viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestes (530).

Forty-Second Title Payments and Releases[128]

[1] Emperor ANTONINUS Augustus to Aristaeneta. It is in the power of a person who owes money on several contracts (to a single creditor) to designate, at the time of his payment, for what purpose he makes it. But if the debtor did not do this, the choice becomes the recipient's. If neither expressed his wish, the amount paid is applied first to interest, then to the principal.

Posted June 4, in the consulship of the two Aspri (212).

[2] Emperor ALEXANDER Augustus to Bassa. It is settled law that whenever the Treasury succeeds (to the property of) both the creditor and debtor, albeit at different offices (of the Treasury), the sureties are released. My procurators shall follow this rule also in your case.

Written June 1, in the consulship of Lupus and Maximus (232).

[126] Eucarpus owed money to Zoilus' debtor and was delegated to pay the debt to Zoilus; but there was no novation unless the transaction was completed through a stipulation or an informal constitutum debiti whereby Zoilus was substituted for Eucarpus' original creditor.

[127] See Inst. 3.29.3.

[128] See D. 46.3.

[3] Imp. Gordianus A. Apollonio. Si, cum servus liberam peculii administrationem haberet, mutuam pecuniam ab eo accepisti, eique ante ademptum peculium vel priusquam ademptum cognosceres eam exsolvisti, ea solutione liberatus es.

PP. v k. Oct. Pio et Pontiano conss.

[4] Idem A. Rufinae. Nihil interest, utrum creditori pecuniam mutuam solveris, an ex eius voluntate servo numeraveris. nec enim ex eo, quod creditor in fatum concessit, priusquam instrumenta redderet, evacuatae obligationis vires reparari queunt.

PP. prid. id. Oct. Pio et Pontiano conss.

[5] Idem A. Celso. Nulla tibi adversus creditorem alienum actio superest eo, quod debitam ei quantitatem offerens ius obligationis in te transferri desideras, cum ab eo te nomen comparasse non suggeras, licet[xxi] solutione ab alio facta nomine debitoris evanescere soleat obligatio.

PP. VII k. Nov. Pio et Pontiano conss.

[6] Idem A. Alexandro. Si inter patrem tuum eosque, quos debitores esse dicebas, non de dubia lite transactio facta est, sed parte tantummodo recuperata universum se recepisse cavit nec de superfluo eos, qui verbis obligati erant, per acceptilationem liberavit nec donationis causa id factum est, exuberantis debiti integra ei repetitio competit.

PP. III id. Febr. Gordiano A. et Aviola conss.

[7] Imp. Philippus A. et Philippus C. Antiocho. Eius quantitatis, cuius petitionem ratio compensationis excludit, usuram non posse reposci manifestum est.

PP. VI k. Aug. Peregrino et Aemiliano conss.

[8] Idem A. et C. Rufo. Usuras, quae quotannis in urbe numerandae sunt, promittere[xxii] alio loco dependi nisi ex iusta causa exempli ratio minime sinit.

PP. v id. Mai. Philippo A. et Titiano conss.

[9] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. Cassio. Obsignatione totius debitae pecuniae sollemniter facta liberationem contingere manifestum

[xxi] et
[xxii] permittere

[3] Emperor GORDIAN Augustus to Apollonius. If a slave had free administration (libera administratio) of his peculium and you took a money loan from him, and you paid it back before his peculium was taken away from him or before you knew of this, you are released by this payment.
Posted September 27, in the consulship of Pius and Pontianus (238).

[4] The same Augustus to Rufina. It makes no difference whether you pay a money loan to the creditor, or (instead) you disburse it to his slave at his request. Nor can a discharged obligation regain vitality by reason of the creditor dying before he hands over the documents (proving the debt).
Posted October 14, in the consulship of Pius and Pontianus (238).

[5] The same Augustus to Celsus. You have no remaining right of action against another person's creditor by virtue of tendering to him the amount owed and seeking transfer of the obligation right to yourself, since you do not indicate that you had bought the account from him; and when a third party makes a payment on a debtor's account, the (original) obligation is usually extinguished.
Posted October 26, in the consulship of Pius and Pontianus (238).

[6] The same Augustus to Alexander. If there was no settlement of a doubtful legal claim between your father and those you say are his debtors, but he received only part and gave an acknowledgment that he had received it all, and he did not use a formal acceptance (acceptilatio) to release from the remainder those who were obligated verbally (under a stipulation), and this was not done as a gift, he (still) has the entire claim for the remaining debt.
Posted February 11, in the consulship of Gordian Augustus and Aviola (239).

[7] Emperor PHILIP Augustus and the Caesar PHILIP to Antiochus. It is obvious that no interest can be demanded for an amount when the claim for it (the amount) is barred by reason of a judicial off-set (compensatio).
Posted July 27, in the consulship of Peregrinus and Aemilianus (244).

[8] The same Augustus and Caesar to Rufus. If interest (on a debt) is to be paid annually in the city (of Rome), fear of a bad precedent (ratio exempli) does not allow permitting its payment elsewhere, except for a good cause.
Posted May 11, in the consulship of Philip Augustus and Titianus (245).

[9] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti to Cassius. When the sealing of all the money owed takes place in the regular manner, it is obvious that

est. sed ita demum oblatio debiti liberationem parit, si eo loco, quo debetur solutio, fuerit celebrata.

PP. v id. Mai. Maximo II et Aquilino conss.

[10] Idem AA. et CC. Ambrosio. Successores eius, qui maior quinque et viginti annis in solutum pro debito iure mancipia dedit, haec revocare non posse constat.

S. v id. April. Byzantii AA. conss.

[11] Idem AA. et CC. Capitolinae. Cum maritum tuum a debitoribus tuis minoris viginti et quinque annis constitutae velut ex causa tibi debiti aliquas accepisse quantitates nec tamen te consensum commodasse significes, nullum tibi potuit praeiudicium fieri, nisi factam solutionem post maiorem aetatem ratam feceris.

S. v k. Mai. Heracliae AA. conss.

[12] Idem AA. et CC. Eutycho. Invito vel ignorante creditore qui solvit alii, non se liberat obligatione. quod si hoc vel mandante vel ratum habente eo fecerit, non minus liberationem consequitur, quam si eidem creditori solvisset.

S. III id. Mai. AA. conss.

[13] Idem AA. et CC. Philotimo. Si obligatum ex causa mandati non per stipulationem facta novatione, post acceptilatione liberasti, sed tantum receptam ex eadem causa debitam quantitatem falso scripsisti, figmento veritatis extingui non potuit obligatio.

S. VII k. Iun. AA. conss.

[14] Idem AA. et CC. Cutae. Pecuniae solutae professio collata instrumento maiorem gestae rei probationem continet, quam si chirographum acceptae mutuae pecuniae fuisset redditum.

S. v id. Iul. AA. conss.

[15] Idem AA. et CC. Quartioni. Quod debitori tuo chirographum redditum contra voluntatem tuam adseveres, nihil de iure tuo deminutum est. quibuscumque itaque argumentis iure proditis hanc obligationem tibi probanti eum per huiusmodi factum liberationem minime consecutum iudex ad solutionem iure debiti compellet.

S. v k. Sept. AA. conss.

release occurs. But tender of a debt leads to release (only) if it takes place where the debt is owed.

Posted May 11, in the consulship of Maximus, for the second time, and Aquilinus (286).

[10] The same Augusti and the Caesars to Ambrosius. It is clear that if a person over age 25 lawfully gave slaves in payment of a debt he owed, his successors cannot reclaim them.

Written April 9, at Byzantium, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[11][129] The same Augusti and Caesars to Capitolina. Since you indicate that, while you were under age 25, your husband received some sums of money from your debtors as if on the basis of a debt owed you, and that you did not provide your consent, he could not prejudice you unless you ratified the payment after coming of age.

Written April 27, at Heraclea, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[12] The same Augusti and Caesars to Eutychus. Someone who pays a third party without the creditor's consent or knowledge does not release himself from the obligation. But if he does this and the creditor mandates or ratifies it, he achieves release not less than if he had paid it to the same creditor.

Written May 13, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[13] The same Augusti and Caesars to Philotimus. If a person was obligated to you on the basis of a mandate and you did not release him through a stipulation by making a novation and then a formal release (acceptilatio), but you just wrote, falsely, that you had received the amount owed for this reason, the obligation could not be extinguished by the false pretense of truth.

Written May 26, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[14] The same Augusti and Caesars to Cuta. Acknowledgment of a money payment in a document is a better proof of what was done than is return of the promissory note (chirographum) for the receipt of the money loaned.

Written July 11, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[15] The same Augusti and Caesars to Quartio. If, as you assert, a promissory note was returned to your debtor against your will, your rights are not at all diminished. So if you prove this obligation by whatever legal proofs you can, under the law of debt the judge will compel him to pay, since he hardly achieved release by such an act.

Written August 28, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[129] Combine with C. 5.16.17.

[16] Idem AA. et CC. Charidemo. Eum, a quo mutuam sumpsisti pecuniam, in solutum nolentem suscipere nomen debitoris tui compelli iuris ratio non permittit.

S. xv k. Nov. AA. conss.

[17] Idem AA. et CC. Cassio. Manifesti iuris est tam alio pro debitore solvente quam rebus pro numerata pecunia consentiente creditore datis tolli comparatam obligationem.

S. k. Dec. Sirmi AA. conss.

[18] Idem AA. et CC. Domitio Aphobio. Inquisitio veritatis tolli non potuit, quod chirographa, quae fecerat procurator tuus, recepta tibique restituta ab ipsius herede proponas cum subscriptione procuratoris significante, quod nihil creditoribus debeatur, cum nihil prohibeat et creditoribus satisfactum et non vestrae pecuniae, sed ipsius, cui negotium gerendum mandaveras, processisse solutionem.

S. id. Febr. CC. conss.

[19] Idem AA. et CC. Diogeni. Si, actore tam mutuis pecuniis dandis quam debitis recipiendis praeposito, in hoc quod susceperas eius dominae per ipsum fecisti satis, instrumentum inane solutione celebrata nihil tibi nocere potest. aliter enim solventes servo de actione domini liberare se minime possunt.

S. v id. Oct. CC. conss.

[20] Idem AA. et CC. Eucratidi. Si operas certi servi pecunia sumpta creditorem sibi in debitum compensare placuit, his secundum conventionis fidem praestitis de mancipio restituendo pacti tenor servari debet.

S. v k. Nov. Hadrianopoli CC. conss.

[21] Idem AA. et CC. Rufo. Interest multum, utrumne spe futurae numerationis suscepisse te quod instrumento continetur scripsisti, an accepta minore quantitate tantum quantum lectio probat in scriptura conferri placuit. nam superiori quidem casu residui petitio debiti

[16] The same Augusti and Caesars to Charidemus. The logic of law (iuris ratio) does not permit that your creditor, from whom you received a money loan, be compelled unwillingly to accept your debtor's account as payment.

Written October 18, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[17] The same Augusti and Caesars to Cassius. It is clear law that a purchased obligation is released as much by a third party paying for the debtor as by property being given, with the creditor's consent, for the money paid.

Written December 1, at Sirmium, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[18][130] The same Augusti and Caesars to Domitius Aphobius. A search for the truth (i.e., a judicial investigation) cannot be excluded by reason of the fact that, as you state, the promissory notes that your procurator had executed were returned (to him) and then restored to you by his heir with the procurator's notation that nothing was owed to the creditors, since nothing prevents it being true that the creditors were satisfied, but that payment came not from your money but from that of the person to whom you entrusted the management of your affairs (the procurator).

Written February 13, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[19] The same Augusti and Caesars to Diogenes. If a slave manager (actor) was charged both with giving money loans and receiving debts, and for the debt you had undertaken you satisfied his female owner through him, the document (proving the debt), valueless if payment is known to have occurred, cannot harm you at all. For otherwise those who pay a slave cannot (thereby) release themselves from the master's lawsuit.

Written October 11, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[20] The same Augusti and Caesars to Eucratides. If, for a debt to himself, a creditor agreed to accept the work of a specific slave in place of a money payment, and this work was rendered with fidelity to the agreement, the tenor of the pact should be carried out concerning return of the slave (to the debtor).

Written October 28, at Adrianople,[131] in the consulship in the Caesars (294).

[21] The same Augusti and Caesars to Rufus. It makes a great difference whether you wrote that the amount recorded in a document was accepted by you in expectation of a future payment, or whether it was agreed that, upon receipt of a lesser sum, the amount mentioned in the writing should be stated to have been received. For in the first case the claim for the rest of the debt manet integra, posteriori vero consensu transactionis finitis stare convenit.

[130] Combine with C. 2.25.1 (slightly different date), 4.51.4 (only source for Aphobius).

[131] More likely Anchialos (Connolly). Mommsen dates to October 31, 294.

S. III non. Dec. CC. conss.

[22] Idem AA. et CC. Grato. Inductum (id est cancellatum) nec ne sit chirographum, vestrum solutionem semel debiti factam ei, qui exigendi potestatem habuit, probantium nihil interest.

S. V id. Dec. CC. conss.

[23] Idem AA. et CC. Vatio. Si litterarum Auxanonis contemplatione, quas ad Aristonem de numeranda tibi pecunia dederat, recepisse scripsisti debitum ab Aristone, mandato non impleto, cum petitio debiti manet integra, nihil legitimam exactionem impedire potest.

S. XV k. Ian. Nicomediae CC. conss.

[24] Idem AA. et CC. Rufino. Cum pro pecunia quam acceperas secundum placitum Euandro te fundum dedisse profitearis, eius industriam vel eventum meliorem tibi, non ipsi prodesse, contrarium non postulaturus, si minoris distraxisset, non iusta[xdiii] petis.

S. VII k. Ian. Nicomediae CC. conss.

[25] Idem AA. et CC. Antelliano. Solutionem adseveranti probationis onus incumbit: quo facto chirographum condicere potest.

S. III k. Ian. Nicomediae CC. conss.

XXXXIII De Acceptilationibus

[1] Imp. Antoninus A. Apronio. Iam tibi rescripsi posse apud iudicem quaeri, an sollemnibus verbis tutoris auctoritate interveniente soror tua acceptilatione debitorem suum liberaverit. quare si in repetenda pecunia, quam exsolvit, diversa pars perseveraverit, uteris defensionibus competentibus.

PP. III id. Febr. duobus Aspris conss.

[xdiii] iuste

remains intact, but in the second it is proper to stick with what is resolved in the consensual settlement (and so bar suit for any remainder).

Written December 3, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[22] The same Augusti and Caesars to Gratus. In proving that a debt payment was once made to a party who had the power to collect it, as to you it makes no difference whether or not the promissory note was erased, i.e., cancelled.

Written December 9, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[23] The same Augusti and Caesars to Vatius. If, in consideration of Auxano's letters which he had given on behalf of Aristo about paying money to you, you wrote that you had received a debt from Aristo, but the mandate (to Auxano) was not fulfilled, since your claim on the debt (from Aristo) remains intact, nothing obstructs (your) legal collection (of it).

Written December 18, at Nicomedia, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[24] The same Augusti and Caesars to Rufinus. Since you acknowledge that, in accord with an agreement, you gave a farm to Evander in return for money you had accepted, you do not justly request that his diligence or better luck (in selling for a larger price) profit you, not him, since you would not seek the contrary if he had sold it for a smaller price.

Written December 26, at Nicomedia, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[25] The same Augusti and Caesars to Antellianus. The burden of proof falls on the person alleging payment. If this is done, he can sue to recover a promissory note.

Written December 30, at Nicomedia, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

Forty-Third Title Formal Releases (Acceptilationes)[132]

[1] Emperor Antoninus Augustus to Apronius. I have (previously) sent you a rescript that trial can be held before a judge as to whether your sister, with consent from her tutor, released her debtor through a formal release (acceptilatio) with the prescribed words. So if the other party perseveres in reclaiming the money he paid, you will use the relevant defenses.[133]

Posted February 11, in the consulship of the two Aspri (212).

[132] See D. 46.4.

[133] Blume: "In this case the sister ... the creditor ... died, leaving her brother as her heir. The debtor of the sister demanded the money back which he had paid in payment of the debt, upon the ground that the sister's release was not valid. But the rescript says that if she gave a formal release, with the consent of her guardian, her act is valid and that, accordingly, the debtor, being lawfully released, cannot reclaim the money, which, had not valid release been given, he might have recovered as having been paid without consideration or on any just ground."

[2] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. et CC. Claro. Si donationis gratia novatione facta per acceptilationem praestiteris liberationem, omnis agendi via perempta est.

S. VI k. Ian. AA. conss.

[3] Idem AA. et CC. Demetriae. Per Aquilianam stipulationem pacto subditam obligatione praecedente sublata et acceptilatione, quae fuerit inducta, perempta ei, qui ex nulla causa restitui potest, omnis agendi via praecluditur.

S. V k. Dec. CC. conss.

XXXXIIII De Evictionibus

[1] Impp. Severus et Antoninus AA. Munatio. Emptor hereditatis rem a possessoribus sumptu ac periculo suo persequi debet. evictio quoque non praestatur in singulis, cum hereditatem iure venisse constet, nisi aliud nominatim inter contrahentes convenit.

PP. VI k. Mart. Severo II et Victorino conss.

[2] Idem AA. Quartae. Quoniam avus tuus, cum praedia tibi donaret, de evictione eorum cavit, potes adversus coheredes tuos ex causa stipulationis consistere ob evictionem praediorum, pro portione scilicet hereditaria. nudo autem pacto interveniente minime donatorem hac actione teneri certum est.

PP. II k. Mart. Antonino A. II et Geta II conss.

[3] Idem AA. Aureliano. Qui rem emit et possidet, quamdiu evicta non est, auctorem suum propterea, quod aliena vel obligata res dicatur, convenire non potest.

PP. VIII k. Aug. Faustino et Rufino conss.

[2][134] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti and the Caesars to Clarus. If a novation was made (by you) as a gift and you (then) granted a discharge (from the novated debt) through a formal release, every avenue for (your) bringing suit is closed.

Written December 27, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[3] The same Augusti and Caesars to Demetria. If a preceding obligation is removed by an Aquilian stipulation[135] attached to a pact, and a formal release that was cancelled is destroyed, every avenue for bringing an action is foreclosed and in no way can he be restored (to his former rights as a creditor).

Written November 27, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

Forty-Fourth Title Evictions[136]

[1] Emperors SEVERUS and ANTONINUS Augusti to Munatius. The purchaser of an inheritance should recover the property from its possessors at his own expense and risk. When it is agreed that an inheritance was lawfully sold, there is no liability (on the seller's part) for eviction from individual pieces of property unless it is expressly agreed otherwise between the parties.

Posted February 24 or 25, in the consulship of Severus, for the second time, and Victorinus (200).

[2] The same Augusti to Quarta. Since your grandfather, in bestowing properties on you, gave a formal guarantee (cautio) against eviction from them, you can sue your co-heirs on the stipulation because of your eviction from the properties – in proportion, of course, to their (shares in the) inheritance. But it is settled that a donor is not liable in this action if there was a bare pact (against eviction, without a cautio).

Posted February 28, in the consulship of Antoninus Augustus, for the second time, and Geta, for the second time (205).

[3] The same Augusti to Aurelianus. A person who buys and takes possession of property cannot sue the guarantor (against eviction; i.e., the seller as auctor) as long as he is not evicted (by the true owner), (i.e., there is no claim merely) because the object allegedly belongs to a third party or is obligated (as security for a debt).

Posted July 25, in the consulship of Faustinus and Rufinus (210).

[134] Perhaps combine with C. 3.32.18.

[135] The Aquilian stipulation, invented by the late Republican jurist Aquilius Gallus, is a formal device to release an obligation not contracted by stipulation. See D. 43.4.18 and Inst. 3.29.2.

[136] Evictiones; see D. 46.3; also 21.2. Evictio occurs when a current possessor is legally ousted from possession by the true owner of property. Much of this title centers on sellers who are guarantors (auctores) against subsequent eviction.

[4] Imp. Antoninus A. Georgio. Si praedium tibi pro soluto datum aliis creditoribus fuerat obligatum, causa pignoris mutata non est. igitur si hoc iure fuerit evictum, utilis tibi actio contra debitorem competit. nam eiusmodi contractus vicem venditionis obtinet.

PP. XI k. Aug. duobus Aspris conss.

[5] Idem A. Patroinae. Ex praediis, quae mercata es, si aliqua a venditore obligata et necdum tibi tradita sunt, ex empto actione consequeris, ut ea a creditrice liberentur: id enim fiet, si adversus venditorem ex vendito actione pretium petentem doli exceptionem opposueris.

PP. XV k. Oct. duobus Aspris conss.

[6] Imp. Alexander A. Octavio. Non dubitatur, etsi specialiter venditor evictionem non promiserit, re evicta ex empto competere actionem.

PP. VIII id. Mart. Alexandro A. cons.

[7] Idem A. Hilariano. Auctore laudato si evicta res est, fideiussorem, etiamsi agi causam ignoraverit, conveniri evictionis nomine posse non ambigitur.

PP. III non. April. Alexandro A. cons.

[8] Idem A. Clementio. Emptor fundi, nisi auctori aut heredi eius denuntiaverit, evicto praedio neque ex stipulatu neque ex dupla neque ex empto actionem contra venditorem vel fideiussores eius habet. sed et si iudicio emptor non adfuit aut praesens per iniuriam iudicis victus est absente auctore vel fideiussore, regressum adversus eum non habet.

PP. VIII id. Dec. Alexandro A. cons.

[9] Idem A. Terentio. Si controversia tibi possessionis, quam bona fide te emisse adlegas, ab aliquo movetur, auctori heredive eius denuntia. et si quidem obtinueris, habebis quod emisti. sin autem evictum erit, a venditrice successoreve eius consequeris, quanti tua interest: in quo continetur etiam eorum persecutio, quae in rem emptam a te, ut melior fieret, erogata sunt.

PP. XI k. Ian. Alexandro A. cons.

[10] Idem A. Largo. Si fines agri venditor demonstravit et legem dixit intra eos neminem ingressurum, si quid inde evincatur, periculo fit

[4] Emperor ANTONINUS Augustus to Georgius. If land given to you as a payment had been (previously) obligated to other creditors, the legal basis of the pledge is unchanged. So if you are evicted (by the creditors) on this basis, you have an analogous action (utilis actio) against the debtor, since such a contract is much like a sale.

Posted July 22, in the consulship of the two Aspri (212).

[5] The same Augustus to Patroina. Of the properties that you bought, if some were obligated (as security) by the seller and have not yet been handed over to you, by an action on purchase you will bring it about that they be redeemed from the creditor (who holds the security interest). For this will (also) happen if you set up the defense of deceit against the seller who claims the price in an action on sale.

Posted September 17, in the consulship of the two Aspri (212).

[6] Emperor Alexander Augustus to Octavius. There is no doubt that although a seller did not specifically promise (a warranty against) eviction, an action on purchase lies if eviction occurs.

Posted March 8, in the consulship of Alexander Augustus (222).

[7] The same Augustus to Hilarianus. There is no doubt that if the guarantor (seller) was put on notice (of an eviction suit) and eviction (of the buyer) then occurred, the (seller's) surety can be sued on the eviction even if he did not know of the lawsuit.

Posted April 3, in the consulship of Alexander Augustus (222).

[8] The same Augustus to Clementius. Unless the buyer of a farm gives notice to the guarantor or his heir, after eviction he has no action against the seller or his sureties on a stipulation (against eviction) or to recover double or on the sale. But also if the buyer was not present at the trial, or was present and lost through judicial misconduct in the absence of the guarantor or his surety, he has no recourse against him (the seller).

Posted December 6, in the consulship of Alexander Augustus (222).

[9] The same Augustus to Terentius. If someone raises a dispute with you over a possession you claim you purchased in good faith, give notice to the guarantor (seller) or her heir. If, indeed, you win, you will have what you bought. But if there is an eviction, from the seller or her heir you will recover your interest (quanti tua interest), including also what you spent on improvements to the object of sale.

Posted December 22, in the consulship of Alexander Augustus (222).

[10] The same Augustus to Largus. If the seller of land indicated the boundaries and gave a guarantee (lex) that no one would invade them, and you are then auctoris. quod si finibus suis quos[xxiv] demonstravit, agrum vendidit, lis finalis ad venditorem non pertinet.

PP. VII k. Dec. Maximo II et Aeliano conss.

[11] Idem A. Clementi. Exceptione doli recte eum submovebis, quem ab auctore tuo fideiussorem accepisti, si eius nomine controversiam refert, quasi per uxorem suam, antequam tu emeres, comparaverit, qui vendenti adeo consensum dedit, ut se etiam pro evictione obligaverit.

PP. non. Febr. Pompeiano et Peligno conss.

[12] Imp. Gordianus A. Philippo. Sive in libertatem evictus est servus quem mercatus es, sive cum comparares convenit, si qua quaestio eius nomine relata esset, etsi necdum evictus esset, ut pretium recuperares, praeses provinciae, quod tibi praestandum animadverterit, restitui iubebit.

PP. VII id. Mart. Gordiano A. et Aviola conss.

[13] Idem A. Zoilo. Si ob causam iudicati pignora capta sunt ex eius auctoritate, cui praecipiendi ius fuit, ea de quibus complecteris, eaque tu mercatus es, frustra ab ea quae condemnata est vel quae in eius locum successit eorum refertur quaestio, quandoquidem, etsi evictio eorum ab alio subsecuta fuisset, adversus eos debuisse dari actionem, quibus pretii solutio proficit, meritissime rescriptum est.

PP. XVI k. Iun. Gordiano A. et Aviola conss.

[14] Idem A. Secundino. Sive possessio venditoris fuit, filius eiusdemque patris heres frustra quaestionem movet, sive non patris, sed filii eius possessio fuit, de qua iure hereditario auctor laudari potest, controversiam movere non potest.

PP. XIIII k. Aug. Gordiano A. et Aviola conss.

[xxiv] quos non evicted, the (seller as) guarantor bears the risk. But if he sold the land with its (current) borders, but did not indicate them, the suit over boundaries does not concern the seller.

Posted November 25, in the consulship of Maximus, for the second time, and Aelianus (223).

[11] The same Augustus to Clemens. Through the defense of deceit (exceptio doli) you will properly defeat the person you accepted from your guarantor as a surety, if on his own account he (the surety) raises a dispute over it on the theory that he purchased it through his wife before you bought it (and hence that he is the true owner), (since) he gave his consent to the sale to such an extent that he even obligated himself for eviction.

Posted February 5, in the consulship of Pompeianus and Pelignus (231).

[12] Emperor G*ORDIAN* Augustus to Philip. If the slave you purchased was evicted into freedom (i.e., found to be free and so unsaleable), or if it was agreed when you made the purchase that if any controversy arose on this account, you should recover the price even if he was not yet evicted, the provincial governor will order restitution of what he determines should be paid to you.

Posted March 9, in the consulship of Gordian Augustus and Aviola (239).

[13] The same Augustus to Zoilus. If, pursuant to a judgment, the pledges you describe were seized on the authority of a person with jurisdiction, and you then purchased them, controversy over them is pointlessly raised by the woman who was condemned or by her successor, since even if their eviction (from you) by a third party had followed, a rescript most deservedly held that an action should be given against those who profited from your payment of the price (i.e., the pledgors).[137]

Posted May 17, in the consulship of Gordian Augustus and Aviola (239).

[14] The same Augustus to Secundinus. If (at the time of sale) a possession was the seller's, his son, as the father's heir, baselessly raises a question (about true ownership). If the possession was not the father's but the son's, then since he (the son) can be put on notice as the guarantor under the law of inheritance, he cannot raise the dispute.[138]

Posted July 19, in the consulship of Gordian Augustus and Aviola (239).

[137] Blume: "The pledgee obtained the pledged property pursuant to judgment, and had it sold. The pledgor and his heir could not reclaim it. And if the title was not good, and a third person came in and took it away from the purchaser, the pledgor was responsible to the latter, but only to the extent of the amount paid out by him plus interest. D. 21.2.74.1."

[138] Blume: "Since the son, as heir, was liable on a warranty for quiet enjoyment, it would have been useless for him to try to recover the property."

[15] Imp. Philippus A. et Philippus C. Menandro. Si non iniuria iudicantis, sed iuris ratione superatus es, pignus ob evictionem acceptum sollemniter persequi potes.
PP. k. Aug. Philippo A. et Titiano conss.

[16] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. Alexandro et Diogeni. Super empti agri quaestione disceptabit praeses provinciae et, si portionem diversae partis esse cognoverit, impensas, quas ad meliorandam rem vos erogasse constiterit, habita fructuum ratione restitui vobis iubebit. nam super pretio evictae portionis non eum qui dominium evicerit, sed auctricem conveniri consequens est.
PP. x k. Iul. ipsis IIII et III AA. conss.

[17] Idem AA. Muciano. Si, cum quaestio tibi super eo quem comparaveras commoveretur, auctorem tuum certum fecisti nec citra iudicis disceptationem eum quem emeras tradidisti, praeses provinciae in damnis, quae te tolerasse meministi, medelam iuris adhibebit.
PP. V id. Nov. ipsis IIII et III AA. conss.

[18] Idem AA. et CC. Eutychio. Si status super homine tibi venumdato mota quaestio est, sollemnibus, quae iuris admittit ratio, interpositis si secundum libertatem fuerit lata sententia, poteris de evictione, si nesciens condicionem eius comparasti, sine aliqua dubitatione auctorem vel eius fideiussores heredesve eorum convenire. quod si fuisse servum sententia declaraverit, intellegis ad venditorem te reverti non posse.

[19] Idem AA. et CC. Theodoro. Si obligata praedia venumdedisti et longi temporis praescriptione solita emptores se tueri possunt, evictionis periculum timere non potes.
S. II k. Mai. AA. conss.

[20] Idem AA. et CC. Solido et aliis. pr. Si parentes vestri mancipia venumdederunt quaestioque dominii mota est, emptoribus adesse ac defendere causam non prohibemini. 1. Quod si eis haec iam evicta sunt, [15] Emperor PHILIP Augustus and the Caesar PHILIP to Menander. If you were defeated (in an action over eviction) not through judicial misconduct but by reason of law, in the proper manner you can pursue a pledge taken against eviction.

Posted August 1, in the consulship of Philip Augustus and Titianus (245).

[16] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti to Alexander and Diogenes. The provincial governor will try the dispute as to the purchased land, and, if he finds a portion of it belongs to the other party, he will order restitution to you of the expenditures you made on its improvement, after taking account of (i.e., deducting) the fruits. For as to the price paid for the evicted portion, it follows that suit is against not the person who recovered ownership, but the woman guarantor (seller).

Posted June 22, in the consulship of the Augusti themselves, Consuls for the fourth and third time, respectively (290).

[17] The same Augusti to Mucianus. When a dispute (about ownership) arose over a slave you purchased, if you notified your guarantor and did not deliver the one you had bought (to the claimant) until the judge's decision, the provincial governor will provide a legal remedy for the losses that you state you sustained.

Posted November 9, in the consulship of the Augusti themselves, Consuls for the fourth and third time, respectively (290).

[18] The same Augusti and the Caesars to Eutychius. If a question of legal status is raised about a slave sold to you, and the proper words that the logic of law (iuris ratio) allows were interposed (in transferring ownership) but the verdict favored liberty, then if you purchased while unaware of his legal condition, beyond all doubt you can sue the guarantor or his sureties or their heirs on the eviction. But if the verdict declares he was a slave, you realize that you have no recourse against the seller.

(293).

[19] The same Augusti and Caesars to Theodorus. If you sold properties obligated (as pledges) and the buyers can protect themselves by the usual long-time prescription (praescriptio longi temporis), you cannot fear a risk (of liability) from (their) eviction.

Written April 30, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[20] The same Augusti and Caesars to Solidus and others. pr. If your parents sold slaves and a question of ownership arose, you are not prevented from being present for the buyers and defending the case (as potentially liable guarantors). 1. But if they have already been evicted from them, your request to instauratio litis ex persona vestra, si appellationem non interposuistis, contra ius desideratur. 2. Empti sane iudicio pro evictione si conveniri coeperitis, nec vobis, ut defendatis, negotium denuntiatum probetur, intellegitis, quatenus vosmet ipsos tueri debeatis.

S. VI k. Iul. AA. conss.

[21] Idem AA. et CC. Heliodoro. pr. Empti actio longi temporis praescriptione non submovetur, licet post multa spatia rem evictam emptori fuerit comprobatum. 1. Si itaque is, quem te comparasse commemoras, nunc in libertatem proclamet, interpellare venditorem sive successores eius debes, ut tibi adsistant causamque instruant. 2. Quem si liberum esse vel servum[xxv] non esse fuerit pronuntiatum, nec te conventione remisisse periculum evictionis fuerit comprobatum, praeses provinciae, si res integra est, quanti tua interest restitui tibi providebit.

S. XI k. Iul. Serdicae AA. conss.

[22] Idem AA. et CC. Iulio. Cum tibi liberum venumdatum fundum ab auctore proponas, si ex antecedente obligatione quod debebatur iure solvisti, stipulationem, quam subiectam emptioni de indemnitate proponis, ipsius conceptio commissam manifeste declarat.

S. VII k. Sept. Viminacii AA. conss.

[23] Idem AA. et CC. Eustochiae. Cum successores etiam venditoris pro evictione teneri possint, si velut obligata sibi res publica Thessalonicensium pignoris instituat iure persequi quae comparasti, auctoris heredibus quocumque gradu constitutis adsistere negotio denuntia. quod sive praesentibus his fundus quem emisti fuerit evictus sive absentibus, postea quanti tua interest rem evictam non esse teneri, non quant*um* pretii nomine dedisti, si aliud non placuit, publice notum est.

S. II k. Ian. Sirmi AA. conss.

[24] Idem AA. et CC. Eutychio. pr. Si post perfectam venditionem ante pretium numeratum rei venumdatae mota fuerit quaestio vel mancipia venumdata proclament in libertatem, cum in ipso limine contractus immineat evictio, emptorem, si satis ei non offeratur, ad totius vel residui pretii solutionem non compelli iuris auctoritate monstratur. 1. Unde cum parte pretii numerata, domus quam emisti tibi velut pignoris iure reopen the litigation is contrary to law if you did not appeal (the judgment). 2. Of course, if you come to be sued over the eviction by the action on sale, and it is not shown that you received notice to defend (the earlier suit), you know to what extent you should protect yourselves.

[xxv] servum tuum

Written June 26, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[21] The same Augusti and Caesars to Heliodorus. pr. The action on purchase is not barred by a long-time prescription even if it is confirmed that the buyer was evicted from the object after a very great time.[139] 1. So if the person whom you say you bought now asserts his freedom, you should call upon the seller or his successors to stand by you and assist your case. 2. If the verdict is that he is free or not your slave, nor is it confirmed that you you agreed to waive the (seller's) risk for your eviction, the provincial governor will, if the matter remains intact, provide restitution to you of your interest.

Written June 21,[140] at Serdica, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[22] The same Augusti and Caesars to Julius. Since you say that the guarantor sold you a farm (represented as) free (from all claims), if you paid what was legally owed from a preceding obligation (on the farm), then from the very framing of the stipulation for indemnity that you say was added to the purchase, it (the stipulation) is clearly in default.

Written August 26, at Viminacium, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[23] The same Augusti and Caesars to Eustochia. Since the seller's successors can also be liable for eviction, if the municipality of Thessalonica begins a lawsuit on pledge in order to recover what you bought as having been (previously) obligated to it, give notice to the seller's heirs, no matter their rank, to stand by the transaction. If, whether in their presence or absence, you are evicted from the farm you bought, it is universally recognized that they are liable for your interest in not being evicted, (and) not just for what you gave as the price, unless it was otherwise agreed.

Written December 31, at Sirmium, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[24] The same Augusti and Caesars to Eutychius. pr. If, after a completed sale but before the price is paid, a question is raised about (ownership of) the purchased property, or if purchased slaves assert their freedom, since an eviction looms on the very threshold of the contract, legal authority makes evident that the buyer cannot be compelled to pay the entire price or the remainder unless he is given security (against eviction). 1. So, since you allege that, after you paid obligatae ne ad emptionem accederes, denuntiatum ab aliquo proponas, iudex tibi quae ex emptione veniunt praestari providebit.

[139] Blume: "The prescription period ... applied only to real actions for the recovery of property."
[140] More likely July 22 (Connolly). Mommsen dates to June 28, 293.

S. VI k. Febr. Sirmi CC. conss.

[25] Idem AA. et CC. Saturninae. Si tibi liberam Saturninus condicionem eius ignorans distraxit ac nunc eam defendit in libertatem, hac libera pronuntiata venditorem vel ex stipulatione duplae, quantum in hanc deductum est, vel empti actione quanti tua interest convenire potes.

S. id. Febr. CC. conss.

[26] Idem AA. et CC. Neoni. Si quis tibi servum vendidit, postquam is rebus humanis exemptus est, cum evictionis periculum finitum sit, a te conveniri non potest.

S. II k. April. Sirmi CC. conss.

[27] Idem AA. et CC. Theophilo. Si fundum sciens alienum vel obligatum comparavit Athenocles nec quicquam de evictione convenit, quod eo nomine dedit, contra iuris poscit rationem. nam si ignorans, desiderio tuo iuris forma negantis hoc reddi refragatur.

S. XVII k. Oct. CC. conss.

[28] Idem AA. et CC. Maximiano. Emptori etiam venditoris iura prodesse non ambigitur. si igitur vobis propter rei proprietatem mota fuerit quaestio, tam propriis quam venditoris defensionibus uti poteritis.

S. III non. Oct. Scuppis CC. conss.

[29] Idem AA. et CC. Rheso. Si permutationis gratia praedia curatoribus quondam fratris tui mater tua dedit, his, quae in eorum vicem accepit, posteaquam ad defensionem fuerit denuntiatum, vel cum eorum non haberet facultatem, evictis quanti interest eos conveniri posse rationis est.

S. VII id. Dec. Nicomediae CC. conss.

[30] Idem AA. et CC. Hastio. Non ex eo, quod duplam qui a matre tua mancipium comparavit evictionis nomine stipulatus est, alienae part of the price of the house you bought for yourself, someone notified you not to proceed with the purchase because it was obligated as a pledge, the judge will see to it that you receive what came from the purchase.

Written January 27, at Sirmium, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[25] The same Augusti and Caesars to Saturnina. If Saturninus, not knowing her status, sold a free woman to you and now defends her freedom, if she is pronounced free you can sue the seller either on the stipulation for double your outlay on her, or by the action on sale for your interest.

Written February 13, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[26] The same Augusti and Caesars to Neo. If someone sells you a slave, he cannot be sued by you after he (the slave) has died, since the risk of eviction is ended.

Written March 31, at Sirmium, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[27] The same Augusti and Caesars to Theophilus. If Athenocles knowingly bought a farm that belonged to a third party or was obligated (as a pledge), and there was no agreement on eviction, his demand to recover his expenditures on this account is contrary to legal logic. For if (he bought) while unaware (of the farm's legal status), the legal rule stands in the way of your wish not to return the sum.

Written September 15, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[28] The same Augusti and Caesars to Maximian. There is no doubt that a seller's rights benefit the buyer. So if a dispute was raised against you over the title of property (that you purchased), you will be able to use both your own defenses and the seller's.

Written October 5, at Scupi, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[29][141] The same Augusti and Caesars to Rhesus. If your mother exchanged properties with the former curatores of your brother, and then, after she gave notice (to the curators to defend them) or had no access to them, she was evicted from the properties that she received in turn, it stands to reason that they can be sued for her interest.

Written December 7, at Nicomedia, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[30] The same Augusti and Caesars to Hastius. The fact that the person who bought a slave from your mother took a stipulation (from her) for double on account of eviction does not prove his knowledge that the property belonged to a third party, rei scientia convincitur, nec opinio eius ex hoc laeditur, ut malae fidei emptor existimetur. aliis itaque hoc indiciis, si vis, probare debes.

[141] Possibly combine with C. 6.56.2.

S. id. Dec. CC. conss.

[31] Idem AA. et CC. Agatho. Heredem fideiussoris rerum, pro quibus defunctus apud emptorem intercesserat pro venditore, factum eius cui successit ex sua persona dominium vindicare non impedit, scilicet evictionis causa durante actione.

S. XVIII k. Ian. Nicomediae CC. conss.

XXXXV Creditorem Evictionem Non Debere

[1] Imp. Alexander A. Publicio. pr. Cum iure creditoris propter fisci debita praedium obligatum procurator meus vendidit, evictio non debetur, quia et privatus creditor eodem iure utitur, nisi nominatim hoc repromissum a privato fuerit. 1. Si tamen fiscus in ius alterius creditoris successit, emptori non iusta fisci nomine movetur controversia, sive quia potior fuerat, quando vendebat, sive quia infirmior, quoniam hoc utique praestare debet, qui pignoris iure vendat, potiorem se ceteris esse creditoribus.

PP. XV k. Nov. Maximo II et Aeliano conss.

[2] Imp. Gordianus A. Sabino. Si a creditrice iure pignoris fundos pater tuus comparaverit, evictis praediis ita demum petitionem adversus creditricem habere iure potes, si, cum vendiderit, de evictione rei promisit vel etiam dolo malo, cum sciret prudensque esset rem sine vitio non esse, eam patri tuo, cui successisti, venumdedit. nam sicut genus eiusmodi contractus inscium creditorem vinculo evictionis non adstringit, ita eum, qui fraudem admisit vel decepit, non excusat.

PP. VIII id. April. Sabino II et Venusto conss.

XXXXVI De Patria Potestate

[1] Impp. Antoninus et Verus AA. Titio. Si filium tuum in potestate tua dicis esse, praeses provinciae aestimabit, an audire te debeat, cum diu nor is his good name injured thereby to the extent of his being considered a buyer in bad faith. So you should prove this by other evidence, if you wish.

Written December 13, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[31] The same Augusti and Caesars to Agathus. If (by warranting against eviction) for property the decedent assumed liability (as a surety) on behalf of a seller with a buyer, this act of his predecessor does not prevent the surety's heir from asserting ownership based on his own person (and not deriving from the deceased), though the action because of eviction obviously remains available.[142]

Written December 15, at Nicomedia, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

Forty-Fifth Title A Creditor is Not Liable for Eviction

[1] Emperor ALEXANDER Augustus to Publicius. pr. When my procurator, acting under the law for a creditor, sold land obligated because of debts to the Treasury, no (tacit warranty against) eviction is owed (to the buyer) because a private creditor enjoys the same right unless he furnished an express warranty. 1. But if (conversely) the Treasury has succeeded to the rights of another creditor, a lawsuit is not properly raised in the Treasury's name against a buyer (at the prior Treasury sale) whether because its right when it sold was superior (to other creditors), or because it was weaker, inasmuch as a creditor who makes a sale under pledge law ought to guarantee that he is superior to other creditors.

Posted October 18, in the consulship of Maximus, for the second time, and Aelianus (223).

[2] Emperor GORDIAN Augustus to Sabinus. If your father purchased farms from a creditor under pledge law, and they were evicted, you (as his heir) can rightfully sue the creditor as long as, when she sold the property to your father whom you succeeded, she gave a promise about eviction or she was also deceitful in selling since she knew and was aware that the object of sale was not without defect. For just as a contract of this type does not burden an unknowing creditor with the restraint of (a warranty against) eviction, so it does not excuse one who practiced fraud or deceived (the buyer).

Posted April 6, in the consulship of Sabinus, for the second time, and Venustus (240).

Forty-Sixth Title Paternal Power (Patria Potestas)[143]

[1] Emperors ANTONINUS and VERUS Augusi to Titius. If you claim that your son is still in your power, the provincial governor will assess whether [142] This constitution contradicts laws 11 and 14 above, as also C. 3.32.14, 4.51.3.

[143] See D. 1.6; Inst. 1.9.

passus sis ut patris familias rem eius agi per eos, qui testamento matris tutores nominati fuerunt.

PP. sine die et conss.

[2] Imp. Antoninus A. Maroniae. Eius, quod in potestate patris agens habuisti, dominium ad patrem tuum pertinuit extra ea, quae non adquiruntur.

PP. XIII k. Mart. Laeto II et Cereale conss.

[3] Imp. Alexander A. Artemidoro. Si filius tuus in potestate tua est, res adquisitas tibi alienare non potuit: quem, si pietatem patri debitam non agnoscit, castigare iure patriae potestatis non prohiberis, artiore remedio usurus, si in pari contumacia perseveraverit, eumque praesidi provinciae oblaturus dicturo sententiam, quam tu quoque dici volueris.

PP. V id. Dec. Albino et Maximo conss.

[4] Impp. Valerianus et Gallienus AA. et Valerianus C. Gallae. pr. Congruentius quidem videtur intra domum, inter te ac filios tuos si quae controversiae oriuntur, terminari. 1. Sed si ita res fuit, ut iniuriis eorum et ad ius experiundum et ad vindictam processeris, aditus praeses provinciae super disceptationibus quidem pecuniariis consuetum exerceri iubebit ordinem iuris: reverentiam autem debitam exhibere matri filios coget et, si provectam ad inclementiores iniurias improbitatem deprehenderit, laesam pietatem severius vindicabit.

PP. XVI k. Iun. Aemiliano et Basso conss.

[5] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. Donatio. Filia tua non solum reverentiam, sed et subsidium vitae ut exhibeat tibi, rectoris provinciae auctoritate compelletur.

PP. k. Mart. Diocletiano III et Maximiano AA. conss.

[6] Idem AA. Hermogeni. Abdicatio, quae Graeco more ad alienandos liberos usurpabatur et apoceryxis dicebatur, Romanis legibus non comprobatur.

he should hear you, since you have long permitted his property to be managed as that of a paterfamilias through those who were named tutores in his mother's will.

Posted without date and year (161–169).

[2] Emperor ANTONINUS Augustus to Maronia. Ownership of the property you had while under your father's power belonged to your father, except for things not acquired (by you for his benefit).

Posted February 17, in the consulship of Laetus, for the second time, and Cerealis (215).

[3] Emperor ALEXANDER Augustus to Artemidorus. If your son is in your power, he could not alienate property that he (previously) acquired for you. If he (now) fails to diplay the dutifulness (pietas) that is owed to a father, you are not prevented from punishing him by exercising the right of a father's power. You may resort to a harsher remedy if he persists in such defiance, and you may hand him over to the provincial governance for issuance of the verdict that you also wish to be issued.

Posted December 9, in the consulship of Albinus and Maximus (227).

[4] Emperors VALERIAN and GALLIENUS Augusti and the Caesar Valerian to Galla. pr. If any lawsuits arise between you and your sons, it seems more fitting that this be settled within your household. 1. But if things reach the point that you are led by their insulting conduct both to resort to law and to (seek) punishment, the provincial governor, if approached, will indeed order the usual legal rules for monetary disputes (to be followed), but he will (also) compel sons to show the respect due their mother, and, if he notices that their depravity has advanced to more serious outrages, he will quite severely punish this injury to dutifulness (pietas).

Posted May 17, in the consulship of Aemilianus and Bassus (259).

[5] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti to Donatius. By the authority of the provincial governor, your daughter is forced to show you not just respect, but also to provide the means of support.

Posted March 1, in the consulship of Diocletian, for the third time, and Maximian, Augusti (287).

[6] The same Augusti to Hermogenes. Renunciation (abdicatio), which was used in Greek custom to disown children and was called "public renunciation" (apoceryxis), is not approved by Roman laws.

PP. XVII k. Dec. Maximiano A. II et Ianuario conss.

[7] Idem AA. et CC. Duplianae. Si maritus tuus, licet militans, in patria potestate constitutus filium legitimis suscepit nuptiis, eum in potestate avi perseverasse non ambigitur.

S. prid. non. April. CC. conss.

[8] Idem AA. et CC. Aemilianae. Libertos exemplo ingenuorum filios suos post libertatem ex legitimis nuptiis natos in potestate habere non est prohibitum.

S. XVI k. Mai. Sirmi CC. conss.

[9] Idem AA. et CC. Nicagorae. Nec filium negare cuiquam esse liberum senatus consulta de partu agnoscendo ac denuntiata poena, item praeiudicium edicto perpetuo propositum et remedium alimentorum apud praesidem maiori trimo petenti monstratum iure manifesto declarant.

S. V k. Mai. Sirmi CC. conss.

[10] Imp. Constantinus A. ad Maximum pu. Libertati a maioribus tantum impensum est, ut patribus, quibus ius vitae in liberos necisque potestas olim erat permissa, eripere libertatem non liceret.

D. XV k. Iun. Thessalonicae Severo et Rufino conss.

XXXXVII De Adoptionibus

[1] Imp. Gordianus A. Marciae. Hi, qui in aliena sunt potestate, iuxta ius civile non nisi apud eum, apud quem plena legis actio est, adoptari possunt.

PP. k. Iun. Gordiano A. et Aviola conss.

Posted November 15, in the consulship of Maximian Augustus, for the second time, and Januarius (288).[144]

[7] The same Augusti and the Caesars to Dupliana. If your husband, although in the army, stayed in paternal power and had a son by a legitimate marriage, it is not doubtful that he (the husband's son) had remained in his grandfather's power.

Written April 4, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[8][145] The same Augusti and Caesars to Aemiliana. It is not forbidden that freedmen, like the free-born, have in their power their children who are born from a legitimate marriage after they receive freedom.

Written April 16, at Sirmium, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[9] The same Augusti and Caesars to Nicagoras. That no one is free to deny his own child is shown in clear law by decrees of the Senate on acknowledgment of offspring with a threatened penalty (for failure to do so), by the prejudicial judgment (praeiudicium) provided in the Perpetual Edict, and by the remedy of maintenance afforded by the governor for a child over age three who claims this.[146]

Written April 27, at Sirmium, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[10][147] Emperor CONSTANTINE Augustus to Maximus, City Prefect. Our ancestors attached so much importance to freedom that fathers, who once had the power of life and death (ius vitae necisque) over children, could not take away their freedom.

Given May 18, at Thessalonica, in the consulship of Severus and Rufinus (323).

Forty-Seventh Title Adoptions[148]

[1] Emperors GORDIAN Augustus to Marcia. By the rules of private law, those who are in another's power cannot be adopted except before someone (a magistrate) with plenary jurisdiction (plena legis actio).

Posted June 1, in the consulship of Gordian Augustus and Aviola (239).

[144] Mommsen dates to November 15, 287.

[145] = C. 6.55.7 (differently worded).

[146] See D. 25.3.1 and 25.4.1 (the SC Plancianum), and D. 25.3.3.1 (a Hadrianic SC); and Inst. 4.6.13 on the prejudicial judgment.

[147] = C.Th. 4.8.6; combine with C. 7.18.3. Seeck dates to February 15, 323.

[148] See D. 1.7; Inst. 1.11. This title covers two forms of adoption: true adoptio, the transfer of a child-in-power from one paterfamilias to another; and adrogatio, the adoption of a sui iuris person, which is much more closely controlled. Where the Codex uses adrogatio, it is translated "adrogation."

[2] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. Timotheo. pr. Impuberem, quem ad vicem naturalis subolis adrogare desideras, si hi, qui sanguinis necessitudine iunguntur, id ei expedire apud praesidem provinciae confirmaverint, filium habebis, ita ut bonorum tuorum quarta pars tam in postremo iudicio tuo, quam si a te emancipatus fuerit, ei praebeatur et super patrimonio eius idoneis fideiussoribus datis servo publico caveatur, ne sub copulandae adoptionis obtentu in facultates eius, quae ei diligenti provisione servandae sunt, inruas. 1. Adrogatio etenim ex indulgentia principali facta proinde valet apud praetorem vel praesidem intimata, ac si per populum iure antiquo facta esset.

PP. v id. Mart. Maximo II et Aquilino conss.

[3] Idem AA. Marciano. Cum eum, quem adrogare vis, libertum tuum esse profitearis nec ullam idoneam causam precibus indideris, id est quod non liberos habes, intellegis iuris auctoritatem desiderio tuo refragari.

PP. XVI k. Iul. Maximo II et Aquilino conss.

[4] Idem AA. Proculiano. Adoptio non tabulis, licet per tabellionem conficiendis, sed sollemni iuris ordine apud praesidem solet copulari.

PP. k. Sept. ipsis IIII et III AA. conss.

[5] Idem AA. et CC. Syrae. A muliere quidem, quae nec suos filios habet in potestate, adrogari non posse certum est. verum quoniam in solacium amissorum tuorum filiorum privignum tuum cupis in vicem legitimae subolis obtinere, adnuimus votis tuis secundum ea, quae adnotavimus, et eum proinde atque ex te progenitum ad fidem naturalis legitimique filii habere permittimus.

S. prid. non. Dec. Triballis Tiberiano et Dione conss.

[6] Idem AA. et CC. Melitoni. Adrogationes eorum, qui sui iuris sunt, nec in regia urbe nec in provinciis nisi ex rescripto principali fieri possunt.

S. IIII non. April. Byzantii AA. conss.

[2] Emperors Diocletian and Maximian Augusti to Timotheus. pr. You wish to adrogate a minor (impubes) as your natural son. If his blood relatives affirm before the provincial governor that this (adrogation) benefits him, you will have him as your son, provided that a quarter of your estate is provided to him (either) in your last will or if you emancipate him. And, regarding his estate, a bond with suitable sureties must be given to a public slave to prevent you from invading his assets under the pretense of effecting an adoption; (for) they must be preserved for him with careful forethought. 1. For an adrogation that is made with imperial permission and registered with the Praetor or governor is as valid as if it had been made before the people under ancient law.

Posted March 11, in the consulship of Maximus, for the second time, and Aquilinus (286).

[3] The same Augusti to Marcianus. Since you state that the person you wish to adrogate is your freedman, but you include no proper reason in your petition, i.e., that you have no children, you know that law's authority is against what you wish to do.

Posted June 16, in the consulship of Maximus, for the second time, and Aquilinus (286).

[4] The same Augusti to Proculianus. Adoption is normally effected not by documents, even ones prepared by a notary, but by the appropriate legal proceeding before a governor.

Posted September 1, in the consulship of the Augusti themselves, Consuls for the fourth and third times, respectively (290).

[5] The same Augusti and the Caesars to Syra. It is settled that adrogation cannot be made by a woman, for she does not even have her own children in her power. But since you wish to have your stepson as a legitimate offspring in solace for your lost children, We assent to your wishes in accord with the appended rules, and We allow you to have him as your own natural and legitimate son, as though born from you.

Written December 4, at Triballi, in the consulship of Tiberianus and Dio (291).

[6] The same Augusti and Caesars to Melito. Adrogations of persons who are sui iuris cannot be made in the Imperial City or in the provinces except by Imperial rescript.

Written April 2, at Byzantium, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[7] Idem AA. et CC. Attico. In adoptionem quidem alienae civitatis civi recte dato additur, non mutatur patria, ac propterea ius originis in honorum ac munerum obsequio per adoptionem non minui perspicis.

S. XI k. Febr. Sirmi CC. conss.

[8] Idem AA. et CC. Isioni. In adoptionem patre, in cuius est potestate, libertae filiam dante, matris patronus adoptare non prohibetur. nam sui iuris adrogatio feminae nisi ex nostro rescripto numquam procedit.

S. V id. Febr. CC. conss.

[9] Idem AA. et CC. Marciano. Adoptatum, licet ex beneficio nostro, emancipatione sollemni separare familia sua pater adoptivus minime prohibetur.

V k. Nov. Anchiali CC. conss.

[10] Imp. Iustinianus A. Iohanni pp. pr. Cum in adoptivis filiis, qui filii familias constituti a patribus naturalibus aliis dantur, antiquae sapientiae incidit quaedam dubitatio, si oportet talem filium, si praeteritus a naturali patre fuerat, habere contra eius testamentum de inofficioso actionem (quam Papinianus quidem negat, Paulus autem sine effectu derelinquit, Marcianus vero distinguit, ne ex hac causa utriusque patris perderet successionem, naturalis quidem voluntate eius circumventus, adoptivi propter egestatem, quam forte habebat), et iterum aliud vitium erat exortum: si enim post patris naturalis obitum pater adoptivus per emancipationis modum iura adoptionis dissolvisset, nulla spes ei remanebat neque contra patris naturalis voluntatem, quia mortis eius tempore in aliena fuerat familia constitutus, neque contra adoptivum patrem, quia per emancipationem eius familia exemptus est:

ideo talem dubitationem et tale vitium corrigentes sancimus per adoptionem quidem ad extraneam personam factam iura naturalis patris minime dissolvi, sed ita eum permanere, quasi non fuisset in alienam familiam translatus. cum enim tanta fragilitas est adoptionis, ut possit in ipso die et filius fieri et extraneus per emancipationem inveniri, quis patiatur iura patris naturalis nexu divino copulata ludibrio defraudari, cum in hoc casu et contradicendi filio ex iure vetere datur licentia et invitus transire ad aliam familiam non cogitur?
1. Omnia igitur, secundum quod iam disposuimus, cum ad extraneum

[7] The same Augusti and Caesars to Atticus. When someone is given in legal adoption to the citizen of a different city, he has an additional home city (patria), not a changed one, and you see, therefore, that by adoption the law of his place of origin is not lessened as to holding offices and performing civic duties.

Written January 22, at Sirmium, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[8] The same Augusti and Caesars to Isio. If a father gives in adoption a daughter in his power, her mother being a freedwoman, then this mother's patron (who manumitted her) is not forbidden from adopting her. For it is the adrogation of a sui iuris woman that does not go forward except pursuant to Our rescript.

Written February 9, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[9] The same Augusti and Caesars to Marcianus. An adoptive father is not forbidden from using a ritual emancipation to separate from his familia his adopted child, even though (the adoption occurred) through Our grant.

October 28, at Anchialus, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[10] Emperor JUSTINIAN Augustus to John, Praetorian Prefect. pr. In the case of adoptive sons who are sons-in-power and given (in adoption) by their natural fathers to third parties, some uncertainty arose among the ancient jurists as to whether such a son, if he had been passed over by his natural father (in his will), had an action against his will as undutiful – something that Papinian denies, while Paul leaves the matter undetermined, but Marcian distinguishes in order to prevent someone losing an inheritance from both fathers for the following reason: from his natural father (because he was) cheated by the man's intent, from his adoptive father because he happens to be poor. And, second, another fault arises (in older law): if after the natural father's death the adoptive father undid the rights of adoption by emancipating him, there remained to him no hope (of obtaining an inheritance) either against the wish of the natural father since at the time of his death he belonged to another's familia, nor against the adoptive father since (when the latter died) he was separated from his familia by emancipation.

Eliminating this uncertainty and this fault, We ordain that the rights (to the estate) of a natural father are not undone by giving a child in adoption to an outside person, but he remains as if he had not been transferred to another's familia. For since the frailty of adoption is so great that on the very same day a person can both become a son (in a new familia) and find himself an outsider through emancipation, who would permit that the rights (to the estate) of a natural father, effected through a holy bond, be scornfully circumvented, (especially) since in this case (even) by old law the son has the right to object and is not forced to cross unwillingly to another familia? 1. Therefore, as We patrem filius per adoptionem transfertur, maneant integra iura sive ad de inofficiosi[xxvi] querellam sive ad alias omnes successiones sive ab intestato sive ex testamento, quae liberis deferuntur, ut et ipse possit prodesse patri naturali et ab eo naturalia debita percipere.

1a. Si vero pater naturalis avo materno filii sui vel, si ipse fuerit emancipatus, etiam paterno, vel proavo simili modo paterno vel materno filium suum dederit in adoptionem, in hoc casu, quia in unam personam concurrunt et naturalia et adoptiva iura, maneat stabile ius patris adoptivi et naturali vinculo copulatum et legitimo adoptionis modo constrictum: et ad eum solum respiciat filius, cui eum et natura adgregavit et lex per adoptionem adsignavit, et Papiniani sententia in hac specie procedat, et ad eum tantummodo filius adoptivus spes totas extendat et non patris naturalis successionem molestare concedatur, sed avita et proavita tantummodo reverentia protegetur, eique adquirat quae possunt adquiri et prodesse, et is ei solus pater intellegatur, quem lex fecit et natura non dereliquit. 1b. Neque enim Marciani distinctioni locum esse in hoc casu invenimus, ubi nullius circumventionis suspicio potest aliquam sibi vindicare licentiam, avita et proavita adfectione haec omnia resecante. 1c. Sed haec manere integra, nisi avus et proavus emancipatum fecerint filium adoptivum: tunc etenim necesse est iterum ad patrem naturalem eum reverti, cum emancipationis interventu adoptio in quamcumque personam facta dissolvitur.

1d. Sed ne articulum adoptionis et in extraneam personam factae sine lege relinquamus, licentiam damus tali adoptivo patri, id est extraneo, si voluerit, nihil ei testamento suo relinquere, sed quidquid ei reliquerit, hoc libertatis sit, non legitimo vinculo adstrictum: cum enim per omnia naturae suae filium adgregavimus, manifestissimum est, quod et adquisitiones omnium rerum, quae ad filium familias pervenerint, secundum leges nostras non adoptivo extraneo patri, sed naturali usque ad modum usus fructus perveniunt, et remaneat in sacris patris naturalis, quasi imaginaria quadam et nova adfectione ei adquisita, non pristinae cognationis deminutione introducta.

1e. Sed si quidem remaneat in tali adoptione nulla interveniente emancipatione, in hoc tantummodo prodesse ei volumus adoptionem, ut non successione ab intestato patris extranei adoptivi defraudetur, have already provided, when a son is transferred to an outsider by adoption, all his rights shall remain intact, including the complaint of an undutiful (will) and all other (rights appertaining to) successions, whether intestate or testate, that are granted to children, to the extent that he be able both to benefit his natural father (by acquiring property for him) and receive natural debts (naturalia debita) from him.

xxvi de inofficioso

1a.[149] But if a natural father gives his son in adoption to the maternal grandfather of his son, or, if he himself (the natural father) was emancipated, (he gives his son) even to his paternal (grandfather), or similarly to his paternal or maternal great-grandfather, in this case, because both natural and adoptive rights conjoin in a single person, the right of the adoptive father, effected through a natural tie and constrained by the legal form of adoption, remains in force, and the son shall look to that person alone to whom nature has joined him and law of adoption has assigned him. In such case Papinian's view shall apply, and the adoptive son shall rest all his hopes only on him, forbearing to contest the succession to his natural father, but protected only by his grandfather's and great-grandfather's familial respect (reverentia); for him he shall acquire what can be acquired beneficially, and that man alone is considered a father whom the law made and nature did not forsake. 1b. Nor do We find room for Marcian's distinction in this case, where no suspicion of fraud can provide him some pretext when his grandfather's or great-grandfather's familial affection (adfectio) avert all these (suspicions). 1c. But these (provisions) remain in force unless the grandfather or great-grandfather emancipates the adoptive son. For then it is necessary that he be returned to his natural father, since an adoption made to some person is undone by an intervening emancipation.

1d. But so that We not leave unregulated the provision for adoption by an outside person (extranea persona), We give such an adoptive father, i.e., an outsider, permission to leave him (the son) nothing in his will, if he wishes, but whatever he leaves him is his decision, bound by no legal tie. For since in every respect We have tied the son to his nature (i.e., emphasized the link to his natural father), it is quite plain that acquisitions of all property that come to the son-in-power fall by Our laws not to the adoptive outsider father, but to the natural one, up to and including their usufruct; and he shall continue in the familial rites (sacra) of his natural father, as if he had acquired some fictitious new familial affection without diminishing his former blood relationship.

1e. But if he remains in this adoption with no intervening emancipation, We wish the adoption to benefit him only to the extent that he not be cheated of succession on intestacy to an adoptive outsider father, but enjoy an additional sed habeat accessionem fortunae ex patris naturalis sibi voluntate adquisitam. 1f. Neque enim ex vetere iure cognationis nexus naturalis patris per adoptionem filio dissolvebatur, sed accedebant iura adoptiva certis reliquiis ex iure naturali remanentibus, et qui legitimus erat familiae adoptivae, is naturalis fuerat cognatus. quis enim materna iura possit abolere, cum videbatur et antiquo iure patrem quidem habere adoptivum, matrem autem eam, quam natura cognoscit? 1g. Et ideo sancimus, etsi habet huiusmodi filius iura integra naturae, tamen, si intestatus pater extraneus adoptivus decesserit, habere eum etiam sui heredis ius ad eius tantummodo successionem, ut non etiam legitima iura ad familiam extranei patris adoptivi habeat, nec ipsa ad eum communionem aliquam habeat, sed quasi extraneus ita ad illam familiam inveniatur. 2. Sin autem per emancipationem iura adoptiva fuerint dissoluta, tunc nullus ei penitus regressus ad adoptivum extraneum patrem, etsi moriatur intestatus, relinquatur, sed maneat tantummodo patrem naturalem cognoscens, tamquam non fuisset ab initio in adoptionem translatus.

[149] First portion = Inst. 1.11.2.

3. Quae autem de aliis adoptivis diximus, haec sancimus etiam de his, qui ex Afiniano senatus consulto ex tribus maribus fuerant ab extraneo adoptati, nulla penitus differentia inter alios adoptivos et eos introducenda.

4. Quae in filio diximus in adoptionem a patre dato, haec et in filia et in nepote et in nepte et deinceps personis utriusque sexus in sacris constitutis extendimus, si tamen tempore mortis avi sui parentes eos vel eas non antecedant. si enim patres eos antecedant (ubi nec imponitur necessitas avo aliquid nepoti vel nepti relinquere), maneant omnia iura adoptiva ei intacta. haec enim omnis sanctio de filio et filia et nepote et nepte et deinceps personis in sacris constitutis introducta est, ubi dubitabatur, quid statuendum est, quasi duobus patribus ei, uno ex natura, altero ex lege positis.

5. Ubi autem homo sui iuris constitutus per adrogationem ex Augusta liberalitate sese dederit in adoptionem, tunc omnia iura patris adoptivi habeat intacta. cum enim nullum inter patres inducitur discrimen, sit suus heres adoptivus patri adrogatori et familiae eius adgregetur, et good fortune acquired through the wish of his natural father. 1f. For also in the ancient law the blood relationship of a natural father to his son was not undone by adoption; rather, the adoptive rights were an accretion, leaving intact certain remnants on the basis of natural law; and a person who was legitimately (agnatically) in the adoptive family was (also) a cognate of his natural one. For who is able to abolish maternal rights, when even in ancient law he was deemed to have an adoptive father, to be sure, but a mother who was recognized by nature? 1g. And so We ordain that although such an adopted son keeps intact his natural rights, still, if an adoptive outsider father dies intestate, he also has the right of a suus heres in succeeding to him, but only in such a way that he does not also have legitimate (agnatic) rights (of succession) to the familia of his adoptive father, nor does it have some shared relationship to him, but he stands like an outsider to that familia. 2. But if adoptive rights are undone through emancipation, then no recourse whatsoever is left to him against (the estate of) his adoptive outsider father even if he dies intestate, but only recognition of his natural father remains, as if from the outset he had not been transferred into adoption.

3. We have ordained further that what We have said regarding other adoptive (children) applies also to those who, pursuant to the SC Afinianum,[150] were adopted from among three males (brothers) by an outsider; no fundamental distinction shall be introduced between other adoptive persons and them.

4. What We said in the case of a son whom his father gives in adoption, this We extend also to the case of a daughter, grandson, granddaughter, and successively persons of either sex involved in familial rites (sacra), provided that at the time of their grandfather's death their parents did not take precedence over them (in succession to the estate). For if fathers took precedence over them – in which case no necessity is imposed on the grandfather to leave anything to a grandson or granddaughter – all adoptive rights shall remain intact to him, for this entire provision has been enacted concerning a son, daughter, grandson, granddaughter, and successively persons involved in family rites, where there used to be doubt concerning what should be determined, when, as it were, he has two fathers, one imposed by nature and the other by law.

5. But when, pursuant to Imperial generosity, a sui iuris person gives himself in adoption through adrogation, then he shall have intact all the rights (to the succession) of his adoptive father. For when there is no conflict between the fathers, the adoptive (child) shall be a suus heres to his father the adrogator and shall be added to his familia, and all things that the ancient lawgivers omnia, quae ad filium adrogatum veteres legum latores induxerunt, intacta illibataque in eorum personis reserventur.

[150] This decree, of early imperial date, dealt with a child who was one of three brothers and was adopted by a third person; he acquired a right to partial succession to his adoptive father's estate. See Inst. 3.1.14.

D. k. Sept. Constantinopoli Lampadio et Oreste vv. cc. conss.

[11] Idem A. Iohanni pp. Veteres circuitus in adoptionibus, quae per tres emancipationes et duas manumissiones in filio aut per unam emancipationem in ceteris liberis fieri solebant, corrigentes sive tollentes censemus licere parenti, qui liberos in potestate sua constitutos in adoptionem dare desiderat, sine vetere observatione emancipationum et manumissionum hoc ipsum actis intervenientibus apud competentem iudicem manifestare, praesente et eo qui adoptatur et non contradicente, nec non eo qui eum adoptat.

D. v k. Nov. Constantinopoli Lampadio et Oreste vv. cc. conss.

XXXXVIII De Emancipationibus Liberorum

[1] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. Herennio. Si lex municipii, in quo te pater emancipavit, potestatem duumviris dedit, ut etiam alienigenae liberos suos emancipare possint, id quod a patre factum est suam obtinet firmitatem.

PP. III non. Dec. ipsis IIII et III AA. conss.

[2] Idem AA. Gennadiae. In emancipationibus liberorum nec non donationibus non tam scriptura quam veritas considerari solet.

PP. V id. Mart. Tiberiano et Dione conss.

[3] Idem AA. et CC. Heliodoro. Non nudo consensu patria liberi potestate, sed actu sollemni vel casu liberantur, nec causae, quibus motus pater emancipavit filium, sed actus sollemnitas quaeritur.

S. XV k. Oct. Sirmi AA. conss.

enacted for an adrogated son shall be preserved intact and unimpaired in their persons.

Given September 1, at Constantinople, in the consulship of the viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestes (530).

[11][151] The same Augustus to John, Praetorian Prefect. Correcting or abolishing the ancient vagaries for adoptions, which were customarily made through three emancipations and two manumissions for a son and through one emancipation in the case of other descendants (liberi), We direct that if a parent wishes to give in adoption descendants in his power, he is permitted to ignore the ancient ritual of emancipations and manumissions and to declare that this was done as a matter of record (actis intervenientibus) before the appropriate judge, in the presence of the person being adopted and with his consent, as well as in that of the adopter.

Given October 28, at Constantinople, in the consulship of the viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestes (530).

Forty-Eighth Title Emancipations of Children[152]

[1] Emperors Diocletian and Maximian Augusti to Herennius. If the law of the municipality in which your father emancipated you gave the duumvirs the power that foreigners (alienigenae) also be able to emancipate their children (through municipal courts), then what your father did is valid.

Posted December 3, in the consulship of the Augusti themselves, Consuls for the fourth and third times, respectively (290).

[2] The same Augusti to Gennadia. With emancipations of children as well as with gifts, the true facts are considered more important than a written document.

Posted March 11, in the consulship of Tiberianus and Dio (291).

[3] The same Augusti and the Caesars to Heliodorus. Children are released from paternal power not by naked consent, but by a proper procedure or by a natural event (casus; e.g., the death of a paterfamilias), and consideration is taken not of the reasons motivating the father to emancipate a child, but (only) of the formal act.

Written September 17, at Sirmium, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[151] Combine with C. 4.58.13, 8.48.6; Lounghis et al. date this constitution to November 1, 531. The end of the text is also in Inst. 1.12.8. Earlier procedure is described in Gaius, Inst. 1.132.

[152] See D. 1.7; Inst. 1.12.

[4] Idem AA. et CC. Coloniae. Nec avus neptem suam liberare potestate cogitur nec in cuiusquam iniuriam beneficia tribuere moris est nostri.
D. id. Oct.

[5] Imp. Anastasius A. Constantino pp. Iubemus licere parentibus, id est patri avo paterno seu proavo ceterisque ulterius per masculini sexus personas continua generis serie coniunctis, si liberos, quos habent in potestate propria, id est filium filiam, nepotem seu neptem ex filio, pronepotem seu proneptem ceterosque itidem per masculini sexus personas continua generis linea sibi coniunctos, per emancipationem vel absentes et peregre degentes vel in isdem locis seu regionibus et civitatibus commorantes, in iudicio vero non praesentes, iuris sui constituere maluerint, supplicationibus porrectis mereri super hoc divinum oraculum hocque apud competentem iudicem, ad cuius iurisdictionem actus emancipationis pertinet, insinuare superque precibus a semet oblatis apud eum deponere, ut hoc subsecuto et auctoritate praecedente principali plenissimum robur emancipatio sortiatur, et personae, in quas talis liberalitas collata sit, de aliena potestate quasi a parentibus ex emancipatione manumissae liberentur: si tamen ipsae nihilo minus sub gestorum testificatione vel apud eundem iudicem vel apud alium quemlibet proposito parentum suam etiam voluntatem consonare vel ante preces oblatas et sacros apices promulgatos vel postea deposuerint, nisi infantes sint, qui et sine consensu etiam hoc modo sui iuris efficiuntur.
D. XI k. Aug. Constantinopoli Probo et Avieno iuniore conss.

[6] Imp. Iustinianus A. Iohanni pp. Cum inspeximus in emancipationibus vanam observationem custodiri et venditiones in liberas personas figuratas et circumductiones inextricabiles et iniuriosa rhapismata, quorum nullus rationabilis invenitur exitus, iubemus huiusmodi circuitu in posterum quiescente licentiam esse ei, qui emancipare vult, vel ex lege Anastasiana hoc facere vel sine sacro rescripto intrare competentis iudicis tribunal vel eos adire magistratus, quibus hoc facere vel legibus vel ex longa consuetudine permissum est, et filios suos vel filias, nepotes vel neptes vel deinceps progeniem in potestate sua constitutam a sua manu dimittere et legitima iura omnimodo habere, etsi non specialiter haec sibi servaverit, et peculium donare vel alias res

[4] The same Augusti and Caesars to Colonia. A grandfather is not compelled to release his granddaughter from power, nor is it Our custom to bestow benefits (on one person) in order to injure someone (else).

Given October 15 (293–304).

[5][153] Emperor ANASTASIUS Augustus to Constantine, Praetorian Prefect. We order that if forebears (parentes) – i.e., a father, paternal grandfather or great-grandfather, and other remoter persons connected to them through males in a continuous genealogical line – wish through emancipation to make sui iuris (one or more) descendants (liberi) whom they have in their own power – i.e., a son, daughter, grandson or granddaughter from a son, a grandson or granddaughter, and other in like fashion connected to them through males in a continuous genealogical line, whether (these children are) absent and living abroad or dwelling in the same places or regions or cities, but not present in court – they are allowed to file a petition and obtain an Imperial order on this, and register it with the appropriate judge having jurisdiction over the act of emancipation, and deposit it there along with the petition they sent, so that when this is done and the Imperial authorization precedes, the emancipation has the greatest strength, and the persons on whom such generosity was bestowed are released from another's power just as if manumitted by the parents from an emancipation; provided that they (the emancipated) nonetheless verify through the evidence of records or before the same or some other judge, either before or after the petition is filed and the Imperial rescript issued, that their will is in accord with their parents' plan – unless they are infants, in which case they are also made sui iuris in this way, (but) without their consent.

Given July 22, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Probus and the younger Avienus (502).

[6][154] Emperor JUSTINIAN to John, Praetorian Prefect. Since We have noticed that an empty ritual continues in emancipations, with contrived sales to free persons and inextricable meanderings and wrongful blows that have no rational consequence, We order that such circuity cease in the future, and that anyone who wishes to emancipate do this either pursuant to the Anastasian law, or without an Imperial rescript go before the tribunal of the appropriate judge, or approach those magistrates who have jurisdiction either by statutes or from protracted usage; and that (in any of these ways) he discharge from his power his sons or daughters, grandsons or granddaughters, or, generally, offspring in his power, and in all cases retain his legal rights (as to inheritance) even if he does not specifically reserve this for himself; and that he give them their peculium or transfer other property as an [153] Combine with C. 6.20.18, 6.58.11 (both with slightly different dates).

[154] Combine with C. 6.58.13, 8.47.11. This constitution is based on 5 above.

liberalitatis titulo in eos transferre, et eas res, quae adquiri indignantur, per usum fructum secundum nostrae constitutionis modum detinere et omnia facere, vana tantummodo secundum quod dictum est observatione sublata.

D. k. Nov. Constantinopoli post consulatum Lampadii et Orestis vv. cc.

XXXXVIIII De Ingratis Liberis

[1] Imppp. Valentinianus Valens et Gratianus AAA. ad Praetextatum pu. Filios et filias ceterosque liberos contumaces, qui parentes vel acerbitate convicii vel cuiuscumque atrocis iniuriae dolore pulsassent, leges emancipatione rescissa damno libertatis immeritae multare voluerunt.

D. XV k. Sept. Ambianis Lupicinio et Iovino conss.

L De Postliminio et de Redemptis ab Hostibus

[1] Impp. Severus et Antoninus AA. Ovinio. pr. Ex duobus captivis Sarmatia nata patris originem ita secuta videtur, si ambo parentes in civitatem nostram redissent. quamquam enim iure proprio postliminium habere non possit quae capta non est, tamen parentum restitutio reddet patri filiam. 1. Qui cum ab hostibus interemptus sit, matris dumtaxat condicionem, quae secum filiam duxit, videtur necessario secuta. nam fictio legis Corneliae, quae legitimos apud hostes defuncto constituit heredes, ad eam quae illic suscepta est non pertinet, cum eo tempore quo captus est diem suum pater obisse existimetur.

PP. sine die et consule.

[2] Imp. Gordianus A. Publiciano. pr. Ab hostibus redempti, quoad exsolvatur pretium, in causam pignoris constituti quam in servilem condicionem videntur esse detrusi: et ideo si nummi eo nomine expensi donatio intercedat, pristinae condicioni eos reddi manifestum est. 1. Proinde si ab hostibus redemptam post dissolutum veluti act of generosity, and, in accord with Our constitution,[155] retain through usufruct the property that they are ashamed to acquire, and do everything (else that may be done), with only, as said, the empty ritual being abolished.

Given November 1, at Constantinople, after the consulate of the viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestes (531).

Forty-Ninth Title Ungrateful Children

[1][156] Emperors Valentian, Valens, and Gratian Augusti to Praetextatus, City Prefect. When insolent sons, daughters, and other descendants assail their parents either with bitter rebukes or the anguish of some horrible insult, the laws wanted them punished by rescinding emancipation and depriving them of their undeserved freedom.

Given August 18, at Ambiani, in the consulship of Lupicinius and Jovinus (367).

Fiftieth Title Resumption of Civil Rights (Postliminium) and Persons Ransomed from Enemies[157]

[1] Emperors Severus and Antininus Augusti to Ovinius.[158] pr. A woman born in Sarmatia to two captives is held to have acceded to the legal status of her father if both her parents had (subsequently) returned to Our territory. For although a woman who was not captured cannot enjoy resumption of civil rights (postliminium) by her own right, nevertheless the return of her parents restores the daughter to her father. 1. When he was killed by the enemy (hostes), she (the daughter) is held necessarily to have acceded only to the status of her mother, who took her daughter with her. For the fiction of the lex Cornelia,[159] which established legitimate heirs when someone died among the enemy, does not apply to the woman who was sired there, since (for purposes of law) her father is considered to have lost his life at the time he was captured (and not during his captivity).

Posted without date and year (193–211).

[2] Emperor Gordian Augustus to Publicianus. pr. Until the price is paid (by them to the ransomers), persons ransomed from the enemy are held to be in the position of a pledge (in causam pignoris constituti) rather than forced into a servile state. And so if money paid out on this account is a gift, they plainly are restored to their former condition. 1. So if you took in marriage a woman

[155] C. 6.61.6.3.

[156] = C.Th. 8.14.1

[157] See D. 49.15. Ransom occurs "through trade" (commercio) when the ransoming party pays with an expectation of repayment by the ransomed party.

[158] Ovinius is described in D. 38.17.1.3 and 49.15.9 as the Governor of Lower Moesia.

[159] The Lex Cornelia, of c. 80 BCE, validated the previously written will of a Roman who was captured by Roman enemies and died in captivity.

naturalis pignoris vinculum in matrimonio habere coepisti, nihil est, quod de statu eius seu liberorum communium debeas pertimescere.

PP. II id. Iun. Gordiano A. II et Pompeiano conss.

[3] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. Varo. Cum cognatos tuos nondum postliminio regressos adfirmes, sed adhuc in rebus esse humanis, et bona eorum fraudibus diversae partis dissipari, interpellatus rector provinciae providebit eum sub observatione constituere, qui stipulante servo publico satis idonee dederit.

PP. V k. Sept. Diocletiano III et Maximiano conss.

[4] Idem AA. Hermogeni. pr. Nec nos praeteriit hereditatem eius, quam incognitum erat ab hostibus interfecta an capta esset, a filio adiri non potuisse (quando eorum bona, qui in hostium potestatem rediguntur, eo demum tempore successionis iure adquiri possunt, cum captos apud hostes mortuos esse cognoscitur), nec super facultatibus eius, cuius incerta vita ac fortuna fuit, transigi vel iudicari potuit. 1. Unde posteaquam apud hostes materteram vestram fati munus implesse innotuit, tunc vobis licentia permittitur agnoscendae per bonorum possessionem successionis: non officientibus enim, quae perperam gesta sunt, si priorem gradum obtinetis, successionis compendium ad vos pertinet.

PP. V k. Iun. ipsis AA. IIII et III conss.

[5] Idem AA. Ursae. Cum non redemptum ab hostibus filium tuum, sed sine ullo contracto traditum a barbaris praefecto legionis dicas, postliminii ius locum habuit et ilico ingenuitati suae reddi eum praeses provinciae iubebit.

PP. XVI k. Iun. ipsis AA. IIII et III conss.

[6] Idem AA. Iusto. Cum et postliminii ius et communis utilitatis ratio exigat, ut, si qui captos ab hostibus redemerint, accepto pretio redemptos suae ingenuitati restituant, proponasque redemptorem noluisse oblatum pretium a te vel ab alio recipere, praeses provinciae efficaci instantia compellet eum legibus obtemperare et recepto eo quod pretii nomine dependitur status securitatem non inquietare.

PP. k. Febr. Tiberiano et Dione conss.

ransomed from the enemy, after the discharge of, as it were, this natural pledge (through repayment of the ransom) there is no reason why you should be afraid concerning her status or that of your common children.

Posted June 12, in the consulship of Gordian Augustus, for the second time, and Pompeianus (241).

[3] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti to Varus. Since you state that your relatives have not yet returned with restoration of rights, but are still alive, and that their estates are dissipated by the deceit of your adversary, the provincial governor, if approached, will place him under observation and see to it that he gives sufficient security through a stipulation to a public slave.

Posted August 28, in the consulship of Diocletian, for the third time, and Maximian (287).

[4] The same Augusti to Hermogenes. pr. It has not escaped Us that, as long as it is unknown whether a woman was killed or captured by enemies, her inheritance cannot be entered on by her son, since the property of those who fall into the power of enemies can only be acquired by the law of succession when it is known that they died in enemy captivity. Nor can there be a settlement or adjudication regarding her resources while her life and fate are uncertain. 1. So after it is known that your maternal aunt met her fate (i.e., died) among the enemy, then you are permitted to take up the succession by possessing her estate (per bonorum possessionem). Since (your) improper acts (in taking possession prematurely) do not obstruct this, the benefit of succession will come to you (now) if you are the nearest heir.

Posted May 28, in the consulship of the Augusti themselves, Consuls for the fourth and third times, respectively (290).

[5] The same Augusti to Ursa. Since you say that your son was not ransomed from the enemy, but without any (prior) agreement turned over by the barbarians to the prefect of the legion, the law of recovery of rights applied and the provincial governor will order his immediate restoration to free-born status.

Posted May 17, in the consulship of the Augusti themselves, Consuls for the fourth and third times, respectively (290).

[6] The same Augusti to Justus. Since both the law of resumption of rights and considerations of general benefit require that those who ransom captives from enemies restore the ransomed to free-born status when the price is paid, and you say that a ransomer declined to accept the price tendered by you or by a third party, the provincial governor will promptly and effectively force him to obey the law and, after receiving what was paid as a price, not (further) perturb your confidence in your status.

Posted February 1, in the consulship of Tiberianus and Dio (291).

[7] Idem AA. Claudio. Foedissimae mulieris nequitia permovemur. cum igitur filiam tuam captam ac prostitutam ab ea quae eam redemerat ob retinendae pudicitiae cultum ac servandam natalium honestatem ad te confugisse proponas, praeses provinciae, si filiae tuae supra dictam iniuriam ab ea, quae sciebat ingenuam esse, inflictam cognoverit, cum huiusmodi persona indigna sit pretium recipere propter odium detestabilis quaestus, etiamsi pretium compensatum non est ex necessitate miserabili, custodita ingenuitate natae tuae adversus flagitiosae mulieris turpitudinem tutam eam defensamque praestabit.

PP. III non. Febr. Tiberiano et Dione conss.

[8] Idem AA. Matronae. Praeses provinciae, ne ulterius in servitutis iugo detinearis, curae habebit: qui pro sollertia tua parum ignorat magis filiorum tuorum statum tueri, quos, posteaquam redempta es, enixam te esse significas, cum eos, qui post redemptionem nascuntur, ne pignoris quidem vinculo ob pretium, quod pro his datum non est, teneri nullis auctoribus visum est.

PP. V id. Febr. Tiberiano et Dione conss.

[9] Idem AA. et CC. Gregorio. pr. Captum ab hostibus filium, patre mortuo medio tempore, lex Cornelia reversum, si in potestate patris tempore quo capiebatur fuit, suum facit heredem. 1. Unde si ex testamento ad te sive intestato successionem patris tui pertinere apud praesidem provinciae probaveris, restitui tibi res hereditarias iubebit, si non tantum postquam reversus es tempus effluxit, quantum intentionem tuam temporis prolixitate conquiescere facit.

PP. V id. April. AA. conss.

[10] Idem AA. et CC. Apollodorae. Sicut liberis captis ab hostibus ac postliminio reversis status pristinus restituitur, sic servi domino. unde si haec, cuius meministi, ancilla patris tui fuit nec commercio redempta est, reversa dominum vel eius successorem sequitur, qui per captivitatem hanc amiserat.

S. III k. Mai. Hadrianopoli AA. conss.

[11] Idem AA. et CC. Eutychio. Si liberum captum te ab hostibus commercio redemit Sabinus et eum vinculum pignoris superstitem

[7] The same Augusti to Claudius. We are disgusted with the wickedness of this abominable woman. So since you state that your daughter was captured (by enemies) and then prostituted by the woman who ransomed her, and that she fled to you in an effort to retain her chastity and preserve the honorable status of her birth, since such a woman is unworthy to receive the price on account of the odiousness of her hateful profession even if the (ransom) price has not been repaid (to her) because of (your) poverty, if the provincial governor learns (in a trial) that this wrong was inflicted on your daughter when she knew she was free-born, he will ensure your daughter's free-born status and will guard and protect her against this scandalous woman's depravity.

Posted February 3, in the consulship of Tiberianus and Dio (291).

[8] The same Augusti to Matrona. The provincial governor will see to it that you are no longer detained in servitude. In response to your concern, he knows to protect the status of your children whom you state you bore after you were ransomed, since no authorities (jurists) have held that those born after payment of ransom (to the captors) are bound even by a pledge bond for a price that was not paid on their behalf.

Posted February 9, in the consulship of Tiberianus and Dio (291).

[9] The same Augusti and the Caesars to Gregorius. pr. If a son is captured by the enemy and his father dies in the meantime, then if he was in his father's power when he was captured, the lex Cornelia makes him a suus heres on his return. 1. So if you prove before the provincial governor that your father's succession comes to you through a will or on intestacy, he will order restoration of the inheritance property to you unless so much time has passed since your return as to render your claim moot through long duration of time.

Posted April 9, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[10] The same Augusti and Caesars to Apollodora. Just as through resumption of civil rights their former status is restored to free men who are captured by enemies and then returned, so slaves (are restored) to their master. So if the woman you mention was your father's slave and she was not ransomed through trade, on her return she belongs to the owner or his successor, who had lost her through her captivity.

Written April 29, at Adrianople, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).[160]

[11] The same Augusti and Caesars to Eutychius. If through trade Sabinus ransomed you, a free person, from enemy captivity, and it is shown that he remisisse tibi probetur, non libertus effectus, sed ingenuitati quam amiseras restitutus nullum filiis eius obsequium debes.

[160] Mommsen dates to May 13, 293.

S. xv k. Ian. AA. conss.

[12] Idem AA. et CC. Quintianae. Ab hostibus capti et non commercio redempti, sed virtute militum nostrorum liberati ilico statum, quem captivitatis casu amiserant, recipiunt: servi autem dominis suis restituentur: receptos enim eos, non captos iudicare debemus, et militem nostrum defensorem eorum decet esse, non dominum.
S. v k. Ian. AA. conss.

[13] Idem AA. et CC. Si is, qui te ab hostibus ingenuam captam commercio redemit, sibi matrimonio coniunxit, dignitate nuptiarum et voto futurae iustae subolis vinculo pignoris tibi remisso redditos natales pristinos rationis est.
S. v id. Mart. CC. conss.

[14] Idem AA. et CC. Severae. Ius postliminii filiam rebus humanis exempta matre, dum in servitutis ipsa necessitate per captivitatis causam fuit, eventu purgato vigore ad eius legitimam invitat hereditatem, nec tibi medii temporis fortuna, quominus res maternas successione quaesitas persequi possis, iniuriam fieri patimur.
S. xvi k. April. CC. conss.

[15] Idem AA. et CC. Mucatraulo. Is, qui liber constitutus captus ab hostibus commercio redimitur, et antequam restituatur pro eo data pecunia, successionis iura sibi vindicare favore ingenuitatis potest, ut ex ea possit pretium pro se datum exsolvere.

[16] Idem AA. et CC. Basilinae. Commercio redemptae filios, licet ex servo medio susceptos tempore, origini ingenuitatis matris iuxta ea quae benigne placuerunt reddi convenit.
S. v k. Sept. Viminacii AA. conss.

released you from the remaining pledge bond, you were not made a freedman; rather, you were restored to your free-born status and owe no service (obsequium) to his sons.

Written December 18, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[12] The same Augusti and Caesars to Quintiana. Persons captured by enemies and not ransomed through trade, but freed by the bravery of Our soldiers, immediately recover the status they lost through the misfortune of captivity. But slaves are restored to their owners, since We ought to consider them as recovered, not captured (as booty), and it is proper that Our soldiery be their defender, not their owner.

Written December 28, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[13] The same Augusti and Caesars <to ... >. If a man ransomed you, a free-born woman, through trade from enemy captivity, and he then took you in marriage, the reasonable conclusion is that, in view of the dignity of marriage and the hope of legitimate issue, the pledge bond is remitted and your former birthrights are restored to you.

Written March 11, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[14] The same Augusti and Caesars to Severa. When her mother was removed from human affairs (i.e., died) while she (the daughter) was forced to be in slavery as a result of being captured, this occurrence is deprived of legal force; the law on resumption of rights invites her to her lawful inheritance, nor do We allow your situation in the meantime to do you harm by making it less possible to claim your mother's property through (the law of) succession.

Written March 17, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[15] The same Augusti and Caesars to Mucatraulus. Through (the law's) partiality to free-born status, a free person who is captured by enemies and ransomed through trade, even before the money paid for him is repaid, can claim for himself rights of succession so that he can pay the ransom from it.

[16] The same Augusti and Caesars to Basilina. As has been humanely established, it is proper that if a woman is ransomed with money, her children, although they were sired by a slave in the meantime, be returned to their mother's original free-born status.

Written August 28, at Viminacium, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).[161]

[161] This constitution is out of order, but may have been misdated from 294. Mommsen dates to September 27, 294.

[17] Idem AA. et CC. Diogeniae. pr. Liber captus ab hostibus et commercio redemptus tunc demum cum pretium solverit vel hoc ei qualicumque remittatur indicio, statum pristinum recipit. 1. Quo genere matre filium redimente, cum huiusmodi contractus non de mercede, sed de tristitia repudianda cogitatur, voti recipiendi filium cogitatio cum optabili condicione filium ilico matri restituit, ita ut et civilium obsequio munerum propter casum praeteritum non excusetur. 2. Pro pietatis itaque ratione ab hostibus redempto filio facti te paenitere ac de pretio quicquam tractare non convenit: dotem tamen ab eo debitam iure concesso reddi postulas.

S. III k. Nov. Develto[xxvii] CC. conss.

[18] Idem AA. et CC. Tryphoniano. Ab hostibus captis ac postliminio reversis pro huiusmodi casu amissa, quae in eadem causa quidem durant, omnimodo directa, quae vero per usucapionem vel liberationem ex bonis subtracta vel non utendo finita esse videntur, intra annum utilem experientibus actione rescissoria restituuntur.

PP. XII k. Dec. CC. conss.

[19] Imppp. Valentinianus Valens et Gratianus AAA. ad Severianum ducem. pr. Si quos forte necessitas captivitatis abduxit, sciant, si non transierunt, sed hostilis inruptionis necessitate transducti sunt, ad proprias terras festinare debere, recepturos iure postliminii ea, quae in agris vel mancipiis seu aliis rebus ante tenuerunt, etsi a fisco nostro possideantur. 1. Nec timeat quisquam alicuius contradictionis moram, cum hoc solum requirendum sit, utrum aliquis cum barbaris voluntate fuerit an coactus.

D. V k. Iul. Remis Gratiano A. et Dagalaifo conss.

[20] Impp. Honorius et Theodosius AA. Theodoro pp. pr. Diversarum homines provinciarum cuiuslibet sexus condicionis aetatis, quos barbarica feritas captiva necessitate transvexerat, invitos nemo retineat, sed ad propria redire cupientibus libera sit facultas. 1. Quibus si

xxvii Deulto

[17] The same Augusti and Caesars to Diogenia. pr. A freeman who is captured by enemies and ransomed through trade recovers his old status only when he pays the price or some sort of evidence indicates it was remitted. 1. In this (latter) class is a mother ransoming her son, since such a contract is motivated not by reward but to end distress; the thought of a hope of recovering a son has immediately restored the son to his mother with the wished-for status, such that he is not even excused because of his past misfortune from carrying out civil duties. 2. For reasons of family devotion (pietas), therefore, it is improper that you regret ransoming your son from the enemy and raise question as to the price; but nevertheless you have full right to demand (return of) the dowry owed by him (as heir to his father).

Written October 30, at Deultum, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).[162]

[18] The same Augusti and Caesars to Tryphonianus. To those captured by enemies and returned with resumption of civil rights, in compensation for such a misfortune what was lost and remains in the same situation is absolutely restored through a direct action. But things held to be removed from their goods through usucapion or manumission, or lost by non-use, are restored within one judicial year (annus utilis) through an action for annulment (of previous dealings; actio rescissoria).

Posted November 20, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[19][163] Emperors VALENTINIAN, VALENS, and GRATIAN Augusti to Severianus, Duke. pr. If individuals have been led away through the duress of captivity, they should know that if they did not go (voluntarily) but were forcibly carried off during an enemy incursion, they should hasten back to their own lands and recover, by the law of resumption of civil rights, what they held before in land or slaves or other things, even if Our Treasury possesses them. 1. Nor need anyone fear delay arising from some defense, since the only inquiry to be made is whether he was with the barbarians voluntarily or by compulsion.

Given June 27, at Remi, in the consulship of Gratianus Augustus and Dagalaifus (366).

[20][164] Emperors HONORIUS and THEODOSIUS Augusti to Theodorus, Praetorian Prefect. pr. No one shall retain, against their will, persons of the various provinces, no matter their sex, legal status, or age, whom barbarian cruelty had driven away through the constraint of captivity; rather, if they wish to return to their own property, they shall be free to do so. 1. Any expenditure

[162] Mommsen dates to October 29, 294.
[163] = C.Th. 5.7.1 (Brev. 5.5.1), with a slightly different text. Seeck gives June 15, 366.
[164] = C.Th. 5.2.2; Sirm. 16 (with a different date); combine with C. 1.4.11.

quicquam in usum vestium vel alimoniae impensum est, humanitati sit praestitum nec maneat victualis sumptus repetitio: exceptis his, quos barbaris vendentibus emptos esse docebitur, a quibus status sui pretium propter utilitatem publicam emptoribus aequum est redhiberi. 2. Ne quando enim damni consideratio in tali necessitate positis negari faciat emptionem, decet redemptos aut datum pro se pretium emptoribus restituere aut laboris obsequio vel opere quinquennii vicem referre beneficii, habituros incolumem, si in ea nati sunt, libertatem. 3. Reddantur igitur sedibus propriis sub moderatione qua iussimus, quibus iure postliminii etiam veterum responsis incolumia cuncta servanda sunt.

4. Si quis itaque huic praecepto fuerit conatus obsistere actor conductor procuratorque, dari se metallis cum poena deportationis non ambiget: si vero possessionis dominus, rem suam fisco noverit vindicandam seque deportandum. 5. Et ut facilis exsecutio proveniat, Christianos proximorum locorum volumus huius rei sollicitudinem gerere: curiales quoque proximarum civitatum placuit admoneri, ut emergentibus talibus causis sciant legis nostrae auxilium deferendum: ita ut noverint rectores universi decem libras auri a se et tantundem a suis apparitoribus exigendum, si praeceptum neglexerint.

D. III id. Dec. Ravennae Honorio VIII et Theodosio III AA. conss.

LI De Infantibus Expositis Liberis et Servis et de His Qui Sanguinolentos Emptos vel Nutriendos Acceperunt

[1] Imp. Alexander A. Claudio. Si invito vel ignorante te partus ancillae vel adscripticiae tuae expositus est, repetere eum non prohiberis. sed restitutio eius, si non a fure vindicaveris, ita fiet, ut, si qua in alendo eo vel forte ad discendum artificium iuste consumpta fuerint, restitueris.

PP. III k. Iun. Iuliano et Crispino conss.

[2] Imppp. Valentinianus Valens et Gratianus AAA. ad Probum pp. pr. Unusquisque subolem suam nutriat. quod si exponendam putaverit, on clothing or maintenance shall be provided for humanity's sake, nor shall a claim lodge for the cost of nourishment, with the exception of those persons who, it will be shown, were bought from barbarian sellers. From these, buyers justly reclaim the price of their status, because of the public benefit (utilitas publica). 2. For in order that anxiety about loss at any time not lead to a refusal to purchase persons placed in such straits, the ransomed should rightly either repay the purchase price to the buyers or requite the benefit by obedient labor and work for five years while retaining their free status if they were so born. 3. So, subject to the limitation We ordered, let them be returned to their own homes, where, by the law of resumption of civil rights, everything must be preserved intact for them, in accord with the responses of the ancients (jurists) as well.

4. If any manager (actor), lessee, or procurator attempts to resist this ordinance, he will not doubt his own condemnation to the mines with the penalty of capital exile (deportatio); but if the owner of a possession (resists), he should know that his property is to be confiscated by the Treasury and he himself deported. 5. And to assist swift enforcement, We wish the Christians (the clergy) of neighboring places to give attention to this matter. It is settled that the decurions of neighboring cities also be alerted so that they know know support is to be provided for Our law when such cases arise; likewise, that all governors know that 10 pounds of gold will be levied from them, and a like amount from their subordinates, if they neglect this order.

Given December 11, at Ravenna, in the consulship of Honorius, for the eighth time, and Theodosius, for the third time, Augusti (409).[165]

Fifty-First Title Exposed Free and Slave Infants and Those Who Purchase Newborns or Undertake Raising Them

[1] Emperor ALEXANDER Augustus to Claudius. If the offspring from your slave-woman or from your enrolled female tenant (adscripticia) was exposed without your consent or knowledge, you are not forbidden from reclaiming him. However, his restitution, unless you bring a claim of ownership against a thief, is on the condition that if there were any legitimate expenditures in maintaining him or, say, on teaching him a craft, you (first) repay them.

Posted May 30, in the consulship of Julian and Crispinus (224).

[2][166] Emperors VALENTINIAN, VALENS, and GRATIAN Augusti to Probus, Praetorian Prefect. pr. Everyone must support his own offspring. But if he thinks about exposing them, he will be subjected to the established legal [165] Seeck dates this constitution to December 3, 408.

[166] See C. 9.16.7; §1= C.Th. 5.7.2.

animadversioni quae constituta est subiacebit. 1. Sed nec dominis vel patronis repetendi aditum relinquimus, si ab ipsis expositos quodammodo ad mortem voluntas misericordiae amica collegerit: nec enim dicere suum poterit, quem pereuntem contempsit.

D. III non. Mart. Gratiano A. III et Equitio conss.

[3] Imp. Iustinianus A. Demostheni pp. pr. Sancimus nemini licere, sive ab ingenuis genitoribus puer parvulus procreatus sive a libertina progenie sive servili condicione maculatus expositus sit, eum puerum in suum dominium vindicare sive nomine dominii sive adscripticiae sive colonariae condicionis: sed neque his, qui eos nutriendos sustulerunt, licentiam concedi penitus (cum quadam distinctione) eos tollere et educationem eorum procurare, sive masculi sint sive feminae, ut eos vel loco libertorum vel loco servorum aut colonorum aut adscripticiorum habeant. 1. Sed nullo discrimine habito hi, qui ab huiusmodi hominibus educati sunt, liberi et ingenui appareant et sibi adquirant et in posteritatem suam vel extraneos heredes omnia quae habuerint, quomodo voluerint, transmittant, nulla macula vel servitutis vel adscripticiae aut colonariae condicionis imbuti: nec quasi patronatus iura in rebus eorum his qui eos susceperunt vel susceperint praetendere concedi, sed in omnem terram, quae Romanae dicioni supposita est, haec obtinere. 2. Neque enim oportet eos, qui ab initio infantes abegerunt et mortis forte spem circa eos habuerunt, incertos constitutos, si qui eos susceperunt, hos iterum ad se revocare conari et servili necessitati subiugare: neque hi, qui eos pietatis ratione suadente sustulerunt, ferendi sunt denuo suam mutantes sententiam et in servitutem eos retrahentes, licet ab initio huiusmodi cogitationem habentes ad hoc prosiluerint, ne videantur quasi mercimonio contracto ita pietatis officium gerere. 3. Haec conservantibus tam viris clarissimis praesidibus provinciarum quam viris religiosissimis episcopis nec non officiis praesidalibus et patribus et defensoribus civitatum et omni civili auxilio.

D. XV k. Oct. Chalcedone Decio vc. cons.

LII Quae Sit Longa Consuetudo

[1] Imp. Alexander A. Apro evocato. Praeses provinciae probatis his, quae in oppido frequenter in eodem genere controversiarum servata punishment. 1. But We give no right to reclaim to masters or patrons if those they have more or less exposed to death are taken up by (someone displaying) a merciful compassion; for he will not be able to claim as his own a child he despised while it was perishing.

Given March 5, in the consulship of Gratian Augustus, for the third time, and Equitius (374).

[3][167] Emperor JUSTINIAN Augustus to Demosthenes, Praetorian Prefect. pr. If a small boy has been exposed, whether he was born of free-born parents or is of freedman extraction or is tainted by the status of a slave, We ordain that no one be permitted to claim him as his property, whether as slave, as a bound tenant (adscripticius), or as a free tenant (colonus); nor may those who undertake to rear such children raise them with any distinction whatsoever. But those who take them up in order to nourish them are also granted no permission whatsoever – with some exception – to raise them and arrange their training, whether they are male or female, in order to hold them either as freedmen or slaves or tenants or ascribed. 1. Children raised or reared or brought up by such people shall, without any distinction, be considered free and free-born and may acquire property and leave all that they have to their posterity or to outside heirs as they wish, marked with no stain of servitude or of ascribed or tenant status. Nor shall those who have taken them up or take them up in the future be allowed to pretend to any rights of patronage, as it were; but over the entire territory subject to Roman rule, these ordinances apply. 2. For it is not right that persons who at the start expelled infants and perhaps had hopes of death for them, (and were) left uncertain if anyone took them up, (subsequently) try to recall them once more and subject them to slavery. Nor are those who took them up out of compassion to be heard if they change their minds again and reduce them to slavery, even though they resorted to this after having it in mind from the start, lest in this way they seem to perform an act of dutifulness (pietas) for money. 3. Both the viri clarissimi provincial governors and the most revered bishops shall uphold these provisions, along with the governors' offices and the Senators and the Defenders of Cities and every civil resource.

Given September 17, at Chalcedon, in the consulship of the vir clarissimus Decius (529).

Fifty-Second Title What is Long-Standing Custom?[168]

[1][169] Emperor ALEXANDER Antoninus to Aper, a veteran. When it is shown what has often been done in a city in this sort of dispute, the provincial governor

[167] = C. 1.4.24.
[168] See D. 1.3.
[169] = C. 8.10.3; combine with C. 8.1.1.

sunt, causa cognita statuet. nam et consuetudo praecedens et ratio quae consuetudinem suasit custodienda est, et ne quid contra longam consuetudinem fiat, ad sollicitudinem suam revocabit praeses provinciae.

PP. VI k. April. Iuliano et Crispino conss.

[2] Imp. Constantinus A. ad Proculum. Consuetudinis ususque longaevi non vilis auctoritas est, verum non usque adeo sui valitura momento, ut aut rationem vincat aut legem.

D. VIII k. Mai. Constantino A. V et Licinio C. conss.

[3] Impp. Leo et Anthemius AA. Alexandro. Leges quoque ipsas antiquitus probata et servata tenaciter consuetudo imitatur et retinet: et quod officiis curiis civitatibus principiis vel collegiis praestitum fuisse cognoscitur, perpetuae legis vicem obtinere statuimus.

D. VII id. Sept. Zenone cons.

LIII De Donationibus

[1] Impp. Severus et Antoninus AA. Lucio. Emptionum mancipiorum instrumentis donatis et traditis et ipsorum mancipiorum traditionem factam intellegis: et ideo potes adversus donatorem in rem actionem exercere.

PP. V k. Iul. Faustino et Rufino conss.

[2] Imp. Gordianus A. Leonidi. Si nominis persecutionem in te emancipatam pater tuus titulo donationis transtulit, frustra praetendit, qui debitori tuo heres extitit, consensum fuisse debitoris necessarium, cum satis fuerit actiones eo nomine tibi mandatas fuisse.

PP. II id. Mart. Gordiano A. II et Pompeiano conss.

[3] Imp. Decius A. Marcellino. Spem futurae actionis plena intercedente donatoris voluntate posse transferri non immerito placuit.

will hear the case and decide. For both existing custom and the reasons that gave rise to it should be upheld, and the provincial governor will make it his business to prevent anything being done contrary to long-standing custom (longa consuetudo).

Posted March 27, in the consulship of Julian and Crispinus (224).

[2] Emperor CONSTANTINE Augustus to Proculus. Long-standing custom and usage are of no mean authority, but will not have weight to the point of contravening either reason or statute.

Given April 24, in the consulship of Constantine Augustus, for the fifth time, and Licinius Caesar (319).

[3][170] Emperors LEO and ANTHEMIUS Augusti to Alexander. Custom, approved as of old and tenaciously adhered to, also imitates and upholds the statutes themselves. We order that what is recognized as having been provided in government offices (officia), local senates, cities, command posts, and guilds has the force of a permanent law.

Given September 7, in the consulship of Zeno (469).

Fifty-Third Title Gifts

[1] Emperors SEVERUS and ANTONINUS Augusti to Lucius. You understand that when documents evidencing the sales of slaves are handed over as gifts, there is also a delivery (of possession) of the slaves themselves; and so you can bring an action in rem against the donor (to obtain the slaves).

Posted June 27, in the consulship of Faustinus and Rufinus (210).

[2] Emperor GORDIAN Augustus to Leonides. If your father, in emancipating you, transferred as a gift an action on a debt, your debtor's heir pretends in vain that the debtor's agreement was necessary (for the transfer), since it is enough if the rights of action on that debt were (simply) mandated to you.

Posted March 14, in the consulship of Gordian Augustus, for the second time, and Pompeianus (241).

[3] Emperor DECIUS Augustus to Marcellinus. Not undeservedly it has been held that the expectation of a future right of action can be transferred if the donor gives full consent.

[170] Combine with C. 1.57.1, probably; it describes Alexander as a Duke and Augustal Prefect.

PP. non Mart. Decio A. II et Grato conss.

[4] Imp. Probus A. Massiciae. Si functiones per eum, cui donata res non erat, vel ab actoribus ipsius nomine celebratae sunt, tibi obesse non potest.

PP. V k. Ian. Messala et Grato conss.

[5] Imppp. Carus Carinus et Numerianus AAA. Falconillae. Si donatio per epistulam facta non paret, verba tamen testamenti, quibus liberalitas testatricis confirmata est, fideicommissum continere non ambigitur.

PP. VI k. Febr. Romae Carino II et Numeriano AA. conss.

[6] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. Calpurniae Aristaenetae. Nec ambigi oportet donationes etiam inter absentes, maxime si ex voluntate donantium possessionem ii quibus donatum est nanciscantur, validas esse.

PP. IIII id. Febr. Mediolani Maximo II et Aquilino conss.

[7] Idem AA. Iulio. Censualis quidem professio domino praeiudicare non solet. sed si in censum velut sua mancipia deferenti privigno tuo consensisti, donationem in eum contulisse videris.

PP. id. Iul. ipsis AA. IIII et III conss.

[8] Idem AA. Florae. Si praeses provinciae non donandi voluntate filiorum tuorum nomine praedia in censum detulisse te manifestis probationibus cognoverit, quod fides veri suggesserit, statuet.

PP. VIII id. Sept. ipsis AA. IIII et III conss.

[9] Idem AA. et CC. Augustinae. Legem, quam rebus tuis donando dixisti, sive stipulatione tibi prospexisti, ex stipulatu, sive non, incerto iudicio (id est praescriptis verbis) apud praesidem provinciae debes agere, ut hanc impleri provideat.

PP. XVI k. Mai. AA. conss.

Posted March 7, in the consulship of Decius Augustus, for the second time, and Gratus (250).

[4][171] Emperor PROBUS Augustus to Massicia. You cannot be prejudiced (as to title) by the fact that taxes (on your property) were paid by a man to whom the property had not been given, or by his slave manager (actor) in his name.

Posted December 28, in the consulship of Messala and Gratus (280).

[5] Emperors CARUS, CARINUS, and NUMERIAN Augusti to Falconilla. Even though the gift does not appear to have been made through a letter, still it is not doubtful that the words of her will, whereby the generosity of the testatrix is confirmed, contain a trust.

Posted January 27, at Rome, in the consulship of Carinus, for the second time, and Numerianus, Augusti (284).

[6][172] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti to Calpurnia Aristaeneta. It should not be doubted that gifts are also valid between absent parties, especially if the donees take possession with the consent of the donors.

Posted February 11, at Milan, in the consulship of Maximus, for the second time, and Aquilinus (286).

[7] The same Augusti to Julius. Listing property in a census (for taxation) does not usually prejudice its owner (as to title). But if you agreed to your stepson reporting slaves as his own for a census, you are held to have made a gift to him.

Posted July 15, in the consulship of the Augusti themselves, Consuls for the fourth and third times, respectively (290).

[8] The same Augusti to Flora. If the provincial governor finds by clear evidence that for a census you reported properties in the name of your sons with no donative intention, he will decide what fidelity to the truth indicates.

Posted September 6, in the consulship of the Augusti themselves, Consuls for the fourth and third times, respectively (290).

[9] The same Augusti and the Caesars to Augustina. To gain enforcement of the condition that you set for your propertes in giving them, you should bring suit before the provincial governor on a stipulation if you exacted one, or, if not, through an indefinite action, i.e., one with a limiting preamble (praescriptis verbis).

Posted April 16, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[171] = Frag. Vat. 288.
[172] = Frag. Vat. 282 (which omits "especially"); combine with C. 3.29.4.

[10] Idem AA. et CC. Hermionae. Nec ignorans nec invitus quisque donat. unde si de hoc fundo non cogitasti, cuius velut donationi consensisse continetur instrumento, maiores veritate rei quam scriptura vires obtinente intellegis, de quo non cogitasti nec specialiter subscripsisti, nihil te perdidisse.

S. v k. Mai. AA. conss.

[11] Idem AA. et CC. Septimio Sabiniano. pr. Cum de bonis tuis partem quidem penes te retinuisse, partem vero in eum quem in potestate habes donationis titulo contulisse commemores, non est incerti iuris in eum, qui in sacris familiae tuae remanet, destinationem magis paternae voluntatis factam, quam perfectam donationem pervenisse. 1. Delegationes autem nominum in emancipatum collatae perfectam donationem efficiunt.

S. prid. k. Mai. Heraclea AA. conss.

[12] Idem AA. et CC. Aurelio. Portionem propriam rebus necdum divisis nemo prohibetur titulo donationis in alium transferre.

D. XVII k. Iun. AA. conss.

[13] Idem AA. et CC. Uraniae. Si aliquid per epistulam donatum tibi probetur, brevitas chartulae donation*i*, si haec recte facta probetur, nihil quicquam derogat.

D. XV k. Iun. Sirmi AA. conss.

[14] Idem AA. et CC. Idaeae. Si filius tuus res ad te pertinentes sponsae suae te non consentiente donavit, ad eam quod non habuit transferre non potuit.

S. XV k. Oct. AA. conss.

[15] Idem AA. et CC. Severae. pr. Aeris alieni, quod ex hereditaria causa venit, non eius, qui donationis titulo possidet, sed totius iuris successoris onus est. 1. Si itaque nemini obligata praedia pro donatione consecuta es, supervacuam geris sollicitudinem, ne vel heredes donatricis vel eius creditores te iure possint convenire.

S. XV k. Dec. AA. conss.

[10] The same Augusti and Caesars to Hermiona. No one makes a gift unknowingly or unwillingly. So if you were not thinking of this (particular) farm that is mentioned in the document as if you had consented to giving it, since the truth of the matter has greater strength than a writing, you understand that you lost nothing about which you were not thinking and to which you did not expressly subscribe.

Written April 27, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[11][173] The same Augusti and Caesars to Septimius Sabinianus. pr. Since you state that you retained part of your property in your control, but transferred part as a gift to a person in your power, the law is not unclear that it came to this person, who remains within your agnatic kin group (i.e., in your potestas), more as an indication of a father's intention than a completed gift. 1. But a conferral of accounts that is delegated to an emancipated (son) results in a completed gift.

Written April 30, at Heraclea, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[12] The same Augusti and Caesars to Aurelius. Although property is not yet divided (among co-owners), none is forbidden from transferring his interest to a third party as a gift.

Given May 16, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[13] The same Augusti and Caesars to Urania. If it is shown that something was given to you by letter, the brevity of the document does not prejudice (the effectiveness of) the gift, if it is shown to have been properly made.

Given May 18,[174] at Sirmium, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[14] The same Augusti and Caesars to Idaea. If, without your consent, your son gave property belonging to you to his fiancée (sponsa), he could not transfer to her what he did not have (i.e., title to the property).

Written September 17, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[15] The same Augusti and Caesars to Severa. pr. The burden of (paying) a debt that arises from an inheritance falls not on the person who possesses (the inheritance) as a gift (through a legacy or trust), but on the legal successor to the entirety. 1. So if you obtained as a gift properties not obligated (as security) to anyone, you are needlessly concerned about the legal possibility of suit by either the donor's heirs or her creditors.

Written November 17, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[173] = Consultatio 6.10 (with more detail, but omitting §1).
[174] More likely December 18 (Connolly). Mommsen gives September 17, 293.

[16] Idem AA. et CC. Theodoro. Senectus ad donationem faciendam sola non est impedimento.

D. v k. Dec. AA. conss.

[17] Idem AA. et CC. Hermiae. pr. Sive emancipatis filiis res donasti sive in potestate constitutis et sui iuris effectis ac tenentibus non ademisti, blandiri tibi non debes, velut res donatas ex paenitentia liceat auferre. 1. Sane si ea, quae in tua positis potestate donaveras, post emancipationem contra tuam tenuerunt voluntatem, horum penes te dominium remansit, si quidem nec tempore quo voluisti propter vinculum potestatis sibi quicquam quaerere, nec post invito te de rebus tuis potuerunt.

S. vi k. Ian. AA. conss.

[18] Idem AA. et CC. Audiano. Si donationis causa furti actio tibi remissa probetur, supervacuam geris sollicitudinem.

S. v k. Ian. AA. conss.

[19] Idem AA. et CC. Alexandriae. Si avia vestra proprias res quacumque ratione factas titulo liberalitatis in eum contra quem preces funditis contulit, quominus haec rata maneant, quod ex origine patris vel avi vestri descendunt, nihil prodest.

S. xvi k. Febr. Sirmi CC. conss.

[20] Idem AA. et CC. Helvio. Vice donatricis alio voluntate eius subscribente iure facta donatio non habebitur irrita.

S. vii k. Febr. CC. conss.

[21] Idem AA. et CC. Antoniae. Constante matrimonio dotem penes maritum suum constitutam avia tua donare tibi non potuit.

S. v id. Mart. CC. conss.

[22] Idem AA. et CC. Diomedi. pr. Cum res filio emancipato ea condicione, ut creditoribus tuis solveret, te donasse proponas, si stipulatione vel in continenti habito pacto huic rei prospexisti, creditoribus quidem non contra eum ex placito vestro, sed adversus te competit actio.[xxviii] 1. Eum autem, cui certa lege praedia donasti, incerta civili actione ad

[xxviii] tibi autem adversus filium ex stipulatu competit actio

[16] The same Augusti and Caesars to Theodorus. Old age by itself constitutes no impediment to making a gift.

Given November 27, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[17] The same Augusti and Caesars to Hermias. pr. Whether you made a gift to emancipated children, or you did not take it away from children in your power when you emancipated them while they held it, you should not fool yourself that you can change your mind and reclaim what you gave. 1. Of course, if, against your will, after emancipation they held property that you had given them while they were in your power, you remain the owner of it, if, indeed, because of the restraint of your (paternal) power they could not acquire anything for themselves at the time you wished (i.e., even with your consent), nor thereafter (after emancipation) could they acquire any of your property without your consent.

Written December 27, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[18] The same Augusti and Caesars to Audianus. If an action on theft (actio furti) is shown to have been remitted to you as a gift (from the victim of the theft), your worry (about the validity of the remission) is needless.

Written December 28, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[19] The same Augusti and Caesars to Alexandria. If as an act of generosity your grandmother made a gift of her own property, however acquired, to the person against whom you direct your petition, the fact that it originally came from your father or grandfather is of no avail in invalidating the transaction.

Written January 17, at Sirmium, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[20] The same Augusti and Caesars to Helvius. A gift, (otherwise) legally made, will not be held invalid if signed by a third party acting for the donor with her consent.

Written January 26, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[21] The same Augusti and Caesars to Antonia. While the marriage continued, your grandmother could not make a gift to you of her dowry, which was in her husband's control.

Written March 11, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[22] The same Augusti and Caesars to Diomedes. pr. You state that you gave property to your emancipated son on the condition that he pay your creditors. If you provided for this through a stipulation or an accompanying pact, the creditors have no right of action against him on the basis of your condition, but you have one against your son on the stipulation. 1. Nevertheless, through placitorum obsequium urgueri secundum legem donationibus dictam convenit.

S. VII k. April. Sirmi CC. conss.

[23] Idem AA. et CC. Olympiadi. Si ea quae donaveras posteriori placito qui acceperat donum tibi reddidit, donationis antecedens instrumentum actis sequentibus nihil obesse potest.

S. V k. Oct. CC. conss.

[24] Idem AA. et CC. Macario. Si patri tuo heres non extitisti, ex facta ab eo liberalitate titulo donationis non posse iura tua laedi manifestissimi iuris est.

PP. non. Febr. Antiochiae Diocletiano VII et Maximiano VI AA. conss.

[25] Imp. Constantinus A. ad Maximum pu. pr. Donatio, sive directa sit sive mortis causa instituta, sive condicionibus faciendi ac non faciendi suspensa sive ex aliquo notato tempore promissa, sive animo dantium accipientiumve sententiis, quantum ius sinit, cognominata, sub hac fieri debet observatione, ut quas leges indulgent actiones condiciones pactionesque contineat, hisque penitus cognitis vel recipiantur, si complacitae sunt, vel reiciantur, si sunt molestae. 1. In conscribendis autem donationibus nomen donatoris, ius ac rem notari oportet, neque id occulte aut privatim, sed ut tabulae aut quodcumque aliud materiae tempus dabit vel ab ipso vel ab eo quem sors ministraverit perscribatur: actis etiam adnectendis, quae apud iudicem vel magistratus conficienda sunt, ubi hoc leges expostulant.

D. III non. Febr. Romae Sabino et Rufino conss.

[26] Idem A. Aconio Catullino proconsuli Africae. pr. Si quis in emancipatum minorem, priusquam fari possit aut habere rei quae sibi donatur adfectum, fundum crediderit conferendum, omne ius compleat instrumentis ante praemissis. 1. Quod per eum servum, quem idoneum esse constiterit, transigi placuit, ut per eum infanti adquiratur.

D. XII k. Mai. Serdicae Sabino et Rufino conss.

a civil action for an indefinite amount (actio incerta civilis) you may sue the person to whom you gave land under a definite condition, to compel his compliance with the term annexed to the gift.

Written March 26, at Sirmium, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[23][175] The same Augusti and Caesars to Olympiades. If a donee, pursuant to a later agreement, returned to you your gift, the preceding document for the gift cannot prejudice the subsequent transaction.

Written September 27, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[24] The same Augusti and Caesars to Macarius. If you were not your father's heir, the law is absolutely clear that your rights cannot be injured by his generosity in making a gift (of your property in his will).

Posted February 5, at Antioch, in the consulship of Diocletian, for the seventh time, and Maximian, for the sixth time, Augusti (299).

[25][176] Emperor Constantine Augustus to Maximus, City Prefect. pr. Whether a gift is direct or made in contemplation of death (mortis causa), or subject to conditions of doing or not doing something, or promised from some indicated time, or, by the intention of donors or the purpose of donees, given another name to the extent that the law allows, it should be made under this regulation: that it contain actions, conditions, and agreements that are legally permissible, and, when these are thoroughly examined, they should either be accepted if they satisfy, or rejected if they are burdensome. 1. In documenting gifts, furthermore, the name of the donor, the property, and the title to it should be noted, and this not secretly or privately, but such that the wax tablets, or any other material that chance provides, are written out either by him (the donor) or by one whom the occasion offers. When law demands this, public records shall also be added, which must be executed before the judge or magistrates.

Given February 3, at Rome, in the consulship of Sabinus and Rufinus (316).

[26][177] The same Augustus to Aconius Catullinus, Proconsul of Africa. pr. If someone entrusts the conveyance of a farm to an emancipated minor before the latter can speak or have a disposition of will toward the object given to him, let him (the donor) fulfill all legal requirements (making the donation effective) after executing the documents. 1. This, it has been agreed, is done through a slave deemed suitable, so that the infant acquires through him.

Given April 20, at Serdica, in the consulship of Sabinus and Rufinus (316).

[175] Combine with C. 6.42.27.

[176] = C.Th. 8.12.1, Frag. Vat. 249; combine with C. 5.37.21, Consultatio 9.13.

[177] = C.Th. 8.12.2. Justinian's version is heavily abbreviated, often with loss of grammatical sense. Seeck dates to April 17, 317.

[27] Idem A. ad Severum comitem Hispaniarum. pr. Data iam pridem lege statuimus, ut donationes interveniente actorum testificatione conficiantur. quod vel maxime inter necessarias coniunctissimasque personas convenit custodiri, si quidem clandestinis ac domesticis fraudibus facile quidvis pro negotii opportunitate confingi potest, vel id quod vere gestum est aboleri. 1. Cum igitur ne liberos quidem ac parentes lex nostra ab actorum confectione secernat, id, quod necessario super donationibus apud acta conficiendis iam pridem statuimus, universos teneat. 2. Gesta autem confici super rebus etiam alibi collocatis ubicumque sufficit.

D. IIII non. Mai. Constantinopoli Dalmatio et Zenophilo conss.

[28] Impp. Honorius et Theodosius AA. Monaxio pp. Quisquis rem aliquam donando vel in dotem dando vel vendendo usum fructum eius retinuerit, etiamsi stipulatus non fuerit, eam continuo tradidisse credatur, ne quid amplius requiratur, quo magis videatur facta traditio, sed omnimodo idem sit in his causis usum fructum retinere, quod tradere.

D. prid id. Mart. Constantinopoli Honorio A. XI et Constantio II conss.

[29] Impp. Theodosius et Valentinianus AA. Hierio pp. In extraneos et saepe ignotos donationem collatam valere receptum est: et si sine scripto donatum quod fuerit, adhibitis aliis idoneis documentis hoc quod geritur comprobetur.

D. XI k. Mai. Felice et Tauro conss.

[30] Imp. Leo A. Constantino pp. pr. In hac sacratissima urbe conscriptae donationes ubicumque positarum rerum apud magistrum census insinuentur. 1. In aliis vero civitatibus, sive absens sive praesens rector provinciae sit, sive eadem civitas habeat magistratus sive non habeat et defensor tantummodo sit, donator habeat liberam facultatem donationes rerum suarum ubicumque positarum sive apud moderatorem cuiuslibet provinciae sive apud magistratus sive apud defensorem cuiuscumque civitatis prout maluerit publicare: atque ut ipsa donatio sita est in voluntate donantis, ita ei liceat donationem suam apud

[27][178] The same Augustus to Severus, Count of the Spains. pr. In a previous law We provided that donations be made through the evidence of public records. This should apply especially between kinsmen and closely connected persons, if indeed through secret domestic frauds something can easily be contrived as opportunity arises, or what was really done can be nullified. 1. Since, therefore, Our law does not exempt even children or parents from executing records, the rule that We formerly provided as to the necessity of executing gifts in the public records shall apply to all persons. 2. But a record executed even as to property located elsewhere suffices everywhere.

Given May 4, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Dalmatius and Zenophilus (333).

[28][179] Emperors Honorius and Theodosius Augusti to Monaxius, Praetorian Prefect. Whoever retains the usufruct when giving some property as a gift or as a dowry or selling it is construed as having delivered it immediately even if he exacts no stipulation (on this issue), so that nothing further is needed to have the delivery seem more complete, but in these cases retaining the usufruct is the same as delivering (the property).[180]

Given March 14, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Honorius Augustus, for the eleventh time, and Constantius, for the second time (417).

[29] Emperors Theodosius and Valentinian Augusti to Hierius, Praetorian Prefect. The received view is that a donation is valid when made to third parties, even ones often unknown. And if something is given without a writing, what was done is confirmed if other appropriate documents provide evidence.

Given April 21, in the consulship of Felix and Taurus (428).[181]

[30] Emperor Leo Augustus to Constantine, Praetorian Prefect. pr. In this Imperial City (Constantinople), written (promises of) gifts of property, wherever located, are registered with the Master of the Census. 1. But in other cities, whether the provincial governor is absent or present, and whether the city has a magistrate or it does not have one and there is only a defender, the donor of property, no matter where it is located, shall have the unrestricted ability to register these gifts either with the governor of any province or with the magistrates or the defender of any city, as he wishes. And just as the gift itself is entirely at the will of the donor, so it shall be permitted to register his [178] = C.Th. 8.12.5; combine with C. 4.21.14. Section 2 = C.Th. 8.12.8. The previous law is C. 8.53.25 above.

[179] = C.Th. 8.12.9.

[180] Blume: "That reservation of usufruct should take the place, or be the equivalent, of delivery applied, when the rescript was written only to cases of gift. Justinian extended it, by interpolation to cases of sale."

[181] Seeck dates to February 20, 428.

quemcumque ex memoratis voluerit intimare. 2. Et hae donationes, quae in diversis provinciis et civitatibus apud quemlibet ex praedictis fuerint publicatae, obtineant inconcussam ac perpetuam firmitatem.

D. v non. Mart. Constantinopoli Patricio cons.

[31] Imp. Zeno A. Sebastiano pp. pr. In donationibus, quae actis insinuantur, non esse necessarium iudicamus vicinos vel alios testes adhibere: nam superfluum est privatum testimonium, cum publica monumenta sufficiant. 1. Verum et alias donationes, quas gestis non est necessarium adlegari, si forte per tabellionem vel alium scribantur, et sine testium subnotatione valere praecipimus, ita tamen, si ipse donator vel alius voluntate eius secundum solitam observationem subscripserit: donationibus, quae sine scriptis conficiuntur, suam firmitatem habentibus secundum constitutionem Theodosii et Valentiniani ad Hierium praefectum praetorio promulgatam.

D. k. Mart. Constantinopoli Ello vc. cons.

[32] Imp. Anastasius A. Euphemio pp. Secundum divi Leonis constitutionem donationes apud virum clarissimum magistrum census tantummodo insinuari praecipimus, huiusmodi forma in illis instrumentis observanda, quae in hac regia urbe confecta seu celebrata fuerint: nec concedi quemquam vel apud defensores seu magistratus aliarum civitatum vel in aliis quibuslibet locis praeter memoratum iudicium insinuare: scientibus tam his qui ad huiuscemodi insinuationem pervenerint quam his qui eam susceperint nec non tabellionibus, quicumque testimonium suum non in competenti (ut dictum est) loco vel iudicio praebuerint, vicenarum librarum auri multa et alia gravissima indignatione se feriendos.

D. prid. k. Mai. Paulo vc. cons.

[33] Imp. Iustinianus A. Menae pp. pr. Illam subtilem observationem amputamus, per quam donationis titulo cessiones actionum accipientes non aliter eas suis transmittere heredibus poterant, nisi litem ex his contestati essent vel ius contestationis divino rescripto meruissent. nam sicut venditionis titulo cessas actiones etiam ante litis contestationem ad heredes transmitti permittitur, simili modo et donatas ad eos transferri volumus, licet nulla contestatio vel facta vel petita sit. 1. Quod et in procuratore constituendo ad movendas easdem cessas actiones similiter observandum erit, ut minime quis impediatur procuratorem donation with whomever he wishes of the aforesaid persons. 2. And the gifts that are registered in the various provinces and cities with any of the aforementioned persons shall have unshaken and permanent strength (at law).[182]

Given March 3, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Patricius (459).

[31] Emperor ZENO Augustus to Sebastianus, Praetorian Prefect. pr. For gifts that are registered in public records, We judge it unnecessary to summon neighbors or others as witnesses; since private testimony is useless when public documents suffice. 1. But also other gifts that do not need to be registered, if, say, they are written by a notary or a third party, We also order to be valid without signatures of witnesses, provided that the donor himself or another with his consent signs according to the usual rule. Gifts that are made without writings are valid (if made) according to the constitution of Theodosius and Valentinian publicly issued to Hierius the Praetorian Prefect.[183]

Given March 1, at Constantinople, in the consulship of the vir clarissimus Illus (478).

[32] Emperor ANASTASIUS Augustus to Euphemius, Praetorian Prefect. In accord with the constitution of Leo of blessed memory,[184] We direct that gifts be registered only with the vir clarissimus Master of the Census – a rule to be applied in those documents that are executed or published in this Imperial City. Nor is anyone allowed to register either before defenders or magistrates of other cities or in any other places except for the aforementioned court. And let both those who attempt such a registration and those (magistrates) who have accepted it, as well as notaries, know that anyone who provides testimony (as to the validity of documents) not in, as they say, the appropriate location or court shall be visited with a fine of 20 pounds of gold and other severe penalty.

Given April 30, in the consulship of the vir clarissimus Paulus (496).

[33] Emperor JUSTINIAN to Menas, Praetorian Prefect. pr. We abolish that technical rule whereby those who receive assignment of rights of action as a gift cannot transmit them to their heirs unless they have had joinder of issue (litis contestatio) on them or they earned the right of joinder through an imperial rescript. For just as, for actions assigned pursuant to their sale, transmission to heirs is permitted before joinder of issue, similarly We wish that those donated also be transmitted to them, even though no joinder was made or sought. 1. This rule shall also apply for appointing a procurator to bring suit on [182] In this and many subsequent constitutions within this title, it is actually not the gift itself that is being registered, but the promise of a gift; registration makes the donative promise actionable. Except in unusual circumstances, gifts themselves were previously irrevocable only after conveyance; see C. 8.55.

[183] Law 29 above.

[184] Law 30 above.

cessarum sibi per donationem actionum dare, licet nulla litis contestatio facta vel petita sit. 2. Quae in his tantum personis locum habere censemus, quae susceptis per donationem cessionibus adhuc superesse noscuntur: nam iam mortuis huiusmodi personis vetera iura super hisdem cessionibus posita servari concedimus.

D. k. Iun. Constantinopoli dn. Iustiniano A. pp. II cons.

[34] Idem A. Demostheni pp. pr. Sancimus omnem donationem sive communem sive ante nuptias factam usque ad trecentos solidos cumulatam non indigere monumentis, sed communem fortunam habere, ut non usque ad ducentorum solidorum summam teneat, sed in huiusmodi observatione similes sint tam communes quam ante nuptias donationes. 1. Si quid autem supra legitimam definitionem fuerit donatum, hoc quod superfluum est tantummodo non valere, reliquam vero quantitatem quae intra legis terminos constituta est in suo robore perdurare, quasi nullo penitus alio adiecto, sed hoc pro non scripto vel intellecto esse credatur.

1a. Exceptis donationibus tam imperialibus quam his, quae in causas piissimas procedunt: quarum imperiales quidem donationes merito indignari sub observatione monumentorum fieri tam a retro principibus quam a nobis sancitum est, sed firmam habere propriam maiestatem: alias vero, quae ad pietatem respiciunt, usque ad quingentorum summam et sine monumentis esse validas censemus. 1b. His insuper ante nuptias donationibus, quae in adultas minores sui iuris constitutas cuiuscumque summae procedunt, secundum veterum legum scita, et nisi actis intervenientibus corroboratae sunt, suam retinentibus firmitatem.

1c. Sin autem non in auro res donationis fuerint datae, sed per res mobiles vel immobiles vel se moventes, quantitatum earum aestimari et, si quidem usque ad legitimam solidorum summam erigatur, validam eam et sine monumentis conservari: sin autem amplioris summae inveniatur et minime actis comprobata est, superfluum tantum vacuari. 2. Ne autem communione inducta donatori et qui liberalitatem suscepit aliqua oriatur contentio, electionem damus ei, qui ampliorem summam in re donata habuerit, reliquae aestimationis quantitatem offerre ei, qui minorem causam habuit, et totum possidere. 2a. Sin autem hoc minime facere maluerit, tunc omnimodo res dividi secundum quantitatem utrique parti competentem, si res dividi sine suo periculo possibilis est. 2b. Sin autem huiusmodi casibus,[xxix] in quibus partitio utiliter celebrari these same assigned rights of action, so that no one be prevented from giving a procurator rights of action assigned to him as a gift, even if no joinder of issue has been made or sought. 2. We hold that these rules are relevant only for those persons who are known to be still alive after assignments through gift; for when such persons are now dead, We allow observation of the old law for such assignments.

[xxix] in huiusmodi casibus

Given June 1, at Constantinople, in the consulship of our Lord Justinian, Ever Augustus, for the second time (528).

[34] The same Augustus to Demosthenes, Praetorian Prefect. pr. We ordain that all gifts up to 300 solidi, no matter whether ordinary or pre-nuptial, do not require public registration but (instead) have a shared outcome, in that they are not valid (merely) up to 200 solidi (as was formerly true), but both ordinary and pre-nuptial gifts are similar in such regulation.[185] 1. If, however, anything is given above the legal limit, only the excess is invalid, but the remainder that lies within the legal boundaries remains in force, as if no additional amount was added; but this (the remainder) shall be understood as not written or comprehended.

1a. Exempted (from this rule) are both imperial donations and those that involve religious causes. That it is undignified to require registration of imperial donations has been ordained both by earlier emperors and by Us;[186] rather, they are valid by their own force. But We direct that the others, those made on religious grounds, be valid up to the amount of 500 (solidi) without registration. 1b. In addition, pre-nuptial gifts of whatever amount made to adult women less than 25 (and over 12), who are sui iuris, retain their validity in accord with the ordinance of ancient law,[187] even if they are not confirmed by records.

1c. But if gifts are not given in gold, but as movable or immovable or self-moving property, their value is appraised and, if indeed it reaches to the legal amount of (300) solidi, this is valid and enforced with no registration; but if it is found to be of a higher amount, and it is not attested in records, just the excess shall be invalid. 2. But to prevent some quarrel arising between the donor and the recipient of his bounty when co-ownership is imposed, to the party who has the larger share in the gift We give an option to offer the amount of the remaining appraisal to the party who has the smaller share, and (in this way) to possess the entirety. 2a. But if he does not wish to do this at all, then the object is in any case to be divided according to the amount falling to each party, if the object can be divided without endangering it. 2b. But in those cases where

[185] Blume: "C.Th. 3.5.8 (428 A.D.) limited a prenuptial gift, not registered, to 200 solidi. Inst. 2.7.2 indicates that that limit applied also in ordinary gifts. But the language of the instant law suggests a former difference. The next law of this title raised the limit to 500 solidi."

[186] See C. 1.2.19.

[187] C. 5.3.17.

minime potest, amplioris summae dominus noluerit aestimationem offerre, tunc licebit etiam ei, qui minoris summae habet potestatem, offerre pretium et totum sibi vindicare.

3. Si quis autem per diversa tempora in eandem personam multas faciat liberalitates, quarum singulae quidem legitimam quantitatem non excedunt, in unum autem compositae et praedicto modo exaggeratae redundare videntur et maioris esse quantitatis, non videatur eas oportere in unum coadunare et introducere modos, per quos non convaleant et in irritum devocentur, sed e contrario et plures intellegantur et singulae secundum sui naturam obtineant et monumentorum observatione non indigeant. 3a. Cum enim a veteribus super hac re variatum est, aliis multas aliis unam eas definientibus, nobis causa placuit humanior, ut et multae intellegantur et omnes validae, et hi qui liberalitates accipiunt sciant veros non falsos suos esse donatores.

4. Si quis autem talem receperit[xxx] donationem, in qua stipulatus fuerit annuam cuidam praestare quantitatem tantae summae, quae non excedit legitimum donationis modum, variabatur, utrum eum ex particulari donatione multas fecisse donationes existimandum est et eas actis non indigere, an ex totius stipulationis fundamento et fonte eius, ex quo annuae donationes profluxerunt, et unam esse eam donationem putandam et procul dubio monumentorum observatione vallandam. 4a. Quod veteres quidem sat abundeque variaverunt, nos autem certa divisione concludimus, ut, si huiusmodi quidem fuerit donatio, ut intra vitam personarum stetur vel dantis vel accipientis, multae intellegantur donationes et liberae monumentorum observatione. incertus etenim fortunae exitus hoc nobis suggessit, ut possibile sit unius anni tantummodo vel brevioris vel etiam amplioris temporis metas supervivere vel donatorem vel eum qui donationem accepit, et ex hoc inveniri totam summam donationis non excedere legitimam quantitatem. 4b. Sin autem etiam heredum ex utraque parte fuerit mentio, vel[xxxi] adiciatur tempus vitae vel donatoris vel qui donationem accipiet, tunc, quasi perpetuata donatione et continuatione eius magnam et opulentiorem eam efficiente, et una intellegatur et quasi densioribus donationibus cumulata excedere legitimum modum et omnimodo acta reposcere et aliter minime convalere.

Recitata septimo in novo consistorio palatii Iustiniani. D. III k. Nov. Decio vc. cons.

[35] Idem A. Iuliano pp. pr. Si quis argentum donaverit certumque pondus nominaverit, non autem vasa vel generaliter vel specialiter

[xxx] fecerit
[xxxi] vel non

separation cannot usefully be effected and the owner of the larger share does not choose to pay the value (of the smaller share), then he who controls the smaller share will be permitted to tender its price and claim the entirety for himself.

3. Moreover, if anyone bestows many bounties at various times on the same person, each of which does not exceed the legal amount, but if added and heaped together in the aforesaid manner they seem excessive and of greater (than legal) amount, it would seem improper to add them together and (in this way) find ways whereby they are void and are diverted into invalidity. On the contrary, they should be understood as multiple (gifts), with each treated according to its nature and not requiring observance of registration. 3a. Since the opinion of the ancients (the jurists) differed on this matter, with some considering them many gifts and some one, We thought it the more humane course that they be interpreted as many and all be valid, and that those who receive bounties know that their donors are real, not sham.

4. Moreover, if anyone made a gift whereby he promised by stipulation to pay someone an annual amount of a sum that did not exceed the legal limit of a gift, it was doubted whether on the basis of (each) particular gift he should be considered to have made many gifts, (thus) not requiring registration, or (instead) on the basis of the entire stipulation and from its source, out of which the annual gifts flowed, this should be considered one gift and (hence) undoubtedly to be protected by requiring registration. 4a. Because the ancients varied quite widely, We have settled on a clear distinction: if the gift is of such a kind that it is limited by the lifetime of the donor or recipient, they are interpreted as many donations, free from the requirement of registration. For the uncertainty of fate suggests to Us the possibility that the giver or recipient may survive only a year, or a shorter or longer time, and for this reason the total sum of the donation does not exceed the legal limit. 4b. But if there is also mention of heirs on either side, or if the lifetime of the donor or the recipient is not added, then it is, as it were, a perpetual gift, the continuation of which makes it great and richer, and it should be interpreted as one (gift) that is amassed, as it were, from recurrent gifts; it (therefore) exceeds the legal limit and in any case requires registration and is otherwise invalid.

Recited at the seventh (milestone) in the New Consistory of Justinian's Palace. Given October 30, in the consulship of the vir clarissimus Decius (529).

[35][188] The same Augustus to Julian, Praetorian Prefect. pr. If someone makes a gift of silver and names a specified weight, but does not name vessels either expresserit, necessitatem ei imponi omnimodo praefatum pondus argenti dare, sive in vasis quibus voluerit, non tamen peioribus aestimatione massae, sive in ipsa aestimatione, quae pro massa rudi in illis locis frequentata est. 1. Si vero reditum certum ex possessionibus donaverit, non tamen nomina possessionum edixerit, necesse habere de sua substantia fundos tradere tantum reditum inferre valentes, quantum in donatione posuerit, in talibus tamen agris, qui nec omnibus quos habet in possessione anteponuntur nec deteriores omnibus sunt, sed status mediocris inveniuntur. 2. Similique modo, si quis certum numerum servorum donaverit, non tamen et is nominatim servos inscripserit, et hic mediocris figurae servos tradere et neque tales, quos non habere magis quam habere prodest, nec iterum eos, qui omnem servorum familiam donatoris antecellunt: sed et hic mediocritas spectetur. 3. Sin autem donator neque argentum neque servos habens vel non tantum quantum donavit fecerit eorum donationem, aestimationem in his celebrari pro eo quod deest, ita tamen, ut argenti quidem secundum quod praediximus aestimatio detur, in servis autem non amplius nec minus quindecim solidis quantitas pro singulis reddetur, in reditibus autem in quindecim annos aestimationem praestet. 3a. Sed in his omnibus, si quidem intra legitimam summam donatio fiat, nulla monumenta requirantur: sin autem amplioris summae, tunc ad acta publica decurratur, ita ut in his, quae amplioris sunt aestimationis, secundum nostram legem non totum, sed solum superfluum evanescat.

[188] Combine with C. 8.55.10.

4. Sed et si quis universitatis faciat donationem, sive bessis sive dimidiae partis suae substantiae sive tertiae sive quartae sive quantaecumque vel etiam totius, si non de inofficiosis donationibus ratio ad hoc reclamaverit, coartari donatorem legis nostrae auctoritate tantum quantum donavit praestare: observatione et hic monumentorum secundum quod iam sanximus omnimodo requirenda.

5. Sed si quidem in omnibus supra dictis casibus usus fructus fuerit a donatore retentus, et traditionem iure intellegi fieri. 5a. Sin autem hoc minime donator expresserit, si quidem stipulatio donationi inserta sit, ex eius auctoritate traditionem compelli fieri. 5b. Sin vero et hoc praetermissum sit et usum fructum minime detinuerit, nihilo minus ex lege nostra necessitatem ei imponi etiam tradere hoc quod donare existimavit, ut non ex hoc inutilis sit donatio, quod res non traditae sunt, nec confirmetur ex traditione donatio, sed liberalitatem plenam et secundum legem nostram perfectissimam constitutam necessarius traditionis effectus sequatur, et necessitatem habeat donator omnimodo res vel partem substantiae quam generally or specifically, it will be necessary for him in any case to give the aforesaid weight of silver either in the form of such vessels as he wishes, with an appraised value not below that of bullion, or through the appraised amount itself according to the market value of crude bullion in that area. 1. But if he gives as a gift a specified income from his possessions but does not specify the names of the possessions, it will be necessary for him to deliver, out of his property, farms sufficient to bring as much return as he specified in the gift – but they consist not in farms that are better than all (others) he possesses, nor worse than all, but (in farms) of average condition. 2. Similarly, if someone gives a fixed number of slaves, but he does not also indicate the slaves by name, here, too, he hands over slaves of medium condition, not ones that it would be better not to have than to have, nor those surpassing the entire household of slaves of the donor; but here, too, average condition shall be looked for. 3. But if the donor who has neither the silver nor the slaves, or not as much as he gives, makes a donation of them, an appraisal is made for what is lacking, but in the following way: an appraisal of silver is given as above; in the case of slaves, an amount of not more or less than 15 solidi for each; in the case of income (from property), he provides a value appraised over fifteen years. 3a. But in all these cases, if indeed the gift is within the legal amount, they need no registration; but if (they are) of a higher amount, then there shall be resort to public records, provided that for those having a higher appraisal (that are not registered), in accord with Our law[189] they are not invalid entirely, but only the excess.

4. But also if anyone makes a donation from his entire property, either of two-thirds or of half of his estate, or of a third or a quarter, or of any proportion or even of all of it, if the rule against undutiful gifts does not cry out against it (i.e., its validity), the donor is constrained by the authority of Our law to proffer as much as he gave, provided, however, that registration is executed as We have now comprehensively ordained.

5. But if, in all the aforesaid cases, the usufruct is retained by the donor, a handover (of the gift) is understood as occurring by (operation of) law. 5a. Further, if the donor does not declare this, but a stipulation is attached to the gift, on its authority a handover may be enforced. 5b. But if this too was omitted and he did not reserve the usufruct, nonetheless under Our law he is obliged also to hand over what he intended to give, so that the gift not be ineffective because the property was not delivered. A gift shall not be corroborated by delivery; rather, delivery shall be the necessary consequence of a gift that is complete and made in accordance with Our law, and the donor is required in any case to hand over the property, either the part of it that he nominaverit vel totam substantiam tradere. 5c. Cum enim in arbitrio cuiuscumque sit hoc facere quod instituit, oportet eum vel minime ad hoc prosilire vel, cum ad hoc venire properavit, non quibusdam excogitatis artibus suum propositum defraudare tantamque indevotionem quibusdam quasi legitimis velamentis protegere.

[189] Law 34.1 above.

5d. Tantoque magis haec firma esse, si piis actibus vel religiosis personis donatio deputata sit (monumentorum observatione in his modis secundum quod specialiter a nobis in huiusmodi casibus praedictum est observanda), ne in praefatis causis ex quibusdam machinationibus non solum indevotus, sed etiam impius donator intellegatur poenasque non solum legitimas, sed etiam caelestes expectet.

5e. Resque donatas in omnibus supra dictis casibus non solum eos, dum supersunt, sed etiam eorum successores reddere compelli, non tantum his, in quos donatio facta est, sed etiam eorum heredibus.

D. xv k. April. Constantinopoli Lampadio et Oreste vv. cc. conss.

[36] Idem A. Iohanni pp. pr. Si quis pro redemptione captivorum pecunias dederit sive per cautionem dare promiserit cuiuscumque quantitatis, cognoscat se neque repetitionem habere neque exactionem cautionis posse declinare, utpote gestis sicut in donationibus non subsecutis super insinuatione eiusdem quantitatis: eo videlicet, qui pecunias accepit vel prima vice vel post cautionem, necessitatem habente piissimam administrationem adimplere, nulla ei molestia vel inquietudine inferenda vel ab eo qui pecunias praebuit vel ab aliis ex legum auctoritate permissis hoc requirere, sed tantummodo sacramentum praestare, quod re vera omnem quantitatem sine dolo vel aliqua deminutione ad redemptionem dederit captivorum.

1. Simili etiam modo gestorum absolvimus ordinatione donationes rerum mobilium vel sese moventium, quas viri gloriosissimi magistri militum fortissimis praestant militibus tam ex sua substantia quam ex spoliis hostium, sive in ipsa bellorum occupatione sive in quibuscumque locis degere noscuntur.

2. Eandem liberalitatem nostrae legis indulgemus etiam his, quorum incendio vel ruina domus corruptae sunt, quibusdam forte pecunias cuiuscumque quantitatis praebentibus vel cautionem conficientibus, ut et ipsi nec repetitionem timeant, verum etiam exactionem pecuniarum confessioni insertarum facere possint, licet non gesta fuerint subsecuta: nulla eis licentia danda pecunias ad alias causas nisi ad refectionem domorum erogare. quod si aliqua dubitatio orta fuerit, utrum tota quantitas an pars eius in aedificiis expensa est, hoc domini domus sacramento dirimetur.

has named or the whole. 5c. For since it lies in an individual's discretion to do what he undertook, he should either not jump to this (i.e., not make a donative promise) or, when he hastened to get to it, not resort to elaborate trickeries so as to circumvent his own undertaking and hide his want of principles behind some quasi-legal veils.

5d. Much more is a gift binding if the gift is allocated for pious acts or religious persons – in this connection the requirement of registration, specially ordered by Us for such instances,[190] must be observed – so that in these cases the donor, through some deceptions, be known not merely as undutiful but as irreligious, and (hence) await not merely legal but also heavenly punishments.

5e. In all the aforementioned cases, not only those (donors) while they live, but also their successors, are obliged to deliver the donated property not only to those to whom the gift was made, but also to their heirs.

Given March 18, at Constantinople, in the consulship of the viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestes (530).

[36] The same Augustus to John, Praetorian Prefect. pr. If someone gives money to ransom captives or through a written promise (cautio) promises to give it, he should know that, no matter the amount, he has no claim for recovery, nor can he refuse payment of the written promise by arguing that, as with gifts, registration did not ensue regarding a declaration of this same amount. Obviously the person who receives the money either in the first place or after the written promise has an obligation to fulfill this most pious task, without annoyance or disturbance either by the person offering the money or by third parties who are allowed by authority of law to investigate this; he shall only provide his oath that in fact he gave the entire amount to ransom the captives, without deceit or any loss.

1. Similarly, We dispense with the requirement of registration for gifts of movable and self-moving property that the viri gloriosi Masters of Soldiers present to their bravest soldiers either from their own property or from enemy spoils, whether in direct conduct of wars or in whatever place they are known to live.

2. We bestow the same bounty of Our law also on those whose homes are destroyed by fire or collapse, if, say, some persons pay money of any amount or execute a written promise, in order that they (the donees) not fear a suit for recovery, but also can lay claim to money stated in the acknowledgment even if registration did not follow. But no license shall be accorded them to expend the money for any other purpose except rebuilding their homes. But if any question arises whether the entire amount or (only) a part of it was spent on buildings, it shall be resolved by an oath of the house's owner.

[190] C. 1.2.19.

3. Ceteris etiam donationibus, quae gestis intervenientibus minime sunt insinuatae, sine aliqua distinctione quingentos usque ad solidos valituris. hoc etenim tantummodo ad augendas huiusmodi donationes addendum esse ex praesenti lege decernimus: anteriore tempore nostra lege praecedente moderando, qua usque trecentos solidos factae donationes et sine insinuatione firmitatem obtinere iussae sunt.

D. XV k. Nov. Constantinopoli post consulatum Lampadii et Orestis vv. cc.

[37] Idem A. Iohanni pp. Verba superflua, quae in donationibus poni solebant, id est sestertii nummi unius assium quattuor, penitus esse reicienda censemus. quid enim verbis opus est, quae rerum effectus nullus sequitur? sancimus itaque nullo modo eorum mentionem vel in imperialibus donationibus vel in aliis omnibus de cetero fieri, sed et si quisquam per verbositatem aliquid tale inscripserit sive remiserit, nulla differentia sit.

LIIII De Donationibus Quae sub Modo vel Condicione vel ex Certo Tempore Conficiuntur

[1] Impp. Valerianus et Gallienus AA. Gamicae. pr. Si doceas, ut adfirmas, nepti tuae ea lege a te esse donatum, ut certa tibi alimenta praeberet, vindicationem etiam hoc casu utilem eo, quod legi illa obtemperare noluerit, impetrare potes, id est actionem, qua dominium pristinum restituatur tibi. 1. Nam condictio quidem hoc casu (id est in personam actio) iure procedit: verum vindicationem quoque divi principes in hoc casu dandam esse sanxerunt.

PP. VI k. Dec. Tusco et Basso conss.

[2] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. Aurelio Zenoni. Si praediorum proprietatem dono dedisti ita, ut post mortem eius qui accepit ad te rediret, donatio valet, cum etiam ad tempus certum vel incertum ea fieri potest, lege scilicet quae ei imposita est conservanda.

PP. V id. Mart. Maximo II et Aquilino conss.

[3] Idem AA. Iuliae Marcellae. pr. Quotiens donatio ita conficitur, ut post tempus id quod donatum est alii restituatur, veteris iuris auctoritate

3. Other gifts as well, if not at all declared in intervening records, shall without distinction be valid up to 500 solidi. We direct that this rule shall be adopted through the present law only for the future, in order to increase such gifts; the time preceding shall be governed by Our earlier law,[191] whereby gifts up to 300 solidi were ordered to have validity even without declaration.

Given October 18, at Constantinope, in the post-consulate of the viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestes (531).

[37] The same Augustus to John, Praetorian Prefect. Empty words customarily placed in gifts, i.e., (that the gift is given for a consideration) of a one sesterius coin or of four asses, We feel should be entirely discarded. For what need is there for words that have no material effect? Therefore We ordain that no allusion to them be made either in Imperial gifts or in all others in the future; but if someone verbosely inserts some such or fails to do so, there shall be no difference (in legal outcome).

Fifty-Fourth Title Gifts Made Subject to a Duty, under a Condition, or for a Definite Time

[1] Emperors Valerian and Gallienus Augusti to Gamica. pr. If you show, as you allege, that you made a gift to your granddaughter on condition that she provide specified maintenance to you, in this case you can obtain an analogous suit on ownership (vindicatio utilis) on the ground that she refuses to comply with the condition, i.e., an action whereby your former ownership (of the gift) is restored. 1. Indeed, in this case a claim for restitution (condictio), i.e., an action in personam, is (also) legally available; but deified emperors ordered that a suit on ownership also be given in this case.

Posted November 26, in the consulship of Tuscus and Bassus (258).

[2][192] Emperors Diocletian and Maximian Augusti to Aurelius Zeno. If you made a gift of the ownership of land subject to the limitation that it revert to you upon the recipient's death, the gift is valid, since one can be made up to a definite or indefinite time limit, with the annexed limitation, of course, being enforced.

Posted March 10, in the consulship of Maximus, for the second time, and Aquilinus (286).

[3][193] The same Augusti to Julia Marcella. pr. Whenever a gift is made subject to a duty that after a time the property given be turned over to a third party, on [191] Law 34 pr. above.

[192] = Frag. Vat. 283, with the opposite outcome.
[193] = Frag. Vat. 286.

rescriptum est, si is in quem liberalitatis compendium conferebatur stipulatus non sit, placiti fide non impleta, ei qui liberalitatis auctor fuit vel heredibus eius condicticiae actionis persecutionem competere. 1. Sed cum postea benigna iuris interpretatione divi principes ei qui stipulatus non sit utilem actionem iuxta donatoris voluntatem competere admiserint, actio, quae sorori tuae, si in rebus humanis ageret, competebat, tibi accommodabitur.

PP. Sirmi XI k. Oct. ipsis IIII et III AA. conss.

[4] Idem AA. Perfecta donatio condiciones postea non capit. quare si pater tuus donatione facta quasdam post aliquantum temporis fecisse condiciones videtur, officere hoc nepotibus eius fratris tui filiis minime posse non dubium est.

D. k. Oct. Tiberiano et Dione conss.

[5] Idem AA. et CC. Dexippo. Si quid mater filiae suae in potestate patris constitutae sub hac condicione, si fuerit intra biennium emancipata, donavit, licet hoc matris voluntate sui iuris effecta non tenuit, tamen prius marito defuncto sui iuris quocumque modo effecta ad similitudinem legati ita relicti rem donatam firmiter habere vel vindicare potest.

S. id. Dec. Nicomediae CC. conss.

LV De Revocandis Donationibus

[1] Imp. Philippus A. Agilio Cosmiano. pr. Etsi perfectis donationibus in possessionem inductus libertus quantolibet tempore ea quae sibi donata sunt pleno iure ut dominus possederit, tamen, si ingratus sit, omnis donatio mutata patronorum voluntate revocanda sit. 1. Quod observabitur et circa ea, quae libertorum nomine, pecunia tamen patronorum et beneficio comparata sunt. 2. Nam qui obsequiis suis liberalitatem patronorum provocaverunt, non sunt digni, qui eam retineant, cum coeperint obsequia neglegere, cum magis in eos collata liberalitas ad obsequium inclinare debet quam ad insolentiam erigere. 3. Hoc tamen ius stabit intra ipsos tantum, qui liberalitatem dederunt. ceterum neque filii eorum neque successores ad hoc beneficium pertinebunt: neque the authority of ancient law a rescript was given that if the beneficiary of this bounty (to whom the property would revert) had not exacted a stipulation and the agreement was not honored, the (original) giver of the bounty or his heirs had a right of action for restitution (condictio). 1. But since, by generous subsequent legal interpretation, deified emperors allowed a person who had not exacted a stipulation to have an analogous action (against the donee) in accord with the donor's intent, you will be granted the right of action that your sister had, were she (still) living.

Posted at Sirmium, September 21, in the consulship of the Augusti themselves, Consuls for the fourth and third times, respectively (290).

[4] The same Augusti. A completed gift does not admit of subsequent conditions. So if your father, after making a gift, is deemed to have imposed certain conditions some time later, it is not doubtful that this can hardly prejudice his grandsons, the sons of your brother.

Given October 1, in the consulship of Tiberianus and Dio (291).

[5] The same Augusti and the Caesars to Dexippus. If a daughter was in her father's power and her mother gave her a gift on condition that she be emancipated within two years, then although she did not hold this (gift) in accord with her mother's intent when she became sui iuris (through her father's death and not by emancipation), nevertheless since the (donor's) husband died before (the time limit) and she became sui iuris in some manner, she can securely hold or claim the property given, as with a legacy left in this manner.[194]

Written December 13, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

Fifty-Fifth Title Revocation of Gifts

[1][195] Emperor PHILIP Augustus to Agilius Cosmianus. pr. Although a freedman was placed in possession of a completed gift and for a period of time he possesses what was given him as its owner with full right, still, if he is ungrateful, the entire gift may be revoked if his patrons change their minds. 1. This rule will apply also for things acquired in the name of freedmen but with the money and through the kindness of their patrons. 2. For those who through their services (obsequia) elicit the generosity of patrons are not worthy to retain it when they begin to ignore their services, since the generosity that was extended to them ought to incline them more to respect than to insolence. 3. But this right (of revocation) will be confined to those who extended the bounty. Neither their children nor

[194] See C. 6.25.3.
[195] = Frag. Vat. 272 (which has the recipient's nomen).

enim fas est ullo modo inquietari donationes, quas is qui donaverat in diem vitae suae non retractavit.

D. xv k. Iul. Aemiliano et Aquilino conss.

[2] Imp. Probus A. Felici. Si apud provinciae praesidem aviam filiae tuae quasi paenitentia ductam subtracta instrumenta donationum igni exussisse constiterit, vereri te non oportet, ne id, quod iure vires acceperat, ex post facto possit in dubium revocari.

PP. III non. Mai. Sirmi Probo A. et Paulino conss.

[3] Imppp. Carus Carinus et Numerianus AAA. Ianuario et Felici. Possessionem, quam in vos emancipatos per donationem mater contulit, ex paenitentia sola alienare non potuit.

PP. II id. Ian. Carino II et Numeriano AA. conss.

[4] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. et CC. Proculae. Confiteri in fraudem te alterius donasse professionem inhonestam continere intellegas. itaque si donationem perfecisti, eam revocare non potes ex memorata adlegatione sub obtentu paenitentiae.

PP. k. April. Heracliae AA. conss.

[5] Idem AA. et CC. Epagatho. Si donationem rite fecisti, hanc auctoritate rescripti nostri rescindi non oportet.

S. v k. Mai. Heracliae AA. conss.

[6] Idem AA. et CC. Herenniae. Velles nec ne filio tuo praedia itemque mancipia donare, fuit initio tibi liberum. desine itaque postulare, ut donatio quam perfeceras revocetur sub praetextu mariti ac liberorum absentiae, cum huius firmitas ipsorum praesentia non indigeret.

S. v k. Oct. Viminacii CC. conss.

[7] Impp. Constantius et Constans AA. ad Philippum pp. pr. His solis matribus, quae non in secundi matrimonii foedus nupserint, sed unius tantum matrimonii sunt, revocandarum donationum quas in filios fecerint ita decernimus facultatem, si eos ingratos circa se esse ostenderint. 1. Quidquid igitur is qui a matre impietatis arguitur ex titulo their successors are eligible for this benefit; for it is not decent (fas) that gifts be disturbed in any way if the donor did not retract them during his lifetime.

Given June 17, in the consulship of Aemilianus and Aquilinus (249).

[2] Emperor PROBUS Augustus to Felix. If before the provincial governor it emerges that the grandmother of your daughter was moved by regret to secretly seize the gift instruments and burn them, you need not fear that an act having full force at law (the gift) can be put in doubt by a something done thereafter.

Posted May 5, at Sirmium, in the consulship of Probus Augustus and Paulinus (277).

[3] Emperors CARUS, CARINUS, and NUMERIAN Augusti to Januarius and Felix. A possession that your mother gave you after your emancipation she cannot alienate on the mere ground that she regrets (the gift).

Posted January 12, in the consulship of Carinus, for the second time, and Numerian, Augusti (284).

[4] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti and the Caesars to Procula. An admission that you gave a gift in order to defraud a third party contains, you understand, an acknowledgment of dishonesty. So, if you completed the gift, upon the ground stated you cannot revoke it on the pretext of regretting it.

Posted April 1, at Heraclea, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[5] The same Augusti and Caesars to Epagathus. If you made a gift in proper form, this must not be rescinded through the authority of Our rescript.

Written April 27, at Heraclea, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[6] The same Augusti and Caesars to Herennia. You were free, at the start, to give land and slaves to your son as you wish. So cease demanding the rescission of your completed gift under the pretense that your husband and children were absent, since its validity would not require their presence.

Written September 27, at Viminacium, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[7][196] Emperors CONSTANTIUS and CONSTANS Augusti to Philip, Praetorian Prefect. pr. Only to those mothers who have not entered on marriage twice, but remain in just one marriage, do We grant the power of revoking gifts made to children if they show themselves ungrateful to them (their mothers). 1. So if his mother charges him with want of devotion (impietas), he is compelled to donationis tenet eo die, quo controversiae qualecumque principium iussu iudicantis datur, matri cogatur reddere. 2. Ceterum quae ante adhuc matre pacifica iure perfecta sunt et ante inchoatum coeptumque iurgium vendita donata mutata in dotem data ceterisque causis legitime alienata, minime revocamus. 3. Actionem vero matris ita personalem esse volumus, ut vindicationis tantum habeat effectum nec in heredem detur nec tribuatur heredi. 4. De ceteris autem, quae portentuosae vilitatis abiectaeque pudicitiae sunt, satis etiam tacite cautum putamus. quis est enim, qui his aliquid arbitretur tribuendum esse, cum etiam illis, quae iure, secundas tamen contraxerunt nuptias, nihil ex his privilegiis tributum esse vellemus?

[196] = C.Th. 8.13.1; combine with C.Th. 3.13.1, 8.13.2.

D. XII k. Oct. Limenio et Catullino conss.

[8] Idem AA. ad Orfitum pu. Si umquam libertis patronus filios non habens bona omnia vel partem aliquam facultatum fuerit donatione largitus et postea susceperit liberos, totum quidquid largitus fuerit revertatur in eiusdem donatoris arbitrio ac dicione mansurum.

D. V k. April. Arbitione et Lolliano conss.

[9] Impp. Theodosius et Valentinianus AA. ad senatum. Donationes circa filium filiamve, nepotem neptemve, pronepotem proneptemve emancipatos celebratas pater seu avus vel proavus revocare non poterit nisi edoctis manifestissimis causis, quibus eam personam in quam collata donatio est contra ipsam venire pietatem et ex causis quae legibus continentur fuisse constabit ingratam.

D. VIII id. Nov. Ravennae Theodosio XII et Valentiniano II AA. conss.

[10] Imp. Iustinianus A. Iuliano pp. pr. Generaliter sancimus omnes donationes lege confectas firmas illibatasque manere, si non donationis acceptor ingratus circa donatorem inveniatur, ita ut iniurias atroces in eum effundat vel manus impias inferat vel iacturae molem ex insidiis suis ingerat, quae non levem sensum substantiae donatoris imponit, vel vitae periculum aliquid ei intulerit vel quasdam conventiones sive in scriptis donationi impositas sive sine scriptis habitas, quas donationis acceptor spopondit, minime implere voluerit. 1. Ex his enim tantummodo causis, si fuerint in iudicio dilucidis argumentis cognitionaliter return to her whatever part he holds under title of a gift on the day when such a suit is set in motion on a judge's order. 2. But whatever part (of the gift) was legally complete while his mother was still amicable, and was sold, donated, exchanged, given in dowry, or otherwise legally alienated before the suit began, We do not revoke. 3. But We wish the mother's action to be in personam, such that it has only the effect of an ownership claim (vindicatio), and it shall not be given against his heir nor transmitted to her heir. 4. And We think this quite sufficiently provides, by implication, for women of monstrous stinginess or debased virtue. For is there anyone who would think they should get anything, when We wish none of these privileges bestowed on those who contract a second marriage, although (they do so) legally?

Given September 20, in the consulship of Limenius and Catullinus (349).

[8][197] The same Augusti to Orfitus, City Prefect. If a patron without children bestows as a gift all his goods or some portion of his resources on freedmen, and he subsequently has children, all he has given shall revert (to the patron), to remain in his control and power.

Given March 28, in the consulship of Arbitio and Lollianus (355).

[9][198] Emperors Theodosius and Valentinian Augusti to the Senate. Gifts made to an emancipated son or daughter, grandson or granddaughter, or great-grandson or great-granddaughter, cannot be revoked by a father, grandfather, or great-grandfather unless very clear reasons are advanced showing that the gift's recipient was guilty of a lack of devotion (pietas) and ungrateful for reasons set forth in statutes.

Given November 6, at Ravenna, in the consulship of Theodosius, for the twelfth time, and Valentinian, for the second time, Augusti (426).

[10][199] Emperor Justinian Augustus to Julian, Praetorian Prefect. pr. We ordain generally that all gifts legally made remain valid and unimpaired if the gift's recipient is not found to be ungrateful to the donor, such that he heaps atrocious insults on him, or raises impious hands against him, or by treacherous conduct inflicts considerable loss that does not weigh lightly on the donor's property or that endangers his life, or the gift's recipient does not want to comply with some agreements either attached in the instrument of gift or unwritten but he has formally promised. 1. For these reasons only, if they are proven in court upon trial and with unambiguous proofs, We allow the gifts

[197] = C.Th. 8.13.3. Constans had died in 350.

[198] = C.Th. 8.13.6; combine with C.Th. 4.1.1, 5.1.8; and C. 6.55.11, 6.56.5, 6.55.10, 6.60.3, 6.61.1, 8.55.9; and perhaps also C.Th. 1.4.3, and C. 1.14.2, 1.14.3, 1.19.7, 1.22.5. Seeck dates to November 7, 426.

[199] Combine with C. 8.53.35.

adprobatae, etiam donationes in eos factas everti concedimus, ne sit cuidam licentia et alienas res capere et fragilitatem ridere donatoris, et iterum ipsum donatorem suasque res perdere et praefatis malis ab ingrato donationis acceptore adfici. 2. Haec tamen usque ad primas personas tantummodo stare censemus, nulla licentia concedenda donatoris successoribus huiusmodi querimoniarum primordium instituere. etenim si ipse qui haec passus est tacuit, silentium eius maneat semper et non a posteritate eius suscitari concedatur vel adversus ipsum qui ingratus esse dicitur vel adversus eius successionem.

D. XV k. April. Constantinopoli Lampadio et Oreste vv. cc. conss.

LVI De Mortis Causa Donationibus

[1] Imp. Alexander A. Daphenae. Si donationi contineatur, ut altero defuncto ad alterum portio eorum quae donabantur pertineret, existente condicione, si mortis causa donatio perficiebatur, fideicommissi actio competit.

PP. IIII k. Oct. Maximo II et Aeliano conss.

[2] Imp. Gordianus A. Zoilo. pr. Intestata mortua quondam nuru tua neptis tua, quae ex ea filio tuo quaesita est, quandoque potest ad eius venire successionem. 1. Nec tamen ea post mortem filii tui, ex quo quaesierat filiam, alii nuptui se collocando dotem dans prohibebatur quam vellet condicionem eidem doti dicere. 2. Sed si mortis causa donationem in fratrem suum conferens in casum mortis suae eam dotem eundem fratrem suum stipulari passa est, cum divi Severi constitutione etiam in mortis causa donationibus, si de cetero patrimonio quantum Falcidia iubet heres non habet, provisum sit, is qui nurui tuae heres extiterit eius constitutionis beneficium non prohibebitur postulare.

PP. X k. Febr. Gordiano A. et Aviola conss.

[3] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. et CC. Heredi. Nec fratris sui mortis causa recte factam donationem sorori rescindere licet.

S. III k. Ian. Sirmi AA. conss.

made to them to be rescinded, so that no one have license to take another's property and laugh at the donor's weakness, and the donor himself both loses his property and is afflicted with the aforesaid evils by the gift's ungrateful recipient. 2. Nevertheless, We order that these rules apply only to the original parties; no permission is granted to the donor's successors to launch such complaints. For if the person who suffered these things was silent, his silence shall remain permanent and unable to be taken up by his posterity either against the allegedly ungrateful person or his successors.

Given March 18, at Constantinople, in the consulship of the viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestes (530).

Fifty-Sixth Title Gifts in Contemplation of Death[200]

[1][201] Emperor ALEXANDER Augustus to Daphena. If a gift (to two persons) has a limit that if one dies, his portion of the donated property go to the other, an action on trust (fideicommissum) lies if the gift in contemplation of death (donatio mortis causa) was completed and the condition is fulfilled.

Posted September 28, in the consulship of Maximus, for the second time, and Aelianus (223).

[2] Emperor GORDIAN Augustus to Zoilus. pr. If your former daughter-in-law died intestate, your granddaughter, born to your daughter-in-law and son, can at some point succeed her. 1. Nonetheless, after the death of your son from whom she had a daughter, in contracting a second marriage and giving a dowry she is not prohibited from imposing on this dowry the condition she wanted. 2. But if (at that time), with the intent of giving her brother a gift in contemplation of her death, she allowed said brother to exact a stipulation for this dowry, then since in the constitution of the deified Severus provision is made also for gifts in contemplation of death if, out of the remaining estate, the heir does not have the amount the lex Falcidia orders, your daughter-in-law's heir is not prevented from invoking the benefit of this constitution.

Posted January 23, in the consulship of Gordian Augustus and Aviola (239).

[3] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti and the Caesars to Heres.[202] A sister is not allowed to rescind her brother's legally executed gift made in contemplation of death.

Written December 30, at Sirmium, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[200] See D. 39.6. A gift mortis causa is given by a donor who anticipates dying before the donee.
[201] Combine with C. 4.48.3.
[202] Or possibly "to the heir."

[4] Imp. Iustinianus A. Iohanni pp. Cum de mortis causa donatione dubitabatur et alii quidem inter ultimas voluntates eam posuerunt et legatis adgregandam esse censuerunt, alii autem inter donationes quae inter vivos consistunt eam posuerunt, dubietate eorum explosa sancimus omnes mortis causa donationes, sive iuxta mortem facientis fuerint celebratae sive longiore cogitatione mortis subsecutae sunt, actis minime indigere neque expectare publicarum personarum praesentiam et ea quae super huiusmodi monumentis solent adhiberi. sed ita res procedat, ut, si quinque testibus praesentibus vel in scriptis vel sine litterarum suppositione aliquis voluerit mortis causa donationem facere, et sine monumentorum accessione res gesta maneat firmitate vallata et nullam calumniam accipiat neque propter hoc, quod gesta ei non accesserunt, inefficax esse atque inutilis videatur et omnes effectus sortiatur, quos ultimae habent liberalitates, nec ex quacumque parte absimiles esse intellegantur.

D. k. Sept. Constantinopoli Lampadio et Oreste vv. cc. conss.

LVII De Infirmandis Poenis Caelibatus et Orbitatis et Decimariis Sublatis

[1] Imp. Constantinus A. ad populum. pr. Qui iure veteri caelibes habebantur, imminentibus legum terroribus liberentur atque ita vivant, ac si numero maritorum matrimonii foedere fulcirentur, sitque omnibus aequa condicio capessendi quod quisque mereatur. nec vero quisquam orbus habeatur: proposita huic nomini damna non noceant. 1. Quam rem et circa feminas aestimamus earumque cervicibus imposita iuris imperia velut quaedam iuga solvimus promiscue omnibus.

PP. k. April. Romae Constantino A. VI et Constantino C. conss.

[2] Impp. Honorius et Theodosius AA. Isidoro pu. Inter virum et uxorem rationem cessare ex lege Papia decimarum et, quamvis non interveniant liberi, ex suis quoque eos solidum capere testamentis, nisi forte lex

[4] Emperor Justinian Augustus to John, Praetorian Prefect. Since there was doubt (among the jurists) about a gift in contemplation of death, some classing it among his (the decedent's) last wishes and considering it as a legacy, while others classified it among gifts between living persons (inter vivos), We settle their doubt and ordain that all gifts in contemplation of death, whether they are executed just before the donor's death or are undertaken with a more distant anticipation of death, do not require registration and do not demand the presence of public officials and those things customarily observed for such documents. But let the matter go as follows: if, in the presence of five witnesses and either in writing or without the support of writing, someone wishes to make a gift in contemplation of death, without resort to (registered) documents the act shall be fully valid and not be subject to attack. Nor shall it be considered ineffective and useless because unaccompanied by records, and it shall have the same effects that final bequests have, nor shall they be considered different in any respect.

Given September 1, at Constantinople, in the consulship of the viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestes (530).

Fifty-Seventh Title Annulling the Penalties for Celibacy and Childlessness, and Abolishing the 10 Percent Rule

[1][203] Emperor Constantine Augustus to the people. pr. Those men considered celibates (caelibes) under the ancient law shall be free from the threatening terrors of the law and shall live as if numbered among married men, supported by the bond of matrimony, and all men shall be on equal footing in taking what each deserves. Nor shall anyone be considered childless (orbus), and the losses imposed on this term shall not harm him. 1. We think the same concerning women; We release all of them indiscriminately from the legal compulsions imposed like yokes upon their necks.

Posted April 1, at Rome, in the consulship of Constantinus Augustus, for the sixth time, and the Caesar Constantine (320).

[2][204] Emperors Honorius and Theodosius Augusti to Isidore, City Prefect. We ordain abolition of the rule of 10 percent (limiting the right of testate succession) between husband and wife under the lex Papia. Although they have no children, they take in full from their (respective) wills unless, possibly, some [203] = C.Th. 8.16.1; combine with C. 6.9.9 and the constitutions cited there. Constantine refers to the lex Julia et Papia Poppaea (actually two statutes, 18 BCE/9 CE). Seeck dates to January 31, 320.

[204] = C.Th. 8.17.2; combine with C. 1.19.6, 8.58.1.

alia minuerit derelicta, decernimus. tantum igitur post haec maritus vel uxor sibi invicem derelinquant, quantum superstes amor exegerit.

D. prid. non. Sept. Varane cons.

LVIII De Iure Liberorum

[1] Impp. Honorius et Theodosius AA. Isidoro pu. Nemo post haec a nobis ius liberorum petat, quod simul hac lege omnibus concedimus.

D. prid. non. Sept. Varane cons.

[2] Imp. Iustinianus A. Menae pp. Illam iniuriam, quae contra matrem defuncti vel defunctae praeteritis fiebat temporibus, pro iustitiae ratione amputamus et legitima iura, quae ex Tertulliano senatus consulto ei praestantur, omnimodo eam habere sancimus, licet tres liberos ingenua vel libertina quattuor minime pepererit.

D. k. Iun. Constantinopoli ipso A. II cons.

other law lessens what is left. Therefore husband or wife may in future leave as much to each other as their present love demands.

Given September 4, in the consulship of Varanes (410).

Fifty-Eighth Title The Right Resulting from Children (Ius Liberorum)

[1][205] Emperors Honorius and Theodosius Augusti to Isidorus, City Prefect. Let no one hereafter seek from Us the right resulting from (having) children; through this law We grant it simultaneously to everyone.

Given September 4, in the consulship of Varanes (410).

[2][206] Emperor Justinian Augustus to Menas, Praetorian Prefect. In accord with Justice, We curtail the wrong committed in the past against the mother of a deceased male or female child and ordain that she has the absolute legal rights granted to her by the SC Tertullianum even though she has not borne at least three children if she is a free-born woman, or four if a freedwoman.

Given June 1, at Constantinople, in the consulship of the Augustus himself, for the second time (528).

[205] = C.Th. 8.17.3; combine with C. 1.19.6, 8.57.2.
[206] Combine with C. 6.55.12, 6.56.7. The SC Tertullianum, passed under Hadrian (117–138 CE), gave certain women a right of intestate succession to their children

Liber Nonus

I Qui Accusare Non Possunt

[1] Impp. Severus et Antoninus AA. Silvano. Prius est, ut criminibus, quae tibi ut graviora ab adversario tuo obiciuntur, caedis atque vulnerum respondeas, et tunc ex eventu causae iudex aestimabit, an tibi permittendum sit eundem accusare, tametsi prior inscriptionem deposuisti.

PP. v id. Mart. Tertullo et Clemente conss.

[2] Imp. Antoninus A. Ingenuo. pr. Si cautiones, quibus Secundinus solutam Ingenuo pecuniam probare se dicit, tutores vel curatores tui suspectas ut falsas habent, proprio nomine, cum non liceat alieno, non prohibentur in crimine falsi subscribere. 1. Nec enim facile tutores vel curatores, qui officio et periculo suo res pupillorum vel adulescentium administrant, sententia notantur, nisi evidens eorum calumnia iudicanti apparebit.

PP. xii k. Oct. Antonino A. et Geta conss.

[3] Imp. Alexander A. Rufo. pr. Qui crimen publicum instituere properant, non aliter ad hoc admittantur, nisi prius inscriptionum pagina processerit et fideiussor de exercenda lite adhibitus fuerit. 1. Sin vero post satisdationem praesentes non fuerint, edicto admonendi sunt, ut

Ninth Book

edited by Thomas A. J. McGinn

First Title Those Who Cannot Bring Criminal Prosecutions

[1] Emperors SEVERUS and ANTONINUS Augusti to Silvanus. You shall first respond to those more serious charges, namely, murder and the infliction of wounds, leveled at you by your opponent, and according to the outcome of the case, the judge will then evaluate whether you should be permitted to launch a criminal prosecution against him, even if you were the first to apply to do so.

Posted March 11, in the consulship of Tertullus and Clemens (195).

[2] Emperor ANTONINUS Augustus to Ingenuus. pr. If your tutores or curatores suspect that the documents of guaranty (cautiones), which Secundinus claims as proof that a sum of money was paid to Ingenuus (i.e., to you), were in fact forged, they are not prevented from filing a charge of forgery in their own names, since it cannot be done in someone else's (i.e., yours). 1. For tutores and curatores, who manage the property of their minor and adult wards as a duty and at their own risk, are not easily marked with legal infamy (sententia notantur), unless the malice behind their prosecution will be obvious to the judge.

Posted September 20, in the consulship of Antoninus Augustus and Geta (205).[1]

[3] Emperor ALEXANDER Augustus to Rufus. pr. Those hastening to launch a public criminal prosecution[2] shall not be permitted to go forward unless they first complete the accusation document (inscriptionum pagina) and furnish a surety (to guarantee) that they will carry through with the trial. 1. But if, however, after giving a surety, they do not show up, they are to be admonished

[1] So Krüger, but Geta's first consulship was in 205, his second in 208, while Caracalla's second was in 205, his third in 208.

[2] Crimen publicum. The category of such offenses long outlived the quaestio procedure laid down by various criminal law statutes. In what follows, the adjective "public" is used to characterize them even after this development.

veniant ad causam agendam, et si non adfuerint, non solum extra ordinem puniendi sunt, sed etiam sumptus, quos in eam rem et circa ipsum iter ad litem vocati fecerunt, dependere cogentur.

PP. III non. Febr. Alexandro A. cons.

[4] Idem A. Dionysio. Uxor tua, si consobrini sui necem vindicandam existimat, adeat praesidem provinciae.

PP. XVI k. Iul. Alexandro A. cons.

[5] Idem A. Marcellinae. Senatus consulto permissum non est mulieri legis Corneliae crimine reum facere, nisi res ad eam pertineat. cum igitur filii tui tutores et curatores habent, ipsi deliberare debent, an instrumenta, ex quibus adversarium filiorum tuorum obtinuisse dicis, falsa esse accusare debeant.

PP. k. Oct. Alexandro A. cons.

[6] Idem A. Probo. Accusationem, a qua discedere te professus es, repetere non debes.

PP. V non. Mai. Iuliano et Crispino conss.

[7] Idem A. Felici. Si ea quae crimen intendit cognitionem moratur, certa perferendae accusationi tempora iudex competens praestet, intra quae si agere supersederit, renuntiasse causae intellegitur.

PP. XV k. Sept. Agricola et Clemente conss.

[8] Imp. Gordianus A. Gaio militi. Non prohibentur milites actiones quae iudicii publici instar obtineant intendere, si suas suorumque iniurias exsequantur. ideoque consobrini tui necem defendere tibi permittimus.

PP. XVII k. Aug. Pio et Pontiano conss.

[9] Idem A. Severiano. Non ignorat competens iudex eam, quae ultionem et mortem filii persequi adlegat, non temere ad accusationem esse admittendam, nisi prius matrem se esse probaverit.

PP. VI non. Mart. Gordiano A. et Aviola conss.

in an edict to come and plead their case, and if they fail to comply, they are not only to be punished through extraordinary procedure (extra ordinem), but they will also be compelled to pay the expenses of the defendants in connection with the trial and the travel to court.

Posted February 3, in the consulship of Alexander Augustus (222).

[4] The same Augustus to Dionysius. If your wife believes the murder of her cousin should be avenged (at law), let her approach the provincial governor.

Posted June 16, in the consulship of Alexander Augustus (222).

[5] The same Augustus to Marcellina. By a decree of the Senate, a woman is not permitted to launch a criminal prosecution of an offense under the lex Cornelia,[3] unless the matter directly concerns her. Therefore, since your children have tutores and curatores, they themselves ought to consider whether they should prosecute on the ground that the documents with which you claim your children's opponent won his case were forged.

Posted October 1, in the consulship of Alexander Augustus (222).

[6] The same Augustus to Probus. You ought not to resume (as complainant) the criminal prosecution which you said you abandoned.

Posted May 3, in the consulship of Julian and Crispinus (224).

[7] The same Augustus to Felix. If she who initiates a criminal charge delays the trial, the appropriate judge shall set a fixed time within which to conclude the prosecution. If she fails to litigate within these limits, she is understood to have abandoned the case.

Posted August 18, in the consulship of Agricola and Clemens (230).

[8] Emperor G*ORDIAN* Augustus to Gaius, a soldier. Soldiers are not forbidden from initiating legal procedures (actiones) that are tantamount to a public criminal prosecution (iudicium publicum), if they pursue offenses committed against themselves or their own family members. For this reason We allow you to prosecute the murder of your cousin.

Posted July 16, in the consulship of Pius and Pontianus (238).

[9] The same Augustus to Severianus. The appropriate judge is not unaware that she who claims to be avenging at law the death of her son should not be allowed to proceed over-hastily to the prosecution, before she has shown that she is the mother (of the decedent).

Posted March 2, in the consulship of Gordian Augustus and Aviola (239).

[3] The Senatus consultum Libonianum dates to 61 CE, the lex Cornelia de falsis to 81 BCE.

[10] Idem A. Mucatraulo militi. Si crimen ad tuam tuorumque iniuriam pertinens exsequeris, sollemnibus te inscriptionibus adstringe, ut praesidem provinciae habere iudicem possis.
PP. k. Aug. Gordiano A. et Aviola conss.

[11] Imp. Philippus A. et Philippus C. Saturnino. Data opera partis adversae res vestras incendio exarsas esse adseverantes crimen Corneliae de sicariis exsequi potestis.
PP. XIII k. Iul. Peregrino et Aemiliano conss.

[12] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. et CC. Corinthiae. pr. De crimine quod publicorum fuerit iudiciorum mulieri accusare non permittitur nisi certis ex causis, id est si suam suorumque iniuriam persequatur, secundum antiquitus statuta tantum de quibus specialiter eis concessum est non exacta subscriptione. 1. Unde aditus praeses provinciae in primis examinabit, an tale sit crimen, cuius accusationem mulier subire non prohibetur.
S. V k. Mai. AA. conss.

[13] Idem AA. et CC. ad Asclepium. Si magnum et capitale crimen ac non leve frater contra fratrem suum instituerit, non solum audiendus non est, sed etiam exilii poena plectendus.
D. X k. Febr. CC. conss.

[14] Idem AA. et CC. Aeliae. Propter insidias, quas tuae vitae paratas contendis, accusationem apud praesidem provinciae contra filium tuum, si pietas et ratio naturalis animi tui non revocat intentionem, instituere potes.
S. XVI k. Mart. CC. conss.

[15] Idem AA. et CC. Lupioni. Criminis accusationem instituere cum periculo calumniae, si tibi existimatio integra est, minime prohiberis.

[10] The same Augustus to Mucatraulus, a soldier. If you are prosecuting a charge concerning an offense committed against you and members of your family, submit to the formal procedure of application, so that you can have the governor of the province as a judge.

Posted August 1, in the consulship of Gordian Augustus and Aviola (239).

[11] Emperor PHILIP Augustus and PHILIP Caesar to Saturninus. You claim that your property was intentionally set on fire by your opponents. You can therefore bring a charge under the lex Cornelia on murderers.[4]

Posted June 19, in the consulship of Peregrinus and Aemilianus (244).

[12] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti and the Caesars to Corinthia. pr. A woman is not allowed to bring criminal prosecutions on a charge relevant to the public criminal courts (iudicia publica), except in certain situations, such as when they pursue offenses to themselves or to family members, in accordance with ancient enactments that only permit so much specifically to them, without requiring a formal (i.e., written) application. 1. Therefore, once approached, the governor of the province will determine first of all whether the charge is of such a kind as women are not forbidden to bring.

Written April 27, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[13] The same Augusti and Caesars to Asclepius. If a brother launches against his brother a serious capital charge (entailing loss of life or status; capitale crimen), and not a minor one, he shall not only not be heard but shall also be punished with a sentence of capital exile (exilium).

Given January 23, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[14] The same Augusti and Caesars to Aelia. You can launch a criminal prosecution against your son before the provincial governor, if dutiful affection (pietas) and your natural inclinations (ratio naturalis animi tui) do not inspire a change of heart, because of his plotting against your life that you allege.

Written February 14, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[15] The same Augusti and Caesars to Lupio. If you enjoy a proper reputation (existimatio integra, i.e., no legal infamy), you are not at all prevented from launching a criminal accusation, although you bear the risk of (being charged with) malicious prosecution.

[4] The lex Cornelia de sicariis et veneficis dates to 81 BCE.

S. III k. Mart. CC. conss.

[16] Idem AA. et CC. Callitycho. Cum rationibus iuris congruit desiderium tuum postulantis accusationem tertiam ei qui duos reos delatos habet non permitti contra legis praescripta, nisi suas suorumque iniurias quis persequatur.

S. XII k. Dec. Nicomediae CC. conss.

[17] Pars sententiae eorundem AA. et CC. datae V id. Ian. Diocletiano VII et Maximiano VI AA. conss. Iniquum et longe a beatitudine saeculi nostri esse credidimus, ut Thaumastus accusandi eius haberet facultatem, in cuius domo eum, licet ingenuum, a prima tamen aetate fuisse constabit.[i] quare ex nomine Thaumasti mentio super conflictu criminali Symmacho conquiescat. si quam sane civilem petitionem idem Thaumastus sibi competere confidit, iudicio praesidali poterit experiri.

[18] Idem AA. et CC. Iuliano. Si sororem tuam leviorum commissorum ream facis, accusationem non prohiberis exercere in iudicio praesidali, quo temerarie commissa congrua ultione plectantur.

D. III k. Mart. Diocletiano VIIII et Maximiano VIII AA. conss.

[19] Imppp. Valentinianus Valens et Gratianus AAA. Laodicio praesidi Sardiniae. Neganda est accusatis, qui non suas suorumque iniurias exsequantur, licentia criminandi in pari vel minori crimine, priusquam se crimine quo premuntur exuerint, secundum scita veterum iuris conditorum, ita tamen, ut et ipsi inscriptiones contra eos etiam pendente accusatione deponere possint.

D. prid. id. Aug. Carnunti Gratiano A. III et Equitio conss.

[i] constat

Written February 28, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[16] The same Augusti and Caesars to Callitychus. Your judicial request accords with generally accepted principles of law (rationes iuris). A man who has already initiated prosecution of two defendants is not permitted to proceed to a third in defiance of the statutory rules (legis praescripta), unless he is pursuing offenses committed against himself or family members.

Written November 20, at Nicomedia, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[17] A part of the pronouncement (sententia) of the same Augusti and Caesars, given January 9 in the consulship of Diocletian, for the seventh time, and Maximian, for the sixth time, Augusti (299). We have been of the opinion that it is unfair and far from the (ideal) happiness of Our reign that Thaumastus enjoys the opportunity to bring a criminal prosecution against the man in whose house, it is clear, he, although free-born, nevertheless lived from an early age. For this reason, reference to a criminal prosecution of Symmachus under the name of Thaumastus shall cease. If, to be sure, the same Thaumastus believes that he has any grounds for a private lawsuit, he will be able to bring this before the (provincial) governor's court.

[18] The same Augusti and Caesars to Julian. If you accuse your sister of relatively minor offenses, you are not prevented from initiating a prosecution in the governor's court, so that inappropriate acts are punished with the proper penalty.

Given February 28, in the consulship of the Augusti, for the ninth and eighth time, respectively (304).

[19][5] Emperors VALENTINIAN, VALENS, and GRATIAN Augusti to Laodicius, Governor of Sardinia. The possibility of bringing (against their accusers) charges for an equal or lesser offense shall be denied to those under accusation, unless they are prosecuting offenses committed against themselves or against their family members, until they have cleared themselves of the charges facing them, according to the rules of the ancient lawfinders (scita veterum iuris conditorum). In any case, even before the conclusion of their trial, they too can formally apply to prosecute their accusers.

Given August 12, at Carnuntum, in the consulship of Gratian Augustus, for the third time, and Equitius (374).

[5] = (In part, with changes) C.Th. 9.1.12. Seeck dates to August 12, 375.

[20] Impp. Arcadius et Honorius AA. Eutychiano pp. Si quis ex familiaribus vel ex servis cuiuslibet domus cuiuscumque criminis delator atque accusator emerserit, eius existimationem caput atque fortunas petiturus, cuius familiaritati vel dominio inhaeserit, ante exhibitionem testium, ante examinationem iudicii, in ipsa expositione criminum atque accusationis exordio ultore gladio feriatur. vocem enim funestam intercidi oportet potius quam audiri. maiestatis autem crimen excipimus.

D. VI id. Nov. Constantinopoli Caesario et Attico conss.

[21] Impp. Honorius et Theodosius AA. consulibus praetoribus tribunis plebi senatui salutem dicunt. Liberti si accusatores manumissorum heredumve esse praesumpserint, eodem quo servi supplicio tenebuntur, luituri poenas ante prohibitae delationis exordium.

D. VIII id. Aug. Ravennae Asclepiodoto et Mariniano conss.

II De Accusationibus et Inscriptionibus

[1] Imp. Alexander A. Marciano. Eos qui terminos effoderunt extraordinaria animadversione coerceri debere praeses provinciae non ignorabit.

PP. III k. Aug. Alexandro A. cons.

[2] Idem A. Syro. pr. Si cuiusdam criminis obnoxius servus postulatur, dominus eum defendere potest et in iudicio sistere accusatoris intentionibus responsurum. 1. Post probationes autem criminis non ipse dominus, sed servus pro suo delicto condemnationem sustineat. ideo enim servum suum domino defendere permissum est, ut pro eo possit competentes adlegationes offerre.

PP. XI k. Dec. Alexandro A. cons.

[20][6] Emperors ARCADIUS and HONORIUS Augusti to Eutychianus, Praetorian Prefect. If any slave or member of a household from any house at all should come forth as an informer (delator) or prosecutor in any sort of criminal law matter, poised (thereby) to threaten the reputation (existimatio), standing, or property of the person to whose household or ownership he has been attached, before the production of witnesses, before the trial begins, in the very declaration of the charges and the beginning of the prosecution he shall be struck down by an avenging sword. For a destructive voice ought to be silenced rather than heard. We make an exception, however, for the charge of treason (maiestas).

Given November 8, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Caesarius and Atticus (397).

[21][7] Emperors HONORIUS and THEODOSIUS Augusti send greetings to the Consuls, Praetors, Tribunes of the Plebs, and Senate. If freed-persons presume to act as the prosecutors of their manumitters or the heirs of the latter, they will be punished in the same manner as slaves, and will pay a penalty before the start of the forbidden accusation.

Given August 6, at Ravenna, in the consulship of Asclepiodotus and Marinianus (423).

Second Title Criminal Accusations and Their Registration[8]

[1] Emperor ALEXANDER Augustus to Marcianus. The governor of the province will not be unaware that those who have dug up boundary markers ought to be punished at his discretion (extraordinaria animadversio).

Posted July 30, in the consulship of Alexander Augustus (222).

[2][9] The same Augustus to Syrus. pr. If a slave is accused of a certain crime, his master can defend him and have him appear in court to answer the allegations of the prosecutor. 1. After proof is offered of the offense, however, not the master, but the slave shall be condemned for his own wrongdoing. For on this account the master is allowed to defend his own slave, so that he can make appropriate assertions in his defense.

Posted November 21, in the consulship of Alexander Augustus (222).

[6] = C.Th. 9.6.3.
[7] = (with minor changes) C.Th. 4.10.2. Combine with C. 4.20.12 and the references given there.
[8] See D. 48.2.
[9] Combine with C. 3.42.2, 9.35.1.

[3] Idem A. Stephanidi. Reos capitalium criminum absentes etiam per procuratorem defendi leges publicorum iudiciorum permittunt.

PP. IIII non. Nov. Maximo II et Aeliano conss.

[4] Imp. Gordianus A. Archelao. Si accusatoribus absentibus et non per contumaciam adesse iudicio cessantibus ex una postulatione aditus praeses provinciae non causa cognita sententiam dixit, qua eum de quo querimoniam detulisti liberandum existimavit, criminatione etiam nunc perseverante, quae contumacia vel cessatione accusatorum non interveniente auferri non potuit, causa intentati criminis apud eundem vel successorem eius more iudiciorum tractabitur.

PP. non. Mart. Gordiano A. II et Pompeiano conss.

[5] Idem A. Paulino. Non ideo minus crimine seu atrociorum iniuriarum iudicio tenetur is qui in istam accusationem incidit, quod dicat alium se huius facti mandatorem habuisse. namque hoc casu praeter principalem reum mandatorem quoque ex sua persona conveniri posse ignotum non est.

PP. III id. Sept. Gordiano A. II et Pompeiano conss.

[6] Idem A. Avidiano. pr. Absentem capitali crimine accusari non posse, sed requirendum tantummodo adnotari solere, si desit, vetus ius est. 1. Et ideo cum absentem te et ignorantem, cui numquam ullum crimen denuntiatum esset, per iniuriam a praeside provinciae in metallum datum dicas, quo magis in praesenti te agente, ut adseveras, iam nunc fides veri possit illuminari, praefectos praetorio adire cura, qui, quidquid novo more et contra formam constitutionum gestum deprehenderint, pro sua iustitia reformabunt.

PP. IIII non. April. Arriano et Papo conss.

[3] The same Augustus to Stephanis. The laws on the public criminal courts (leges iudiciorum publicorum) allow defendants being tried on capital charges (entailing loss of life or status; capitalia crimina) to be defended in their absence even by a procurator.

Posted November 2, in the consulship of Maximus, for the second time, and Aelianus (223).

[4] Emperor G*ORDIAN* Augustus to Archelaus. (You allege that) while the prosecutors have been away and have ceased to participate in the trial without displaying contempt of court, the provincial governor, after being approached, on the basis of a single judicial request (postulatio) delivered his decision without hearing the case, to the effect that he thinks the defendant, against whom you brought the accusation, should be released. If this is so, since the trial is even now (to be regarded as) underway, because it could not be dismissed when the prosecutors are not guilty of contempt or wrongfully abandoning the accusation, the charge that has been brought will be heard by the same governor or by his successor according to standard judicial procedure.

Posted March 7, in the consulship of Gordian Augustus, for the second time, and Pompeianus (241).

[5] The same Augustus to Paulinus. Someone accused of relatively serious offenses is no less liable to a charge or a trial because he claims that another person put him up to such behavior. For it is not unknown that in this situation, apart from the main defendant, the instigator (mandator) can also be prosecuted under his or her name.

Posted September 11, in the consulship of Gordian Augustus, for the second time, and Pompeianus (241).

[6] The same Augustus to Avidianus. pr. It is an ancient principle of law (vetus ius) that a person cannot be prosecuted on a capital charge (entailing loss of life or status; capitale crimen) when absent, but is usually only noted, if not present, as someone to be sought. 1. And for this reason, since you claim that you were wrongly sentenced to the mines by the provincial governor in your absence, unknowingly, and when you had never been given notice of any charge, in order that at last now the truth of the matter, as you assert it, be brought out with you participating in the trial, take care to approach the Praetorian Prefects, who will recast in accord with their own sense of justice (iustitia) whatever they discover has been done contrary to established procedure and against the rules laid down by constitutions.

Posted April 2, in the consulship of Arrianus and Papus (243).

[7] Idem A. Proculo. Ea quidem, quae per officium praesidibus nuntiantur, et citra sollemnia accusationum posse perpendi incognitum non est. verum falsis nec ne notoriis insimulatus sit, perpenso iudicio dispici debet.

PP. VIII id. Ian. Peregrino et Aemiliano conss.

[8] Exemplum sacrarum litterarum Diocletiani et Maximiani AA. Si quis se iniuriam ab aliquo passum putaverit et querellam deferre voluerit, non ad stationarios decurrat, sed praesidalem adeat potestatem aut libellos offerens aut querellas suas apud acta deponens.

PP. sine die et consule.

[9] Idem AA. Honorato. pr. Qui de crimine publico in accusationem deductus est, ab alio super eodem crimine deferri non potest. 1. Si tamen ex eodem facto plurima crimina nascuntur et de uno crimine in accusationem fuerit deductus, de altero non prohibetur ab alio deferri. 2. Iudex autem super utroque crimine audientiam accommodabit: nec enim licebit ei separatim de uno crimine sententiam proferre, priusquam plenissima examinatio super altero quoque crimine fiet.

PP. XIIII k. Sept. Basso et Quintiano conss.

[10] Idem AA. Ursae. Qui explicandi negotii spem, cuius finis in iudicis potestate ac motu situs est, pollicetur, non minus ob illicitam sponsionem crimen contrahit, quam qui ad huiusmodi promissionis commercium contra disciplinam publicam adspirat.

PP. III k. Nov. ipsis IIII et III AA. conss.

[11] Idem AA. have Crispine carissime nobis. Si quis homicidii crimen existimat persequendum, secundum iuris publici formam debebit eum, qui in primordio homicidii postulaverat reum neque probaverat ideoque reus absolutus est, praevaricationis arguere: id enim salubriter statutis principum parentum nostrorum iurisque forma praescriptum est: vel si id non putaverit agendum, ad sequens crimen, id est pastorum latronumve, descendere eum coges atque id exsequi iudicio tuo, cum,

[7] The same Augustus to Proculus. It is not unheard of that those matters, certainly, which are reported to provincial governors by their staff, can be investigated without the formalities of a criminal prosecution. But whether the accusation made in the reports is true or false ought to be determined in the course of a trial.

Posted January 6, in the consulship of Peregrinus and Aemilianus (244).

[8] Copy of an imperial letter from Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti. If someone believes himself to be the victim of a crime and wishes to make a criminal complaint against another, he or she shall not resort to the military police (stationarii), but shall approach the provincial governor, either by delivering a petition or by having his or her complaint registered in the public records.

Posted without day or year.

[9][10] The same Augusti to Honoratus. pr. Someone who has been accused of a crime cannot be prosecuted by someone else for the same offense. 1. If, however several charges arise from the same set of facts and someone has been prosecuted on one of them, he or she can be charged with another of these offenses by a third party. 2. The (same) judge, moreover, will grant a hearing on both charges. For it will not be permitted for him to deliver a decision separately about one charge, until a very full investigation of the other has taken place as well.

Posted August 19, in the consulship of Bassus and Quintianus (289).

[10] The same Augusti to Ursa. Whoever makes a promise assuring the outcome of a case which lies in the authority and discretion of a judge no less commits a crime on account of an unlawful stipulation, than the person who seeks, contrary to public policy (disciplina publica), an agreement of this kind.

Posted October 30, in the consulship of the Augusti, for the fourth and third time, respectively (290).

[11] The same Augusti: Greetings to Crispinus, most dear to us! If someone thinks a charge of homicide should be prosecuted (after a defendant has been acquitted), according to the rules of public criminal law (ius publicum) he or she ought to prove guilty of judicial collusion the person who originally accused the defendant of homicide and (then) failed to prove the case, so that the defendant was acquitted. For this is laid down in salutary fashion in the enactments (statuta) of prior emperors, our predecessors (parentes), and in the si quidem id ab incusato appareat esse commissum, ob ultionem publicam obnoxius legibus fiat.

[10] Combine C. 7.56.3.

D. VIII id. April. Hannibaliano et Asclepiodoto conss.

[12] Idem AA. et CC. Aurelio. Factum sponte se praecipitantis innocenti criminis periculum adferre non potest.

S. XIIII k. Iun. Sirmi AA. conss.

[13] Imppp. Gratianus Valentinianus et Theodosius AAA. Mariniano vicario Hispaniae. Si quis servos crediderit accusandos, non prius ad corporum tormenta veniatur, quam se vinculo subscriptionis adstrinxerit.

D. VI k. Iun. Patavi Merobaude iterum et Saturnino conss.

[14] Idem AAA. et Arcadius A. Cynegio pp. Singuli universique iudices cognoscant in publicis criminibus non oportere emendicatis suffragiis decretorum aut relationibus a publicis personis destinandis credere, sed rei veritatem requirere.

D. prid. k. Mai. Constantinopoli Arcadio A. et Bautone conss.

[15] Idem AAAA. Tatiano pp. Tunc convenit potentiores viros adesse iudiciis, cum eorum praesentiam in criminibus publicis per inscriptionem causa deposcat, licet in pecuniariis causis per procuratores lites sustineant.

D. XV k. Mart. Mediolani Valentiniano A. IIII et Neoterio conss.

rules of law (iuris forma). If perhaps he does not think he should do that, you will compel him to pursue the related offense, that is, the one committed by the shepherds and brigands, and to prosecute this in your court, since, if in fact this is seen to be the work of the accused, under the laws (leges) he shall become liable to punishment for a public crime.

Given April 6, in the consulship of Hannibalianus and Asclepiodotus (292).

[12] The same Augusti and the Caesars to Aurelius. The actions of someone voluntarily hurling her- or himself to death cannot prejudice a person innocent of a crime.

Written May 19,[11] at Sirmium, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[13][12] Emperors GRATIAN, VALENTINIAN, and THEODOSIUS Augusti to Marinianus, Vicar of Spain. If someone thinks slaves should be prosecuted for criminal offenses, their (judicial examination under) torture shall not proceed until he (the accuser) has bound himself through a formal (i.e., written) application for a trial.

Given May 27, at Padua, in the consulship of Merobaudes, for the second time, and Saturninus (383).

[14][13] Emperors GRATIAN, VALENTINIAN, THEODOSIUS, and ARCADIUS Augusti to Cynegius, Praetorian Prefect.[14] Judges both jointly and severally shall know that, regarding public criminal charges (publica crimina), they ought not to trust in testimonials elicited from town councils or in reports that must be forwarded by public officials, but that they themselves ought to inquire into the truth of the matter.

Given April 30, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Arcadius Augustus and Bauto (385).

[15][15] The same Augusti to Tatianus, Praetorian Prefect. It is established law that men of influence (potentiores viri) shall appear in court, when public criminal cases (publica crimina) require their presence, through a formal application, although in private law cases they manage their suits through procurators.

Given February 15, at Milan, in the consulship of Valentinian Augustus, for the fourth time, and Neoterius (390).

[11] The precise month is uncertain: Mommsen prefers December 19, 293.
[12] = (in part, with changes) C.Th. 9.1.14.
[13] = (in part, with changes) C.Th. 9.1.15.
[14] In fact, Gratian had died in 383.
[15] = (with changes) C.Th. 9.1.17.

[16] Impp. Arcadius et Honorius AA. Pasiphilo. pr. In causis criminalibus dignum est, ut inscriptiones proponantur, quae magnitudinem videlicet criminis tempusque designant, ut alterutram partem digna legum tenere possit auctoritas. 1. Quod statutum si fuerit forte contemptum, hi qui ex officio ingrediuntur secretarium quinque librarum auri condemnatione ferientur.

D. VIII k. Ian. Mediolani Olybrio et Probino conss.

[17] Impp. Honorius et Theodosius AA. consulibus praetoribus tribunis plebis senatui salutem dicunt. pr. Accusationibus ordinem iam dudum legibus institutum servari iubemus, ut, quicumque in discrimen capitis accersitur, non statim reus qui accusari potuit aestimetur, ne subiectam innocentiam faciamus. sed quisquis ille est qui crimen intendit, in iudicium veniat, nomen rei indicet, vinculum inscriptionis adripiat, custodiae similitudinem habita tamen dignitatis aestimatione patiatur nec impunitam fore noverit licentiam mentiendi, cum calumniantes ad vindictam poscat similitudo supplicii. 1. Nemo tamen sibi blandiatur obiectu cuiuslibet criminis de se in quaestione confessus, veniam sperans propter flagitia adiuncti, vel communione criminis consortium personae superioris optans, aut inimici supplicio in ipsa supremorum suorum sorte sociandus, aut eripi se posse confidens aut studio aut privilegio nominati, cum veteris iuris auctoritas de se confessos ne interrogari quidem de aliorum conscientia sinat. nemo igitur de proprio crimine confitentem super conscientia scrutetur aliena.

D. VIII id. Aug. Ravennae Asclepiodoto et Mariniano conss.

[16][16] Emperors Arcadius and Honorius Augusti to Pasiphilus. pr. In criminal cases it is appropriate that formal applications be made that set forth clearly the scope and chronology of the offense, so that an authoritative procedure worthy of the laws can hold both parties in check. 1. If what is laid down here happens to be disregarded, those staff members who participate in the proceedings (i.e., have access to the secretarium or judge's chamber) will be fined 5 pounds of gold.

Given December 25, at Milan, in the consulship of Olybrius and Probinus (395).

[17][17] Emperors Honorius and Theodosius Augusti send greetings to the Consuls, Praetors, Tribunes of the Plebs, and Senate. pr. We order that the rules for criminal prosecutions long ago set down in the laws shall be maintained. So whoever is summoned to respond to a charge entailing the loss of life or status (discrimen capitis) shall not immediately be reckoned as a defendant eligible for prosecution, so that We not prejudice his or her innocence. But whoever initiates a charge shall come into court, set forth the name of the defendant, make him- or herself responsible through a formal application, submit to detention in the same manner as the defendant – taking into consideration his or her rank (dignitas), however – and shall know that there shall be no scope for lying that goes without punishment, since a similar penalty summons for vengeful punishment those who prosecute maliciously.[18] 1. No one however shall flatter himself, having confessed his guilt regarding any sort of charge during judicial examination under torture, by hoping for pardon thanks to the wrongdoing of an accomplice, or by wishing to bind his fate to that of a higher-ranking person through a partnership in crime, or through punishment of a personal enemy (seeking) partnership in the very circumstances of his death, or by believing that he can be snatched from such a penalty through the intercession or privileged status of the person whom he named. For the authority of ancient law (veteris iuris auctoritas) does not permit those who have confessed their own guilt even to be questioned concerning the complicity of others. Therefore let no one who has confessed to the charge raised against him be heard concerning the complicity of others.

Given August 6, at Ravenna, in the consulship of Asclepiodotus and Marinianus (423).

[16] = (in part, with changes) C.Th. 2.1.8. Combine with C. 8.4.8, 9.37.1. Seeck dates to January 6, 395.

[17] = (in part, with minor changes) C.Th. 9.1.19. Combine with C. 4.20.12 and the constitutiones mentioned there.

[18] See C.Th. 9.46.10. This last sentence = C. 9.46.10.

III De Exhibendis vel Transmittendis Reis

[1] Impp. Valentinianus et Valens AA. Valentino consulari Piceni. Si miles in provincia repertus crimen publicum commiserit, eum rector provinciae sub custodia constituat atque ita vel causae meritum vel personae qualitatem ad magistrum militum referat.

D. XI k. Febr. Mediolani Valentiniano et Valente AA. conss.

[2] Imppp. Gratianus Valentinianus et Theodosius AAA. Eutropio pp. pr. Nullus in carcerem prius quam convincatur omnino vinciatur. 1. Ex longinquo si quis est acciendus, non prius insimulanti accommodetur adsensus, quam sollemni lege se vinxerit. 2. Eique qui deducendus erit ad disponendas res suas componendosque maestos penates spatium coram loci iudice aut etiam magistratibus sufficientium dierum, non minus tamen triginta tribuatur, nulla remanente apud eum qui ad exhibendum missus est copia nundinandi. 3. Qui posteaquam ad iudicem venerit, adhibita advocatione ius debebit explorare quaesitum ac tamdiu pari cum accusatore fortuna retineri, donec reppererit cognitio celebrata discrimen.

D. III k. Ian. Constantinopoli Gratiano V et Theodosio AA. conss.

[3] Imppp. Valentinianus Theodosius et Arcadius AAA. Drepanio proconsuli Africae. Neminem iudicio exhibendum esse praecipimus, nisi de cuius exhibitione iudex pronuntiaverit.

D. prid. non. Febr. Mediolani Valentiniano A. IIII et Neoterio conss.

IIII De Custodia Reorum

[1] Imp. Constantinus A. ad Florentium rationalem. pr. In quacumque causa reo exhibito, sive accusator existat sive eum publicae sollicitudinis cura produxerit, statim debet quaestio fieri, ut noxius puniatur,

Third Title Producing and Transporting Defendants[19]

[1][20] Emperors VALENTINIAN and VALENS Augusti to Valentinus, Consular Governor of Picenum. If a soldier serving in a province is discovered to have committed a public crime (crimen publicum), the governor shall place him in custody, and shall report the facts of the case and the rank of the person concerned to the Master of the Soldiers.

Given January 22, at Milan, in the consulship of Valentinian and Valens Augusti (365).

[2][21] Emperors GRATIAN, VALENTINIAN, and THEODOSIUS Augusti to Eutropius, Praetorian Prefect. pr. No one at all shall be placed in prison in chains before conviction. 1. If someone must be summoned over a great distance, the request of the accuser shall not be granted before he has made himself responsible through a formal application. 2. The person to be transported will be granted an adequate amount of time, not less than thirty days, however, in which to put his affairs in order and console the grief of his household (penates) under the oversight of the local judge or even town officials. The person sent to escort him to court shall have no opportunity of extorting him (to pay for more time). 3. When he subsequently comes before the judge, he ought to exercise, in the presence of legal counsel, the right to question his accuser, as well as to enjoy a status equal to the latter, until the trial in its course discloses a difference between the two.

Given December 30, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Gratian, for the fifth time, and Theodosius Augusti (380).

[3][22] Emperors VALENTINIAN, THEODOSIUS, and ARCADIUS Augusti to Drepanius, Proconsul of Africa. We instruct that no one shall be produced in court unless the judge has ordered his production.

Given February 4, at Milan, in the consulship of Valentinian Augustus, for the fourth time, and Neoterius (390).

Fourth Title Custody of Defendants[23]

[1][24] Emperor CONSTANTINE Augustus to Florentius, Comptroller (Rationalis). pr. In whatever case a defendant is produced in court, whether a private prosecutor or a public official has brought this about, the trial ought to begin at

[19] See D. 48.3.
[20] = (in part, with changes) C.Th. 9.2.2 (addressed to Valentinian).
[21] = (with changes) C.Th. 9.2.3.
[22] = C.Th. 9.2.4.
[23] See D. 48.3.
[24] = (with changes) C.Th. 9.3.1.

innocens absolvatur. 1. Quod si accusator aberit ad tempus aut sociorum praesentia necessaria videatur, id quidem debet quam celerrime procurari.

2. Interea vero exhibito non ferreas manicas et inhaerentes ossibus mitti oportet, sed prolixiores catenas, si criminis qualitas etiam catenarum acerbitatem postulaverit, ut et cruciatio desit et permaneat fida custodia. 3. Nec vero sedis intimae tenebras pati debebit inclusus, sed usurpata luce vegetari et, ubi nox geminaverit custodiam, vestibulis carcerum et salubribus locis recipi ac revertente iterum die ad primum solis ortum ilico ad publicum lumen educi, ne poenis carceris perimatur, quod innocentibus miserum, noxiis non satis severum esse dignoscitur.

4. Illud etiam observabitur, ut neque his qui stratorum funguntur officio neque ministris eorum liceat crudelitatem suam accusatoribus vendere et innocentes intra carcerum saepta leto dare aut subtractos audientiae longa tabe consumere. 5. Non enim existimationis tantum, sed etiam periculi metus iudici imminebit, si aliquem ultra debitum tempus inedia aut quocumque modo aliquis stratorum exhauserit, et non statim eum penes quem officium custodiae est atque eius ministros capitali poena subiecerit.

D. prid. k. Iul. Serdicae Constantino A. VI et Constantino C. conss.

[2] Idem A. ad Euagrium. pr. Si quis in ea culpa vel crimine fuerit deprehensus, quod dignum claustris carceris et custodiae squalore videtur, auditus apud acta, cum de admisso constiterit, poenam carceris sustineat atque ita postmodum eductus apud acta audiatur. 1. Ita enim quasi sub publico testimonio commemoratio admissi criminis fiet, ut iudicibus immodice saevientibus freni quidam ac temperies adhibita videatur.

D. III non. Febr. Heracleae Constantino A. VII et Constantio C. conss.

[3] Idem A. Acindyno pp. Quoniam unum carceris conclave permixtos secum criminosos includit, hac lege sancimus, ut, etiamsi poenae once, so that the guilty be punished and the innocent acquitted. 1. But if the prosecutor is away for a time, or the presence of accomplices seems necessary, this, at any rate, ought to be taken care of as quickly as possible.

2. Meanwhile, certainly, the defendant, once produced, ought not to be placed in iron fetters that fit close to the bone, but looser chains, if indeed the type of charge requires bitter resort to chains. The point is to avoid torment, while safeguarding custody. 3. Nor indeed ought he to suffer, while shut up, the darkness of a windowless room but be invigorated by resort to sunlight. And when night doubles the needs of detention, he ought to be brought to the prison entrance and placed in a healthy spot. When day returns, at sunrise, he ought to be immediately led back to the sunlight. The idea is that he not perish from the punishments in prison, which is regarded as pitiable for the innocent, but not sufficiently severe for the guilty.

4. The following practice too will be maintained. Those who perform the duties of prison-warden (stratores) and their servants shall not be permitted to practice cruelty after being bribed by the prosecutors, nor to deliver innocents to death in the confines of prisons, or to allow them to waste away from chronic disease after they are denied a hearing. 5. For not only a concern about damage to his reputation (existimatio, i.e., with legal infamy), but also personal risk, will loom over the judge if he does not immediately subject to the capital penalty (capitalis poena) the person in charge of the prison and his servants if one of the wardens has killed through starvation or by any means at all a prisoner detained longer than he ought to have been.

Given June 30, at Serdica, in the consulship of Constantine Augustus, for the sixth time, and Constantine Caesar (320).[25]

[2][26] The same Augustus to Evagrius. pr. If someone is shown to be guilty of a type of wrongful behavior or crime that is deemed worthy of confinement to a prison and the misery of detention, when he has been tried on the public record and guilt has been established, he shall take up his prison sentence in such a way that he shall be brought forth later and heard (again) upon the public record. 1. For in this way there will be a proclamation of the crime that has been committed, as though by a public deposition, so that there seems to be a certain check and restraint placed on the intemperate cruelty of judges.

Given February 3, at Heraclea, in the consulship of Constantine Augustus, for the seventh time, and Constantius Caesar (326).

[3][27] The same Augustus to Acindynus, Praetorian Prefect. A single secure unit within a prison contains criminals who mingle with each other. We lay down [25] The date is more likely to be December 31, 320: Seeck and Projet Volterra.

[26] = C.Th. 9.3.2.
[27] = C.Th. 9.3.3, correctly attributing the constitution to Constantius.

qualitas permixtione iungenda est, sexum tamen disparem diversa claustrorum habere tutamina iubeatur.

D. non. April. Acindyno et Proculo conss.

[4] Imppp. Valentinianus Valens et Gratianus AAA. ad Probum pp. pr. Ad commentariensem receptarum personarum custodia observatioque pertineat, nec putet hominem abiectum atque vilem obiciendum esse iudici, si reus modo aliquo fuerit elapsus. nam ipsum volumus eiusmodi poena consumi, cui obnoxius docebitur fuisse qui fugerit. 1. Si vero commentariensis necessitate aliqua procul ab officio egerit, adiutorem eius pari iubemus invigilare cura et eadem statuimus legis severitate constringi.

D. III k. Iul. Contionaci Gratiano A. II et Probo conss.

[5] Imppp. Gratianus Valentinianus et Theodosius AAA. Eutropio pp. pr. De his quos tenet carcer id aperta definitione sancimus, ut aut convictum velox poena subducat aut liberandum custodia diuturna non maceret. 1. Iubemus autem, ut intra tricesimum diem semper commentariensis ingesserit numerum personarum, varietatem delictorum, clausorum ordinem aetatemque vinctorum. officium viginti libras auri aerario nostro iubemus inferre, iudicem desidem ac resupina cervice tantum titulum gerentem extorrem impetrata fortuna decem libras auri multandum esse censemus.

D. III k. Ian. Constantinopoli Gratiano V et Theodosio AA. conss.

[6] Αὐτοκράτωρ Ἰουστινιανός Α. Μηνᾷ ἐπάρχῳ πραιτωρίων. pr. Οὐδένα ἐμβάλλεσθαι ἐν φυλακῇ δίχα προστάξεως τῶν κατὰ τὴν εὐδαίμονα ταύτην πόλιν ἢ ἐν ἐπαρχίᾳ ἐνδόξων ἢ περιβλέπτων ἢ λαμπροτάτων ἀρχόντων with this law that, although persons subjected to the same type of sentence shall be housed together, nevertheless different confinement facilities shall be ordained for men and women.

Given April 5, in the consulship of Acindynus and Proculus (340).

[4][28] Emperors VALENTINIAN, VALENS, and GRATIAN Augusti to Probus, Praetorian Prefect. pr. The detention and care of persons taken into custody shall be the responsibility of the head warden (commentariensis). He shall not think that a lowly and base person is to be brought up on charges before a judge if a defendant has somehow escaped. For We wish that he himself be liable to a penalty of this kind, if it is shown that he was responsible for the escapee. 1. If, indeed, the head warden is for some urgent reason away from his responsibilities, We order that his assistant shall exercise oversight with equal care, and lay down that the latter shall be constrained by the same statutory rigor.

Given June 29, at Contionacum, in the consulship of Gratian Augustus, for the second time, and Probus (371).

[5][29] Emperors GRATIAN, VALENTINIAN, and THEODOSIUS Augusti to Eutropius, Praetorian Prefect. pr. We lay down through this clear provision (definitio), regarding those who are imprisoned, that swift punishment shall carry off the convicted and long-term detention shall not waste away the person who should be released. 1. We order moreover that every thirty days the head warden shall, as a regular practice, report (to the judge) the number of persons, the types of crimes they have committed, the rank of those confined, and the age of those bound. We command that (otherwise) the administrative staff shall pay a fine of 20 pounds of gold to Our Treasury and We instruct that the slacking, spineless judge, who is a judge only in name, shall be banished, and, after pleading to keep his estate, shall pay a fine of 10 pounds of gold.

Given December 30, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Gratian, for the fifth time, and Theodosius Augusti (380).

[6][30] Emperor JUSTINIAN Augustus to Menas, Praetorian Prefect. pr. We wish that no one be cast into custody without an order from a man holding the rank of illustris, spectabilis, or clarissimus as public officials in this prosperous

[28] = (with minor changes) C.Th. 9.3.5. Seeck dates to July 13, 371; Schmidt-Hofner, to June 29, 371. Blume: "The commentariensis … was … what we might call the clerk of the department of the court dealing with criminal cases, filing criminal complaints and keeping the records of all criminal cases. His office was one of the most important under the judges and he had process-servers, jailors, lictors and other ministerial officers under him." See C. 9.3.2.

[29] = (in part, with minor changes) C.Th. 9.3.6. Combine with C. 9.3.2.

[30] Pr.-1, 9 = (with changes) C. 1.4.22. §§2 and 6–8 are from Bas. 60.35.22; 3–5 from its scholia. Combine with C. 1.4.23, 9.5.2, 9.47.26. See also Rhopai 10.1, 11.5, 19.15.

ἢ τῶν ἐν ταῖς πόλεσιν ἐκδίκων βουλόμεθα. 1. Ἐπὶ δὲ τῶν ἐμβληθέντων ἢ ἐμβαλλομένων τοὺς θεοφιλεστάτους τῶν τόπων ἐπισκόπους μίαν ἑκάστης ἑβδομάδος ἡμέραν τὴν τετράδα ἢ τὴν παρασκευὴν τοὺς ἐν ταῖς φυλακαῖς διερευνᾶσθαι καὶ σὺν ἀκριβείᾳ μανθάνειν τὰς τῆς αὐτῶν κατοχῆς αἰτίας καὶ εἴτε οἰκέται τυγχάνοιεν ὄντες εἴτε ἐλεύθεροι, εἴτε ἐπὶ χρήμασιν εἴτε ἐπὶ ἄλλοις ἐγκλήμασιν εἴτε ἐπὶ φόνοις ἐμβεβλημένοι. 2. Καὶ εἰ μὲν δοῦλοί εἰσιν, εἴσω εἴκοσιν ἡμερῶν ἐκβάλλεσθαι αὐτοὺς ἢ σωφρονιζομένους ἢ τοῖς δεσπόταις παραδιδομένους. ἢ ἐὰν μὴ φαίνωνται οἱ δεσπόται, ἀπολύεσθαι αὐτούς. 3. Ὁ ἐν εἱρκτῇ βληθεὶς διὰ χρηματικὸν ἐλεύθερος ἀπολυέσθω παρέχων ἐγγύας· εἰ δὲ ἀπορεῖ ἐγγυῶν, τεμνέσθω εἴσω λ' ἡμερῶν τὸ κατ' αὐτὸν καὶ ἀπολυέσθω. ἐὰν δὲ πλείονος χρόνου τὸ πρᾶγμα δέηται, τότε ἐξωμοσίᾳ καταπιστευέσθω μέχρι πέρατος τῆς δίκης· εἰ δὲ μετὰ τὴν ἐξωμοσίαν ἀπολειφθῇ πρὸ περαιώσεως τοῦ ζητουμένου, ἐκπιπτέτω τῶν οἰκείων πραγμάτων. 4. Ἐὰν ἐλεύθερος ἐγκλήματι κατεχόμενος βληθῇ εἰς φυλακήν, ἐγγύας διδότω καὶ ἀπολυέσθω. εἰ δὲ ἀπορεῖ ἐγγυῶν, μεινάτω ἕως ἓξ μηνῶν μόνων ἐν τῇ φυλακῇ, ὧν ἐντὸς τεμνέσθω τὸ κατ' αὐτόν, εἰ μὴ ἄρα κεφαλικῶς ἐνάγεται. 5. Ὁ γὰρ τοιοῦτος οὐδὲ ἐγγύῃ καταπιστεύεται, ἐὰν μέντοιγε ὑπὸ τῶν δημοσιευόντων κατηγορηθῇ· ἀλλὰ ἐντὸς πάλιν τῶν ἓξ μηνῶν τὸ κατ' αὐτὸν ὀφείλει πέρας λαβεῖν. εἰ δὲ οὐχ ὑπὸ τῶν δημοσιευόντων, ἀλλ' ὑπὸ ἰδικοῦ κατηγόρου ἐνήχθη, τότε καταθαρρεῖται ἡ ἐγγύη. ἐὰν δὲ οὐκ εὐπορῇ δοῦναι ἐγγύας, φυλάττεται ἐπὶ ἕνα μόνον ἐνιαυτόν, οὗ ἐντὸς τὸ κατ' αὐτὸν χρὴ πάντως τέμνεσθαι. 6. Προλήψεως δὲ περὶ αὐτῶν γενομένης ὡς ὑπευθύνων, εἶναι αὐτοὺς ἐν τῇ φρουρᾷ, ἕως ὅτε περαιωθῇ ἡ δίκη. 7. Εἰ δὲ ἤδη ψῆφος γέγονε παρὰ τῶν ἐγκεκλεισμένων, ἐκβιβάζεσθαι αὐτήν, εἴτε σωματική ἐστιν εἴτε χρηματική, ἐχόντων ἐξουσίαν ἐπὶ χρηματικῇ ἐκστῆναι. 8. Ὑπομιμνησκόντων τῶν ἐπισκόπων τοὺς ἄρχοντας εἰδότας, ὡς ὅτι καὶ αὐτοὶ καὶ αἱ τάξεις αὐτῶν δέκα λίτρας παρέξουσιν. 9. Ἀδείας διδομένης τοῖς κατὰ καιρὸν θεοφιλεστάτοις ἐπισκόποις, εἴ τινα ῥᾳθυμίαν ἴδοιεν γινομένην παρὰ τῶν κατὰ καιρὸν city (Constantinople), and in the provinces, or from the community defenders (defensores) in the (other) cities. 1. Regarding those who have been imprisoned or who will be imprisoned, the most devout local bishops shall, on one day each week, either the fourth day or the sixth day, inquire of the guards and learn with precision what the reasons are for their confinement, whether they have been imprisoned because of an issue at private law, or on some other charge, such as murder, whether they happen to be slave or free. 2. And if they are slaves, within twenty days they shall be released, after being physically chastised or handed over to their masters (for physical punishment). But if their masters do not make an appearance, they shall be released from custody. 3. If a free person has been imprisoned in connection with a civil suit, once he has provided sureties he shall be released. If he has no sureties, his case shall be decided within thirty days and he shall be released. If the case requires more time, through no fault of the prisoner, then he shall be bound by a judicial guaranty founded on an oath until the conclusion of the case. If, having given the oath, he absconds before the conclusion of the case, his goods shall be confiscated. 4. If free persons are imprisoned on a criminal charge,[31] the case shall be heard immediately. If a free person charged with a (criminal) offense is imprisoned, he shall give sureties and be released. If he has no sureties, he shall remain in prison for a maximum of six months, within which his case shall be concluded, unless he is charged with a capital crime. 5. For such a defendant is not given over to sureties if, at any rate, he has been accused by public officials. Even so, again, the case ought to be concluded within six months. The public officials acting as prosecutors shall know that, if they accuse falsely, the same penalty shall be inflicted upon them.[32] But if he is prosecuted not by public officials, but by a private accuser, the surety shall be allowed. If he is not able to offer sureties, he shall be kept in custody for no more than a year, within which time his case must be completely concluded. 6. If, however, there is a presumption of guilt regarding the (defendants), they shall remain in custody until the case is decided. 7. If a sentence has already been delivered against prisoners, it shall be carried out, whether the penalty is corporal or monetary in nature. If it is monetary, it shall be permitted to them to make assignment of their property (and be released). 8.[33] Upon the admonition of the bishops, public officials shall not be unaware that they and their staffs will pay a fine of 10 pounds (of gold, if they violate these rules). 9.[34] Permission is granted to the most reverend bishops currently in office to report to Us any negligence that [31] The Basilika indicate that a charge of sedition is meant.

[32] This sentence derives from the Basilika. It is necessary for the sense of the passage and added by Paul Krüger, though only in a note; so also, "through no fault of the prisoner" in 3.

[33] See C. 1.4.22.2.

[34] = (in part) C. 1.4.22.2.

ἐνδοξοτάτων καὶ μεγαλοπρεπεστάτων καὶ λαμπροτάτων ἀρχόντων ἢ παρὰ τῶν πειθομένων αὐτοῖς τάξεων, ταύτην μηνύειν, ὡς ἂν προσήκουσα κατὰ τῶν ῥαθυμούντων ἐνεχθείη κίνησις.

D. xv k. Febr. Constantinopoli Decio cons.

V De Privatis Carceribus Inhibendis

[1] Imp. Zeno A. Basilio pp. pr. Iubemus nemini penitus licere per Alexandrinam splendidissimam civitatem vel Aegyptiacam dioecesin aut quibuslibet imperii nostri provinciis vel in agris suis aut ubicumque domi privati carceris exercere custodiam, viro spectabili pro tempore praefecto Augustali, et viris clarissimis omnium provinciarum rectoribus daturis operam semperque futuris in speculis, ut saepe dicta nefandissimorum hominum adrogantia modis omnibus opprimatur. 1. Nam post hanc saluberrimam constitutionem et vir spectabilis pro tempore Augustalis et quicumque provinciae moderator maiestatis crimen procul dubio incursurus est, qui cognito huiusmodi scelere laesam non vindicaverit maiestatem: primatibus insuper officiorum eiusdem criminis laqueis constringendis, qui, simulatque noverint memoratum interdictum facinus in quocumque loco committi, proprios iudices de opprimendo nefandissimo scelere non protinus curaverint instruendos. 2. Nam illud perspicuum est eos qui hoc criminum genus commiserint pro veterum etiam legum et constitutionum tenore tamquam ipsius maiestatis violatores ultimo subiugandos esse supplicio.

D. k. Iul. Constantinopoli Longino vc. cons.

[2] Αὐτοκράτωρ Ἰουστινιανὸς Α. Μηνᾷ ἐπάρχῳ πραιτωρίων. Ἰδιωτικὰς φυλακὰς πᾶσι τρόποις ἐν πόλεσιν ἢ ἐν κώμαις ἀπαγορεύομεν καθίστασθαι... Ἡ διάταξις κελεύει μὴ γίνεσθαι ἰδιωτικὰς φυλακάς· τοὺς δὲ τοῦτο πράττοντας ὑποκεῖσθαι καὶ ἐπιτιμίῳ καὶ διάγειν ἐν τῇ δημοσίᾳ φρουρᾷ τοσαύτας ἡμέρας, ὅσας δήποτ' ἂν γέγονεν ὁ ἐγκλεισθεὶς ἐν τῇ γενομένῃ παρ' αὐτῶν φυλακῇ, ὁποίας ἂν εἴησαν τύχης ἢ ἀξίας, ἐκπίπτειν δὲ καὶ τῆς δίκης τῆς ἁρμοζούσης αὐτοῖς κατὰ τῶν ἐγκλεισθέντων, προνοίᾳ τοῦ ἐπισκόπου καὶ they should observe on the part of the viri illustres, spectabiles, and clarissimi current officials or on the part of the administrative staffs that obey them, so that appropriate punishment may be inflicted upon the negligent.

Given January 18, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Decius (529).

Fifth Title Repression of Private Prisons

[1] Emperor ZENO Augustus to Basilius, Praetorian Prefect. pr. We order that no one at all shall be permitted to operate a private prison, in the most illustrious city of Alexandria, in the diocese of Egypt, or in any of the other provinces of Our Empire, whether on his own rural property or in his home, wherever it is located. The current vir spectabilis Imperial Prefect of Egypt and the viri clarissimi governors of all the provinces will, always being vigilant, see to it that the oft-mentioned arrogance of these unspeakable persons shall be in every way crushed. 1. For in the wake of this most salubrious constitution it is far from doubtful that any vir spectabilis who is currently an imperial official as well as any governor of a province will bring upon himself a charge of treason (maiestas) if he learns of such a wicked act and does not avenge the insult to the Emperor (maiestas). Moreover, the chiefs of staff shall be constrained by the meshes of the same charge, if, as soon as they learn that the offense just forbidden is being committed in any place at all, they do not immediately take care to inform the judges they serve about the need to suppress this most unspeakable wickedness. 2. For this much is clear, that those who commit this type of crime, shall, also in accordance with the sense of the ancient statutes (leges) and constitutions, be subjected to the death penalty (ultimum supplicium), on the ground that they have committed treason (maiestas).

Given July 1, at Constantinople, in the consulship of the vir clarissimus Longinus (486).

[2][35] Emperor JUSTINIAN Augustus to Menas, Praetorian Prefect. We entirely forbid the establishment of private jails in cities or villages ... This imperial law (diataxis) forbids the establishment of private prisons. Those who violate it shall be liable to the punishment (also)[36] of being incarcerated in the public prison as many days – no matter how many – as a prisoner spent in their prisons, whatever their rank or status may be. They shall also lose the suits that lie for them against their prisoners. This (their punishment) shall be the concern

[35] = (in part, with changes) C. 1.4.23, supplemented from Bas. 60.55.2. Combine with C. 1.4.22, 9.4.6, 9.47.26.

[36] It is possible these penalties were inflicted in addition to the death penalty given in C. 9.5.1.

τοῦ ἄρχοντος. εἰ δὲ ῥᾳθυμήσει ὁ ἄρχων, ὑφίσταται κίνδυνον καὶ περὶ τὴν οὐσίαν καὶ περὶ τὴν σωτηρίαν.

D. XV k. Febr. Constantinopoli Decio cons.

VI Si Reus vel Accusator Mortuus Fuerit

[1] Τὸ τῆς λειποταξίας ἔγκλημα λύεται τῇ τελευτῇ τοῦ λειποτακτήσαντος στρατιώτου.

[2] Imp. Antoninus A. Eutychiano. Etsi Marcellus qui crimine falsi postulabatur vita functus est ac per hoc crimen in persona eius sit extinctum, accusatio tamen non est abolita, cum tam uxorem eius quam te eodem crimine postulatos proponas.

PP. VII k. Oct. Laeto II et Cereale conss.

[3] Idem A. Proculo. Si is, quem homicidii seu cuiusvis criminis postulasti reum, vita functus est, frustra ob poenam desertae accusationis conveniris, cum morte eius crimen cum poena eius sit extinctum ac per hoc tibi adempta est necessitas accusationis.

PP. IIII k. Oct. Romae Sabino et Anullino conss.

[4] Imp. Alexander A. Veroniciano. pr. Si, ut proponis, causa pecuniaria ad emolumentum tuum spectat, licet Annianus, cui falsi crimen auctor[ii] tuus intendebat, vita functus sit, non prohiberis, si quis adversus te instrumento quod in dubium vocatur uti coeperit, accusationem instituere. 1. Quamvis enim in persona principalis rei morte subducti iam subsistere non possit, tamen si quis illo uti voluerit, intellegit se periculo criminis esse subiectum.

PP. VI k. Ian. Albino et Aemiliano conss.

[ii] actor of the bishops and public officials. If a public official neglects his duty, he shall be liable with regard to his property and his personal safety.

Given January 18, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Decius (529).

Sixth Title A Defendant or Accuser Dies

[1] The crime of desertion lapses when the soldier who has deserted dies.[37]

[2] Emperor ANTONINUS Augustus to Eutychianus. Even if Marcellus, who was being indicted on a charge of falsification, has died, and for this reason the charge against him has lapsed, nevertheless, the prosecution has not been dismissed, since you indicate that his wife and you yourself have been indicted on the same charge.

Posted September 25, in the consulship of Laetus, for the second time, and Cerealis (215).

[3] The same Augustus to Proculus. If he whom you have indicted for homicide or any other crime has died, it is useless to summon you to be punished for abandoning the prosecution, since by his death the charge together with its punishment has lapsed, and for this reason the need for you to continue with the prosecution has been removed.

Posted September 28, at Rome, in the consulship of Sabinus and Anullinus (216).

[4] Emperor ALEXANDER Augustus to Veronicianus. pr. If, as you allege, a civil suit stands to benefit you, although Annianus, whom your manager (actor) was prosecuting on a charge of forgery, has died, you are not prevented from launching a prosecution if someone begins to employ against you the document whose validity has been brought into question. 1. For although (the prosecution) cannot continue at this point, thanks to the death of the principal defendant, nevertheless if someone desires to use that (document), he understands that he is liable to the risk of a charge (of forgery).[38]

Posted December 27, in the consulship of Albinus and Aemilianus (227).

[37] Supplemented from the scholia on Bas. 60.56.1.

[38] Veronicianus' manager (actor) brought a criminal suit against Annianus over an allegedly forged document (one that presumably affects the principal's interests). Before a verdict was rendered, Annianus died. X then brought an unspecified action against Veronicianus and sought to use the document as evidence. Veronicianus can bring a countersuit on the alleged forgery. The reading actor is preferred to auctor because it entails fewer assumptions about the situation of fact behind the rescript.

[5] Imp. Gordianus A. Rufo. Defunctis reis publicorum criminum, sive ipsi per se ea commiserunt sive aliis mandaverunt, pendente accusatione, praeterquam si sibi mortem consciverint, bona successoribus eorum non denegari notissimi iuris est.

PP. vii k. Nov. Pio et Pontiano conss.

[6] Idem A. Iuliano. pr. Si quis, cum capitali poena vel deportatione damnatus esset, appellatione interposita et in suspenso constituta fati diem functus est, crimen morte finitum est. 1. Idem observatur et si accusator pendente appellationis tempore ultimum diem obisset. 2. Sin autem[iii] relegationis poenam sustinuit et in parte bonorum damnatus appellatione usus est, etiam post mortem eius nihilo minus appellationis ratio examinabitur, cum desideretur, utrum valeat nec ne particularis publicatio.

PP. vi k. Aug. Gordiano A. et Aviola conss.

VII Si Quis Imperatori Maledixerit

[1] Imppp. Theodosius Arcadius et Honorius AAA. Rufino pp. pr. Si quis modestiae nescius et pudoris ignarus improbo petulantique maledicto nomina nostra crediderit lacessenda ac temulentia turbulentus obtrectator temporum fuerit, eum poenae nolumus subiugari neque durum aliquid nec asperum sustinere, quoniam, si id ex levitate processit, contemnendum est, si ex insania, miseratione dignissimum, si ab iniuria, remittendum. 1. Unde integris omnibus ad nostram scientiam referatur, ut ex personis hominum dicta pensemus et, utrum praetermitti an exsequi rite debeat, censeamus.

D. v id. Aug. Constantinopoli Theodosio A. iii et Abundantio conss.

VIII Ad Legem Iuliam Maiestatis

[1] Imp. Alexander A. Paulino. Etiam ex aliis causis maiestatis crimina cessant meo saeculo, nedum etiam admittam te paratum accusare iii <reus>

[5] Emperor GORDIAN Augustus to Rufus. It is a very well-known point of law (ius notissimum) that if defendants in public criminal cases (publica crimina) die before the conclusion of the trial, whether they have committed the offenses themselves or through agents, unless they commit suicide, their property is not denied to those eligible to succeed to them.

Posted October 26, in the consulship of Pius and Pontianus (238).

[6] The same Augustus to Julian. pr. If someone condemned to death or capital exile (deportatio) has died while an appeal is underway, the charge has lapsed through his or her death. 1. The same rule holds even if the prosecutor has died while the appeal is pending. 2. But if, however, the defendant has appealed after being condemned to non-capital exile (relegatio) and partial confiscation of property, the basis for the appeal will be examined nonetheless even after his death, since it should be determined whether the partial confiscation was valid or not.

Posted July 27 in the consulship of Gordian Augustus and Aviola (239).

Seventh Title Cursing the Emperor

[1][39] Emperors THEODOSIUS, ARCADIUS, and HONORIUS Augusti to Rufinus, Praetorian Prefect. pr. If someone, unmindful of modesty and ignorant of a sense of shame, believes that Our names should be insulted through outrageous and violent cursing and, because of his drunkenness, is a troublemaking critic of Our reign, We do not wish him to be punished for this. Nor (do We wish) that he suffer something harsh or oppressive, since, if the motive was foolishness, he is to be despised; if insanity, he is to be greatly pitied; if an intent to cause harm, he is to be forgiven. 1. Therefore the matter shall be reported to Us in the first instance so that We may weigh the words in light of the character of the defendants and decide whether they ought properly to be passed over or punished.

Given August 9, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Theodosius Augustus, for the third time, and Abundantius (393).

Eighth Title The Lex Julia on Treason (Maiestas)[40]

[1] Emperor ALEXANDER Augustus to Paulinus. Charges of treason (maiestas) are disallowed during my reign even for other reasons, let alone I should

[39] = C.Th. 9.4.1. Combine with C. 10.32.44.

[40] See D. 48.4. Blume: "This crime was held to be like that of sacrilege."

iudicem propterea crimine maiestatis, quod contra constitutionem eius dicis pronuntiasse.

PP. III id. April. Maximo II et Aeliano conss.

[2] Idem A. Faustiniano. Alienam sectae meae sollicitudinem concepisti, quasi crimen maiestatis sustineres, etsi servo tuo iratus esse non perseveres, quod semper te facturum inconsultius iuraveris.

PP. III non. Febr. Iuliano et Crispino conss.

[3] Imp. Constantinus A. ad Maximum pu. pr. Si quis alicui maiestatis crimen intenderit, cum in huiuscemodi re convictus minime quisquam privilegio dignitatis alicuius a strictiore inquisitione defendatur, sciat se quoque tormentis esse subdendum, si aliis manifestis indiciis accusationem suam non potuerit comprobare. 1. Cum eo, qui huius esse temeritatis deprehenditur, illum quoque tormentis subdi oportet, cuius consilio atque instinctu ad accusationem accessisse videbitur, ut ab omnibus commissi consciis statuta vindicta possit reportari.

PP. k. Ian. Volusiano et Anniano conss.

[4] Imppp. Valentinianus Valens et Gratianus AAA. ad Olybrium pu. Nullus omnino, cui inconsultis ac nescientibus nobis fidicularum tormenta offerentur, militiae vel generis aut dignitatis defensione uti prohibeatur, excepta tamen maiestatis causa, in qua sola omnibus aequa condicio est.

D. VIII id. Iul. Valentiniano np. et Victore conss.

[5] Impp. Arcadius et Honorius AA. Eutychiano pp. pr. Quisquis cum militibus vel privatis, barbaris etiam scelestam inierit factionem aut factionis ipsius susceperit sacramenta vel dederit, de nece etiam virorum illustrium qui consiliis et consistorio nostro intersunt, senatorum etiam (nam et ipsi pars corporis nostri sunt), cuiuslibet postremo qui nobis admit you when you are ready to prosecute a judge on a charge of maiestas because you claim that he delivered judgment in violation of a constitution.

Posted April 11, in the consulship of Maximus, for the second time, and Aelianus (223).

[2] The same Augustus to Faustinianus. You have conceived an anxiety contrary to my principles when you maintain that you are guilty of treason (maiestas) because you rather inadvisedly swore (in the name of the Emperor) that you would always be angry at your slave, though you have ceased to be angry with him.

Posted February 3, in the consulship of Julian and Crispinus (224).

[3][41] Emperor CONSTANTINE Augustus to Maximus, City Prefect. pr. If someone accuses another person of treason (maiestas), because no one convicted in a matter of this kind enjoys protection from a rather severe inquiry by virtue of any rank he or she holds, the accuser shall know that he too shall be subjected to torture if he cannot prove his allegations by other clear evidence. 1. Not only he who is discovered to be guilty of such rashness (in bringing a false accusation) ought to be subjected to torture, but also the one through whose counsel and instigation the accuser seems to have been encouraged to prosecute. The aim is to be able to visit the penalty established by law on all those complicit in the offense.

Posted January 1, in the consulship of Volusianus and Annianus (314).[42]

[4][43] Emperors VALENTINIAN, VALENS, and GRATIAN Augusti to Olybrius, City Prefect. Anyone at all who is threatened with torture on the rack without Our consent or knowledge shall be permitted to offer a defense based on military service, birth, or social rank. The exception however is the crime of treason (maiestas), for which alone everyone's status is equal.

Given July 8, in the consulship of Valentinian, Most Noble Boy, and Victor (369).

[5][44] Emperors ARCADIUS and HONORIUS Augusti to Eutychianus, Praetorian Prefect. pr. Whoever forms a criminal organization together with soldiers, civilians, even barbarians, or offers to others or takes an oath that binds the group together, or plots the murder even of viri illustres who participate in Our deliberations and Council, (and) of senators too, since they are a part of Our [41] = (in part) C.Th. 9.5.1. See CIL 5.2781 (FIRA 1.94), with the full text.

[42] The date is perhaps June 1, 305: Projet Volterra. Seeck dates to January 1, 320.
[43] = (in part, with changes) C.Th. 9.35.1.
[44] = (with minor changes) C.Th. 9.14.3.

militat cogitarit (eadem enim severitate voluntatem sceleris qua effectum puniri iura voluerunt), ipse quidem utpote maiestatis reus gladio feriatur, bonis eius omnibus fisco nostro addictis:

1. Filii vero eius, quibus vitam imperatoria specialiter lenitate concedimus (paterno enim deberent perire supplicio, in quibus paterni, hoc est hereditarii, criminis exempla metuentur), a materna vel avita, omnium etiam proximorum hereditate ac successione habeantur alieni, testamentis extraneorum nihil capiant, sint perpetuo egentes et pauperes, infamia eos paterna semper comitetur, ad nullos umquam honores, nulla prorsus sacramenta perveniant, sint postremo tales, ut his perpetua egestate sordentibus sit et mors solacio et vita supplicio. 2. Denique iubemus etiam eos notabiles esse sine venia, qui pro talibus umquam apud nos intervenire temptaverint. 3. Ad filias sane eorum, quolibet numero fuerint, Falcidiam tantum ex bonis matris, sive testata sive intestata defecerit, volumus pervenire, ut habeant mediocrem potius filiae alimoniam quam integrum emolumentum ac nomen heredis. mitior enim circa eas debet esse sententia, quas pro infirmitate sexus minus ausuras esse confidimus.

4. Emancipatio, quae a praedictis sive in filios, post legem dumtaxat latam, sive in filias fuerit collata, non valeat. dotes donationes, quarumlibet postremo rerum alienationes, quas ex eo tempore qualibet fraude vel iure factas esse constiterit, quo primum memorati de ineunda factione ac societate cogitaverint, nullius statuimus esse momenti.

5. Uxores sane praedictorum[iv] recuperatas dotes, si in ea condicione fuerint, ut, quae a viris titulo donationis acceperunt, filiis debeant reservare, tempore quo usus fructus absumitur omnia ea fisco nostro se relicturas esse cognoscant, quae iuxta legem filiis debebantur: Falcidia etiam ex his rebus filiabus tantum, non etiam filiis deputata.

6. Id, quod de praedictis eorumque filiis cavimus, etiam de satellitibus consciis ac ministris filiisque eorum simili severitate censemus.

[iv] <post>

government, and, finally, of anyone at all working in the imperial service, shall himself, to be sure, inasmuch as he is guilty of treason (maiestas), be executed with the sword, and all of his property shall be confiscated by Our Treasury. For the laws (iura) have required that the intention to commit such a wicked act be punished with the same rigor as its actual commission.

1. But to his sons We grant the remission of a death sentence through a special act of imperial clemency, since they, in whom precedents of paternal, meaning inherited, criminality are a source of fear, ought (in principle) to be punished through execution, as was their father. They shall (however) be denied the right of inheritance or succession to the property of their mother, their grandparents, as well as all their close relatives. They shall take nothing left to them in the wills of non-relatives. They shall ever be needy and poor. They shall forever be accompanied by their father's legal infamy (infamia), so that they shall never be admitted to political offices or any oaths of loyalty at all. Finally, they shall be such that for them, as they languish in a permanent state of need, death shall be a consolation and life a punishment. 2. Further, We order that anyone who attempts ever to intervene with Us on behalf of such persons also be marked with legal infamy (notabiles) with no possibility of pardon. 3. Indeed, We wish that their daughters, whatever their number, receive, (but) only from their mother's estate, the one-fourth share guaranteed by the lex Falcidia, whether under a will or on intestacy. The aim is that the daughters have a modest source of support rather than full material benefit and status as an heir. For the sentence meted out to them ought to be milder, since We earnestly believe that they, because of their gender weakness (infirmitas sexus),[45] are going to display less boldness (than their brothers).

4. Emancipation performed by the aforesaid (criminals), whether of sons or of daughters, if it is done after the passage of this law, shall not be valid. Dowries, gifts, conveyances of property, in sum, of any kind whatsoever, which, it is established, were accomplished either fraudulently or legally from the time at which the above-mentioned persons first planned to join the (criminal) organization and enterprise, We decree to be void.

5. Certainly, the wives of the aforesaid persons, after recovering their dowries, if they are under an obligation to turn over to their sons what they have received from their husbands under title of gift, shall know that, at the time when their usufruct of this property terminates, they are going to leave to Our Treasury everything that according to the law would be owed to their sons. Also, the Falcidian fourth of this property is assigned only to the daughters, not also to the sons.

6. That which We have laid down concerning the aforesaid (criminals) and their sons, We establish with equal severity concerning their henchmen and [45] On "gender" as a translation here see the note at C. 5.3.20.

7. Sane si quis ex his in exordio initae factionis, studio verae laudis accensus, ipse prodiderit factionem, et praemio a nobis et honore donabitur. is vero, qui usus fuerit factione, si vel sero, tamen incognita adhuc consiliorum arcana patefecerit, absolutione tantum ac venia dignus habebitur.

D. prid. non. Sept. Ancyrae Caesario et Attico conss.

[6] ... Paulus de publicis iudiciis. pr. Meminisse oportebit, si quid contra maiestatem imperatoris commissum dicatur, etiam post mortem rei id crimen instaurari solere, posteaquam divus Marcus Depitiani utpote senatoris,[v] qui Cassiani furoris socius fuerat, bona post mortem fisco vindicari iussit et nostro tempore multis heredibus ablata sunt. 1. In hoc item crimine, quod ad laesam maiestatem imperatoris pertinet, etiam in caput domini servos torqueri.

2. Marcianus libro primo de publicis iudiciis titulo ad legem Iuliam maiestatis. Post divi Marci constitutionem hoc iure uti coepimus, ut etiam post mortem nocentium hoc crimen inchoari possit, ut convicto mortuo memoria eius damnetur et bona eius successoribus eripiantur: nam ex quo sceleratissimum quis consilium cepit, exinde quodammodo sua mente punitus est. 3. Sic et divus Severus et Antoninus constituerunt, ex quo quis tale crimen contraxit, neque alienare neque manumittere eum posse: nec ei solvere iure debitorem Magnus Antoninus rescripsit. 4. In hac causa in caput domini servi torquentur, id est propter causam helpers who are complicit, and their sons. 7. If indeed any of these persons, at the outset of the criminal organization he has joined, is motivated by a desire for genuine praise and discloses its existence to the authorities, he will be rewarded by Us both financially and through grant of a political office. But if he who has participated in the organization discloses, perhaps late in the day, its secrets that are nonetheless still undisclosed, he will be deemed worthy only of acquittal and pardon.

[v] senatoris, utpote

Given September 4, at Ankara, in the consulship of Caesarius and Atticus (397).

[6][46] Paul on the Public Criminal Courts (iudicia publica). pr. It ought to be kept in mind that, if any offense is alleged to have been committed against the Emperor as head of state (maiestas), customarily this charge is set in motion even after the death of the defendant. (This has been so) since the deified Marcus (Aurelius) ordered that the property of the senator Depitianus,[47] inasmuch as he participated in the coup (furor) attempted by (Avidius) Cassius, be confiscated by the Treasury after his death. In our own time as well property has been seized from a great many heirs. 1. Likewise with this charge, which concerns harm done to the Emperor's maiestas, (it is the practice) to subject slaves to judicial examination under torture even regarding the life or status of their master.

2. Marcian in the first book on Public Criminal Courts (Iudicia Publica) under the title on the lex Julia on maiestas. Following the constitution of the deified Marcus (Aurelius), we began to use this principle of law, that even after the death of the guilty parties this charge could be launched, so that, after the conviction of the decedent defendant, his memory is condemned and his property seized from his successors. For from the point when someone has initiated a very wicked plot he is punished in a certain sense for his intentions (sua mente). 3. In this connection both the deified (Septimius) Severus and Antoninus (Caracalla) laid down in a constitution that from the time when a person embarked upon such an offense he could neither alienate (his property) nor manumit (his slaves). Antoninus the Great (Magnus: Caracalla) also wrote a rescript that a debtor could not validly repay him. 4. In this kind of case, meaning a case of maiestas, slaves are subjected to judicial examination under torture regarding the life or status of their master. Upon the death of someone who, as a decedent, is accused in connection with a case of maiestas, [46] This constitution is said (MS Vind. 2267) to have begun and ended with portions in Greek that have not survived. What remains are two citations from Roman jurists.

[47] Probably Druentianus, Cassius' son-in-law. Avidius Cassius was a governor of Syria who led a revolt against Marcus Aurelius in 175.

maiestatis. et si decesserit quis, propter incertam personam successoris bona observantur, si in causa maiestatis fuisse mortuus arguatur, ut Severus et Antoninus litteris ad rationales missis rescripserunt ...

D. III non. Mart.

VIIII Ad Legem Iuliam de Adulteriis et de Stupro

[1] Impp. Severus et Antoninus AA. Cassiae. Publico iudicio non habere mulieres adulterii accusationem, quamvis de matrimonio suo violato queri velint, lex Iulia declarat, quae, cum masculis iure mariti facultatem accusandi detulisset, non idem feminis privilegium detulit.

PP. XIII k. Aug. Laterano et Rufino conss.

[2] Idem AA. Cyro. Crimen lenocinii contrahunt, qui deprehensam in adulterio uxorem in matrimonio detinuerunt, non qui suspectam adulteram habuerunt.

PP. k. Iul. Anullino et Frontone conss.

[3] Imp. Antoninus A. Iuliano. Verba legis Iuliae de adulteriis coercendis, sed etiam sententia per quaestionem quoque servorum sive ancillarum crimen admissum probari volentis ad earum tantum personarum servos ei rei exhibendos pertinet, de quibus specialiter comprehendit, id est mulieris et patris eius, non naturalis, sed iusti dumtaxat, quos intra sexagesimum diem ex dissolutione matrimonii numerandum manumitti vel distrahi prohibet et quorum dominis caveri praecipit, si defuncti fuerint in quaestione vel facti deteriores, secuta absolutione.

PP. XV k. Aug. Antonino A. IIII et Balbino conss.

[4] Imp. Alexander A. Iuliano proconsuli Narbonensis. pr. Gracchus, quem Numerius in adulterio noctu deprehensum interfecerit, si eius condicionis fuit, ut per legem Iuliam impune occidi potuerit, quod his property is sequestered on the ground that the identity of his successor is uncertain, as Severus and Caracalla wrote in a letter sent as a rescript to their fiscal officials (rationales).

Given March 5.

Ninth Title The Lex Julia on Adultery and Criminal Fornication[48]

[1] Emperors SEVERUS and ANTONINUS Augusti to Cassia. The lex Julia states that in a public criminal court (iudicium publicum) women cannot bring an accusation of adultery even if they wish to complain about a violation of their own marriage. Although (the statute) conferred on males the opportunity of prosecuting adultery by using a husband's right (ius mariti), it did not confer the same privilege on females.

Posted July 20, in the consulship of Lateranus and Rufinus (197).

[2] The same Augusti to Cyrus. They commit the offense of criminal pimping (lenocinium) who have remained married to a wife caught in the act of adultery, (but) not those who have kept as a wife a woman (merely) suspected of adultery.

Posted July 1, in the consulship of Anullinus and Fronto (199).

[3] Emperor ANTONINUS Augustus to Julian. The wording, as well as the sense, of the lex Julia on the repression of adultery allows the commission of the crime to be proved also through the judicial examination under torture of male and female slaves. But it permits only those slaves to be produced for this purpose who belong to those persons whom it specifically mentions, meaning those of the woman herself and her father, provided he be her legitimate and not (simply) her natural (biological) father. The law forbids the manumission or alienation of these slaves for a sixty-day period running from the day of divorce. It lays down that, if an acquittal has followed, their masters are to be compensated if the slaves die or are permanently injured ("made worse") as a consequence of the judicial examination under torture.

Posted on July 18, in the consulship of Antoninus Augustus, for the fourth time, and Balbinus (213).

[4] Emperor ALEXANDER Augustus to Julian, Proconsular Governor of Narbonensian Gaul. pr. If Gracchus, whom Numerius killed after catching him by night in the act of adultery, was of such a status that he might be killed legitime factum est, nullam poenam meretur: idemque filiis eius qui patri paruerunt praestandum est. 1. Sed si legis auctoritate cessante inconsulto dolore adulterum interemit, quamvis homicidium perpetratum sit, tamen quia et nox et dolor iustus factum eius relevat, potest in exilium dari.

[48] See D. 48.5.

PP. sine die et consule.

[5] Idem A. Vadanti. Adulter post quinquennium, quam commissum adulterium dicitur, quod continuum numeratur, accusari non potest: easque praescriptiones legibus reis datas auferri non oportet.

PP. id. Iun. Maximo II et Aeliano conss.

[6] Idem A. Sebastiano. pr. Iure mariti adulterii accusare volenti sexaginta dies utiles computantur, quibus in publico eius facultas fuerit, apud quem reus vel rea postulari potest: et cum praeterierint dies isti utiles, maritus quoque iure extranei agere potest. 1. Et qui confidit accusationi, calumniae notam timere non debet: nam ad probationem sceleris divi parentes mei quaestionem de mancipiis eodem modo haberi permiserunt, quo si iure mariti ageretur.

PP. II id. Aug. Maximo II et Aeliano conss.

[7] Idem A. Herculano. pr. Propter violatam virginem adultam qui postea maritus esse coepit accusator iustus non est et ideo iure mariti crimen exercere non potest, nisi puella violata sponsa eius fuerit. 1. Sed si ipsa iniurias suas adsistentibus curatoribus, per quos etiam negotia eius gerenda sunt, persequatur, praeses provinciae pro debita tanto delicto, si probetur, severitate examinabit.

PP. XII k. Ian. Maximo II et Aeliano conss.

[8] Idem A. Domnae. Reos adulterii duos simul marem et feminam ex eadem causa fieri lex Iulia de pudicitia vetat: sed ordine peragi utrosque licet.

with impunity under the lex Julia, Numerius deserves no penalty, because he acted lawfully. And the same provision shall be made for the sons who obeyed their father. 1. But if he killed the adulterer without the sanction of the law and motivated by anguish (dolor), although a homicide has been committed, he can be sent into exile (exilium) because both the night and his justified anguish mitigate his offense.

Posted without day and year.

[5] The same Augustus to Vadans. An adulterer cannot be prosecuted after the expiration of the five-year period, which runs continuously from when the act of adultery is said to have been committed. Such prescriptive time limits as are granted to defendants by the laws ought not to be disregarded.

Posted June 13, in the consulship of Maximus, for the second time, and Aelianus (223).

[6] The same Augustus to Sebastianus. pr. Sixty effective (utiles) days are granted to the man who wishes to prosecute a charge of adultery using a husband's right (ius mariti). During this period he has the opportunity to approach publicly the official in whose court the male or female defendant can be indicted. And when these effective days have expired, the husband can also proceed in court using the right of an outsider (ius extranei). 1. He who thus places his trust in prosecution ought not fear being branded (with legal infamy) as a malicious accuser. For, to prove this wicked deed, my deified predecessors (parentes) permitted that a judicial examination under torture of slaves to be held in the same manner as if prosecution were being conducted under a husband's right (ius mariti).

Posted August 12, in the consulship of Maximus, for the second time, and Aelianus (223).

[7] The same Augustus to Herculanus. pr. The man who subsequently becomes the husband of an adult never-married woman who has been raped is not an appropriate prosecutor and for that reason cannot bring a charge using the right of a husband (ius mariti), unless the girl who was raped was his fiancée. 1. But if she herself pursues her own wrongs, assisted by the curatores through whom her private business affairs must also be managed, the governor of the province will treat so great an offense with due rigor, if it is proven.

Posted December 21, in the consulship of Maximus, for the second time, and Aelianus (223).

[8] The same Augustus to Domna. The lex Julia on chastity (de pudicitia) forbids that the male and female defendants on an adultery charge for the same

PP. id. Ian. Iuliano et Crispino conss.

[9] Idem A. Proculo. Castitati temporum meorum convenit lege Iulia de pudicitia damnatam in poenis legitimis perseverare. qui autem adulterii damnatam, si quocumque modo poenam capitalem evaserit, sciens duxit uxorem vel reduxit, eadem lege ex causa lenocinii punietur.

PP. VII k. Febr. Iuliano et Crispino conss.

[10] Idem A. Demetriano. De crimine adulterii pacisci non licet et par delictum accusatoris praevaricatoris et refugientis[vi] veritatis inquisitionem est. qui autem pretium pro comperto stupro accepit, poena legis Iuliae de adulteriis tenetur.

PP. V non. Mai. Fusco et Dextro conss.

[11] Idem A. Norbano. Crimen adulterii maritum retenta in matrimonio uxore inferre non posse nemini dubium est.

PP. k. Sept. Alexandro II et Marcello conss.

[12] Imp. Gordianus A. Aquilae. Si, dum in tuo matrimonio uxor tua esset, se adulterio polluit, in ea provincia in qua id factum est adulterium more solito persequi debes. nec enim ab ea quae iam nupta est adulterium passa exordium accusationis sumi potest, si denuntiatio criminis nuptias non praecessit.

PP. non. Dec. Gordiano A. et Aviola conss.

[13] Idem A. Basso. Etsi crimine adulterii damnatus restitutus non esset, ut proponis, si tamen soror tua, cum qua adulterium commissum dicebatur, non est accusata, nec poenae nec infamiae subici potuit, et multo magis, cum et accusatorem vita esse functum proponas.

[vi] rei fugientis offense be prosecuted simultaneously. But it is permitted fully to prosecute both of them one after the other.

Posted January 13, in the consulship of Julian and Crispinus (224).

[9] The same Augustus to Proculus. It befits the respect for chaste behavior characteristic of my reign that a woman condemned under the lex Julia on chastity continue to suffer the penalties laid down by the statute. He, moreover, who knowingly married or remarried a woman condemned for adultery, if she in some way or other has escaped the infliction of a penalty depriving her of life or status, under the same law he will be punished under the heading of criminal pimping (lenocinium).

Posted January 26, in the consulship of Julian and Crispinus (224).

[10] The same Augustus to Demetrianus. Settlements over prosecuting the charge of adultery are prohibited, and liability is the same for the collusive prosecutor and the defendant evading an enquiry into the truth. Moreover, he who has accepted payment for having discovered an act of criminal fornication (stuprum) is liable to the penalty established by the lex Julia on adultery.

Posted May 3, in the consulship of Fuscus and Dexter (225).[49]

[11] The same Augustus to Norbanus. No one doubts that a husband who has remained married to his wife cannot bring a charge of adultery.

Posted September 1, in the consulship of Alexander (Augustus), for the second time, and Marcellus (226).

[12] Emperor Gordian Augustus to Aquila. If, while married to you, your wife disgraced herself through adultery, you ought to prosecute the offense in the usual manner in the province where the adultery took place. A prosecution cannot, however, be launched first (i.e., without prosecuting her lover) against a woman guilty of adultery who has by now remarried, unless the announcement of the intent to prosecute preceded the new marriage.

Posted December 5, in the consulship of Gordian Augustus and Aviola (239).

[13] The same Augustus to Bassus. Although a man condemned on a charge of adultery has not had his rights restored, as you allege, nevertheless, if your sister, with whom the adultery was said to have been committed, has not been accused, she could not be subjected either to the punishment or to legal infamy (infamia), and all the more so since you also state that her prosecutor has passed away.

[49] Other constitutions show that this was the second consulship for Fuscus.

PP. k. Iun. Sabino II et Venusto conss.

[14] Idem A. Silvano. Adulteram, si postea quam crimen contra eam inchoatum est provincia excessit, etiam absentem inter reos recipi posse explorati iuris est.

PP. non. Mart. Attico et Praetextato conss.

[15] Idem A. Hilariano militi. pr. Si quondam uxor tua, antequam crimine adulterii peteretur, provincia excessit, neque absens accusari potest neque in eam provinciam in qua stipendium facis transmitti iure deposcitur. 1. Sane cum per occupationes militares licuerit, accusare eam sollemniter poteris: nec enim tempus, quo muneribus militaribus occuparis, vindictam tibi, quam maritali dolore percussus reposcis, debet auferre.

PP. IIII id. Mart. Attico et Praetextato conss.

[16] Impp. Valerianus et Gallienus AA. et Valerianus C. Arcesilao. pr. Abolitionem adulterii criminis postulans praesidem in cuius officio accusatio fuerit instituta adire debes. 1. Ceterum erras tu marite existimans, etiam si simpliciter, id est sine abolitione, destitisses, senatus consulto in persona tua futurum locum non fuisse: diversum enim divi principes saepe sanxerunt. 2. Quin hoc amplius scias nullam fuisse tibi ulterius potestatem instituendae huiusmodi accusationis, quia et decreto patrum et lege Petronia ei, qui iure viri delatum adulterium non peregit, numquam postea id crimen deferre permittitur.

PP. XV k. Iun. Maximo et Glabrione conss.

[17] Idem AA. et C. Victorino. pr. Sine metu legis Iuliae de adulteriis coercendis revocare uxorem in matrimonium potes, cum nihil amplius quam libellos accusationis obtulisti, quia postea comperisse te adfirmas, quod vana indignatione ad accusationem incitatus fueris. 1. Is enim committit in poenam, quam lex certo capite denuntiat, qui vel publice Posted June 1, in the consulship of Sabinus, for the second time, and Venustus (240).

[14] The same Augustus to Silvanus. It is a well-recognized principle of law (ius exploratum) that if, after a prosecution of an adulteress has begun, she left the province, she can be treated as a defendant even in her absence.

Posted March 7, in the consulship of Atticus and Praetextatus (242).

[15] The same Augustus to Hilarianus, a soldier. pr. If, before your ex-wife was prosecuted on a charge of adultery, she left the province, neither can she be prosecuted in her absence nor is it lawful to demand that she be transported to the province where you are serving in the military. 1. Of course, when your military responsibilities permit this, you will be able to launch a formal accusation against her. For the period in which you are taken up with military duties ought not to rob you of the vengeance that you, shattered by a husband's pain (dolor), demand.

Posted March 12, in the consulship of Atticus and Praetextatus (242).

[16] Emperors VALERIAN and GALLIENUS Augusti and VALERIAN Caesar to Arcesilaus. pr. If you are making a judicial request to dismiss an accusation of adultery, you ought to approach the provincial governor in whose court the prosecution was begun. 1. But you, Husband, are wrong if you think that, when you simply have abandoned the prosecution, that is, without an official grant of dismissal, you are also not going to be liable under the terms of the senatorial decree (the SC Turpillianum).[50] For the deified Emperors have often ruled to the contrary. 2. You should know, moreover, that you shall be deprived of the opportunity to initiate any further prosecution of this kind, because, according to both the decree of the Senate and the lex Petronia,[51] the man who abandoned an adultery accusation brought by a husband's right (ius viri) is never again permitted to bring this charge.

Posted May 18, in the consulship of Maximus and Glabrio (256).

[17] The same Augusti and Caesar to Victorinus. pr. You can remarry your ex-wife without fear of the lex Julia on repressing adultery, since you have done nothing more than present an application to prosecute, as you assert that you have discovered you were spurred on to prosecution by ill-grounded irritation. 1. For he commits an offense worthy of the punishment that the statute sets forth in a given chapter if either he has as a wife a woman condemned for [50] The SC Turpillianum was passed in 61 CE.

[51] The lex Petronia may have been passe at the time of the SC Turpillianum in 61 CE.

adulterio damnatam habet vel adulteram sciens, ut ignorationem simulare non possit, retinet uxorem.

PP. VI k. Aug. ipsis AA. IIII et III conss.

[18] Idem AA. et C. Theod. pr. Eum qui duas simul habuit uxores sine dubitatione comitatur infamia. in ea namque re non iuris effectus, quo cives nostri matrimonia contrahere plura prohibentur, sed animi destinatio cogitatur.

1. Verumtamen ei, qui te ficto caelibatu, cum aliam matrem familias in provincia reliquisset, sollicitavit ad nuptias, crimen etiam stupri, a quo tu remota es, quod uxorem te esse credebas, ab accusatore legitimo sollemniter inferetur. 2. Certe res tuas omnes, quas ab eo interceptas matrimonii simulatione deploras, restitui tibi omni exactionis instantia impetrabis a rectore provinciae: nam ea quidem, quae se tibi ut sponsae daturum promisit, quomodo repetere cum effectu potes quasi sponsa?

Accepta id. Mai. Antiochiae Tusco et Basso conss.

[19] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. ad Pompeianum. Quamvis indubitati iuris sit, quotiens adulterii crimen intenditur, praesentiam accusatoris procedere oportere, tamen quoniam ex litteris tuis cognovimus Materiam praepositi Viatoris uxorem habitis quaestionibus cum Iuliano quondam adulterium commisisse detectam sub ipsa prolatione sententiae Viatoris ipsius praesentiam postulasse, non putavimus confecto paene in iudicio facinore et iam agitata quaestione convicto praepositum ab excubiis limitis revocandum.

D.S. non. Dec. AA. conss.

adultery in a public criminal court or he knowingly, so that he cannot feign ignorance, keeps as a wife a woman guilty of adultery.

Posted July 27, in the consulship (of Valerian), for the fourth time, and (Gallienus), for the third time, Augusti (257).

[18][52] The same Augusti and Caesar to Theodora. pr. A man who had two wives at the same time is without doubt afflicted with legal infamy (infamia). For in this matter consideration is not taken for the effects at law, under which our fellow-citizens are prohibited from contracting more than one marriage at the same time, but intention.[53]

1. All the same, a man who, pretending to be unmarried, proposed marriage to you, when in fact he had left behind another "wife" (mater familias) in (another) province, will also be liable to a formal charge of criminal fornication (stuprum) brought by a lawful accuser. You are not liable to such a charge since you believed yourself to be a wife. 2. At any rate, you will petition the governor of the province for restoration, with all (possible) perseverance in collecting, of all your property that you complain has come into that man's control under the pretense of marriage. For (on the other hand) in what way, to be sure, can you successfully recover, on the ground that you are a fiancée, precisely those gifts that he promised he would give you as his fiancée?

Received May 15, at Antioch, in the consulship of Tuscus and Bassus (258).

[19] Emperors Diocletian and Maximian Augusti to Pompeianus. Although it is an undoubted point of law (ius indubitatum) that, whenever a case of adultery is prosecuted, the accuser ought to be present, nevertheless since We have learned from your letter that Materia, the wife of the commander Viator, who was discovered, through the judicial examination (under torture of slaves), to have committed adultery at some point with Julian, has made a judicial request to have Viator himself present at the pronouncement of sentence, We did not think the commander should be recalled from his station on the frontier, since, in a trial almost concluded, the crime has been proved in the procedure (the judicial examination of the slaves) that has also already been conducted.

Given and written[54] December 5, in the consulship of the Augusti (287).

[52] §1 = (on a different point, in part, with changes) C. 5.3.5, which has the recipient's full name and is dated to xv id. Mai. (?).

[53] Blume: "While plural marriages were unlawful in Rome, it seems to have been left unpunished, except by infamy, until the time of Diocletian, unless the act also constituted adultery, for in that case it was punished as adultery. Dig. 48.5.11.12."

[54] Or possibly "Given on the day" (Datum sub die).

[20] Idem AA. Didymo. Foedissimam earum nequitiam, quae pudorem suum alienis libidinibus prosternunt, non etiam earum, quae per vim stupro comprehensae sunt, inreprehensam voluntatem leges ulciscuntur, quando etiam inviolatae existimationis esse nec nuptiis earum aliis interdici merito placuit.

PP. III non. Oct. ipsis IIII et III AA. conss.

[21] Idem AA. Silano. pr. Ob commissa adulteria atque accusandas uxores certa tempora, quae utiliter computari solent, praescripta sunt. 1. Si igitur per occupationes publicas accusationem instituere non potuisti nec ante creditum tibi munus praescripta tempora transacta sunt, post depositam sollicitudinem qua detineris integram accusandi potestatem habebis. 2. Ad quam, cum vacare coeperis, properare debebis, ne effrenata licentia ad terrendam adversariam futurae accusationis speciem praetendas.

PP. XIIII k. Nov. ipsis IIII et III AA. conss.

[22] Idem AA. Obrimo. Si ea quae tibi stupro cognita est passim venalem formam exhibuit ac prostituta meretricio more vulgo se praebuit, adulterii crimen in ea cessat.

PP. XII k. Nov. ipsis IIII et III AA. conss.

[23] Idem AA. Proculo. pr. Servi ob violatum contubernium adulterii accusare non possunt.

1. Is autem, qui post dissociatum matrimonium uxorem licito iure duxerit obque intentatae accusationis ac potentis patrocinii metum ei qui accusationem instituerat aurum et argentum dedit, ad recipiendum id ulciscendamque turpis lucri cupiditatem adire praesidem potest, qui examinatis partium adlegationibus et inquisita fide veri, si quid ab eo qui innocens est ob illati criminis timorem datum esse cognoverit, quemadmodum sententiam formare debeat, evidentibus iuris placitis instruetur. 2. Sin vero constiterit corrupti matrimonii velut mercedem

[20] The same Augusti to Didymus. The laws take vengeance upon the most foul worthlessness of those women who abase their sense of shame (pudor) in service of the lusts of others, but not also the blameless lack of consent (voluntas) of those who have been forcibly raped. This is so since it has rightly been settled law also that their reputation (existimatio) be unimpaired and that they are not forbidden to remarry.

Posted October 5, in the consulship of the Augusti, for the fourth and third time, respectively (290).

[21] The same Augusti to Silanus. pr. Fixed time periods are prescribed with reference to the commission of adultery and the prosecution of wives. These are usually reckoned on the basis of what days a trial can be held. 1. If, then, because you were taken up with public business, you were unable to initiate a prosecution and the prescribed periods have elapsed before the responsibility entrusted to you (has concluded), after you have laid aside the obligations by which you are detained you will have an unabridged opportunity to prosecute. 2. You ought to hasten to take this opportunity as soon as you are free, so that, equipped with limitless scope for action, you do not extend the prospect of a future prosecution in order to terrify your adversary.

Posted October 19, in the consulship of the Augusti, for the fourth and third time, respectively (290).

[22] The same Augusti to Obrimus. If a woman, who has been found by you in a judicial hearing to have committed an act of criminal fornication (stuprum), has promiscuously offered her body for sale and, having prostituted herself, has made herself available indiscriminately in the manner of a prostitute, the charge of adultery does not lie against her.

Posted October 21, in the consulship of the Augusti, for the fourth and third time, respectively (290).

[23] The same Augusti to Proculus. pr. Slaves cannot bring a prosecution for adultery because of a betrayal of their domestic partnership (contubernium).

1. Moreover, someone who lawfully married a woman following her divorce and has handed over, out of concern about an impending prosecution and the political influence of the accuser, gold and silver to the man who had initiated the prosecution, can approach the governor for the purpose of recovering this and avenging the accuser's greed for base profit. If the latter, after investigating the assertions of the parties and examining the reliable basis for the truth, discovers that something has been given by an innocent man out of fear of a charge that has been launched, he will be instructed by clear pronouncements of law (iuris placita) as to how he ought to shape his sentence. 2. But if, however, it should be established that the wages, so to speak, of a corrupt marriage ad captandam impunitatem solutam esse, eum, qui etiam adversus senatus consulti censuram cum foedissimo flagitio accepit, puniri iubebit.

PP. k. Nov. ipsis IIII et III AA. conss.

[24] Idem AA. Sossiano. Etsi libidine intemperatae cupiditatis ex actorum lectione exarsisse te cognitum est, tamen cum ancillam comprehendisse et non liberam stuprasse detectum sit, ex huiusmodi sententia gravatam potius opinionem tuam quam infamia adflictam esse manifestum est.
PP. v id. Mart. Tiberiano et Dione conss.

[25] Idem AA. et CC. Crispino. Quoniam Alexandrum, qui in crimen vocatur, etiam praescriptionem esse pollicitum eo nomine, quod accusator uxorem post comprehensum adulterium penes se habuisse videatur, et de statu suo agere nunc velle perspeximus, ita ordo quaestionis dirimendus videtur, ut in primis quidem de statu Alexandri quaeratur, ita ut, si eum liberum esse adhibita audientia deprehenderis, praescriptionis ei obiciendae facias potestatem: sin vero eundem servum esse cognoveris, remotis praescriptionis impedimentis in adulterium crimen[vii] protinus debebis inquirere ac, si eum detectum in eo flagitio esse perspexeris, poenam decernere, quam in adulterii crimen legum sanctio statuit.
D. v k. Sept. AA. conss.

[26] Idem AA. et CC. Phoebo. Commissum ante adulterium cum eo, cui se postea nuptiis sociavit, velamento matrimonii non extinguitur.
PP. XVIII k. Ian. CC. conss.

[27] Idem AA. et CC. Concordio praesidi Numidiae. Ita nobis pudor cordi est, ut removeamus prisci iuris ambages et constituamus in adulterii quaestione abolitis de medio ceteris praescriptionibus praeter quinquennii temporis et lenocinii quod marito obicitur exceptionem, have been paid in order to secure impunity, the governor will order to be punished a man who has also violated the strictures of the senatorial decree (the SC Turpillianum) through a most base and outrageous act.

[vii] [crimen]

Posted November 1, in the consulship of the Augusti, for the fourth and third time, respectively (290).

[24] The same Augusti to Sossianus. Although it has been established in a judicial hearing that you, spurred by the recitation of stage actors, blazed forth with the passion of unrestrained desire, nevertheless, since it has been determined that the woman you raped was a slave and not free, it is clear that, from a sentence of this kind, your social reputation (opinio) has been compromised but not burdened with legal infamy (infamia).

Posted March 11, in the consulship of Tiberianus and Dio (291).

[25][55] The same Augusti and the Caesars to Crispinus. We have determined that Alexander, the defendant on a charge (of adultery), has also made known his intention of raising a defense to the effect that the prosecutor seems to have kept his wife with him after the discovery of her adultery and that he (Alexander) now wishes to litigate over his own legal status. It therefore seems that the procedure of the trial must be reconstituted so that, first of all certainly, a hearing shall be held about Alexander's status, so that, if after the hearing you discover that he is free, you shall offer him the opportunity of raising this defense. But if, on the other hand, you learn that he is a slave, you ought to strip away the obstacles posed by the defense and make immediate inquiry into the adultery. And if you determine that he is guilty of this offense, you ought to levy upon him the penalty that the sanction of the laws has laid down for the crime of adultery.

Given August 28, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[26] The same Augusti and Caesars to Phoebus. If a woman had committed adultery with a man whom she later married, the offense is not effaced through the cover of marriage.

Posted December 15, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[27] The same Augusti and Caesars to Concordius, Governor of Numidia. A sense of shame (pudor) is so dear to Our hearts that We remove all the ambiguities of the old law (priscum ius) and We establish that in a trial for adultery all defenses shall be utterly abolished except that of the prescription of five years from the date of the offense and that of criminal pimping (lenocinium) lodged

[55] See C. 1.23.3.

illam etiam, quae post solutum prius matrimonium ante denuntiationem nuptae competit, fidem criminis nosci. indignum est enim, ut ultionem pudoris praestigiae versuti iuris excludant.

PP. k. Iun. Tusco et Anullino conss.

[28] Imp. Constantinus A. Africano. Quae adulterium commisit, utrum domina cauponae an ministra fuerit, requiri debebit, et ita obsequio famulata servili, ut plerumque ipsa intemperantiae vina praebuerit: ut, si domina tabernae fuerit, non sit a vinculis iuris excepta, si vero potantibus ministerium praebuit, pro vilitate eius quae in reatum deducitur accusatione exclusa liberi qui accusantur abscedant, cum ab his feminis pudicitiae ratio requiratur, quae iuris nexibus detinentur et matris familias nomen obtinent, hae autem immunes ab iudiciaria severitate praestentur, quas vilitas vitae dignas legum observatione non credidit.

D. III non. Febr. Heracleae Constantino A. VII et Constantio C. conss.

[29] Idem A. ad Euagrium. pr. Quamvis adulterii crimen inter publica referatur, quorum delatio in commune omnibus sine aliqua legis interpretatione conceditur, tamen ne volentibus temere liceat foedare conubia, proximis necessariisque personis solummodo placet deferri copiam accusandi, hoc est patri fratri nec non patruo et avunculo, quos verus dolor ad accusationem impellit. 1. Sed et his personis legem imponimus, ut crimen abolitione, si voluerint, compescant.

2. In primis maritum genialis tori vindicem esse oportet, cui quidem ex suspicione ream coniugem facere licet, vel eam, si tantum suspicatur, penes se detinere non prohibetur, nec inscriptionis vinculo contineri, cum iure mariti accusaret, veteres retro principes adnuerunt.

against the husband, and that the wife too, who remarries after divorce but before the announcement of the intent to prosecute, shall learn the certainty of the charge. For it is unworthy that contrivances of craftily contorted law (ius versutum) preclude the avenging of shame.

Posted June 1, in the consulship of Tuscus and Anullinus (295).

[28][56] Emperor Constantine Augustus to Africanus. If any woman had committed adultery, it ought to be inquired whether she was the mistress of a tavern or a servant woman, and thus in the performance of her servile duty she herself frequently proffered the wines of intemperance. If she were the mistress of a tavern, she shall not be exempt from the bonds of the law. But if she has given service to those who drink, then, in consideration of the mean status of the woman who is brought to trial, the prosecution shall be blocked and the men who are accused shall go free. The reason is that respect for chastity (pudicitia) is required (only) of those women who are held by the constraints of the law and who enjoy the status of a respectable woman (materfamilias), while those whose mean status in life has not been deemed worthy of compliance with the laws shall be rendered immune from judicial severity.

Given February 3, at Heraclea, in the consulship of Constantine Augustus, for the seventh time, and Constantius Caesar (326).

[29][57] The same Augustus to Evagrius. pr. Although the crime of adultery is classified as "public," meaning its prosecution is granted to all in common without any statutory limitation (interpretatio legis), nevertheless, in order that it shall not be permitted, for those who wish to do so heedlessly, to bring disgrace upon marital unions, it is Our decision that the opportunity of prosecuting be made available only to the nearest and very close relatives, meaning a father, brother, as well as paternal and maternal uncle, whom true pain (dolor) drives to prosecution. 1. But even for these types of persons We set this condition (lex), that if they wish to cease prosecution, they shall accomplish this through a formal grant of dismissal by the court (abolitio).

2. The husband above all ought to be the avenger of his marriage bed. He, certainly, is permitted to prosecute his wife on the basis of circumstantial evidence (suspicio), or, if he merely suspects her, he is not forbidden to keep her with him. Nor have the Emperors in the long ago past allowed him to be bound by the constraint of an application to prosecute, when he acts with the right of a husband (ius mariti).

[56] = (with minor changes) C.Th. 9.7.1.
[57] = (in part, with changes) C.Th. 9.7.2.

3. Extraneos autem procul arceri ab accusatione censemus: nam etsi omne genus accusationis necessitas inscriptionis adstringat, nonnulli tamen proterve id faciunt et falsis contumeliis matrimonia deformant. 4. Sacrilegos autem nuptiarum gladio puniri oportet.

PP. Nicomediae VII k. Mai. Constantino A. VII et Constantio C. conss.

[30] Impp. Constantius et Constans AA. ad populum. Cum vir nubit in feminam, femina viros proiectura quid cupiat? ubi sexus perdidit locum, ubi scelus est id quod non proficit scire, ubi Venus mutatur in alteram formam, ubi Amor quaeritur nec videtur: iubemus insurgere leges, armari iura gladio ultore, ut exquisitis poenis subdantur infames, qui sunt vel qui futuri sunt rei.

PP. Romae XVII k. Ian. Constantio III et Constante II AA. conss.

[31] Imppp. Gratianus Valentinianus et Theodosius AAA. Cynegio pp. In adulterii quaestione ab omni familia non solum mariti, sed etiam uxoris, quae tamen tunc temporis domi fuerit, quo adulterium dicatur admissum, quaerendum est sine defensione cuiusquam.

D. III id. Dec. Constantinopoli Arcadio A. et Bautone conss.

[32] Imppp. Theodosius Arcadius et Honorius AAA. Rufino pp. Adulterii accusatione proposita praescriptiones civiles, quibus aut dos repeti fingitur aut ex ratione aliqua debitum flagitatur, quae occurrere atque

3. We ordain, moreover, that outsiders shall be kept far away from prosecution. For although the necessity of making an application conditions every type of prosecution, nevertheless, some persons do this recklessly and disturb marriages with false insults. 4.[58] Moreover, those who commit outrage against marriages ought to be punished with the sword.

Posted April 25, at Nicomedia, in the consulship of Constantine Augustus, for the seventh time, and Constantius Caesar (326).

[30][59] Emperors CONSTANTIUS and CONSTANS Augusti to the People. When a man "marries" (nubit) as a woman does, a woman about to reject men!, what might he be desiring? Where sex has lost its (proper) place, where there is a crime that it does not profit to know, where sexual passion (Venus) is altered to a different form, where Love (Amor) is sought yet not seen, We order the statutes (leges) to arise, (and) law (iura) to be armed with an avenging sword, so that those disgraceful men (infames) who are (now) or who are going to be guilty (of this crime) shall be consigned to choice punishments.

Posted December 16, at Rome, in the consulship of Constantius, for the third time, and Constans, for the second time, Augusti (342).[60]

[31][61] Emperors GRATIAN, VALENTINIAN, and THEODOSIUS Augusti to Cynegius, Praetorian Prefect.[62] In a trial for adultery, judicial examination (of slaves, under torture) must be held, without excepting anyone, for the entire slave household (familia) not only of the husband, but also of the wife, nevertheless limited to those who were present at that time in the house in which the act of adultery is said to have been committed.

Given December 11, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Arcadius Augustus and Bauto (385).

[32][63] Emperors THEODOSIUS, ARCADIUS, and HONORIUS Augusti to Rufinus, Praetorian Prefect. When a prosecution for adultery is instituted, civil claims, under which the recovery of a dowry is sought or for some reason the

[58] = (in part, with changes) C.Th. 11.36.4.

[59] = (with minor changes) C.Th. 9.7.3. This constitution is clearly directed against passive homosexuality, but its diction and meaning are very obscure. "Marry" is usually taken to mean "have (anal) sex with." Its unusual language and possible problems with the text make translation of this constitution especially challenging.

[60] The precise day and year are uncertain. The latter is either 342 or – perhaps more likely – 346. The C.Th. version has December 4, 342 as "given" and December 16 as "posted." Seeck gave December 4, 342; the Projet Volterra has December 4, 342 as "given" and December 16, 342 as "received."

[61] = (in part, with minor changes) C. 9.16.8; C.Th. 9.7.4.

[62] In fact, in 383 Arcadius became emperor and Gratian died.

[63] = (with minor changes) C.Th. 9.7.7.

perstrepere examini consuerunt, iussimus sequestrari nec earum obice aliquid negotio tarditatis adferri: sed accusatione fundata, hoc est cum constiterit, quo iure (id est mariti vel extranei) quove tempore actio fuerit intromissa, discutiatur crimen, facti qualitas publicetur, cum et iurgia quae magnitudine superant, praeponantur et civilis actio criminali iure postponatur, idem tamen, cum competere coeperit, habitura momenti, dummodo non obsit examini.

D. VII id. Dec. Constantinopoli Arcadio A. II et Rufino conss.

[33] Idem AAA. Rufino pp. pr. Si qui adulterii fuerint accusati et obtentu proximitatis intentata depulerint, per commemorationem necessitudinis fidem crimini derogando, dum existimatur non debere credi quod adlegatur, non potuisse committi, hi si postmodum in nuptias suas consortiumque convenerint, facinus illud, in quo fuerint accusati, manifesta fide atque indiciis evidentibus publicabunt. 1. Unde si qui eiusmodi reperti fuerint, iussimus in eosdem severissime vindicari et veluti convictum facinus confessumque puniri.

D. prid. non. Dec. Constantinopoli Theodosio A. III et Abundantio conss.

[34] Impp. Honorius et Theodosius AA. Palladio pp. Si mulier repudii oblatione sine ulla legitima causa a se dati discesserit, ne viduitatem stupri procacitate commaculet, accusationem repudiato marito iure deferimus.

D. VI id. Mart. Ravennae Eustathio et Agricola conss.

[35] Imp. Iustinianus A. Iohanni pp. pr. Libertatem servorum, qui ad dominium pertinent uxoris vel mariti vel parentium eorum, repudio repayment of a debt is claimed, have customarily obstructed and thrown into confusion the judicial process. We have ordered that these shall be set apart and that through these impediments no delay shall be offered to this process. But when a prosecution is well-founded, that is, when it is established by what right – meaning that of the husband (ius mariti) or of an outsider (ius extranei) – or at what time the trial is to go forward, the offense shall be examined and the nature of the facts shall be brought to light (first as to the criminal prosecution), both because disputes of greater magnitude shall take precedence and because private lawsuits shall yield to criminal proceedings. All the same, when the former (civil claim) begins to lie, it is going to enjoy due consideration as long as it does not obstruct the (criminal) process.

Given December 7, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Arcadius Augustus, for the second time, and Rufinus (392).

[33][64] The same Augusti to Rufinus, Praetorian Prefect. pr. Suppose that persons accused of adultery have, by asserting their close relationship, refuted the charges against them, robbing the charge of credibility through a recitation of the closeness of their kinship with each other, as long as it is thought that what is charged ought not to be believed, that the crime in question could not have been committed: if these same persons later come together in marriage and a marital partnership, they will be (deemed as) making public their guilt with regard to the crime of which they were accused, with patent credibility and through manifest evidence. 1. So, if any persons of this kind are discovered, We have ordered that they shall be very severely chastised and that they shall be punished as though they have been convicted of and confessed to this crime.

Given December 4, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Theodosius Augustus, for the third time, and Abundantius (393).

[34][65] Emperors Honorius and Theodosius Augusti to Palladius, Praetorian Prefect. If a woman leaves her husband by giving a notice (repudium) tendered without any lawful cause, in order that she shall not disgrace her unmarried status through the impudence of criminal fornication (stuprum), We grant the husband who has been given notice of divorce the right to prosecute (evidently under the ius mariti).

Given March 10, at Ravenna, in the consulship of Eustathius and Agricola (421).

[35] Emperor Justinian Augustus to John, Praetorian Prefect. pr. When a notice of divorce (repudium) is sent on account of suspicion of the crime of

[64] = C.Th. 9.7.8.
[65] = (in part, with changes) C.Th. 3.16.2, which also gives Constantius as emperor.

misso propter suspicionem criminis adulterii, legum conditores intra duorum mensum spatium post missionem repudii numerandum suspendi definiunt propter tormentorum quaestionem, si opus exegerit, eis imponendam. 1. Sin vero uxor matrimonio sub praefato modo dissoluto rebus humanis exempta fuerit, nihil de tempore, quousque servos eos propter memoratam causam permanere deceat, adiciunt. 2. Nobis vero necessarium esse videtur certum tempus etiam in hoc casu statuere propter dotis quaestionem, utrum in lucrum marito cedat an heredibus mulieris restituatur. 3. Sancimus itaque duos etiam menses post mortem mulieris servari, ut intra eos ante dicti servi permaneant et facultatem maritus habeat probationes adulterii per eos praestare: transacto vero memorato tempore licentiam habere heredem mulieris libertatem eis imponere, nisi per culpam eius maritus prohibitus fuerit causam adulterii, ipse videlicet imminens, exercere.

D. v k. Nov. Constantinopoli post consulatum Lampadii et Orestis vv. cc. anno secundo.

X Si Quis Eam Cuius Tutor Fuerit Corruperit

[1] Imp. Constantinus A. ad Bassum vicarium Italiae. Si tutor pupillam quondam suam violata castitate stupraverit, deportatione subiugetur atque universae eius facultates fisci viribus vindicentur, quamvis eam poenam debuerit sustinere, quam raptori leges imponunt.

D. prid. non. April. Aquileiae Constantino A. VII et Constantio C. conss.

XI De Mulieribus Quae Servis Propriis Se Iunxerunt

[1] Imp. Constantinus A. ad populum. pr. Si qua cum servo suo occulte rem habere detegitur, capitali sententia subiugetur, tradendo ignibus verberone. 1. Sitque omnibus facultas crimen publicum arguendi, sit adultery, the founders of the laws (legum conditores) establish that the manumission of slaves who are in the ownership of the wife, the husband, or their parents shall be suspended for a period of two months after the sending of the repudium, so that they be subjected to judicial examination under torture, if there is need of this.

1. But if, however, a wife should, after her marriage has ended in the manner just mentioned, pass away, they add nothing about the time period in which it is appropriate that the slaves remain slaves for the aforesaid reason. 2. To Us, however, it seems necessary to establish a fixed time period, even in this situation, while the issue of the dowry is decided, whether it passes to the benefit of the husband or is restored to the wife's heirs. 3. We therefore lay down that two months also shall be observed after the death of the woman, so that the previously mentioned slaves remain as such for this period and the husband enjoy the opportunity of proving the adultery through them. But once the just-mentioned time period has elapsed, the woman's heir shall have permission to manumit them, unless through the heir's fault (culpa) the husband has been prevented from launching the accusation of adultery, as he was clearly about to do.

Given October 28,[66] at Constantinople, in the second post-consulate of the viri clarissimi Lampadius and Orestes (532).

Tenth Title A Tutor Violates His Former Female Ward

[1][67] Emperor CONSTANTINE Augustus to Bassus, Vicar of Italy. If a tutor commits criminal fornication (stupraverit) with his former female ward, having outraged her chastity, he shall be afflicted with capital exile (deportatio) and his property in its entirety shall be claimed by the Treasury, although he ought to suffer that penalty which the laws impose on someone guilty of abduction (raptor).

Given April 4, at Aquileia, in the consulship of Constantine Augustus, for the seventh time, and Constantius Caesar (326).[68]

Eleventh Title Women Involved with Their Own Slaves

[1][69] Emperor CONSTANTINE Augustus to the People. pr. If any woman is discovered to have a secret relationship with her slave, she shall be afflicted with a capital sentence (capitalis sententia), while the worthless rascal (verbero) shall [66] The precise day is uncertain; an alternative is October 18.

[67] = (in part, with changes) C.Th. 9.8.1.

[68] The precise year is uncertain: 326 or 320. For "abduction", see C.Th. 9.24.1, to which this law almost certainly refers.

[69] = (in part, with minor changes) C.Th. 9.9.1.

officio copia nuntiandi, sit etiam servo licentia deferendi, cui probato crimine libertas dabitur.

2. Filii etiam, quos ex hac coniunctione habuit, exuti omnibus dignitatis insignibus in nuda maneant libertate, neque per se neque per interpositam personam quolibet titulo voluntatis accepturi aliquid ex facultatibus mulieris. 3. Successio autem mulieris ab intestato vel filiis, si erunt legitimi, vel proximis cognatisque deferatur vel ei, quem ratio iuris admittit: ita ut et quod ille qui quondam amatus est et quod ex eo suscepti filii quolibet casu in sua videantur habuisse substantia, mulieris dominio sociatum a memoratis successoribus vindicetur.

D. IIII k. Iun. Serdicae Constantino A. VII et Constantio C. conss.

XII Ad Legem Iuliam de Vi Publica seu Privata

[1] Impp. Severus et Antoninus AA. Peliae. Ob debitum viri vel civile munus res uxoris qui pignori capiunt, vim contrahere videntur.

D. k. Iul. Romae Antonino A. II et Geta II conss.

[2] Imp. Antoninus A. Vero. Tutoris tui lege Iulia de vi privata damnati si tertia pars bonorum fisco vindicata est, tutelae actionem pro ea portione adversus fiscum dirige, modo si nulla praescriptio locum habeat. nam successio oneribus portionis suae respondet.

PP. XV k. Mart. Antonino A. IIII et Balbino conss.

be burned alive. 1. There shall be opportunity for everyone to prosecute this public criminal offense (crimen publicum); there shall be scope for administrative staff to lodge a complaint; there shall even be permission granted to a slave to lay evidence. If the offense is proved, freedom will be granted to the slave.

2. The children whom she has produced in this relationship shall also shed every manifestation of social rank and shall enjoy free status and no more. Nor shall they receive, either directly or through a third party, anything from their mother's estate through any manifestation of her wishes. 3. Succession to her property on intestacy, however, shall accrue to her children, if she has any that are legitimate, or to her nearest kin and blood-relatives (cognati), or to the person entitled to it under the principles of private law (ratio iuris). This shall happen in such a way that whatever property her former lover or any of their children are deemed to have acquired in any manner shall be assigned to the ownership of the woman and shall be claimed by those persons named above who are eligible to succeed to her.

Given May 29, at Serdica, in the consulship of Constantine Augustus, for the seventh time, and Constantius Caesar (326).[70]

Twelfth Title The Lex Julia on Public Force or on Private Force[71]

[1] Emperors SEVERUS and ANTONINUS Augusti to Pelias. Those who seize a wife's property as a pledge on account of a husband's debt or municipal obligation (munus civile) are deemed to commit (unlawful) force (vis).

Given July 1, at Rome, in the consulship of Antoninus Augustus, for the second time, and Geta, for the second time (205).[72]

[2] Emperor ANTONINUS Augustus to Verus. If one-third of the estate of your tutor has been claimed by the Treasury after his condemnation under the lex Julia on private force (vis privata), raise an action on tutelage for that portion against the Treasury, provided that no defense applies. For the successor (to the estate of the tutor) is liable for the burdens of its portion (that are due to the minor ward).

Posted February 15, in the consulship of Antoninus Augustus, for the fourth time, and Balbinus (213).[73]

[70] The precise year is uncertain: 326, 320, or more likely 329: Projet Volterra. Seeck had May 29, 329.
[71] See D. 48.6–7. The lex Iulia de vi publica et de vi privata may have been two distinct statutes that were likely passed c. 17 BCE.
[72] So Krüger, but Geta's first consulship was in 205, his second in 208, while Caracalla's second was in 205, his third in 208.
[73] Blume: "The ward had a lien on the property of the guardian for what was due."

[3] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. et CC. Bianori. Si confidis sponsam filii tui raptam esse vel filium tuum inclusum, instituere sollemni more legis Iuliae de vi accusationem apud praesidem provinciae non prohiberis.

PP. VIII k. Mai. Veronae AA. conss.

[4] Idem AA. et CC. Liberatio. pr. Si criminis accusationem propter res a servo raptas intentandam putaveris, non contra dominum, sed contra eum quem facinus commisisse proponis hanc instituere debes. 1. Sed quoniam a Fuscinillo etiam te verberibus adflictum adseveras, si hominibus coactis hoc fecit, de hoc etiam, si legis Iuliae de vi privata reum deferendum putaveris, apud praesidem provinciae age non ignarum, quemadmodum criminibus probatis res vindicari debeat.

S. XVII k. Iul. Sirmi AA. conss.

[5] Idem AA. et CC. Oploni. In possessionem fundi licet creditor per vim ingrediatur, Iuliae legis vis privatae reus deferri potest.

S. VI id. Dec. Nicomediae CC. conss.

[6] Imp. Constantinus A. ad Catullinum proconsulem Africae. Quoniam multa facinora sub uno violentiae nomine continentur, cum aliis vim inferre certantibus, aliis cum indignatione resistentibus verbera caedesque crebro deteguntur admissae, placuit, si forte quis vel ex possidentis parte vel eius qui possessionem temerare temptaverit interemptus sit, in eum supplicium exerceri, qui vim facere temptavit et alterutri parti causam malorum praebuit: et non iam relegatione aut deportatione insulae plectetur, sed supplicium capitale excipiat nec interposita provocatione sententiam quae in eum fuerit dicta suspendat.

D. XV k. Mai. Aquileiae Gallicano et Basso conss.

[7] Idem A. ad Bassum pu. pr. Si quis ad se fundum vel quodcumque aliud adserit pertinere ac restitutionem sibi competere possessionis

[3][74] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti and the Caesars to Bianor. If you are certain that your son's fiancée has been abducted, or your son has been sequestered, you are not prevented from launching a formal accusation under the lex Julia on Force before the provincial governor.

Posted April 24, at Verona,[75] in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[4] The same Augusti and Caesars to Liberatius. pr. If you think that a criminal prosecution should be brought on account of property that has been carried off by a slave, you ought to proceed not against the master, but against the person you allege to have committed the offense. 1. But because you assert that you were also beaten by Fuscinillus, if he did this after gathering together a group of men, concerning this matter as well, if you think he ought to be prosecuted under the lex Julia on private force, institute proceedings before the governor of the province, who knows how the matter ought to be avenged once the charges have been proved.

Written June 15, at Sirmium, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).[76]

[5] The same Augusti and Caesars to Oplo. Although it is a creditor who attempts to take possession of a farm by force, he can be accused under the lex Julia on private force.

Written December 8, at Nicomedia, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[6][77] Emperor CONSTANTINE Augustus to Catullinus, Proconsul of Africa. Because many offenses are embraced by the single term "violence," when some men act as aggressors and others heatedly resist them, blows and slaughter are frequently revealed to have been inflicted. It is settled law that if by chance someone either on the side of the possessor or on that of the one who attempts to disturb possession should be killed, punishment shall be inflicted upon him who set out to employ force and so caused harm to one or the other party. Nor will the offender be punished in future through exile, whether mild (relegatio) or capital (deportatio), to an island. Instead, he shall be put to death (supplicium capitale), and he shall not delay the execution of the sentence passed on him by lodging an appeal.

Given April 17, at Aquileia,[78] in the consulship of Gallicanus and Bassus (317).

[7][79] The same Augustus to Bassus, City Prefect. pr. If someone asserts that a farm or any other kind of property belongs to him and believes that possession

[74] Combine with C. 5.1.1, dated either to April 14 or 24.
[75] Mommsen proposes Heraclea.
[76] The precise year is uncertain: Mommsen prefers December 16, 294.
[77] = (in part, with changes) C.Th. 9.10.1.
[78] The location is uncertain: the C.Th. has Serdica.
[79] = (in part, with changes) C.Th. 9.10.3. Perhaps combine with C. 7.19.7.

putat, civiliter super possidendo agat aut impleta sollemnitate iuris crimen violentiae opponat, non ignarus eam se sententiam subiturum, si crimen obiectum non potuerit comprobare, quam reus debet excipere. 1. Quod si omissa interpellatione vim possidenti intulerit, ante omnia violentiae causam examinari praecipimus et in ea requiri, quis ad quem venerit possidentem, ut ei quem constiterit expulsum amissae possessionis iura reparentur, eademque protinus restituta, si criminalis quaestio agitetur, violentus poenae non immerito destinatus in totius litis terminum differatur, ut agitato negotio principali, si contra eum fuerit iudicatum, in insulam deportetur bonis omnibus abrogatis.

PP. prid. non. Oct. Romae Constantino A. v et Licinio C. conss.

[8] Imppp. Valentinianus Theodosius et Arcadius AAA. ad Albinum pu. pr. Servos, qui fecisse violentiam confessionibus testium aut propriis docebuntur, si id inscio domino commiserint, postremo supplicio deditos luere perpetrata censemus. 1. Quod si illi metu atque exhortatione dominorum violentiam admiserint, palam est secundum legem Iuliam dominum infamem pronuntiatum loci aut originis propriae dignitate non uti, servos vero, quos furoribus talium paruisse constiterit, metallis post sententiam dedi. 2. Viles autem infamesque personae et hi, qui bis aut saepius violentiam perpetrasse convincentur, constitutionum divalium poena teneantur. 3. Iudicem vero nosse oportet, quod gravi infamia sit notandus, si violentiae crimen apud se probatum distulerit omiserit vel impunitate donaverit aut molliorem quam praestituimus poenam protulerit.

D. prid. non. Mart. Mediolani Valentiniano A. IIII et Neoterio conss.

[9] Impp. Honorius et Theodosius AA. Aureliano pp. Crimen non dissimile est rapere et ei qui rapuerit rapta scientem delictum servare.

should be restored to him, he shall proceed by suit at private law or shall make formal accusation of the offense of violence, in awareness of the fact that, if he cannot prove the charge he has brought, he shall be subject to the same punishment that a (guilty) defendant ought to suffer. 1. But if he omits recourse to law and uses force against the possessor, We instruct that before all else the cause of the violence shall be investigated and it thus shall be determined who acted aggressively and who was in possession (of the property), so that the rights of possession lost by the man who is determined to have been expelled (from the property) shall be restored. When this has been accomplished forthwith, if a criminal prosecution is begun, an aggressor deservedly marked for punishment shall be put off until the conclusion of the entire suit, so that once the main issue has been decided, if the decision goes against him, he shall be deported to an island (deportatio, capital exile) and all his property confiscated.

Posted October 6, at Rome, in the consulship of Constantine Augustus, for the fifth time, and Licinius Caesar (319).

[8][80] Emperors VALENTINIAN, THEODOSIUS, and ARCADIUS Augusti to Albinus, City Prefect. pr. We order that slaves who are shown to have committed violence, either on the testimony of witnesses or by their own admission, if they acted without the knowledge of their master, shall pay for their misdeeds with the death penalty (postremum supplicium). 1. But if they have committed violence through fear of or at the urging of their masters, it is clear that, pursuant to the lex Iulia, the master shall be afflicted with legal infamy (infamia) and so be deprived of the status deriving from his rank and birth. But the slaves who, it is established, have obeyed the insane commands of such persons shall be sentenced to the mines. 2. Moreover, low and infamous persons (viles infamesque personae), as well as those who have been convicted of the crime of violence more than once, shall be liable to the penalty established by imperial constitutions.

3. The judge, however, ought to be aware that he shall be branded with grievous legal infamy (infamia) if a charge of violence has been proved in his court and he has delayed, dropped, or explicitly denied punishment, or if he has set a penalty lighter than the one We have prescribed.

Given March 6, at Milan, in the consulship of Valentinian Augustus, for the fourth time, and Neoterius (390).

[9][81] Emperors HONORIUS and THEODOSIUS Augusti to Aurelianus, Praetorian Prefect. As a crime, robbery is not unlike preserving, in full knowledge of the offense, robbed goods for the robber.

[80] = (with changes) C.Th. 9.10.4.

[81] = (in part, with minor changes) C.Th. 9.28.2. Reference is to fences, i.e., receivers of stolen property.

D. III non. Mart. Constantinopoli Honorio X et Theodosio VI AA. conss.

[10] Impp. Leo et Anthemius AA. Nicostrato pp. pr. Omnibus per civitates et agros habendi bucellarios vel Isauros armatosque servos licentiam volumus esse praeclusam. 1. Quod si quis praeter haec, quae nostra mansuetudo salubriter ordinavit, armata mancipia seu bucellarios aut Isauros in suis praediis aut iuxta se habere temptaverit, post exactam centum librarum auri condemnationem vindictam in eos severissimam proferri sancimus. 2. Viri quoque clarissimi provinciarum rectores in speculis esse debebunt, ne quis audeat statuta nostrae mansuetudinis in aliquo violare, scientes, quod ex dissimulatione dignitatis et administrationis cingulo privabuntur et post centum librarum auri multam salutis vitaeque suae periculum sustinebunt: primatibus videlicet apparitionis suae personis praeter amissionem fortunarum suarum capitali quoque supplicio feriendis.

D. V k. Sept. Anthemio A. II cons.

XIII De Raptu Virginum seu Viduarum Nec Non Sanctimonialium

[1] Imp. Iustinianus A. Hermogeni magistro officiorum. pr. Raptores virginum honestarum vel ingenuarum, sive iam desponsatae fuerint sive non, vel quarumlibet viduarum feminarum, licet libertinae vel servae alienae sint, pessima criminum peccantes capitis supplicio plectendos decernimus, et maxime si deo fuerint virgines vel viduae dedicatae (quod non solum ad iniuriam hominum, sed ad ipsius omnipotentis dei inreverentiam committitur, maxime cum virginitas vel castitas corrupta restitui non potest): et merito mortis damnantur supplicio, cum nec ab homicidii crimine huiusmodi raptores sint vacui.

1. Ne igitur sine vindicta talis crescat insania, sancimus per hanc generalem constitutionem, ut hi, qui huiusmodi crimen commiserint et qui eis auxilium tempore invasionis praebuerint, ubi inventi fuerint in ipsa

Given March 5, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Honorius, for the tenth time, and Theodosius, for the sixth time, Augusti (415).

[10] Emperors Leo and Anthemius Augusti to Nicostratus, Praetorian Prefect. pr. We wish that everyone, both in the towns and in the countryside, be denied permission – which has already been denied – to maintain private troops (bucellarii), Isaurians, or armed slaves. 1. But if someone, contrary to what Our Humanity has beneficially laid down, attempts to keep armed slaves, bucellarii, or Isaurians on his properties or about his person, We ordain that after paying a fine of 100 pounds of gold they shall be afflicted with a very serious penalty.

2. Also, the viri clarissimi who govern provinces ought to be on guard against anyone daring to contravene the enactments (statuta) of Our Humanity in any respect. They are aware that for their deliberate disregard they will be deprived of the protection of social rank and official position and, following a fine of 100 pounds of gold, they will endure risk to their life and safety. Obviously, their chiefs of staff shall have their property confiscated and suffer capital punishment (capitale supplicium) besides.

Given August 28, in the consulship of Anthemius Augustus, for the second time (468).

Thirteenth Title Abduction of Never-Married Women, Widows, and Female Monastics

[1][82] Emperor Justinian Augustus to Hermogenes, Master of Offices. pr. We decree that those who abduct respectable or free-born never-married women, whether they are formally engaged to them or not, or any sort of widows (viduae) even if they are freedwomen or slaves belonging to someone else, since they are guilty of the worst of crimes, shall suffer the death penalty (mortis supplicium). This is especially true if the never-married women or widows are consecrated to God, because this offense is not only an outrage toward mankind but an act of impiety toward Almighty God Himself, above all since physical virginity or chaste character, once corrupted, cannot be restored. And they are deservedly condemned to death, since such abductors are not free from the crime of homicide (homicidium).

1. In order, then, that such irresponsible conduct not increase without punishment, We ordain through this general law (constitutio generalis) that those who commit an offense of this nature and those who provide assistance to rapina et adhuc flagrante crimine comprehensi a parentibus virginum vel viduarum vel ingenuarum vel quarumlibet feminarum aut earum consanguineis aut tutoribus vel curatoribus vel patronis vel dominis, convicti interficiantur. 1a. Quae multo magis contra eos obtinere sancimus, qui nuptas mulieres ausi sunt rapere, quia duplici crimine tenentur tam adulterii quam rapinae et oportet acerbius adulterii crimen ex hac adiectione puniri. 1b. Quibus connumeravimus etiam eum, qui saltem sponsam suam per vim rapere ausus fuerit.

[82] = (in part, with changes) C. 1.3.53. Combine with C. 5.17.11.

1c. Sin autem post commissum tam detestabile crimen aut potentatu raptor se defendere aut fuga evadere potuerit, in hac quidem regia urbe tam viri excelsi praefecti praetorio quam vir gloriosissimus praefectus urbis, in provinciis autem tam viri eminentissimi praefecti praetorio per Illyricum et Africam quam magistri militum per diversas nostri orbis regiones nec non viri spectabiles praefectus Aegypti vel comes Orientis et vicarii et proconsules et nihilo minus omnes viri spectabiles duces et viri clarissimi rectores provinciarum nec non alii cuiuslibet ordinis iudices, qui in locis inventi fuerint, simile studium cum magna sollicitudine adhibeant, ut eos possint comprehendere et comprehensos in tali crimine post legitimas et iuri cognitas probationes sine fori praescriptione durissimis poenis adficiant et mortis condemnent supplicio.

1d. Quibus et, si appellare voluerint, nullam damus licentiam secundum antiquae Constantinianae legis definitionem.

1e. Et si quidem ancillae vel libertinae sint quae rapinam passae sunt, raptores tantummodo supra dicta poena plectentur, substantiis eorum nullam deminutionem passuris. 1f. Sin autem in ingenuam personam tale facinus perpetretur, etiam omnes res mobiles seu immobiles et se moventes tam raptorum quam etiam eorum, qui eis auxilium praebuerint, ad dominium raptarum mulierum liberarum transferantur providentia iudicum et cura parentum earum vel maritorum vel tutorum seu curatorum.

1g. Et si non nuptae mulieres alii cuilibet praeter raptorem legitime coniungentur, in dotem liberarum mulierum easdem res vel quantas ex his voluerint procedere, sive maritum nolentes accipere in sua pudicitia remanere voluerint, pleno dominio eis sancimus applicari, nemine them at the time of the assault, where they have been discovered in the very act of abduction and caught during the commission of the offense itself by the parents of the never-married women, widows, free-born women, or any women at all, or by their blood-relations (consanguinei), tutores, curatores, patrons (patroni), or owners (of slaves), they shall, upon conviction, be executed. 1a. We establish this rule all the more (vigorously) against those who have dared to abduct married women, because they are liable on a double charge, that of adultery as much as that of abduction, and the offense of adultery ought to be punished more harshly on account of this addition. 1b. We have numbered among these also the man who, at all events, dares the forcible abduction of his fiancée.

1c. If, however, after committing so detestable a crime, the ravisher proves able either to defend himself through influence or to escape by flight, in this Imperial City certainly both the viri excelsi Praetorian Prefects and the vir gloriosissimus Urban Prefect; in the provinces, however, both the viri eminentissimi Praetorian Prefects of Illyricum and Africa and the Masters of the Soldiers throughout the various areas of Our world, as well as the viri spectabiles Prefect of Egypt, the Count of the East, the Vicars, the Proconsuls, and not less the viri spectabiles Dukes, the viri clarissimi provincial governors, and also other judges of any rank who are found locally, shall show like diligence and great care, so that they may arrest and, upon arrest for such a crime, after proper proof recognized by the law, shall inflict upon them the harshest punishment and condemn them to death, without granting the privilege of venue (fori praescriptio).

1d. Even if they wish to appeal, We deny them permission to do so, pursuant to the rule (definitio) of the ancient law (lex) of Constantine.[83]

1e. Moreover, if, in fact, the victims of abduction are slaves or freedwomen, the abductors will be punished only with the penalty mentioned above, and will not suffer confiscation of their property.

1f. But if, however, such an offense is committed against a free-born female, in addition (to the death penalty) all movable, immovable, and self-propelling property of the abductors as well as of those who have lent them assistance shall be made over to the ownership of the abducted free women through the foresight of the judges and the solicitude of the parents of the victims as well as of their husbands, tutores, and curatores.

1g. Moreover, if unmarried women are later lawfully joined in marriage to anyone but their abductor, We ordain that this very property or as much of it as they wish shall form part of the dowry of (these) free women. But if they refuse a husband and wish to remain in their state of chastity, We lay down that this shall accrue to them with full rights of ownership, and that no judge iudice vel alia quacumque persona haec audente contemnere. 2. Nec sit facultas raptae virgini vel viduae vel cuilibet mulieri raptorem suum sibi maritum exposcere, sed cui parentes voluerint excepto raptore, eam legitimo copulent matrimonio, quoniam nullo modo nullo tempore datur a nostra serenitate licentia eis consentire, qui hostili more in nostra re publica matrimonium student sibi coniungere. oportet etenim, ut, quicumque uxorem ducere voluerit sive ingenuam sive libertinam, secundum nostras leges et antiquam consuetudinem parentes vel alios quos decet petat et cum eorum voluntate fiat legitimum coniugium.

[83] C.Th. 9.24.1.3.

3. Poenas autem quas praediximus, id est mortis et bonorum amissionis, non tantum adversus raptores, sed etiam contra eos qui hos comitati in ipsa invasione et rapina fuerint constituimus. 3a. Ceteros autem omnes, qui conscii et ministri huiusmodi criminis reperti et convicti fuerint vel eos susceperint vel quamcumque opem eis intulerint, sive masculi sive feminae sunt, cuiuscumque condicionis vel gradus vel dignitatis, poenae tantummodo capitali subicimus, ut huic poenae omnes subiaceant, sive volentibus sive nolentibus virginibus seu aliis mulieribus tale facinus fuerit perpetratum. 3b. Si enim ipsi raptores metu atrocitatis poenae ab huiusmodi facinore temperaverint se, nulli mulieri sive volenti sive nolenti peccandi locus relinquetur, quia hoc ipsum velle mulieri ab insidiis nequissimi hominis qui meditatur rapinam inducitur. nisi etenim eam sollicitaverit, nisi odiosis artibus circumvenerit, non facit eam velle in tantum dedecus sese prodere. 3c. Parentibus, quorum maxime vindicta intererat, si patientiam praebuerint ac dolorem remiserint, deportatione plectendis. 4. Et si quis inter haec ministeria servilis condicionis fuerit deprehensus, citra sexus discretionem eum concremari iubemus, cum hoc etiam Constantiniana lege recte fuerat prospectum. 5. Omnibus legis Iuliae capitulis, quae de raptu virginum vel viduarum seu sanctimonialium sive antiquis legum libris sive in sacris constitutionibus posita sunt, de cetero abolitis, ut or any other person at all shall dare to disregard this. 2. Nor shall any never-married woman, widow, or any woman at all who has been abducted have the opportunity to demand her abductor as a husband, but their parents shall join them in lawful marriage to the man whom they (their parents) wish, with the exception of the abductor, because permission has in no way and at no time been conceded by Our Serenity for them to consent to those who in Our Commonwealth strive to marry by hostile means. For whoever wishes to marry a woman, whether free-born or freed, shall ask, consistently with Our laws and ancient custom, her parents or the other appropriate parties (in order that) a lawful marriage comes about through their consent.

3. The punishments, moreover, which We have mentioned above, that is, death and loss of property, We have set not only against ravishers but also against those who accompany them in the assault and act of ravishing. 3a. All others, whether men or women of whatever status, rank, or title, who are found to have known of and abetted such a crime and are convicted, or who harbor them (the ravishers) or offer them any help whatsoever, We subject only to capital punishment. Thus all shall be subject to this punishment, whether such a crime is committed with never-married or other women, with or without their consent.[84] 3b. For if abductors themselves abstain from a crime of his kind out of fear of the severity of the punishment, opportunity of wrongdoing will be left for no woman, willing or not, because this very wish is suggested to a woman through the wiles of the very worthless man who plans her abduction. For unless he importunes her, unless he besets her with his hateful contrivances, he does not bring it about that she wishes to betray herself to such a great disgrace. 3c.[85] If the parents, for whom vengeance would be in their utmost interest, show indulgence and forgo their indignation, they shall be punished with capital exile (deportatio). 4. Moreover, if someone of slave status is caught providing such assistance, We order that without distinction of sex he or she shall be burned alive, since this too was properly provided for in the law of Constantine.[86] 5. Those rules set forth in all chapters of the lex Julia concerning the abduction of never-married women, widows and female monastics,[87] in the ancient books of laws, or in imperial constitutions, are henceforth abolished, so that only this law shall suffice for all in this title

[84] Blume: "The primary meaning [of raptus and rapere] was 'abduction' and 'abduct' by force. Hence the foregoing punished abduction of a woman for the purpose of carnal intercourse, or, in the case of widows and virgins, for the purpose of marriage. It was in part the aim of this law not to permit any marriage except with the consent of the father." As the text implies, in some cases the abduction was staged with the consent of the bride-to-be as a way of evading a marriage arranged by her father or other relatives.

[85] = (in part) C.Th. 9.24.1.4.

[86] C.Th. 9.24.1.5.

[87] Since Diocletian's day, at least, abduction was punished under the lex Iulia de vi: C. 9.12.3.

haec tantummodo lex in hoc capite pro omnibus sufficiat. 6. Quae de sanctimonialibus etiam virginibus et viduis locum habere sancimus.

D. XV k. Dec. Constantinopoli dn. Iustiniano pp. A. III cons.

XIIII De Emendatione Servorum

[1] Imp. Constantinus A. ad Bassum. pr. Si virgis aut loris servum dominus adflixerit aut custodiae causa in vincula coniecerit, dierum distinctione sive interpretatione depulsa nullum criminis metum mortuo servo sustineat. 1. Nec vero immoderate suo iure utatur, sed tunc reus homicidii sit, si voluntate eum ictu fustis aut lapidis occiderit vel certe telo usus letale vulnus inflixerit aut suspendi laqueo praeceperit vel iussione taetra praecipitandum esse mandaverit aut veneni virus infuderit vel dilaniaverit poenis publicis corpus, ferarum unguibus latera persecando vel exurendo oblatis ignibus membra, aut tabescentes artus atro sanguine permixta sanie defluentes prope in ipsis adegerit cruciatibus vitam relinquere saevitia immanium barbarorum.

D. V id. Mai. Romae Constantino A. V et Licinio conss.

XV De Emendatione Propinquorum

[1] Impp. Valentinianus et Valens AA. ad senatum. pr. In corrigendis minoribus pro qualitate delicti senioribus propinquis tribuimus potestatem, ut, quos ad vitae decora domesticae laudis exempla non provocant, saltem correctionis medicina compellat. 1. Neque nos in puniendis morum vitiis potestatem in immensum extendi volumus, sed iure patrio auctoritas corrigat propinqui iuvenis erratum et privata (caput). 6. We ordain that the rules for female monastics shall also apply to never-married women and widows.

Given November 17, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Our Lord Justinian, Ever Augustus, for the third time (533).

Fourteenth Title Disciplining Slaves

[1][88] Emperor CONSTANTINE Augustus to Bassus. pr. If a master punishes a slave with rods or straps, or throws him or her into chains as a means of keeping the slave in custody, he or she shall have no fear of a criminal charge if the slave dies, the question of when this happens and (all) legal technicalities being rendered irrelevant. 1. Nor shall he however enjoy this right without limitation, but he shall be prosecuted for murder (homicidium) if he kills the slave through a deliberate blow of a club or a stone, or at any rate inflicts a fatal blow through use of a weapon,[89] commands the slave to be hung by a noose, issues a terrible order that the slave be flung headlong from a height, administers a venomous poison, or mutilates the slave's body as a punishment inflicted in public, such as tearing his flesh with the claws of wild beasts or burning his limbs by the application of flames, or if he, in the savage manner of monstrous barbarians, forces the parts of a slave's body, wasting away and dripping black blood mixed with gore, to forsake life almost in the midst of the torments themselves.

Given May 11, at Rome, in the consulship of Constantine Augustus, for the fifth time, and Licinius (319).

Fifteenth Title Disciplining Close Relatives

[1][90] Emperors VALENTINIAN and VALENS Augusti to the Senate. pr. We grant to older close relatives (seniores propinqui) the power (potestas) to correct younger ones in proportion to the severity of the offense, in order that at least the medicine (medicina) of correction compels those whom praiseworthy precedents within the family do not inspire to lead a becoming lifestyle. 1. Nor do We wish that the power of punishing defects in character and conduct be extended without limit, but authority by a father's right (iure patrio auctoritas) shall correct and repress, by a private punishment, the mistakes of a young close relative.

[88] = (with changes) C.Th. 9.12.1.
[89] See Gaius, D. 50.16.233.2.
[90] = C.Th. 9.13.1.

animadversione compescat. 2. Quod si atrocitas facti ius domesticae emendationis excedit, placet enormis delicti reos dedi iudicum notioni.

D. prid. k. Dec. Valentiniano et Valente AA. conss.

XVI Ad Legem Corneliam de Sicariis

[1] Imp. Antoninus A. Aurelio Herculiano et aliis militibus. pr. Frater vester rectius fecerit, si se praesidi provinciae obtulerit: qui[viii] si probaverit non occidendi animo Iustum a se percussum esse, remissa homicidii poena secundum disciplinam militarem sententiam proferet. 1. Crimen enim contrahitur, si et voluntas nocendi intercedat. ceterum ea, quae ex improviso casu potius quam fraude accidunt, fato plerumque, non noxae imputantur.

PP. prid. k. Febr. Laeto II et Cereale conss.

[2] Imp. Gordianus A. Quintiano. Is, qui adgressorem vel quemcunque alium in dubio vitae discrimine constitutus occiderit, nullam ob id factum calumniam metuere debet.

PP. III non. April. Arriano et Papo conss.

[3] Imp. Gallienus A. Munatio. Si, ut adlegas, latrocinantem peremisti, dubium non est eum, qui inferendae caedis voluntate praecesserat, iure caesum videri.

PP. XIII k. Febr. Valeriano et Lucillo conss.

[4] Exemplum sacrarum litterarum Diocletiani et Maximiani AA. Agathoni. Eum, qui adseverat homicidium se non voluntate, sed casu

[viii] cui

2. But if the outrageousness of the deed exceeds the limits of the right of household correction, it is Our decision to hand over the parties guilty of a monstrous offense to the jurisdiction of judges.

Given November 30, in the consulship of Valentinian and Valens Augusti (365).

Sixteenth Title The Lex Cornelia on Murderers[91]

[1] Emperor ANTONINUS Augustus to Aurelius Herculianus and other soldiers. pr.[92] Your brother would have done better if he had handed himself over to the governor of the province. But if he shows him that he struck Justus without the intention of killing him, he (the governor) will forgo the penalty for homicide and pronounce sentence pursuant to military regulations. 1.[93] The explanation is that the criminal offense (of homicide) is committed when the intent of causing harm is also present. But those actions that occur unexpectedly because of chance (casus) rather than from bad motives (fraus) are generally imputed to fate, not fault (noxa).

Posted January 31, in the consulship of Laetus, for the second time, and Cerealis (215).

[2] Emperor GORDIAN Augustus to Quintianus. He who kills an attacker or anyone else when in danger of losing his own life ought not to fear a malicious prosecution (calumnia) on that account.

Posted April 3, in the consulship of Arrianus and Papus (243).

[3][94] Emperor GALLIENUS Augustus to Munatius. If, as you assert, you killed a man engaged in the act of (violent) robbery, there is no doubt that he who first intended to cause bloodshed is deemed to have been justifiably killed (iure caesus).

Posted January 20, in the consulship of Valerian and Lucillus (265).

[4][95] A copy of an imperial letter from DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti to Agatho. He (the defendant) asserts that he killed a man not deliberately [91] See D. 48.8. Sicarii, literally "dagger-wielders," "assassins," are construed as "murderers" more generally. In general, "homicide" is technically correct in English when malice aforethought is not an issue.

[92] = (with minor changes) Collatio 1.8.

[93] = (in part, with minor changes, from another constitution by Alexander Severus in 222) Collatio 1.9.

[94] Some scholars insert here a constitution found at Edictum Theodorici 15: "If someone drives back an assassin coming at him with a sword, he shall not be considered a killer."

[95] = (in part, with minor changes) Collatio 1.10.

fortuito fecisse, cum calcis ictu mortis occasio praebita videatur, si hoc ita est neque super hoc ambigi poterit, omni metu ac suspicione, quam ex admissae rei discrimine sustinet, secundum id quod adnotatione nostra comprehensum est volumus liberari.

D. prid. k. Dec. Sirmi ipsis AA. IIII et III conss.

[5] Idem AA. et CC. Agotio. Si quis te reum Corneliae legis de sicariis fecerit, innocentia purgari crimen, non adulta aetate defendi convenit.

S. VI k. Nov. Romae CC. conss.

[6] Idem AA. et CC. Philisco. Is, qui cum telo ambulaverit hominis necandi causa, sicut is, qui hominem occiderit vel cuius dolo malo factum erit commissum, legis Corneliae de sicariis poena coercetur.

S. VII k. Ian. Nicomediae CC. conss.

[7] Imppp. Valentinianus Valens et Gratianus AAA. ad Probum pp. Si quis necandi infantis piaculum adgressus adgressave sit, sciat se capitali supplicio esse puniendum.

PP. VII id. Febr. Romae Gratiano A. III et Equitio conss.

[8] Impppp. Gratianus Valentinianus Theodosius et Arcadius AAAA. Cynegio pp. Si forte mulier marito mortis parasse insidias vel quolibet alio genere voluntatem occidendi habuisse inveniatur, vel forte maritus eo modo insectetur uxorem, in eadem quaestione ab omni familia non solum mariti, sed etiam uxoris, quae tamen tunc temporis domi fuerit, quaerendum est sine cuiusquam defensione.

D. III id. Dec. Arcadio A. et Bautone conss.

(voluntas), but through the random operation of chance (casus fortuitus), a blow from a kick evidently being the cause of death. If this is true and the point cannot be doubted, We wish that he be freed from all fear and suspicion weighing upon him as a consequence of committing this act, pursuant to what is embraced by Our written instructions (adnotatio).

Posted November 30, at Sirmium, in the consulship of the Augusti, for the fourth and third time, respectively (290).

[5] The same Augusti and the Caesars to Agotius. If someone prosecutes you under the lex Cornelia on Murderers, it is appropriate that you clear yourself of this crime by proving your innocence, not by defending yourself through your age, as (i.e., since you are) an adult (non adulta aetate).

Written October 27, at Rome,[96] in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[6] The same Augusti and Caesars to Philiscus. He who walks about with a weapon in order to murder someone, just as he who murders a person or he through whose bad intent (dolus malus) this (offense) is committed, is liable to the penalty of the lex Cornelia on Murderers.

Written December 26, at Nicomedia, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[7][97] Emperors VALENTINIAN, VALENS, and GRATIAN Augusti to Probus, Praetorian Prefect. If anyone, male or female, commits the wicked crime of infanticide, let him or her know that the punishment of the capital penalty (capitale supplicium) must be inflicted upon him or her.

Given February 7, at Rome, in the consulship of Gratian Augustus, for the third time, and Equitius (374).

[8][98] Emperors GRATIAN, VALENTINIAN, THEODOSIUS, and ARCADIUS Augusti to Cynegius, Praetorian Prefect. If by chance a wife is discovered to have laid a deadly trap for her husband or to have intended to kill him in some other manner, or (if) by chance a husband pursues his wife in like manner,[99] judicial examination (of the slaves, under torture) must be held, without excepting anyone, for the entire slave household (familia) not only of the husband, but also of the wife, nevertheless limited to those who were present at that time in the house.

Given December 11, in the consulship of Arcadius Augustus and Bauto (385).

[96] According to Krüger this location is not correct.
[97] = (with changes) C.Th. 9.14.1; cf. C.Th. 8.51.2.
[98] = (in part, with changes) C.Th. 9.7.4.
[99] What follows = C. 9.9.31.

XVII De His Qui Parentes vel Liberos Occiderunt

[1] Imp. Constantinus A. ad Verinum vicarium Africae. Si quis in parentis aut filii aut omnino adfectionis eius, quae nuncupatione parricidii continetur, fata properaverit, sive clam sive palam id fuerit enisus, poena parricidii punietur neque gladio neque ignibus neque ulla alia sollemni poena subiugetur, sed insutus culleo et inter eius ferales angustias comprehensus serpentium contuberniis misceatur et, ut regionis qualitas tulerit, vel in vicinum mare vel in amnem proiciatur, ut omni elementorum usu vivus carere incipiat, ut ei caelum superstiti, terra mortuo auferatur.

D. XVI k. Dec. Licinio V et Crispo C. conss. accepta prid. id. Mart. Carthagine Constantino A. V et Licinio C. conss.

XVIII De Maleficis et Mathematicis et Ceteris Similibus

[1] Imp. Antoninus A. Plus est hominem veneno extinguere quam occidere gladio.

PP. sine die et consule.

[2] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. et CC. Tiberio. Artem geometriae discere atque exerceri publice intersit. ars autem mathematica damnabilis interdicta est.

S. XIII k. Sept. Sirmi CC. conss.

[3] Imp. Constantinus A. ad Maximum. pr. Nullus haruspex, nullus sacerdos, nullus eorum, qui huic ritui adsolent ministrare, limen alterius accedat nec ob alteram causam, sed huiusmodi hominum amicitia quamvis vetus repellatur: concremando illo haruspice, qui ad domum alienam accesserit, et illo in insulam detrudendo post ademptionem

Seventeenth Title Those Who Have Killed Their Parents or Children[100]

[1][101] Emperor Constantine Augustus to Verinus, Vicar of Africa. If anyone hastens the death of a parent, child, or any other close relative (adfectio) at all that is included in the class of "parricide," whether acting secretly or openly, he or she will be punished with the penalty given for parricide, meaning he or she shall not suffer execution by the sword, by being burned alive, or by any other formally prescribed means. Instead, he shall be sewn up in a sack and, within its dismal confines, shall enjoy the company of serpents. And, as the topography of the place allows, he shall be hurled into a nearby stretch of sea or a river, in order that, while still alive, he begins to be deprived of every benefit of the elements, as the (sight of the) sky is taken away while he still lives and the earth when dead.

Given November 16, in the consulship of Licinius, for the fifth time, and Crispus, Caesars (318); received March 14, at Carthage, in the consulship of Constantine Augustus, for the fifth time, and Licinius Caesar (318–319).[102]

Eighteenth Title Sorcerers, Astrologers, and Others Like Them

[1] Emperor Antoninus Augustus. It is worse to kill someone with poison than with a sword.

Posted without day or year.

[2] Emperors Diocletian and Maximian Augusti and the Caesars to Tiberius. Learning and practicing the skill of surveyor (ars geometriae) shall be (deemed to be) in the public interest. But the despicable skill of astrology (ars mathematica) is forbidden.

Written August 20, at Sirmium, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[3][103] Emperor Constantine Augustus to Maximus. pr. No diviner (haruspex), no priest, no one who customarily performs rituals of this kind shall cross the threshold of another, not even for another reason (than divination), but friendship with such persons, even when of long standing, shall be renounced. Any diviner who visits someone else's house shall be burned alive, and that person who summons him through persuasion or material inducements shall

[100] See D. 48.9.
[101] = (with minor changes) C.Th. 9.15.1; Inst. 4.18.6.
[102] The year for "received" is likely 319: Projet Volterra.
[103] = (with changes) C.Th. 9.16.1.

bonorum, qui eum evocaverit suasionibus vel praemiis. 1. Accusatorem autem huius criminis non delatorem esse, sed dignum magis praemio arbitramur.

PP. k. Febr. Romae Constantino A. v et Licinio C. conss.

[4] Idem A. et C. ad Bassum pp. pr. Eorum est scientia punienda et severissimis merito legibus vindicanda, qui magicis adcincti artibus aut contra salutem hominum moliti aut pudicos animos ad libidinem deflexisse detegentur. 1. Nullis vero criminationibus implicanda sunt remedia humanis quaesita corporibus aut in agrestibus locis innocenter adhibita suffragia, ne maturis vindemiis metuerentur imbres aut ruentis grandinis lapidatione quaterentur, quibus non cuiusque salus aut aestimatio laederetur, sed quorum proficerent actus, ne divina munera et labores hominum sternerentur.

D. x k. Iun. Aquileiae Crispo et Constantino CC. conss.

[5] Imp. Constantius A. ad populum. Nemo haruspicem consulat aut mathematicum, nemo hariolum. augurum et vatum prava confessio conticescat. Chaldaei ac magi et ceteri, quos maleficos ob facinorum magnitudinem vulgus appellat, nec ad hanc partem aliquid moliantur. sileat omnibus perpetuo divinandi curiositas. etenim supplicium capitis feret gladio ultore prostratus, quicumque iussis obsequium denegaverit.

D. VIII k. Febr. Mediolani Constantio A. VIIII et Iuliano C. II conss.

[6] Idem A. et C. ad populum. Multi magicis artibus usi elementa turbare, vitas insontium labefactare non dubitant et manibus accitis audent ventilare, ut quisque suos conficiat malis artibus inimicos. hos, quoniam naturae peregrini sunt, feralis pestis absumat.

be exiled to an island after his or her property is confiscated. 1. We consider, however, the prosecutor of this offense not as an informer (delator) but as someone instead deserving of a reward.

Posted February 1, at Rome, in the consulship of Constantine Augustus, for the fifth time, and Licinius Caesar (319).[104]

[4][105] The same Augustus and LICINIUS Caesar to Bassus, Praetorian Prefect. pr. There shall be punishment and vengeance deservedly inflicted by the most severe laws upon the expertise of those who are discovered to be equipped with magic skills, to have meddled with people's health or to have turned chaste minds toward lust. 1. But criminal accusations shall not impede remedies devised for human bodies and nostrums, innocently applied in rural districts, to check concern for heavy downpours of rain falling upon grape-vintages ripe for harvest or their being damaged by the impact of falling hail. By such means no one's safety or reputation is harmed, but their actions bring it about that divine gifts and human efforts are not brought to naught.

Given May 23, at Aquileia, in the consulship of Crispus and Constantine Caesars (321).[106]

[5][107] Emperor CONSTANTIUS Augustus to the People. No one shall consult a diviner (haruspex) or astrologer, nor shall anyone (consult) a soothsayer (hariolus). The depraved profession of augurs and seers shall fall silent. Chaldeans, magicians (magi), and the others, whom the common people call sorcerers (malefici) on account of the enormity of their misdeeds, shall not contrive anything of this sort. Everyone's interest in foretelling the future shall forever cease. For whoever refuses obedience to these commands will endure the death penalty (supplicium capitis), laid low by an avenging sword.

Given January 25, at Milan, in the consulship of Constantius Augustus, for the ninth time, and Julian Caesar, for the second time (357).

[6][108] The same Augustus and JULIAN Caesar to the People. Many persons, using magic skills, do not hesitate to disturb the elements and endanger the lives of innocent parties. Having summoned the spirits of the departed, they dare to agitate (them), in order that each person destroy his or her personal enemies through evil practices. Because they are alien to nature, a savage destruction shall carry them off.

[104] Seeck gives February 1, 320; and the Projet Volterra prefers 320 for "received."
[105] = C.Th. 9.16.3.
[106] The year 318 is more likely: Seeck and Projet Volterra.
[107] = (with minor changes) C.Th. 9.16.4.
[108] = (with minor changes) C.Th. 9.16.5.

D. prid. non. Dec. Mediolani Constantio A. VIIII et Iuliano C. conss.

[7] Idem A. et C. ad Taurum pp. pr. Etsi excepta tormentis sunt corpora honoribus praeditorum (praeter illa videlicet crimina, quae legibus demonstrantur), etsi homines magi, in quacumque sint parte terrarum, humani generis inimici credendi sunt, tamen quoniam qui in comitatu nostro sunt ipsam pulsant propemodum maiestatem, si quis magus vel magicis contaminibus adsuetus, qui maleficus vulgi consuetudine nuncupatur, aut haruspex aut hariolus aut certe augur vel etiam mathematicus aut narrandis somniis occultans artem aliquam divinandi aut certe aliquid horum simile exercens in comitatu meo vel Caesaris fuerit deprehensus, praesidio dignitatis cruciatus et tormenta non fugiat. 1. Si convictus ad proprium facinus detegentibus repugnaverit pernegando, sit eculeo deditus ungulisque sulcantibus latera perferat poenas proprio dignas facinore.

D. III non. Iul. Arimini Datiano et Cereale conss.

[8] Impp. Valentinianus et Valens AA. ad Modestum pp. Culpa similis est prohibita discere quam docere.

D. prid. id. Dec. Constantinopoli Valentiniano et Valente AA. conss.

[9] Imppp. Valentinianus Theodosius et Arcadius AAA. Albino pu. pr. Quicumque maleficiorum labe pollutum audierit deprehenderit occupaverit, ilico ad publicum protrahat et iudiciorum oculis communis hostem salutis ostendat. 1. Quod si quisquam ex agitatoribus (id est aurigis) seu ex quolibet alio genere hominum contra hoc interdictum venire temptaverit aut clandestinis suppliciis etiam manifestum reum maleficae artis oppresserit, ultimum supplicium non evadat geminae

Given December 4, at Milan, in the consulship of Constantius Augustus, for the ninth time, and Julian Caesar, for the second time (357).[109]

[7][110] The same Augustus and Caesar to Taurus, Praetorian Prefect. pr. Although the bodies of public officials are exempted from torture – apart from, obviously, (cases concerning) those offenses set forth in the laws – and although magicians (magi), in whatever part of the earth they are found, shall be regarded as enemies of the human race, nonetheless, because there are those in Our court who come close to committing treason (maiestas) itself, if any of them is discovered, in my court or in that of the Caesar, to be a magician (magus) or habituated to magic pollutions, one who is customarily styled by the common people as a "sorcerer" (maleficus), or diviner (haruspex), soothsayer (hariolus), or, certainly, an augur or even an astrologer, someone who conceals some skill of divination for the purpose of elucidating dreams or at any rate who practices something similar to these things, he shall not, through the protection of his rank, escape torments and tortures. 1. If, upon conviction, he contests through staunch denial those revealing his own crimes, he shall be given over to a wooden rack in the shape of a horse (eculeus) and endure his sides being torn by furrowing talons, penalties worthy of his misdeed.

Given July 5, at Rimini, in the consulship of Datianus and Cerealis (358).[111]

[8][112] Emperors VALENTINIAN and VALENS Augusti to Modestus, Praetorian Prefect. Learning prohibited things is blameworthy conduct (culpa), not unlike teaching them.

Given December 12, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Valentinian and Valens Augusti (365).[113]

[9][114] Emperors VALENTINIAN, THEODOSIUS, and ARCADIUS Augusti to Albinus, City Prefect. pr. Whoever hears, catches, or seizes someone stained with the blot of sorcery shall immediately drag him or her forth in public and exhibit this enemy of the common safety to the eyes of the courts. 1. But if one of the drivers – that is, charioteers – or any other kind of person should attempt to violate this prohibition, or by covert punishments should even put to death someone manifestly guilty of a sorcerer's practices, he shall not escape the death penalty (ultimum supplicium), being liable to a double suspicion:

[109] The year is more likely 356: Seeck and Projet Volterra.
[110] = (with minor changes) C.Th. 9.16.6.
[111] The year is more likely 357: Projet Volterra.
[112] = (in part, with minor changes) C.Th. 9.16.8.
[113] The precise year is uncertain: 365 or 370. Seeck gives December 12, 370; Schmidt-Hofner has the constitution "given" December 12, 370, or "posted" December 12, 373.
[114] = (with minor changes) C.Th. 9.16.11.

suspicionis obnoxius, quod aut publicum reum, ne facinoris socios publicaret, severitati legum et debitae subtraxerit quaestioni aut proprium fortassis inimicum sub huiusmodi vindictae nomine consilio atrociore confecerit.

D. XVII k. Sept. Romae Timasio et Promoto conss.

XVIIII De Sepulchro Violato

[1] Imp. Gordianus A. Zenoni. Res religioni destinatas, quin immo religionis effectas, scientes qui contigerint et emere et distrahere non dubitaverint, tametsi iure venditio non subsistat, laesae tamen religionis in crimen inciderunt.

PP. III k. Mart. Sabino II et Venusto conss.

[2] Imp. Constantius A. ad Titianum pu. Si servus in demoliendis sepulchris fuerit apprehensus, si id sine domini scientia faciat, metallo addicetur, si vero domini auctoritate vel iussione urguetur, relegatione plectetur. et si forte detractum aliquid de sepulchris ad domum eius villamque provectum reperietur, villa sive domus aut aedificium quodcumque erit fisci viribus vindicetur.

D. VII k. Iul. Mediolani Acyndino et Proculo conss.

[3] Idem A. ad Limenium pp. Si quis sepulchrum laesurus attigerit, locorum iudices si hoc vindicare neglexerint, non minus nota quam viginti librarum auri in sepulchrorum violatores statuta poena grassetur, ut eam largitionibus nostris inferre cogantur.

D. V k. April. Limenio et Catullino conss.

[4] Idem A. ad populum. pr. Qui sepulchra violant, domus ut ita dixerim defunctorum, geminum videntur facinus perpetrare: nam et sepultos either that he withdrew someone guilty of a public criminal offense (reus publicus) from the severity of the laws and the due scrutiny of a trial, in order that he or she not disclose any partners in crime; or that he perhaps destroyed his personal enemy under title of a punishment of this kind through a rather outrageous scheme.

Given August 16, at Rome, in the consulship of Timasius and Promotus (389).

Nineteenth Title Violation of Tombs[115]

[1] Emperor GORDIAN Augustus to Zeno. Those who knowingly happen to buy and sell, and who do not hesitate to do this, property dedicated to a religious purpose, or rather productive of a religious purpose, even though the sale (itself) is void by operation of law, nevertheless have implicated themselves in the crime of outrage to religious scruple.

Posted February 28, in the consulship of Sabinus, for the second time, and Venustus (240).

[2][116] Emperor CONSTANTIUS Augustus to Titianus, City Prefect. If a slave is seized in the act of demolishing tombs, and if he does this without his master's knowledge, he will be bound over to the mines. But if he is compelled to act by the authorization or command of his master, he will be punished with exile (relegatio). And if anything removed from the tombs happens to be discovered to have been brought to his (the master's) house or villa, the villa, house, or any other kind of building will be claimed for the resources of the Treasury.

Given June 25, at Milan, in the consulship of Acyndinus and Proculus (340).

[3][117] The same Augustus to Limenius, Praetorian Prefect. If anyone touches a tomb with the intent of wreaking outrage upon it, (and) if the judges in that area neglect to punish this act, the mark of legal infamy (nota) shall fall upon them no less than the penalty of 20 pounds of gold established for those who outrage tombs, in order that they are compelled to contribute this fine to (fund) Our acts of generosity.

Given March 28, in the consulship of Limenius and Catullinus (349).

[4][118] The same Augustus to the People. pr. Those who outrage tombs – so to speak, the houses of the dead – are deemed to commit a double offense. This

[115] See D. 47.12.
[116] = (with changes) C.Th. 9.17.1.
[117] = (with changes) C.Th. 9.17.2.2.
[118] = (with minor changes) C.Th. 9.17.4.

spoliant destruendo et vivos polluunt fabricando. 1. Si quis igitur de sepulchro abstulerit saxa vel marmora vel columnas aliamve quamcumque materiam, fabricandi gratia sive id fecerit venditurus, decem pondo auri cogatur fisco inferre, sive quis propria sepulchra defendens hanc in iudicium querellam detulerit sive quicumque alius accusaverit vel officium nuntiaverit. 2. Quae poena priscae severitati accedit: nihil enim derogatum est illi supplicio, quod sepulchra violantibus videtur impositum. 3. Huic autem poenae subiacebunt et qui corpora sepulta aut reliquias contrectaverint.

D. id. Iun. Mediolani Constantio A. VIIII et Iuliano C. II conss.

[5] Imp. Iulianus A. ad populum. pr. Pergit audacia ad busta diem functorum et aggeres consecratos, cum et lapidem hinc movere et terram sollicitare et cespitem vellere proximum sacrilegio maiores semper habuerunt: sed et ornamenta quaedam tricliniis aut porticibus auferri de sepulchris. 1. Quibus primis consulentes, ne in piaculum incidant contaminata religione bustorum, hoc fieri prohibemus poena sacrilegii cohibentes.

D. prid. id. Febr. Antiochiae Iuliano A. IIII et Sallustio conss.

[6] Imp. Iustinus A. Theodoto pu. Cum sit iniustum et nostris alienum temporibus iniuriam fieri reliquiis defunctorum ab his, qui debitorem sibi esse mortuum dicendo debitumque exigendo sepulturam eius impediunt, ne in posterum eadem iniuria procederet cogendis his ad quos funus mortui pertinet sua iura perdere, ea quidem, quae mortuo posito ante sepulturam eius facta fuerint vel exigendo quod debitum esse dicitur vel confessiones aliquas aut fideiussorem aut pignora capiendo, penitus amputari praecipimus: redditis vero pignoribus vel pecuniis quae solutae sunt vel absolutis fideiussoribus et generaliter omnibus sine ulla innovatione in pristinum statum reducendis principale negotium ex integro disceptari: eum vero, qui in huiusmodi deprehensus is because they both rob the dead by destroying and contaminate the living by building. 1. If, then, someone carries off from a grave stone, marble, columns, or any other kind of building material, whether he does this with the intention of using it himself or selling it, he shall be compelled to pay a fine to the Treasury of 10 pounds of gold, no matter whether someone brings a complaint to protect his own (relatives') tombs, or anyone else brings an accusation, or the administrative staff reports this. 2. This penalty is consistent with the severity of long ago. For nothing has been taken away from that penalty which appears to have been inflicted on those who violate tombs. 3. Moreover, those who physically interfere with buried bodies or human remains will also be liable to this penalty.

Given June 13,[119] at Milan, in the consulship of Constantius Augustus, for the ninth time, and Julian Caesar, for the second time (357).

[5][120] Emperor JULIAN Augustus to the People. pr. Audacity (currently) extends to the tombs of the dead and the consecrated mounds, whereas our ancestors always regarded it as the closest thing to sacrilege to displace a stone from there, to disturb the dirt, or to tear up the sod. But (now We see that) certain decorations are even carried off from tombs for dining rooms and porticos. 1. Consulting their interest first of all, in order that they not fall into a wicked act because religious scruple (religio) regarding the tombs is contaminated, We prohibit the commission of such acts by repressing them with the penalty of sacrilege.

Given February 12, at Antioch, in the consulship of Julian Augustus, for the fourth time, and Sallustius (363).

[6] Emperor JUSTIN Augustus to Theodorus, City Prefect. It is unjust and foreign to the policy of Our reign that outrage be inflicted upon the remains of deceased persons by those who – by claiming the decedent as their debtor and by demanding the repayment of the debt – obstruct his or her burial. For this reason, in order that the same outrage not continue indefinitely by compelling those responsible for the funeral of the decedent to lose their rights, We instruct that anything, certainly, that is done between the laying out of the decedent and burial, either by demanding what is said to be owed or by taking some admissions (of liability), sureties, or pledges – shall be completely voided. In fact, the pledges (taken) or any money which has been paid shall be returned, the sureties shall be released, and in general everything shall be restored to its previous state without any alteration, and (then) the main issue shall be examined anew. (We instruct) moreover that anyone caught in the commission of an offense of this kind shall pay 50 pounds of gold or that, if [119] The day is more likely January 13: Projet Volterra. Seeck gives June 13, 389.

[120] = (in part, with changes) C.Th. 9.17.5.

fuerit flagitio, quinquaginta libras auri dependere vel, si minus idoneus sit ad persolvendum, suo corpore sub competenti iudice poenas luere.
D. k. Dec. Constantinopoli Olybrio vc. cons.

XX Ad Legem Fabiam

[1] Imp. Antoninus A. Placido. Pater tuus adversus eum, a quo sollicitatam ancillam, plagio quoque facto exportatam queritur, apud suum iudicem civiliter in rem actione instituta consistat. si in causa tenuerit, etiam legis Fabiae crimen persequi poterit. quod si per violentiam mancipium abreptum est, accusationem vis non prohibetur intendere.
PP. XII k. April. Antonino A. IIII et Balbino conss.

[2] Idem A. Aurelio. Si ab Aeliano servum tuum susceptum et aliquamdiu occultatum moxque eo suadente fugae datum probare potes, legis Fabiae crimen per te vel actionem ad eam rem propositam, id est servi corrupti, per procuratorem tuum persequi potes.
PP. VII k. Aug. Antonino A. IIII et Balbino conss.

[3] Imp. Alexander A. Cornelio. Ut legis Fabiae poena debeatur, in crimen subscriptio et accusatio et sententia necessaria est.
PP. VIII k. Iul. Iuliano et Crispino conss.

[4] Imp. Gordianus A. Paulinae. Non valet procuratoris sententia, si vicem praesidis non tueatur, qui legi Fabiae locum esse pronuntiavit, cum eius legis disceptatio ad praesidis provinciae pertineat notionem.
PP. III non. Dec. Gordiano A. et Aviola conss.

he is not sufficiently wealthy to pay this, he shall pay a penalty with his body before the appropriate judge.

Given December 1, at Constantinople, in the consulship of the vir clarissimus Olybrius (526).

Twentieth Title The Lex Fabia[121]

[1] Emperor ANTONINUS Augustus to Placidus. Under a private law property action (actio in rem), your father shall proceed before the appropriate judge against the man by whom he complains his slave woman was induced to flee and, through an act of kidnapping (plagium), into the bargain compelled to migrate. If he succeeds in that case, he will also be able to pursue a criminal charge under the lex Fabia. But if the slave was violently abducted, he is not prevented from raising a charge of force (vis).

Posted March 21, in the consulship of Antoninus Augustus, for the fourth time, and Balbinus (213).

[2] The same Augustus to Aurelius. If you are able to prove that your slave was taken in and hidden by Aelianus for a period of time and that, then, upon his (Aelianus') instigation, the slave took to flight, you can yourself pursue a criminal charge under the lex Fabia, or through your procurator the private law action appropriate for this matter, that is, (the action) for corrupting a slave (actio servi corrupti).

Posted July 26, in the consulship of Antoninus Augustus, for the fourth time, and Balbinus (213).

[3] Emperor ALEXANDER Augustus to Cornelius. In order that the penalty of the lex Fabia be invoked, a signed complaint on this charge, a trial, and the issuing of a sentence are necessary.

Posted June 24, in the consulship of Julian and Crispinus (224).

[4] Emperor GORDIAN Augustus to Paulina. A sentence pronounced by an imperial procurator has no force, unless he is acting in place of the governor when he found that the lex Fabia had been violated, since trying cases under this statute falls under the jurisdiction of the provincial governor.

Posted December 3, in the consulship of Gordian Augustus and Aviola (239).

[121] See D. 48.15. The lex Fabia, probably of late Republican date, established penalties against unjustifiably appropriating to oneself the rights of an owner over the slave of another or even over a free person. Examples of such behavior include kidnapping, treating a free man as a slave, or persuading another's slave to flee his master.

[5] Impp. Valerianus et Gallienus AA. et Valerianus C. Iulianae. Si fratrem tuum adversarius supprimit, legis eum Fabiae, adito praeside provinciae reum debes postulare.

PP. non. Mai Aemiliano et Basso conss.

[6] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. Marcianae. In fuga servum constitutum neque vendere neque donare licet. unde intellegis te in legem incidisse, quae super huiusmodi delictis certam poenam fisco inferendam statuit, exceptis coheredibus et sociis, quibus in divisione communium rerum licitationem de fugitivo servo invicem facere permissum est. ita vero liceat fugitivum vendere, ut tunc venditio valeat, quando ab emptore requisitus fuerit deprehensus.

PP. III id. Mart. Diocletiano et Maximiano AA. conss.

[7] Idem AA. Maximo pu. pr. Quoniam servos a plagiariis alienari ex urbe significas atque ita interdum ingenuos homines eorum scelere asportari solere perscribis, horum delictorum licentiae maiore severitate occurrendum esse decernimus. 1. Ac propterea si quem in huiusmodi facinore deprehenderis, capite eum plecti non dubitabis, ut poenae genere deterreri ceteri possint, quominus istiusmodi audacia vel servos vel liberos ab urbe abstrahere atque alienare audeant.

D. VI id. Dec. Diocletiano III et Maximiano AA. conss.

[8] Idem AA. Constant. Praeses provinciae discreto prius iure dominii intellegat, audiendum sit plagii crimen nec ne. nam si proprietatis tuae mancipium esse constiterit, expirasse criminis intentionem emersa dominii luce manifestabit: si vero servum alienum esse constiterit, post disceptatam proprietatis quaestionem et criminis causam audiet.

PP. VIII k. Sept. ipsis AA. IIII et III conss.

[5] Emperors VALERIAN and GALLIENUS Augusti and VALERIAN Caesar to Juliana. If your opponent is detaining your brother, you ought to approach the provincial governor and make a judicial application to prosecute him under the lex Fabia.

Posted May 7, in the consulship of Aemilianus and Bassus (259).

[6] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti to Marciana. It is not permitted to sell or to give as a gift a fugitive slave. From this you understand that you have violated the statute,[122] which for offenses of this kind has established that a fixed penalty shall be paid to the Treasury. An exception is made for co-heirs and partners (socii), for whom it is allowed, in the division of joint property, to offer bids for the fugitive slave among themselves. In this way it shall indeed be permitted to sell a fugitive slave, so that the sale is valid at the point when he or she is tracked down and seized by the buyer.

Posted March 13, in the consulship of the Augusti (287).

[7] The same Augusti to Maximus, City Prefect. pr. Since you indicate that slaves are being removed (for sale) from the City (Rome) by kidnappers and you write that at times, in a similar way, free-born persons are accustomed to be carried off through their wicked actions, We decree that the outrageous presumptiveness of these offenses is to be met with greater severity. 1. And for this reason if you catch anyone in the commission of this kind of crime, you will not hesitate to inflict the death penalty (capite) upon him, in order that the rest can be deterred through this kind of penalty from daring, through boldness of this sort, to carry off from the capital and sell either slaves or free persons.

Given December 8, in the consulship of Diocletian, for the third time, and Maximian, Augusti (287).

[8] The same Augusti to Constans (?). The governor of the province, after first determining who has the right of ownership (of a slave), shall deduce whether a criminal charge of kidnapping (plagium) should be heard or not. For if it is decided that the slave is your property, it will be obvious, once clarity over the issue of ownership is achieved, that the ground for the charge has vanished. But if it is established that the slave belongs to someone else, after the issue of ownership is examined he (the governor) will hear the criminal case.

Posted August 25, in the consulship of the Augusti, for the fourth and third time, respectively (290).

[122] This appears in fact to be an SC, mentioned, for example, at Ulpian, D. 48.15.2.2–3.

[9] Idem AA. et CC. Eugenio. Eum, qui mancipium alienum celat, Fabiae legis crimine teneri non est incerti iuris.
S. id. Mai. Heracliae AA. conss.

[10] Idem AA. et CC. Dizae. Comparantem ab eo, qui abduxit plagio mancipia, si delicti socius non probetur, nullo crimine teneri convenit.
S. non. Nov. Lucione[ix] AA. conss.

[11] Idem AA. et CC. Ampliatae. Abducti plagio facta venditio statum non mutat: liberae enim personae sollicitatione crimen committitur, non condicioni praeiudicatur.
S. non. Nov. Lucionae[x] AA. conss.

[12] Idem AA. et CC. Muciano. Si quis servum fugitivum sciens cum rebus furtivis suscepit, cum horum nomine furti actione teneatur, haec tibi rector provinciae cum solita poena restitui efficiet. sed et si criminis plagii accusationem institueris, tibi audientiam praebere non dubitabit.
S. prid. id. Sept. Singiduni CC. conss.

[13] Idem AA. et CC. Severino. Plagii criminis accusatio publici sit iudicii.
S. v k. Dec. CC. conss.

[14] Idem AA. et CC. Callistheni. Plagii criminis accusatio cessat, si vos[xi] servos vel liberos adseverent qui suppressisse dicuntur, non commissi velandi, sed ad hanc opinionem iusta ducti ratione.
S. prid. non. Dec. Nicomediae CC. conss.

[ix] Lugio
[x] Lugio
[xi] suos

[9] The same Augusti and the Caesars to Eugenius. That he, who conceals someone else's slave, is liable on a charge under the lex Fabia is not an uncertain point of law (incertum ius).

Written May 15,[123] at Heraclea, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[10] The same Augusti and Caesars to Diza. It is appropriate that a person who buys slaves from another who has abducted them in an act of kidnapping (plagium), is liable under no criminal charge if he is not proved to be complicit in the crime.

Written November 5, at Luciona,[124] in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[11] The same Augusti and Caesars to Ampliata. The sale of a person abducted in an act of kidnapping (plagium) does not alter his or her status. This is because a crime that is committed through the luring away of a free person is without prejudice to his or her status.

Written November 5, at Luciona, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[12] The same Augusti and Caesars to Mucianus. If someone knowingly has sheltered a fugitive slave along with stolen property, since he is liable for these items on an action for theft (actio furti), the governor of the province will see to their being returned to you along with the customary penalty (inflicted on the defendant). Moreover, if you begin a prosecution on a charge of kidnapping (plagium), he will not hesitate to grant you a hearing.

Written September 12, at Singidunum (Belgrade), in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[13] The same Augusti and Caesars to Severinus. An accusation under a charge of kidnapping (plagium) shall be a matter for a public criminal court (iudicium publicum).

Written November 27, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[14] The same Augusti and Caesars to Callisthenes. A prosecution on a charge of kidnapping (plagium) fails if those who are said to have detained (persons) assert they are their own slaves or children, (if they were) led to this idea not to conceal a crime, but for an apposite reason.

Written December 4, at Nicomedia, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[123] The precise day is uncertain: Mommsen prefers May 1.

[124] Here and in 11, Luciona is unidentified. Projet Volterra conjectures Sirmium.

[15] Idem AA. et CC. Pomponio. Liberum sciens condicionem eius invitum venumdando plagii criminis poena tenetur.

D. XIII k. Ian. Nicomediae CC. conss.

[16] Imp. Constantinus A. ad Domitium Celsum vicarium Africae. pr. Plagiarii, qui viventium filiorum miserandas infligunt parentibus orbitates, metalli poena cum ceteris ante cognitis suppliciis tenebantur. 1. Si quis tamen eiusmodi reus fuerit oblatus, posteaquam super crimine patuerit, servus quidem vel libertate donatus bestiis obiciatur, ingenuus autem gladio consumatur.

D. k. Aug. Constantino A. IIII et Licinio IIII conss.

XXI Ad Legem Viselliam

[1] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. et CC. Baccho. pr. Lex Visellia libertinae condicionis homines persequitur, si ea quae ingenuorum sunt circa honores et dignitates ausi fuerint attemptare vel decurionatum adripere, nisi iure aureorum anulorum impetrato a principe sustentantur. tunc enim quoad vivunt imaginem, non statum ingenuitatis obtinent et sine periculo ingenuorum etiam officia peragunt publica. 1. Qui autem libertinus se dicit ingenuum, tam de operis civiliter quam etiam lege Visellia criminaliter poterit perurgueri: in curiam autem se immiscens damno quidem cum infamia adficitur: muneribus vero personalibus in patria patroni, quae congruunt huiusmodi hominibus, singulos pro viribus adstrictos esse non dubium est.

PP. II id. Febr. Antiochiae CC. conss.

[15] The same Augusti and Caesars to Pomponius. A person who knowingly sells a free person against his will is liable to the penalty of the crime of kidnapping (plagium).

Given December 20, at Nicomedia, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[16][125] Emperor Constantine Augustus to Domitius Celsus, Vicar of Africa. pr. Kidnappers, who inflict a pitiable childlessness on parents of still-living children, used to be liable to punishment in the mines, along with other penalties known heretofore. 1. But if, nonetheless, someone is accused of such a crime, after his guilt is proved, if he should be, in fact, a slave or freedman, he shall be thrown to the beasts, but should he be free-born, he shall be executed with the sword.

Given August 1, in the consulship of Constantine Augustus, for the fourth time, and Licinius, for the fourth time (315).

Twenty-First Title The Lex Visellia[126]

[1] Emperors Diocletian and Maximian Augusti and the Caesars to Bacchus. pr. The lex Visellia punishes persons of freed status if they dare to usurp those things that pertain to the public offices and social rank of the free-born, or appropriate the standing of a decurion, unless they are justified by the grant of the right of gold rings by the Emperor. For then, as long as they live, they possess the virtual, not the actual, status of free birth, and without risk they (can) perform even the official duties associated with the free-born. 1.[127] That freed-person, however, who (merely) claims to be free-born, can be pursued as much in private law on a suit for services owed his or her master (operae) as also by a criminal prosecution under the lex Visellia. But he who inserts himself into the town council (curia) is punished with material loss, assuredly, along with legal infamy (infamia). There is no doubt, on the other hand, that, consistently with their material resources, they are bound as individuals to perform, in the hometown of their patron, the personal duties that befit such persons.

Posted February 12, at Antioch, in the consulship of the Caesars (300?).

[125] = (in part, with changes) C.Th. 9.18.1.

[126] The lex Visellia of 24 CE punished freedpersons who falsely pretended to be free-born.

[127] = (in part, with minor changes) C. 9.31.1.1.

XXII Ad Legem Corneliam de Falsis

[1] Imp. Antoninus A. Severino. Si partus subiecti crimen diversae parti obicitis, causa capitalis in tempus pubertatis pueri differri non debuit, sicut iam pridem mihi et divo Severo patri meo placuit. neque enim verisimile est eam quae arguitur non ex fide causam suam defensuram, cum periculum capitis subeat.

PP. non. Mart. duobus Aspris conss.

[2] Imp. Alexander A. Valerio. Satis aperte divorum parentum meorum rescriptis declaratum est, cum morandae solutionis gratia a debitore falsi crimen obicitur, nihilo minus salva exsecutione criminis debitorem ad solutionem compelli oportere.

PP. III non. Mai. Maximo II et Aeliano conss.

[3] Idem A. Maximo. Maiorem severitatem exigit, ut merita eorum qui falsis rescriptionibus utuntur digna poena coerceantur. sed qui deceptus est per alium, si suam innocentiam probat et eum a quo accepit exhibet, se liberat.

PP. IIII k. Ian. Albino et Maximo conss.

[4] Idem A. Cassio. Licet ex tabulis, quas sub nomine patris tui uxorem eius, id est novercam tuam, subrepto vero testamento falsas protulisse adlegas, cum crimen admissum ignores, legatum adscriptum tibi consecutus sis, tamen non impedieris accusationem contra eam impletis sollemnibus instituere.

PP. XI k. Ian. Albino et Maximo conss.

Twenty-Second Title The Lex Cornelia on Falsifications[128]

[1] Emperor Antoninus Augustus to Severinus. If you accuse your adversary of the crime of introducing a changeling, the trial, on a capital charge (causa capitalis), ought not to be postponed until the time the boy reaches adulthood, just as I myself and my father, the deified Severus, ruled some time ago. For it is unlikely that the accused woman will not argue her case sincerely, since she faces the risk of the capital penalty (periculum capitis).[129]

Posted March 7, in the consulship of the two Aspri (212).

[2] Emperor Alexander Augustus to Valerius. It has been fairly clearly laid down in the rescripts (rescripta) of my deified predecessors (parentes) that when a charge of falsification (falsum) is raised by a debtor for the purpose of delaying payment, the debtor ought nonetheless to be compelled to make the payment, without prejudice to prosecution of the criminal charge.

Posted May 5, in the consulship of Maximus, for the second time, and Aelianus (223).

[3] The same Augustus to Maximus. It requires greater severity in order that the deserts of those who employ forged rescripts (rescriptiones) be punished with a worthy penalty. But if someone has been deceived by another person, should he prove his innocence and produce the person who is the source (of a forged rescript), he clears himself.

Posted December 29, in the consulship of Albinus and Maximus (227).

[4] The same Augustus to Cassius. Although you received – in ignorance that a crime had been committed – a legacy assigned to you under your father's name in a will that you assert his wife, that is, your stepmother, produced as a forgery after suppressing the genuine one, you are, all the same, not prevented from launching a prosecution against her upon completing the formalities.

Posted December 22,[130] in the consulship of Albinus and Maximus (227).

[128] See D. 48.10. Blume: "The Cornelian law against falsification (broader than that of forgery merely) passed in the time of Sulla, severely punished many acts of falsification or forgery. Under that law were also prohibited counterfeiting of money and for a man to write for a testator a provision for his own benefit in the testament written by him, or by his slave, or child in his power at his request or by his consent. The two subjects last mentioned are dealt with in the next two succeeding titles." Thus, in what follows falsum is translated as "falsification" unless there is a reference to a forged document. The law dates to 81 BCE.

[129] Writing not long after the death of Caracalla, Marcian gives as penalties under the lex Cornelia de falsis capital exile (deportatio) and confiscation of all property for free persons and death for slaves: D. 48.10.1.13.

[130] The date is more likely to be the same as in the preceding constitution, December 29.

[5] Idem A. Petronio. Falsi quidem crimen vel aliud capitale movere vos matri vestrae secta mea non patitur. sed ea res pecuniarium compendium non aufert. si enim de fide scripturae, unde eadem mater vestra fideicommissum sibi vindicat, dubitatio est, inquiri fides veritatis etiam sine metu criminis potest.

PP. III k. Sept. Agricola et Clemente conss.

[6] Imp. Philippus A. et Philippus C. Ulpio. Qui falsas tabulas dixerit nec tenuerit, ad defuncti iudicium adspirare non potest.

PP. XV k. April. Philippo A. et Titiano conss.

[7] Impp. Valerianus et Gallienus AA. et Valerianus C. Heliodoro. Ipse significas, cum primo adversarii instrumenta protulerunt, fidem eorum te habuisse suspectam. facta igitur transactione difficile est, ut is qui provinciam regit velut falsum, cui semel adquievisti, tibi accusare permittat.

PP. III k. Iul. Tusco et Basso conss.

[8] Idem AA. et C. Marino. Si falsos codicillos ab his contra quos supplicas factos esse contendis, non ideo accusationem evadere possunt, quod se illis negent uti. nam illis prodest instrumenti usu abstinere, qui non ipsi machinatores falsi esse dicuntur et quos periculo solus usus adstrinxerit. qui autem compositis per scelus codicillis in severitatem legis Corneliae inciderunt, non possunt defensiones eius recusando crimen evitare.

PP. III k. Iul. Aemiliano et Basso conss.

[9] Impp. Carinus et Numerianus AA. Messio. pr. Si docueris apud praesidem provinciae ab intestato te heredem eius extitisse, qui codicillos scripserat, ordinarium est, ut in hereditatis possessione constitutus fideicommissa praebeas, quae iure relicta sunt, nisi consilium est codicillos falsos arguere. 1. Quod si criminaliter coeptum interventu indulgentiae sopitum est, habes tamen residuam indagationem, potest de fide scripturae civiliter quaeri.

PP. III k. April. Carino II et Numeriano AA. conss.

[5] The same Augustus to Petronius. My policy (secta) does not allow you to bring a charge of forgery (falsum), certainly, or any other capital charge (crimen capitale) against your mother. But this fact does not deprive you of monetary compensation. For if there is some doubt over the reliability of the documentation your mother is using to claim a trust (fideicommissum) for herself, the truth of the matter can be examined even without fear of a criminal charge.

Posted August 30, in the consulship of Agricola and Clemens (230).

[6] Emperor Philip Augustus and Philip Caesar to Ulpius. Someone who alleges a will has been forged and does not prove it cannot hope to receive any bequest left to him or her in it.

Posted March 18, in the consulship of Philip Augustus and Titianus (245).

[7] Emperors Valerian and Gallienus Augusti and Valerian Caesar to Heliodorus. You yourself indicate that you suspected the reliability of the documents when your opponents first produced them. Therefore, now that you have made an out-of-court settlement (transactio), it is difficult for the provincial governor to allow you to prosecute as forged that to which you have already acquiesced.

Posted June 29, in the consulship of Tuscus and Bassus (258).

[8] The same Augusti and Caesar to Marinus. If you allege that the parties against whom you petition forged codicils, they cannot escape prosecution (simply) because they deny that they relied on them. For to refrain from reliance on a document is of advantage (only) to those who are not said themselves to be the contrivers of falsification (falsum) and to whom such reliance alone would pose a risk. Those, however, who have criminally composed codicils and so rendered themselves liable to the severity of the lex Cornelia cannot escape a charge by taking exception to its prosecution under the law.

Posted June 29, in the consulship of Aemilianus and Bassus (259).

[9] Emperors Carinus and Numerianus Augusti to Messius. pr. If you show before the governor of the province that you are the heir on intestacy of the decedent, who wrote codicils, the usual course is for you, once you are in possession of the inheritance, to execute the trusts (fideicommissa) that have been properly left under law, unless it is your intention to contend that the codicils are forged. 1. But if the criminal proceeding has been ended by the interposition of an imperial pardon, you nevertheless have a judicial investigation remaining (for you), which can be tried in a civil suit (civiliter) over the reliability of the documentation.

Posted March 30, in the consulship of Carinus, for the second time, and Numerianus Augusti (284).

[10] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. Legitimo. Cum suppositi partus crimen patrui tui uxori moveas, apud rectorem provinciae instituta accusatione id proba.

PP. XI k. Oct. Diocletiano A. II et Aristobulo conss.

[11] Idem AA. Isidoro. Si lis pecuniaria apud pedaneos iudices remissa est, etiam de fide instrumenti civiliter apud eos iuxta responsum viri prudentissimi Pauli requiretur.

PP. X k. Iul. Diocletiano III et Maximiano AA. conss.

[12] Idem AA. et CC. Primo. Querella falsi temporalibus praescriptionibus non excluditur nisi viginti annorum exceptione, sicut cetera quoque fere crimina.

S. VI id. Aug. Viminacio AA. conss.

[13] Idem AA. et CC. Marco. Qui veluti praesentem scripsisse res recepisse suas, cum absens esset, conscripsit, non ignoranti quicquam aufert, sed se criminis obligat periculo.

PP. VI k. Ian. Sirmi AA. conss.

[14] Idem AA. et CC. Gentianae. Eum, qui celavit vel amovit testamentum, committere crimen falsi publice notum est.

S. III k. Ian. Sirmi AA. conss.

[15] Idem AA. et CC. Rufo. Si creditor colludens cum debitore suo tibi praedium venumdedit, falsum commisit et tibi nihil officit, sed se magis criminis accusationi fecit obnoxium.

S. XIII k. Febr. CC. conss.

[16] Idem AA. et CC. Fortunato. De fide testamenti querenti duplex via litigandi tributa est. quamvis itaque per procuratorem accusationem

[10] Emperors Diocletian and Maximian Augusti to Legitimus. Since you are charging the wife of your paternal uncle with the offense of introducing a changeling, begin a prosecution before the provincial governor and prove it.

Posted September 21, in the consulship of Diocletian Augustus, for the second time, and Aristobulus (285).

[11] The same Augusti to Isidorus. If a civil suit has been referred to delegated (lower-level) judges, then, according to a reply (responsum) of the very learned man Paul, enquiry into the reliability of a (relevant) document will also be conducted on a civil basis before them.

Posted June 22, in the consulship of Diocletian, for the third time, and Maximian, Augusti (287).

[12] The same Augusti and the Caesars to Primus. A prosecution for falsification (falsum) is not barred by defenses asserting lapse of time, aside from the affirmative defense (exceptio) of twenty years, just as with most of the other criminal charges.

Written August 8, at Viminacium, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[13] The same Augusti and Caesars to Marcus. A person who composed a document purporting that a third party wrote that he had received back his property as though he were present when (in fact) he was absent, does not deprive that party, if unaware, of anything, but renders himself liable to the risk of a criminal charge.

Posted December 27, at Sirmium, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[14] The same Augusti and Caesars to Gentiana. It is well known that a person who has concealed or removed a testament commits the public (publice) criminal offense of falsification (falsum).

Written December 30, at Sirmium, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[15] The same Augusti and Caesars to Rufus. If a creditor, in collusion with his debtor, has sold you a property, he has committed falsification (falsum). Nothing prejudices your rights, but he has all the more made himself liable to criminal prosecution.[131]

Written January 20, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[16] The same Augusti and Caesars to Fortunatus. For someone making a complaint about the reliability of a testament, a twofold route of litigation is made persequi non potes, disceptatione tamen privata de eius fide queri non prohiberis, cum reus ita conventus non tantum ab alio iuste, sed etiam eo[xii] qui civiliter egit sollemniter accusari possit.

[131] As Blume notes, it is not clear what the collusion involved. The Basilika (60.41.49) suggests that the creditor is falsely claiming that his security interest has priority over other creditor claims.

S. VIII id. Febr. Sirmi CC. conss.

[17] Idem AA. et CC. Menelao. pr. Sicut falsi testamenti vel codicillorum scriptura temporis intervallo firmari non potest, ita vera quae iure subsistit non evanescit. 1. Si itaque de fide delicti vel per accusationem vel per privatum iudicium quereris, rector provinciae tunc demum eos exhiberi de quibus interrogatio fieri potest iubebit, si prius ceteris indiciis fuerit commotus.

S. III id. Febr. Sirmi CC. conss.

[18] Idem AA. et CC. Maximo. Ex initio falsi commissi iusta possessio non paratur. unde contra eos, quos de dominio fundi tecum contendere proponis, accusationem instituere potes.

S. III non. Mart. CC. conss.

[19] Idem AA. et CC. Cosmiae. pr. Etsi ad te negotium pertinuit, etiam atque etiam tecum deliberare debueras, ne improbam institueres accusationem, hoc instrumentum falsum in quo subscripseras arguere contendens. 1. At cum mulieribus in aliena causa falsi non sit concessum accusare, tu autem haec eadem praedia te prius alii donasse proponas, fieri tibi facultatem accusandi contra iuris postulas formam.

S. VIII id. Mart. CC. conss.

[20] Idem AA. et CC. Rufino. Nec exemplum precum editionis aliter per errorem scriptum, cum non nisi dolo falsum committentes crimini subiugentur, cognitionem dati iudicis moratur.

S. XI k. Nov. Dorostoli CC. conss.

[xii] <ab> eo

available. So, although you cannot conduct a criminal prosecution through a procurator, nevertheless you are not prevented from suing on its genuineness in a civil trial, since the person summoned on this basis as defendant can not only properly be sued by another, but can also be formally prosecuted on a criminal charge by the person who has brought a private lawsuit (civiliter).

Written February 6, at Sirmium, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[17] The same Augusti and Caesars to Menelaus. pr. Just as the documentation of a forged testament or codicils cannot gain validity through the passage of time, so genuine documents, which derive their validity through the operation of law, do not lose this (through the passage of time). 1. If, therefore, you make a complaint about the credibility of an offense either through a criminal accusation or by a private lawsuit, the governor of the province will then precisely order that those parties be produced concerning whom the judicial enquiry can go forward, if he is first persuaded by the rest of the evidence.

Written February 11, at Sirmium, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[18] The same Augusti and Caesars to Maximus. Rightful possession cannot take its point of departure from a falsification (falsum commissum). For this reason you can launch a prosecution against those with whom you assert you have a disagreement over the ownership of a farm.

Written March 5, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[19] The same Augusti and Caesars to Cosmia. pr. Although the matter did (in fact) concern you, you ought to have deliberated with yourself again and again whether to launch an unjust prosecution, seeking to show that this document that you had signed was forged. 1. But since it is not permitted to women to bring criminal prosecutions in cases of falsification (falsum) that are not their own, and you moreover allege that you previously gave as a gift to someone else these same properties, you are making a judicial request for the opportunity to prosecute that is against the rule of law (forma iuris).

Written March 8, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[20] The same Augusti and Caesars to Rufinus. A copy of an application for a lawsuit was made imprecisely through an error. Since those who produce false documents are not liable to a criminal charge if they do not act with fraudulent intent (dolo), this issue does not delay a judicial hearing before the judge who is assigned to the case.

Written October 22, at Dorostolum, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[21] Imp. Constantinus A. Maecilio Hilariano correctori Lucaniae et Brittiorum. pr. Si quis decurio testamentum vel codicillos aut aliquam deficientis scripserit voluntatem vel conscribendis publicis privatisque instrumentis praebuerit officium, si falsi quaestio moveatur, decurionatus honore seposito quaestioni, si ita poposcerit causa, subdatur. 1. Sed non statim desinit esse decurio, qui in huiusmodi facto fuerit:[xlii] quantum enim ad municipales pertinet necessitates, decurio permanet: quantum ad rem gestam et veritatem reserandam uti decurionatus honore non poterit. 2. Nec vero is, qui ante fuerit tabellio, ad eludendam quaestionem super his quae ante conscripsit factus decurio defendi hac poterit dignitate, quoniam scripturae veritas, si res poposcerit, per ipsum debet probari auctorem.

D. III k. Febr. Sabino et Rufino conss.

[22] Idem A. ad Maximum pu. pr. Ubi falsi examen inciderit, tunc acerrima fiat indago argumentis testibus scripturarum collatione aliisque vestigiis veritatis. 1. Ne accusatori tantum quaestio incumbat nec probationis ei tota necessitas indicatur, sed inter utramque personam sit iudex medius nec ulla interlocutione divulget quae sentiat, sed tamquam ad imitationem relationis, quae solum audiendi mandat officium, praebeat notionem, postrema sententia quid sibi liqueat proditurus.

2. Ultimum autem finem strepitus criminalis compendioso spatio limitamus, quem litigantem disceptantemque fas non sit excedere, cuius exordium nascetur auspicio testatae actionis apud iudicem competentem: capitali post probationem supplicio, si id exigat magnitudo commissi, vel deportatione ei qui falsum commiserit imminente.

PP. VIII k. April. in foro Traiani Constantino A. VI et Constantino C. conss.

[xlii] <deprehensus>

[21] [132] Emperor CONSTANTINE Augustus to Maecilius Hilarianus, Governor (corrector) of Lucania and Bruttium. pr. If any decurion writes down a testament, codicils, or some expression of the last will of a dying person, or is responsible for the composition of public and private documents, and a judicial investigation of forgery (falsum) starts up, his status as a decurion is laid aside and he is given over to judicial examination under torture, if the case demands this. 1. But he who is caught in this sort of situation does not immediately cease to be a decurion. For regarding his obligations to his town, he remains a decurion. As far as the deed perpetrated and the need to unlock the truth is concerned, he will be unable to use his status as a decurion. 2. Nor indeed can a man, who was previously a notary (tabellio), once he becomes a decurion, be protected by this status for the purpose of frustrating a judicial enquiry into those (documents) that he composed previously. This is because the reliability of the documentation, if the situation demands it, ought to be established by the author himself.

Given January 30, in the consulship of Sabinus and Rufinus (316).

[22][133] The same Augustus to Maximus, City Prefect. pr. When a trial for falsification (falsum) occurs, then a very thorough investigation shall be conducted on the basis of arguments, witnesses, and the comparison of documents and other evidence for the truth. 1. The examination shall be the responsibility not only of the prosecutor, nor shall the entire burden of proof be imposed upon him, but the judge shall stand between both disputants. He shall not by any oral expression express what he thinks, but on the model of a remanded case, which entrusts him solely with the responsibility of granting a hearing, he shall offer his full attention. What he considers to be clear he is going to disclose in his final decision.

2. Moreover, We impose a maximum time limit on criminal trials with an abridged span of time, which it shall not be right (fas) for a litigant or a judge to exceed.[134] This period will take its beginning from the inauguration of the procedure, once this has been publicized, before the appropriate judge. After proof is offered, the person guilty of falsum shall be sentenced to death (capitale supplicium), if the magnitude of the offense demands this, or capital exile (deportatio).

Posted March 25, in the Forum of Trajan (Rome), in the consulship of Constantine Augustus, for the sixth time, and Constantine Caesar (320).[135]

[132] = (with changes) C.Th. 9.19.1. Combine with C. 10.32.15.
[133] = (in part, with changes) C.Th. 9.19.2.
[134] C.Th. 9.19.2.2 gives this as a year.
[135] The precise year is uncertain: 326 or 320. The Projet Volterra prefers 320 for "received."

[23] Imppp. Valens Gratianus et Valentinianus AAA. ad Maximinum pp. pr. Damus licentiam litigantibus, si apud iudicem proferatur scriptura, de qua oritur aliqua disputatio, utrum de falso criminaliter statuat, qui dubitet de instrumenti fide, experiri an civiliter. 1. Quod si expetens vindictam falsi crimen intenderit, tunc quaestione civili per sententiam terminata criminis fiat indago, ut, si quis tabulas testamenti chirographa testationesque nec non etiam rationes privatas vel publicas, pacta et epistulas vel ultimas voluntates, donationes venditiones, vel si quid prolatum aliud instituere conabitur, habeat accusandi facultatem.

2. Civilis autem inquisitionis inter utrasque partes confligentium lenior examinatio procedat, cum iudex, qui praeerit quaestioni, intentiones actoris falsas et convicta crimina reorum ex legibus poenis competentibus possit ulcisci.

PP. XVI k. Mai. Romae Valente V et Valentiniano AA. conss.

[24] Imppp. Valentinianus Theodosius et Arcadius AAA. Proculo pu. Praebemus licentiam, ut civiliter sive criminaliter, ut actor elegerit, super prolatis codicillis vel aliis instrumentis requiratur et incumbat probatio fidei instrumenti ei primitus, qui scripturam obtulerit, deinde ei, qui stricta instantia falsum arguere paratus est.

D. Mediolani X k. Febr. Timasio et Promoto conss.

XXIII De His Qui Sibi Adscribunt in Testamento

[1] Imp. Antoninus A. Vallatio. Quamquam ita interpretentur iuris periti, ut contra legem Corneliam videatur se scribere heredem filius emancipatus patre dictante, tamen cum et, si testamentum non esset scriptum, iustus successor futurus esset accepta bonorum possessione

[23][136] Emperors VALENS, GRATIAN, and VALENTINIAN Augusti to Maximinus, Praetorian Prefect. pr. If a document is produced before a judge and some dispute arises over it, We grant permission to the litigants, so that the person expressing doubt as to the validity of the document may decide whether to proceed with a criminal prosecution on a charge of forgery (falsum) or with a private law action. 1. But if he or she seeks vengeance for forgery by raising a criminal charge, that trial shall go forward after the civil action ends with a sentence, in order that if anyone tries to assemble the contents of a testament, handwritten documents, declarations of intent, as well as private and public accounts, informal agreements, letters or other expressions of a person's last will, gifts, sales, or anything else adduced as evidence, he or she shall have the opportunity of launching a criminal prosecution.

2. The investigation associated with a civil trial, however, shall proceed more gently between the two contending parties, since the judge trying the case can punish the false allegations of the plaintiff and the proven crimes of the defendants with the appropriate statutory (ex legibus) penalties.

Posted April 16, at Rome, in the consulship of Valens, for the fifth time, and Valentinian Augusti (376).

[24][137] Emperors VALENTINIAN, THEODOSIUS, and ARCADIUS Augusti to Proculus, City Prefect. We grant permission for a trial to go forward on a civil or criminal basis, as the plaintiff chooses, in cases concerning codicils or other documents adduced as evidence. The proof of the reliability of the documentation shall in first place be assigned to the party who has produced the written evidence, and thereafter to the party who is prepared, after making insistent representations, to prove it is forged.

Given January 23, at Milan, in the consulship of Timasius and Promotus (389).

Twenty-Third Title Those Who Write Themselves into a Testament[138]

[1] Emperor ANTONINUS Augustus to Vallatius. Although the jurists (iuris periti) give the opinion that an emancipated son, by writing himself into the will as heir at the dictation of his father, is considered to violate the lex Cornelia, nevertheless, since without a testament being drawn up the son would have

[136] = (with changes) C.Th. 9.19.4.
[137] = (with changes) C.Th. 4.4.2.
[138] See D. 48.10. The lex Cornelia on Falsifications was later supplemented by the Neronian SC Libonianum (Suet. Nero 17).

filius patri, perinde habebitur, atque si sua manu pater tuus te heredem scripsisset functus dulci officio.

PP. non. Sept. duobus Aspris conss.

[2] Idem A. Atticio. pr. Si testator codicillis quos scripsisti legatum quoque seu fideicommissum reliquisse tibi sua manu adscripsit, non videris in poenam senatus consulti incidisse. 1. Quod si testamentum dictasse codicillis significavit, legato quidem vel fideicommisso abstinere debes, poena vero falsi tibi principali beneficio remittitur.

PP. id. Dec. Antonino A. IIII et Balbino conss.

[3] Imp. Alexander A. Martiali. Senatus consulto et edicto divi Claudii prohibitum est eos, qui ad scribenda testamenta adhibentur, quamvis dictante testatore aliquid emolumentum ipsis futurum scribere, et poena legis Corneliae facienti inrogata est: cuius veniam deprecantibus ob ignorantiam et profitentibus a relicto discedere raro amplissimus ordo vel divi principes veniam dederunt.

PP. XVII k. April. Maximo II et Aeliano conss.

[4] Idem A. Crescenti. Quae in testamento uxoris maritus sua manu legata sibi adscripserit, pro non scriptis habentur, et legis Corneliae poena, si venia impetrata non est, locum habet.

PP. III non. Febr. Fusco II et Dextro conss.

[5] Idem A. Gallicano militi. Quod adhibitus ad testamentum commilitonis scribendum iussu eius servum tibi adscripsisti, pro non scripto habetur et ideo id legatum petere non potes. sed secutus tenorem been the legally recognized successor of his father and received possession of his property (bonorum possessio), the matter will be treated as though your father had discharged his pleasant responsibility by writing you into the will as heir by his own hand.

Posted September 5, in the consulship of the two Aspri (212).

[2] The same Augustus to Atticius. pr. If the testator added a note, in his own hand in the codicils that you wrote out, that he had left to you a legacy or trust (fideicommissum), you are not deemed to have incurred the penalty laid down by the decree of the Senate. 1. But if he indicated in the codicils that he dictated the (entire) testament, you ought, in fact, to refuse the legacy or fideicommissum. You are, however, forgiven the penalty for falsification (falsum) through the Emperor's generosity.

Posted December 13, in the consulship of Antoninus Augustus, for the fourth time, and Balbinus (213).

[3] Emperor ALEXANDER Augustus to Martialis. By the decree of the Senate and an edict of the deified Claudius,[139] those who are engaged to inscribe testaments are forbidden to write in some future reward for themselves, even though the testator dictates this. The penalty of the lex Cornelia is invoked for one who does this. The most respectable order (i.e., the Senate) and the deified emperors have seldom granted pardon to those begging for release from the penalty on account of their ignorance and declaring that they will refuse the bequest.

Posted March 16, in the consulship of Maximus, for the second time, and Aelianus (223).

[4] The same Augustus to Crescens. Those legacies which a husband wrote for himself in his own hand in his wife's testament are deemed not to have been written (i.e., void) and the penalty of the lex Cornelia lies against him if he has not obtained pardon.

Posted February 3, in the consulship of Fuscus, for the second time, and Dexter (225).

[5] The same Augustus to Gallicanus, a soldier. Because, when you were engaged to write out the testament of your fellow-soldier, you added a note, at his behest, that his slave (would be left) to you, this bequest is deemed as though not written (i.e., void) and for this reason you cannot seek to recover this legacy. But pursuant to my policy of forbearance (indulgentia) I forgive indulgentiae meae poena*m* legis Corneliae tibi remitt*o*, in quam credo te magis errore quam malitia incidisse.

[139] The SC is the Libonianum; for the edict, see Callistr. D. 48.10.15.2.

PP. XVII k. Iul. Fusco II et Dextro conss.

[6] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. Aufidio. Si libertatem tibi manu tua imperante domino adscripsisti, cum proponas dominum non subscripsisse et suis litteris tuam libertatem expressim agnovisse, ad impetrandam libertatem senatus consulti auctoritas tibi obest. poena tamen falsi tibi remittitur, quoniam non potueras contra domini voluntatem venire.

PP. VI id. Dec. ipsis IIII et III AA. conss.

XXIIII De Falsa Moneta

[1] Imp. Constantinus A. ad Ianuarinum. pr. Quoniam nonnulli monetarii adulterinam monetam clandestinis sceleribus exercent, cuncti cognoscant necessitatem sibi incumbere huiusmodi homines inquirendi, ut investigati tradantur iudiciis, facti conscios per tormenta ilico prodituri ac sic dignis suppliciis addicendi. 1. Accusatoribus etiam eorum immunitatem permittimus, cuius modus, quoniam dispar patrimonium est, a nobis per singulos statuetur.

2. Si quis autem militum huiusmodi personam susceptam de custodia exire fecerit, capite puniatur. 3. Appellandi etiam privato licentia denegetur: si vero miles aut promotus in gradu huiusmodi crimen incurrerit, super eius nomine et gradu ad competentes iudices referatur.

4. Domus vero vel fundus, in quo haec perpetrata sunt, si dominus in proximo constitutus sit, cuius incuria vel neglegentia punienda est, etsi ignoret, fisco vindicetur, nisi dominus, ante ignorans, ut primum reppererit, scelus prodiderit perpetratum: tunc enim possessio vel domus ipsius proscriptionis iniuriae minime subiacebit. 5. Sin vero longissime you the penalty of the lex Cornelia, which you had incurred, I believe, more out of mistake than bad intentions (malitia).

Posted June 15, in the consulship of Fuscus, for the second time, and Dexter (225).

[6] Emperors Diocletian and Maximian Augusti to Aufidius. If you, in your own handwriting and at your master's command, wrote in (his testament) a bequest of freedom for yourself, although you allege that your master did not sign (the testament) and recognized (the grant of) your freedom expressly in a (separate) letter of his, the force (auctoritas) of the senatorial decree impedes you from obtaining your freedom. Nevertheless, the penalty for falsification (falsum) is forgiven you, because you could not oppose the wishes of your master.

Posted December 8, in the consulship of the Augusti, for the fourth and third time, respectively (290).

Twenty-Fourth Title Counterfeit Money

[1][140] Emperor Constantine Augustus to Januarinus. pr. Because some mint-workers, through covert criminal activity, produce counterfeit money, let everyone understand that the necessity is imposed upon them of investigating this sort of person, in order that, once their cases have been examined, they are handed over to the courts. Having been rendered ready, through judicial examination under torture, to betray their accomplices on the spot, they shall thence be bound over to worthy punishments. 1. We also allow their accusers immunity from taxation, the measure of which, because their net worth (patrimonium), varies, We will determine on an individual basis.

2. Moreover, if any soldier lets a person of this sort, once detained, escape from custody, he shall suffer the death penalty (capite). 3. Permission to launch an appeal shall be denied even to a private citizen. But if a soldier or someone promoted to a higher rank commits this kind of crime, a report of his name and rank shall be made to the appropriate judges.

4.[141] The house or farm, in fact, at which such crimes have been committed, shall be claimed for the Treasury, if the owner, whose neglect or negligence (incuria vel neglegentia) must be punished, even if he was unaware, was in the vicinity. An exception is made if the owner, being previously unaware, discloses the commission of the crime as soon as he discovers it. For in that case his landholding (possessio) or house will not at all be liable to the affront of confiscation. 5. But if, on the other hand, he has been very far away from that

140 = (with changes) C.Th. 9.21.2. Combine with C. 7.13.2.
141 §§4 and 5 contain elements taken from C.Th. 9.21.2.4 and 2, 9.21.4 pr.

ab ea domo vel possessione afuerit, nullum sustineat detrimentum: actore videlicet fundi vel servis vel incolis vel colonis, qui hoc ministerium praebuerunt, cum eo qui fecit supplicio capitali plectendis. 6. Viduas autem ac pupillos speciali dignos indulgentia credidimus, ut viduae nec in proximo constitutae domo sua vel possessione careant, si nulla apud ipsas tam gravis conscientiae noxa resideat, impuberes vero, etiamsi conscii fuerint, nullum sustineant detrimentum, quia aetas eorum quid videat ignorat. 7. Tutores tamen eorum, si in proximo sint, quoniam ignorare eos, quid in re pupilli geritur, non oportet, haec poena expectabit, ut de rebus eorum, si idonei fuerint, tantum fisco inferatur, quantum a pupillo fuerat inferendum.

D. XII k. Dec. Romae Crispo II et Constantino II CC. conss.

[2] Idem A. ad Tertullianum proconsulem Africae. Si quis nummum falsa fusione formaverit, universas eius facultates fisco nostro addici praecipimus: in monetis etenim tantum nostris cudendae pecuniae studium frequentari volumus. cuius obnoxii maiestatis crimen committunt, et praemio accusatoribus proposito, quicumque solidorum adulter poterit reperiri vel a quoquam fuerit publicatus, ilico omni dilatione submota flammarum exustionibus mancipetur.

D. prid. non. Iul. Mediolani Constantino A. VII et Constantio C. conss.

[3] Imppp. Valentinianus Theodosius et Arcadius AAA. Rufino pp. Si quis super cudendo aere vel rescripto aliquo vel etiam adnotatione nostra sibi eripuerit facultatem, non solum fructum propriae petitionis amittat, verum etiam poenam quam meretur excipiat.

D. IIII id. Iul. Constantinopoli Theodosio A. III et Abundantio conss.

house or landholding (possessio), he shall suffer no loss. Obviously, the manager of the farm, the slaves, residents (incolae), and bound tenants (coloni),[142] who have provided their assistance, shall be visited with the death sentence (supplicium capitale), along with the person who committed the offense. 6.[143] But We have deemed widows (viduae) and minor wards to be worthy of Our particular understanding (indulgentia), such that widows, even if they were in the vicinity, but are not guilty of the serious offense of complicity, shall not be deprived of their house or landholding, (and) minors, in fact, even if complicit, shall suffer no loss, because their age does not know what it perceives. 7. This penalty, however, will await their tutores if they are in the vicinity, since they ought not to be unaware of what is being done on their minor ward's property. They shall pay to the Treasury from their resources, if they are sufficiently wealthy, as much as what the minor ward would be compelled to pay.

Given November 20, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Crispus, for the second time, and Constantine, for the second time, Caesars (321).[144]

[2][145] The same Augustus to Tertullianus, Proconsular Governor of Africa. If anyone mints coins through counterfeit casting, We instruct that all of his property shall be bound over to Our Treasury. For We wish that the practice of striking coins be conducted only in Our mints. Those liable to this law commit the offense of treason (maiestas) and a reward has been established for accusers. Whoever can be discovered to be a forger of coins or is exposed as such by anyone, shall be made over, immediately, with all delay removed, to the searing flames (to be burned alive).

Given July 6, at Milan, in the consulship of Constantine Augustus, for the seventh time, and Constantius Caesar (326).

[3][146] Emperors V*ALENTINIAN*, T*HEODOSIUS*, and A*RCADIUS Augusti to Rufinus, Praetorian Prefect.* If anyone seizes the opportunity of striking coins on the basis of some rescript or even written instructions (adnotatio) of Ours, he shall not only lose the fruits of his petition but also shall receive the punishment he deserves.

Given July 12, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Theodosius Augustus, for the third time, and Abundantius (393).

[142] For the translation of coloni as "bound tenants," see the note at C. 11.48.
[143] §§6 and 7 = (with changes) C.Th. 9.21.4.1.
[144] The date is more likely 320: Projet Volterra. Seeck gives November 20, 318. The constitution was actually issued in Rome, see C. 7.13.2 and C.Th. 9.21.2 (Krüger).
[145] Drawn from C.Th. 9.21.3, 5, and 9, the first of which gives the addressee as Tertullus.
[146] = C.Th. 9.21.10.

XXV De Mutatione Nominis

[1] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. et CC. Iuliano. Sicut initio nominis cognominis praenominis recognoscendi singulos impositio privatim libera est, ita horum mutatio innocentibus periculosa non est. mutare itaque nomen sive praenomen sine aliqua fraude licito iure, si liber es, secundum ea quae saepe statuta sunt minime prohiberis, nulli ex hoc praeiudicio futuro.

S. xv k. Ian. AA. conss.

XXVI Ad Legem Iuliam de Ambitu

[1] Impp. Arcadius et Honorius AA. Pompeiano proconsuli Africae. pr. Nullus omnino principatum vel numeratum seu commentariensis gradum vel cetera officia repetere audeat, cum publicae disciplinae semel gesta sufficiant. 1. Ac si quispiam promotorum denuo ad munus etiam per sacras litteras inrepserit, quod ante docebitur gessisse, cassatis quae hoc modo sunt impetrata, ad solutionem debiti primitus artetur, et qui contra fecerint poenam deportationis ad instar legis Iuliae ambitus excipiant.

D. prid. k. Iun. Mediolani Stilichone et Aureliano conss.

XXVII Ad Legem Iuliam Repetundarum

[1] Imppp. Gratianus Valentinianus et Theodosius AAA. Matroniano duci et praesidi Isauriae. Ut unius poena metus possit esse multorum, ducem qui male egit ad provinciam quam nudaverat cum custodia competenti ire praecipimus, ut non solum, quod eius non dicam

Twenty-Fifth Title Changing One's Name

[1] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti and the Caesars to Julian. Just as at the start there is a free private giving of (names, i.e.,) a nomen, cognomen, and praenomen, in order to identify individuals, so changing them is not a source of danger for innocent persons. Therefore, if you are a free person, you are not at all prevented, according to what has often been laid down, from changing a nomen or praenomen, if this is done without deceptive intent (fraus) as permitted by law, with no prejudice (harm) accruing to anyone from this.

Written December 18, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

Twenty-Sixth Title The Lex Julia on Corrupt Solicitation (Ambitus)[147]

[1][148] Emperors ARCADIUS and HONORIUS Augusti to Pompeianus, Proconsul of Africa. pr. No one at all shall dare to seek for a second time the position of chief of staff (principatus), accountant (numeratus), clerk (commentariensis gradus), or the other staff positions, since it suits public policy (publica disciplina) that these be held (only) once. 1. And if someone who has been promoted creeps back in again, even by an imperial letter (sacrae litterae), to a position which it is proved he held before, after those things that have been obtained in this way have been voided, he shall be compelled at first to pay any debt (associated with the position), and (then) those who violate (this law) shall receive the penalty of capital exile (deportatio) on the model of the lex Julia on corrupt solicitation (ambitus).

Given May 31,[149] at Milan, in the consulship of Stilicho and Aurelianus (400).

Twenty-Seventh Title The Lex Julia on Provincial Extortion[150]

[1][151] Emperors GRATIAN, VALENTINIAN, and THEODOSIUS Augusti to Matronianus, Commander (Dux) and Governor of Isauria. In order that the penalty inflicted on one person can be the source of fear for many, We instruct that the commander (dux) guilty of maladministration shall return under the appropriate guard to the province he had despoiled. The purpose is that not [147] See D. 48.14. The statute dates to 18 BCE.

[148] = (in part, with changes) C.Th. 9.26.2. Combine with C. 10.72.12, 12.61.3; C.Th. 1.12.8, 11.1.28. Section 1 = (in part, with changes) C.Th. 9.26.3.
[149] The precise month is uncertain: May or December. Seeck gives May 31, 400.
[150] See D. 48.11. This statute is from 59 BCE.
[151] = (with changes) C.Th. 9.27.3, which gives the recipient's province as Sardinia.

domesticus, sed manipularius et minister accepit, verum etiam quod ipse a provincialibus nostris rapuit aut sustulit, in quadruplum invitus exsolvat.

D. prid. Id. Iun. Constantinopoli Antonio et Syagrio conss.

[2] Idem AAA. Floro pp. Sciant iudices super admissis propriis aut a se aut ab heredibus suis poenam esse repetendam.

D. x k. Sept. Antonio et Syagrio conss.

[3] Idem AAA. Marcellino. Omnes cognitores et iudices a pecuniis atque patrimoniis manus abstineant neque alienum iurgium putent suam praedam. etenim privatarum quoque litium cognitor idemque mercator statutam legibus cogetur subire iacturam.

D. prid. non. April. Mediolani Merobaude II et Saturnino conss.

[4] Idem AAA. et Arcadius A. edictum ad provinciales. Iubemus hortamur, ut, si quis forte honoratorum decurionum possessorum, postremo etiam colonorum aut cuiuslibet ordinis a iudice fuerit aliqua ratione concussus, si quis scit venalem de iure fuisse sententiam, si quis poenam vel pretio remissam vel vitio cupiditatis ingestam, si quis postremo quacumque de causa improbum iudicem potuerit approbare, is vel administrante eo vel post administrationem depositam in publicum prodeat, crimen deferat, delatum approbet, cum probaverit, et victoriam reportaturus et gloriam.

D. x k. Iul. Constantinopoli Honorio np. et Euodio conss.

[5] Imppp. Valentinianus Theodosius et Arcadius AAA. Severino comiti rerum privatarum. pr. Unusquisque procurator, praepositus gynaecei, tabularius susceptor colonus vel quicumque se a comite domorum meminerit esse concussum, cum ipse cui pecuniam numeraverit only what his, shall I not call it, bodyguard, but also what his soldiers and servants have received, but also what he himself has pillaged or carried off from Our provincials, he shall pay fourfold, (even) against his will.

Given June 12, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Antonius and Syagrius (382).

[2][152] The same Augusti to Florus, Praetorian Prefect. Let judges (iudices) know that the penalty for their misdeeds shall be sought either from themselves or from their heirs.

Given August 23, in the consulship of Antonius and Syagrius (382).

[3][153] The same Augusti to Marcellinus. All those who preside over hearings (cognitores) and judges shall keep their hands off the money and property (of others). Nor shall they consider someone else's legal wrangling to be a source of spoil for themselves. For the person who is a cognitor of private lawsuits and also at the same time a merchant (of justice) will be compelled to suffer the penalty laid down by the laws.

Given April 4, at Milan, in the consulship of Merobaudes, for the second time, and Saturninus (383).

[4][154] Emperors GRATIAN, VALENTINIAN, THEODOSIUS, and ARCADIUS Augusti (issue) an Edict to the People of the Provinces. We instruct, We urge that if perchance any former official, decurion, landowner, or, finally, even any bound tenant (colonus) or person from any social rank whatsoever is shaken down by a judge for some reason, (or) if anyone knows that a legal decision was bought and sold, (or) if anyone knows a penalty was remitted or inflicted upon payment of a price through the character defect of greed, (or) if anyone, finally, can show that a judge acted corruptly in any case at all, this person, whether the judge is still in office or he has laid this down, shall come forth in public, shall launch a prosecution, shall prove the charge, and when he has done so, will gain victory and glory for himself.

Given June 22, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Honorius, Most Noble Boy, and Euodius (386).

[5][155] Emperors VALENTINIAN, THEODOSIUS, and ARCADIUS Augusti to Severinus, Count of the Privy Purse. pr. Any (imperial) procurator, manager of a weaving mill (gynaeceum), official in charge of fiscal records (tabularius), tax collector (susceptor), bound tenant (colonus), or anyone at all who recalls

[152] = C.Th. 9.27.4. In this and following texts, provincial governors are referred to in their role as chief judicial officers (iudices).
[153] = (with changes) C.Th. 9.27.5.
[154] = (with minor changes) C.Th. 9.27.6.
[155] = (with changes) C.Th. 9.27.7.

administratione decesserit, intra anni spatia ad iudicium spectabilitatis tuae quidquid dederit repetiturus occurrat, ut prosit pensionibus, quidquid ille reddiderit. 1. Sin vero ex tempore depositae administrationis praestituti temporis curricula transfluxerint, nulla vox advocationis emergat, sed ipsos procuratores praepositos colonos tabularios susceptores obnoxios ad solutionem volumus artari.

D. prid. non. Iun. Mediolani Valentiniano A. IIII et Neoterio conss.

[6] Impp. Theodosius et Valentinianus AA. Florentio pp. pr. Sancimus eiusmodi viros ad provincias regendas accedere, qui honoris insignia non ambitione vel pretio, sed probatae vitae et amplitudinis tuae solent testimonio promoveri,[xiv] ita sane ut, quibus hi honores per sedis tuae vel nostram fuerint electionem commissi, iurati inter gesta depromant se pro administrationibus sortiendis neque dedisse quippiam neque daturos umquam postmodum fore, sive per se sive per interpositam in fraudem legis sacramentique personam, aut donationis venditionisve titulo aut alio velamento cuiuscumque contractus, et ob hoc exceptis salariis nihil penitus tam in administratione positos quam post depositum officium pro aliquo praestito beneficio tempore administrationis, quam gratuito meruerint, accepturos. 1. Et licet neminem divini timoris contemnendo iureiurando arbitramur immemorem, ut saluti propriae ullum commodum anteponat, tamen, ut ad salutis timorem et necessitas periculi subiungatur, tunc si quis ausus fuerit praebita sacramenta neglegere, non modo adversus accipientem, sed etiam adversus dantem accusandi cunctis tamquam crimen publicum concedimus facultatem, quadrupli poena eo qui convictus fuerit modis omnibus feriendo.

D. VI k. Dec. Constantinopoli Theodosio A. XVII et Festo conss.

[xiv] promereri

that he has been shaken down by the Count of the Imperial Household, after the person to whom the money was paid has laid aside his administrative post, shall, within the term of one year, come before the court of Your Respectability, in order to claim back whatever he has given. The point is that whatever he (the Count) pays back shall benefit the fiscal accounts. 1. But if, however, the established time period, from the point when the Count has left his post, has passed, no further appeal shall be allowed, but We wish that the procurators, managers, bound tenants, record-keepers, tax collectors be liable for payment of what they owe.

Given June 4, at Milan, in the consulship of Valentinian Augustus, for the fourth time, and Neoterius (390).

[6] Emperors Theodosius and Valentinian Augusti to Florentius, Praetorian Prefect. pr. We ordain that the (only) sort of men who shall take up the position of provincial governor regularly earn the distinction of office not through influence-peddling or bribery, but through the recommendation of a praiseworthy life and the approval of your Magnificence, so indeed that those who are appointed to this office by your choice or Ours shall take an oath upon the public records that they have neither given anything nor afterwards will ever give something for the assignment of public positions, and that (they have done or will do this) this neither personally nor through a third party employed to circumvent the law and the oath, and this neither under the title of gift, sale, nor other screen of any kind of contract, and (also) that on account of this position, they will accept nothing at all apart from their salaries, either while in office or after they have stepped down, for any kindness they performed during their term of office, which they received gratuitously. 1. And although We believe that no one is unmindful of the fear of God in disdaining his oath so as to put any advantage before his own safety, nevertheless, in order that the inevitability of peril be joined to the fear for his safety, if, then, someone dares neglect the oath he has given, We grant the opportunity to everyone, as though this were a public criminal offense (crimen publicum), of prosecuting not only the receiver, but also the giver, in order that he who is convicted shall be punished in every way by the infliction of a fourfold penalty.

Given November 26, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Theodosius Augustus, for the seventeenth time, and Festus (439).

XXVIII De Crimine Peculatus

[1] Imppp. Theodosius Arcadius et Honorius AAA. Rufino pp. Iudices, qui tempore administrationis publicas pecunias subtraxerunt, lege Iulia peculatus obnoxii sunt et capitali animadversioni eos subdi iubemus: his nihilo minus, qui ministerium eis ad hoc adhibuerunt vel qui subtracta ab his scientes susceperunt, eadem poena percellendis.

D. III non. Mart. Constantinopoli Honorio X et Theodosio VI AA. conss.

XXVIIII De Crimine Sacrilegii

[1] Imppp. Gratianus Valentinianus et Theodosius AAA. Qui divinae legis sanctitatem aut nesciendo confundunt aut neglegendo violant et offendunt, sacrilegium committunt.

D. III k. Mart. Thessalonicae Gratiano A. V et Theodosio A. conss.

[2] Idem AAA. ad Symmachum pu. Disputari de principali iudicio non oportet: sacrilegii enim instar est dubitare, an is dignus sit, quem elegerit imperator.

D. V k. Ian. Mediolani Ricomere et Clearcho conss.

[3] Idem AAA. et Arcadius A. Eutropio pp. Ne quis sine sacrilegii crimine desiderandum intellegat gerendae ac suscipiendae administrationis officium intra eam provinciam, in qua provincialis et civis habetur, nisi hoc cuidam ultronea liberalitate per divinos adfatus imperator indulgeat.

D. XVI k. Aug. Arcadio A. et Bautone conss.

Twenty-Eighth Title The Crime of Public Embezzlement[156]

[1][157] Emperors THEODOSIUS, ARCADIUS, and HONORIUS Augusti to Rufinus, Praetorian Prefect. Judges who, during their term of office, have embezzled public funds are liable under the lex Julia on embezzlement and We order that they shall be afflicted with the capital penalty (capitalis animadversio). No less shall those who furnished assistance to them in this matter or who knowingly received embezzled property from them be afflicted with the same penalty.

Given March 5, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Honorius, for the tenth time, and Theodosius, for the sixth time, Augusti (415).

Twenty-Ninth Title The Crime of Sacrilege[158]

[1][159] Emperors GRATIAN, VALENTINIAN, and THEODOSIUS Augusti. Whoever through ignorance disturbs or through negligence outrages or damages the sanctity of imperial law (divina lex) commits sacrilege.

Given February 28, at Thessalonica, in the consulship of Gratian, for the fifth time, and Theodosius Augusti (380).

[2][160] The same Augusti to Symmachus, City Prefect.[161] An imperial decision ought not to be disputed. For it is tantamount to sacrilege to doubt whether he is worthy whom the Emperor has chosen.

Given December 28, at Milan, in the consulship of Richomer and Clearchus (384).

[3][162] Emperors GRATIAN, VALENTINIAN, THEODOSIUS, and ARCADIUS Augusti to Eutropius, Praetorian Prefect. No one shall, without committing the crime of sacrilege, have the impression that he should seek the responsibility of taking up and holding an administrative position in the province where he is a resident and a citizen, unless the Emperor grants this to someone out of spontaneous generosity through an imperial pronouncement (divini adfatus).

Given July 17, in the consulship of Arcadius Augustus and Bauto (385).

156 See D. 48.13. Blume: "All who stole money or other property that belonged to the State, Church, or municipality were guilty of this crime." The lex Julia is probably Augustan.

157 = Drawn from C.Th. 9.28.1 and 2, the first of which dates from September 10, 392; cf. Inst. 4.18.9. Combine with C. 9.12.9. Seeck dates this constitution to September 10, 392.

158 See D. 48.13.

159 = (with minor changes) C.Th. 16.2.25. Combine with C. 1.1.1.

160 = (in part) C.Th. 1.6.9.

161 In fact, in 383 Arcadius became emperor and Gratian died.

162 Blume: "To the same effect is C. 1.41.1." Seeck dates this constitution to June 17, 380.

XXX De Seditiosis et His Qui Plebem Audent contra Publicam Quietem Colligere

[1] Imppp. Gratianus Valentinianus et Theodosius AAA. Florentio praefecto Augustali. Si quis contra evidentissimam iussionem suscipere plebem et adversus publicam disciplinam defendere fortasse temptaverit, multam gravissimam sustinebunt.

D. XIII k. Ian. Constantinopoli Ricomere et Clearcho conss.

[2] Imp. Leo A. Erythrio pp. In nullis locis aut civitatibus tumultuosis clamoribus cuiusquam interpellatio contumeliosa procedat nec ad solam cuiusquam invidiam petulantia verba iactentur: scituris his, qui huiusmodi voces emiserint moverintque tumultus, se quidem fructum ex his quae postulant nullatenus habituros, subdendos autem poenis his, quas de seditionum et tumultus auctoribus vetustissima decreta sanxerunt.

D. II non. Mart. Constantinopoli Leone A. III cons.

XXXI Quando Civilis Actio Criminali Praeiudicet et An Utraque ab Eodem Exerceri Potest

[1] Imppp. Valens Gratianus et Valentinianus AAA. Antonio pp. pr. A plerisque prudentium generaliter definitum est, quotiens de re familiari et civilis et criminalis competit actio, utraque licere experiri, sive prius criminalis sive civilis actio moveatur, nec si civiliter fuerit actum, criminalem posse consumi, et similiter e contrario. 1. Sic denique et per vim possessione deiectus, si de ea recuperanda interdicto unde vi erit usus, non prohibetur tamen etiam lege Iulia de vi publico iudicio instituere accusationem: et suppresso testamento cum ex interdicto de tabulis exhibendis fuerit actum, nihilo minus ex lege Cornelia testamentaria poterit crimen inferri: et cum libertus se dicit ingenuum, tam de operis

Thirtieth Title Rebels and Those Who Dare to Rally the Common People Against Public Order

[1][163] Emperors GRATIAN, VALENTINIAN, and THEODOSIUS Augusti to Florentius, Augustal Prefect.[164] If anyone, contrary to the clearest command, tries to take under his protection the common people and perchance to defend them in defiance of public order, they will incur a very serious fine.

Given December 20, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Richomer and Clearchus (384).

[2][165] Emperor LEO Augustus to Erythrius, Praetorian Prefect. In no places or cities shall an insulting public interruption of any (speaker) take place amid disruptive shouting, nor shall provocative words be tossed out solely for the purpose of ill will toward anyone. Those who utter remarks of this kind and stir up public disorder shall know that they certainly are in no way going to reap the fruits of what they demand, but that they shall (also) be subjected to those penalties that very ancient judgments (vetustissima decreta) have ordained for the instigators of rebellions and disorder.

Given March 6, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Leo Augustus, for the third time (466).

Thirty-First Title When a Private Law Action Excludes a Criminal Prosecution and Whether Both Can Be Raised by the Same Person

[1][166] Emperors VALENS, GRATIAN, and VALENTINIAN Augusti to Antonius, Praetorian Prefect. pr. It has been generally held by most jurists (prudentes) that, whenever both a private law action and a criminal proceeding lie concerning property, both may be brought, without reference to which one is brought first, so that if the private action is launched first, the criminal proceeding cannot be excluded, and likewise vice versa. 1. Thus, in consequence even if someone has been violently deprived of possession, if in order to recover this he resorts to the interdict "whence by force" (unde vi) he is not nevertheless prevented from also launching a prosecution under the lex Julia on Force using public criminal procedure (iudicium publicum). So if, in a case involving concealment of a testament, a suit was launched on the interdict concerning the [163] = C.Th. 9.33.1. Combine with C.Th. 11.39.9.

[164] In fact, in 383 Arcadius became emperor and Gratian died.
[165] Combine with C. 1.3.27, 1.12.6.
[166] = (with changes) C.Th. 9.20.1. Combine with C. 4.19.24.

civiliter quam etiam lege Visellia criminaliter poterit perurgueri. 2. Quo in genere habetur furti actio et legis Fabiae constitutum, et plurima alia sunt, quae enumerari non possunt, ut, cum altera prius actio intentata sit, per alteram quae supererit iudicatum liceat retractari. 3. Qua iuris definitione non ambigitur etiam falsi crimen, de quo civiliter iam actum est, criminaliter esse repetendum.

D. prid. id. Ian. Treviris Valente VI et Valentiniano II AA. conss.

XXXII De Crimine Expilatae Hereditatis

[1] Impp. Severus et Antoninus AA. Euphratae. Expilatae quidem hereditatis crimen intentare non potes, quando communis arcae rebus inspectis claves traditas coheredi profitearis. sed cum de his exhibendis apud iudicem quaereretur, rationem compensationis induci non oportuit. exhibitis enim quae desiderantur suis iudicibus directa quaestio derelinquenda est.

PP. XII k. Mai. Antonino A. II et Geta II conss.

[2] Imp. Antoninus A. Primo. Expilatae hereditatis crimen adversus vitricum adito praeside provinciae persequi non prohiberis.

PP. VII k. Mart. Laeto II et Cereale conss.

production of testamentary documents, a charge on the lex Cornelia on wills[167] can be brought all the same. And when a freedperson claims to be free-born, he or she can be pursued as much in private law on a suit for services owed his or her master (operae) as also by a criminal prosecution under the lex Visellia.[168]
2. In this category belong an action on theft (actio furti) and a procedure established under the lex Fabia,[169] and many other examples that cannot be listed, with the effect that when one procedure has been launched first, it shall be permitted to treat the matter handled there again with that which remains. Under this rule of law (definitio iuris) there is no doubt also that a charge of falsification (falsum) that has already been tried under private law must be pursued again as a criminal matter.

Given January 12, at Trier, in the consulship of Valens, for the sixth time, and Valentinian, for the second time, Augusti (378).

Thirty-Second Title The Crime of Misappropriating an Inheritance[170]

[1] Emperors Severus and Antoninus Augusti to Euphrata. You cannot, to be sure, raise a charge of misappropriating an inheritance, since you acknowledge that, after the contents of a chest owned in common were inspected, keys were handed over to a co-heir. But since a hearing was held before a judge over the production of this property, there ought to have been no rationale introduced for an off-set. For when the items that have been demanded are produced, the direct action (for dividing the inheritance) shall be left to its own (appropriate) judges.[171]

Posted April 20, in the consulship of Antoninus Augustus, for the second time, and Geta, for the second time (205).[172]

[2] Emperor Antoninus Augustus to Primus. You are not prevented from approaching the governor of the province and prosecuting your stepfather for the offense of misappropriating an inheritance.

Posted February 23, in the consulship of Laetus, for the second time, and Cerealis (215).

[167] The reference to the lex Cornelia testamentaria concerns the lex Cornelia on Falsifications (C. 9.22), from 81 BCE.
[168] This last sentence appears also in C. 9.21.1.1. The lex Visellia is from AD 24.
[169] The lex Fabia was probably of late Republican date: see above under C. 9.20.
[170] See D. 47.19.
[171] Blume: "That one heir may not bring an accusation for this crime against his co-heir, is clearly stated in C. 3.36.3. And that no counter-claim may be set up in an action for production of such property, appears from C. 4.31.14."
[172] So Krüger, but Geta's first consulship was in 205, his second in 208, while Caracalla's second was in 205, his third in 208.

[3] Idem A. Helenae. Si avi tui hereditatem adisti, expilatae hereditatis crimine adversus novercam quondam tuam experiri non prohiberis.

PP. III non. Ian. Sabino et Anullino conss.

[4] Imp. Gordianus A. Basso. pr. Adversus uxorem, quae socia rei humanae atque divinae domus suscipitur, mariti diem suum functi successores expilatae hereditatis crimen intendere non possunt. 1. Et ideo res, quas per eandem abesse quereris, competenti in rem actione vel, si dolo malo fecerit, quo minus res mobiles possideret, ad exhibendum persequere.

2. Fructus autem rerum quas mala fide tenuit, licet expilatae hereditatis non teneatur crimine, suos non facit, sed extantes quidem vindicari, absumptos vero condici posse procul dubio est.

PP. VI k. Mart. Attico et Praetextato conss.

[5] Imp. Philippus A. et Philippus C. Sulpicio. Obtentu expilatae hereditatis emolumentum legatorum, maxime suspensa cognitione, legatariis isdemque libertis defuncti auferri non oportet.

PP. XV k. Febr. Philippo A. et Titiano conss.

[6] Idem A. et C. Basiliae. Expilatae hereditatis crimen loco deficientis actionis intendi consuevisse non est iuris ambigui.

PP. X k. Mart. Aemiliano et Aquilino conss.

XXXIII Vi Bonorum Raptorum

[1] Imp. Gordianus A. Valerio. Vi bonorum raptorum actionem, quae cum poena sua retrahit ablata, potius ad mobilia moventiaque quam ad fundos per iniuriam occupatos spectare explorati iuris est.

[3] The same Augustus to Helena. If you have entered upon your grandfather's estate, you are not prevented from bringing a charge for misappropriating the inheritance against your former stepmother.

Posted January 3, in the consulship of Sabinus and Anullinus (216).

[4] Emperor GORDIAN Augustus to Bassus. pr. Against a wife, acknowledged as a helpmate in matters human and sacred (socia rei humanae atque divinae),[173] the heirs of her decedent husband cannot bring a charge of misappropriating an inheritance. 1. So for that reason sue, with the relevant action in rem, for those items that you allege she has carried off, or, if she has acted with bad intent (dolus malus) so that she not be in possession of movable property, seek (an action) for their production.

2. Although she is not liable on a charge of misappropriating the inheritance, nevertheless she does not assume ownership of the income (fructus) from that property which she has possessed in bad faith (mala fide). Instead, it is far from doubtful that those items, at any rate, that are still in existence can be claimed through a suit on ownership, while the value of those that have been consumed can be recovered through a claim for restitution (condictio).

Posted February 24, in the consulship of Atticus and Praetextatus (242).

[5] Emperor PHILIP Augustus and PHILIP Caesar to Sulpicius. The benefit of legacies bequeathed to freedperson legatees of the decedent ought not to be disallowed on the pretext that the inheritance has been misappropriated, especially when the judicial investigation (of the matter) has been postponed.

Posted January 18, in the consulship of Philip Augustus and Titianus (245).

[6] The same Augustus and Caesar to Basilia. It is not a doubtful point of law (ius ambiguum) that a charge of misappropriating an inheritance has customarily been brought when no other action is available.

Posted February 20, in the consulship of Aemilianus and Aquilinus (249).

Thirty-Third Title Theft by Force[174]

[1] Emperor GORDIAN Augustus to Valerius. It is an established point of law (ius exploratum) that the action for theft by force, which, along with a penalty, provides for the restitution of the property carried off, pertains to movable and

[173] The manuscript reading domus cannot stand. Either it must be dropped (as in the rendering above) or read as domum, that is, "taken into one's household as a helpmate in matters human and sacred."

[174] See D. 47.8; Inst. 4.2. Theft by force is commonly called robbery (rapina).

PP. k. Mart. Attico et Praetextato conss.

[2] Impp. Valerianus et Gallienus AA. Longino. Si res mobiles, quarum in te fuerat dominium perfecta donatione translatum, violenter heres donatricis abripuit, vi bonorum raptorum actionem intra annum quidem, quo experiundi potestas fuit, in quadruplum, post annum in simplum intendere non vetaris.

PP. VII k. Mai. Saeculare et Donato conss.

[3] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. et CC. Euelpisto. Res obligatas sibi creditorem vi rapientem non rem licitam facere, sed crimen committere convenit, eumque etiam vi bonorum raptorum infra annum utilem in quadruplum, post simpli actione conveniri posse non ambigitur.

S. VII id. Ian. Sirmi AA. conss.

[4] Idem AA. et CC. Attalo. De his, quae servum alienum nesciente domino vi rapuisse dicis, infra annum in quadruplum vi bonorum raptorum et post in simplum dominus eius noxali actione apud competentem iudicem conveniri potest.

S. II k. Mai. Heracleae AA. conss.

[5] Idem AA. et CC. Dominae. Sive negotiorum gestorum contra novercam tuam sive actione vi bonorum raptorum, quae in quadruplum intra annum utilem ac post in simplum constituta est, putaveris agendum, notione praesidali poteris experiri.

S. VI non. Iul. Philippopoli AA. conss.

self-propelling property, rather than to real estate that has been seized wrongly (per iniuriam).

Posted March 1, in the consulship of Atticus and Praetextatus (242).

[2] Emperors VALERIAN and GALLIENUS Augusti to Longinus. If the heir of the female donor has seized violently the movable property whose ownership was conveyed to you through an executed gift, you are not forbidden from raising an action for theft by force, for a fourfold penalty if the action is brought within a year, of necessity, of the time in which you have had the opportunity to bring it, (but) for the value of the property if the action is brought after a year.

Posted April 25, in the consulship of Saecularis and Donatus (260).

[3][175] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti and the Caesars to Euelpistus. It is a settled rule that a creditor who seizes by force items encumbered to him does not do something licit, but does commit a criminal offense, and there is no doubt that he can also be sued on an action for theft by force for a fourfold penalty (if suit is brought) within an effective year (annus utilis), (but) if afterwards, for the value of the property.

Written January 7, at Sirmium, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[4] The same Augusti and Caesars to Attalus. Concerning property that you allege someone else's slave, without his master's knowledge, seized by force, the master can be sued in a noxal action for theft by force before the appropriate judge, for a fourfold penalty within a year and for the value of the property afterwards.

Written April 30, at Heraclea, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[5] The same Augusti and Caesars to Domina. Whether you think you should sue your stepmother on an action for the management of affairs (negotia gesta) or on one for theft by force, (the latter) for a fourfold penalty within an effective year and the value of the property afterward, you will be able to proceed under the governor's jurisdiction.

Written July 2, at Philippopolis, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[175] Combine with C. 4.10.7.

XXXIIII De Crimine Stellionatus

[1] Imp. Alexander A. Alexandro. Improbum quidem et criminosum fateris easdem res pluribus pignorasse, dissimulato in posteriore obligatione, quod eaedem aliis pignori tenentur. verum securitati tuae consules, si oblato omnibus debito criminis instituendi causam peremeris.

PP. V id. Febr. Pompeiano et Peligno conss.

[2] Imp. Gordianus A. Valenti. Si pater tuus in te donationem contulit et, cum emancipatus esses, traditionibus dominium corporum in te transtulit posteaque creditorem sortitus quasdam earum rerum sine tua voluntate velut proprias suas obstrinxit, ius tuum non laesit. nec tamen iniuria stellionatus crimine petetur, cum sciens alienam rem te non consentiente velut propriam suo nexuit creditori.

PP. II k. Ian. Gordiano A. et Aviola conss.

[3] Idem A. Hadriano. Stellionatus accusatio inter crimina publica non habetur.

PP. id. April. Attico et Praetextato conss.

[4] Imp. Philippus A. Euprepeti. Ignorantia creditoris, cui res pridem apud alios obligatae pignoris seu hypothecae iure obligantur, non sine periculo capi consuevit. etenim eiusmodi fraudes ad extraordinariam criminis exsecutionem spectare ac stellionatus commissum severissime esse vindicandum saepe rescriptum est. 1. Proinde sive ignorantiam tuam debitor circumvenire temptaverit, seu obligatione rite perfecta participato fraudis consilio per subiectam quasi anteriorem personam dispendium tuum ad occultum compendium suum pertemptat,[xv] adire suum iudicem potes congruentem iuri ac debitae[xvi] religioni sententiam relaturum.

PP. VI id. Mai. Peregrino et Aemiliano conss.

[xv] <trahere>
[xvi] debitam

Thirty-Fourth Title The Crime of Double-Dealing (Stellionatus)[176]

[1] Emperor Alexander Augustus to Alexander. You acknowledge that it is immoral, in fact, and criminal to have pledged the same items to more than one person, having concealed the fact that they were (already) pledged to others when making a subsequent contract. But you will consult your own interest in being free from concern if, by paying off your debt to everyone, you completely remove the reason for making an accusation.

Posted February 9, in the consulship of Pompeianus and Pelignus (231).

[2] Emperor Gordian Augustus to Valens. If your father made you a gift and, after you were emancipated, informally conveyed ownership of the items to you, and thereafter, having obtained a loan from a creditor, without your approval bound (by pledge or hypothec) certain of these items as though they were his own, he has not prejudiced your right. Nor will he, all the same, unjustly be prosecuted on a charge of double-dealing, when he knowingly bound over to his creditor someone else's property as though it were his own, without your consent.

Posted December 31, in the consulship of Gordian Augustus and Aviola (239).

[3] The same Augustus to Hadrianus. A prosecution for double-dealing is not ranked among public criminal offenses (crimina publica).

Posted April 13, in the consulship of Atticus and Praetextatus (242).

[4] Emperor Philip Augustus to Euprepes. pr. Taking advantage of the ignorance of a creditor to whom property is bound over by right of pledge or hypotheca, when previously the (same) property was bound over to others, has not usually happened without risk. For it has often been laid down in imperial rescripts that frauds (fraudes) of this kind pertain to the extraordinary (extra ordinem) repression of crime and that the commission of double-dealing shall be avenged very severely. 1. So whether the debtor has tried to take advantage of your ignorance, or whether, after the obligation has been legally completed, he, having taken on an accomplice in a fraudulent scheme (fraus), attempts, by interposing a third party as though a prior creditor, to turn your loss into his clandestine gain, you can approach the appropriate judge, who will deliver a verdict consistent with law (ius) and in fulfillment of his duty (religio).

Posted May 10, in the consulship of Peregrinus and Aemilianus (244).

[176] See D. 47.20. Stellionatus (literally "behaving like a lizard") is a residual category of deceitful criminal behavior that other crimes fail to reach.

XXXV De Iniuriis

[1] Imp. Alexander A. Syro. Nec servis quidem alienis licet facere iniuriam.
PP. XI k. Dec. Alexandro A. cons.

[2] Idem A. Davo. Iniuriarum actio tibi duplici ex causa competit, cum et maritus in uxoris pudore et pater in existimatione filiorum propriam iniuriam pati intelleguntur.
PP. prid. idus Maias Agricola et Clemente conss.

[3] Imp. Gordianus A. Donato. Si non es nuntiator, vereri non debes, ne eapropter, quod iniuriae faciendae gratia quidam te veluti delatorem esse dixerunt, opinio tua maculata sit. quin immo adversus eos, quos minuendae opinionis tuae causa aliquid confecisse comperietur, more solito iniuriarum iudicio experiri potes.
PP. II id. Iul. Gordiano A. et Aviola conss.

[4] Impp. Valerianus et Gallienus AA. et Valerianus C. Vindi. Atrocem sine dubio iniuriam esse factam manifestum est, si tibi illata est, cum esses in sacerdotio et dignitatis habitum et ornamenta proferres: et ideo vindictam potes eo nomine exsequi.
PP. II ... Aemiliano et Basso conss.

[5] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. Victorino. Si non convicii consilio te aliquid iniuriosum dixisse probare potes, fides veri a calumnia te defendit. si in rixa inconsulto calore prolapsus homicidii convicium obiecisti et ex eo die annus excessit, cum iniuriarum actio annuo tempore praescripta sit, ob iniuriae admissum conveniri non potes.
PP. VI id. Iul. ipsis IIII et III AA. conss.

[6] Idem AA. Flaviano. Cum nec patronos iniuriam facere libertis iuris aequitas permittat, proponasque patronae heredes eum, qui libertatem

Thirty-Fifth Title Affronts (Iniuriae)[177]

[1][178] Emperor ALEXANDER Augustus to Syrus. It is not even permitted to inflict an affront on the slaves of others.

Posted November 21, in the consulship of Alexander Augustus (222).

[2] The same Augustus to Davus. An action for affront lies for you under a double rationale, since both a husband as to the shame (pudor) of his wife and a father with regard to the reputation (existimatio) of his children are (also) understood to suffer an affront to themselves.

Posted May 14, in the consulship of Agricola and Clemens (230).

[3] Emperor GORDIAN Augustus to Donatus. If you are not an informer (nuntiator), you ought not to fear that, on account of the fact that, in order to inflict an affront upon you, certain persons have described you as though you were an informer, your social reputation (opinio) has been compromised. Instead, in fact, you may bring suit for affront in the customary manner against those who, it will be shown, have concocted something to impair your social reputation.

Posted July 14, in the consulship of Gordian Augustus and Aviola (239).

[4] Emperors VALERIAN and GALLIENUS Augusti and VALERIAN Caesar to Vindes. It is clear beyond doubt that an aggravated affront has been committed if it was inflicted upon you when you held a priesthood and displayed the dress and (other) attributes of this rank. And for that reason you can pursue vengeance under that title.

Posted ... in the consulship of Aemilianus and Bassus (259).

[5] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti to Victorinus. If you can prove that you said something insulting with no abusive intent (convicii consilium), (the court's) confidence in your truthfulness protects you from malicious prosecution (calumnia). If during a brawl you made a slip, out of heedless anger, and hurled an insult of "murderer" (at someone), and since that day a year has passed, because the action on affronts is limited to the period of one year, you cannot be sued for the commission of an affront.

Posted July 10, in the consulship of the Augusti, for the fourth and third times, respectively (290).

[6] The same Augusti to Flavianus. Since legal fairness (iuris aequitas) does not permit even patrons to inflict affront on their freedpersons, and you allege [177] See D. 47.10, Inst. 4.4. Iniuriae are private affronts to the personal dignity of others.

[178] Combine with C. 3.42.2, 9.2.2.

a defuncta acceperat, iniuriis adficere, curabit praeses provinciae contumeliam heredum compescere.

PP. id. Iul. ipsis IIII et III AA. conss.

[7] Idem AA. et CC. Paenentiano. Iniuriarum causa non publici iudicii, sed privati continet querellam.

S. id. Febr. Sirmi AA. conss.

[8] Idem AA. et CC. Marciano. Dominum pro atroci iniuria, quam servus eius passus est, edicti perpetui actione proposita, qua damni etiam haberi rationem verbis evidenter exprimitur, agere posse convenit.

S. XV k. Nov. CC. conss.

[9] Idem AA. et CC. Nonnae. Qui liberos infamandi gratia dixerunt servos, iniuriarum conveniri posse non ambigitur.

S. VI k. Dec. Nicomediae CC. conss.

[10] Idem AA. et CC. Paulo. Si quidem aviam tuam ancillam infamandi causa rei publicae civitatis Comanensium dixit Zenodorus ac recessit, iniuriarum actione statim conveniri potest. nam si perseveret in causa facultatem habens agendi, super hac deferri querellam ac tunc demum, si non esse serva fuerit pronuntiata, postulari convenit.

S. XV k. Ian. Nicomediae CC. conss.

[11] Imp. Zeno A. Alexandro viro illustri. Si quando iniuriarum actio, quam inter privata delicta veteris iuris auctores connumerant, a quibuslibet illustribus viris, militantibus seu sine cingulo constitutis, vel uxoribus eorum vel liberis masculini sexus vel filiabus, superstitibus videlicet patribus aut maritis illustribus, vel si adversus aliquam huiusmodi personam criminaliter forte movetur, ipsos quidem, qui super iniuria queruntur, inscribere aliaque omnia, quae in huiusmodi causis de more procedunt, sollemniter observare decernimus: licere autem illustri accusatori vel reo, uxori vel liberis masculini sexus seu filiae itidem illustris superstitis causam iniuriarum in quocumque iudicio competenti per that the heirs of the female patron inflicted affronts upon a man who received his freedom from the decedent, the governor of the province will take care to repress the insult inflicted by the heirs.

Posted July 15, in the consulship of the Augusti, for the fourth and third times, respectively (290).

[7] The same Augusti and the Caesars to Paenentianus. A case of affront involves not a public criminal prosecution (publicum iudicium) but a suit under private law.

Written February 13, at Sirmium, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[8] The same Augusti and Caesars to Marcianus. It is appropriate that a master whose slave has suffered an aggravated affront can sue for this on the action set forth in the Perpetual Edict, where the measure of damages is also described in clear words.

Written October 18, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[9] The same Augusti and Caesars to Nonna. There is no doubt that those who have called free persons slaves for the purpose of defaming them can be sued for affront.

Written November 26, at Nicomedia, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[10] The same Augusti and Caesars to Paulus. If, to be sure, Zenodorus called your grandmother a slave of the town of Comana for the purpose of defaming her and (then) desisted, he can be sued immediately on an action for affront. For if he persists in the case while possessing the opportunity of launching a suit (to prove her slave status), it is appropriate that the suit (on affront) be delayed and then finally that he be sued if the woman has been declared not to be a slave.

Written December 18, at Nicomedia, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[11] Emperor Zeno Augustus to the vir illustris Alexander. If at any time an action for affront, which the ancient jurists (veteris iuris auctores) number among the private delicts, happens to be raised by any viri illustres whatsoever, whether on active (military) service or not, (or) by their wives, by their male or female children obviously while their illustres fathers or husbands are still living, or in case (such) a criminal accusation happens to be brought against any person of this kind, We decree that those very persons, to be sure, who (want to) bring suit for affront, shall make a formal application and faithfully respect all the other aspects of customary procedure in cases of this kind. (We decree) moreover that it shall be allowed to an illustris prosecutor or defendant, to his wife, to their children whether male or female, provided again in the latter procuratorem criminaliter suscipere vel movere, sententiam iudice contra eum qui procuratorem dederit, etsi ipse non adesset[xvii] iudiciis nec causam per procuratorem diceret, legibus prolaturo: ita tamen, ut nullus alius idem sibi audeat vindicare vel a nostro numine postulare: sed in ceteris mos iudiciorum qui hactenus obtinuit et in posterum servetur intactus.

D. v non. Nov. Constantinopoli Illo vc. cons.

XXXVI De Famosis Libellis

[1] Πᾶς ὁ εὑρίσκων φλυαρίαν ἢ ἐσφραγισμένην ἢ ἀσφράγιστον καὶ μὴ παραχρῆμα καίων ἀλλ' ἀναγινώσκων ὑποκείσθω τῇ τιμωρίᾳ, ἥτινι ὑπόκειται καὶ ὁ συντεθεικὼς τὴν φλυαρίαν.

[2] Impp. Valentinianus et Valens AA. edictum. pr. Si quis famosum libellum sive domi sive in publico vel quocumque loco ignarus reppererit, aut corrumpat, priusquam alter inveniat, aut nulli confiteatur inventum. 1. Sin vero non statim easdem chartulas vel corruperit vel igni consumpserit, sed vim earum manifestaverit, sciat se quasi auctorem huiusmodi delicti capitali sententia subiugandum.

2. Sane si quis devotionis suae ac salutis publicae custodiam gerit, nomen suum profiteatur et ea, quae per famosum persequenda putavit, ore proprio edicat, ita ut absque ulla trepidatione accedat, sciens, quod, si adsertionibus veri fides fuerit opitulata, laudem maximam ac praemium a nostra clementia consequetur. 3. Sin vero minime haec vera ostenderit, capitali poena plectetur. huiusmodi autem libellus alterius opinionem non laedat.

D. XIIII k. Mart. Constantinopoli Valentiniano et Valente AA. conss.

[xvii] ac si ipse adesset case that a daughter's illustris father is still alive, to respond to or initiate a suit for affront on a criminal basis in any appropriate court whatsoever through a procurator. The judge shall pronounce sentence in accordance with the laws against a person who has appointed a procurator, as if this party himself had been present in court and did not make a case through a procurator. This (shall happen) in such a way, however, that no other person shall dare to claim this same privilege for him- or herself or to petition for this from Our Holiness. As to all other persons, the judicial practice which has obtained up to this point shall also be maintained unchanged in future.

Given November 1, at Constantinople, in the consulship of the vir clarissimus Illus (478).

Thirty-Sixth Title Defamatory Publications

[1] Whoever discovers a slanderous publication, signed or unsigned, and does not immediately burn it, but reads it, shall be liable to the same penalty as the person who composed it.[179]

[2][180] Emperors VALENTINIAN and VALENS Augusti; an Edict. pr. If someone unknowingly discovers a defamatory publication either at home, in public, or in any place at all, he shall either destroy it before another person comes across it or communicate to no one else what he has found. 1. But if, however, he does not immediately efface the document or destroy it by burning it, but discloses the sense of what it contains, let this person know that he shall be subjected to a capital sentence (capitalis sententia) as though he were the author of this kind of offense.

2. Indeed, if someone (who writes a defamatory publication) has a concern for his own self-preservation and the public safety, he shall declare his own name and announce personally those things that he thought should be pursued through a defamatory publication, so that he may approach, without any fear, knowing that, if the actual truth supports the allegations, he will receive the greatest praise, as well as a reward from Our Clemency. 3. But if, however, he does not at all prove these things (he has alleged) to be true, he will be afflicted with capital punishment (capitalis poena). Moreover, a publication of this kind shall not harm the social reputation (opinio) of another person.

Given February 16, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Valentinian and Valens Augusti (365).

[179] See Bas. 60.63.1.

[180] = (in part, with changes) C.Th. 9.34.7 (the principium derives from C.Th. 9.34.9, dating to January 19, 386).

XXXVII De Abigeis

[1] Impp. Arcadius et Honorius AA. Pasiphilo. Abacti animalis accusatio non solum cum inscriptionibus, sed etiam sine ea observatione proponitur.

D. VIII k. Ian. Mediolani Olybrio et Probino conss.

XXXVIII De Nili Aggeribus Non Rumpendis

[1] Impp. Honorius et Theodosius AA. Anthemio pp. Si quis posthac per Aegyptum intra duodecimum cubitum fluminis Nili ulla fluenta de propriis ac vetustis usibus praeter fas praeterque morem antiquitatis usurpaverit, flammis eo loco consumatur, in quo vetustatis reverentiam et propemodum ipsius imperii appetierit securitatem: consciis et consortibus eius deportatione constringendis, ita ut numquam supplicandi eis vel recipiendi civitatem vel dignitatem vel substantiam licentia tribuatur.

D. X k. Oct. Constantinopoli Honorio VIII et Theodosio III AA. conss.

XXXVIIII De His Qui Latrones vel in Aliis Criminibus Reos Occultaverint

[1] Imppp. Valentinianus Valens et Gratianus AAA. Simplicio vicario. pr. Eos, qui se cum alieni criminis reo occultando eum sociarunt, par ipsos et reos poena expectet. 1. Et latrones quisquis sciens susceperit vel offerre iudiciis supersederit, supplicio corporali aut dispendio facultatum pro qualitate personae et iudicis aestimatione plectatur.

PP. Romae X k. April. Gratiano A. III et Equitio conss.

Thirty-Seventh Title Cattle Rustlers[181]

[1][182] Emperors Arcadius and Honorius Augusti to Pasiphilus. A prosecution for the rustling of an animal moves forward not only through a formal accusation, but also without this usage.

Given December 25, at Milan, in the consulship of Olybrius and Probinus (395).

Thirty-Eighth Title Levees on the Nile Shall Not Be Burst

[1][183] Emperors Honorius and Theodosius Augusti to Anthemius, Praetorian Prefect. If anyone in Egypt hereafter diverts any flow of water, within 12 cubits (a little over 5.3 meters) of the Nile, from its particular and long-term uses in violation of right (fas) and ancient custom, that person shall be consumed by flames on the spot where he made an assault on the respect for the past and very nearly the safety of the Empire itself. Those who are complicit in knowledge and accomplices in the deed shall be punished with capital exile (deportatio), in order that they never enjoy the possibility of petitioning for or receiving their citizenship, rank, or property.

Given September 22, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Honorius, for the eighth time, and Theodosius, for the third time, Augusti (409).

Thirty-Ninth Title Those Who Conceal Bandits and Persons Guilty of Other Criminal Offenses[184]

[1] Emperors Valentinian, Valens, and Gratian Augusti to Simplicius, Vicar. pr.[185] A punishment equal to that of the guilty parties themselves shall await those who by hiding him have associated themselves with the culprit of a crime with which they were not involved. 1.[186] And anyone who knowingly takes in bandits or omits to turn them over to the courts shall be punished with corporal punishment or confiscation of property, in accordance with their personal status and the assessment of the judge.

Posted March 23, at Rome, in the consulship of Gratian Augustus, for the third time, and Equitius (374).

[181] See D. 47.14.
[182] = (with changes) C.Th. 2.1.8.1. Combine with C. 8.4.8, 9.2.16. Seeck dates to January 6, 395.
[183] = (with minor changes) C.Th. 9.32.1.
[184] See D. 47.16.
[185] Pr. = (with minor changes) C.Th. 9.29.1.
[186] 1 = (in part, with minor changes) C.Th. 9.29.2, which adds Theodosius I as emperor in place of Valens (and by implication Valentinian II in place of I) and dates to February 27, 383 or 391.

[2] Imp. Marcianus A. Palladio pp. pr. Si qui latrones seu aliis criminibus obnoxii in possessione degunt seu latitant, dominus possessionis, si praesto est, aut procuratores, si dominus abest, seu primates possessionis ultro eos offerant aut, si scientes hoc sponte non fecerint, conveniantur a civili officio, ut tradant provinciali iudicio eos qui requiruntur, prout iuris est sub examine iudicis arguendos et poenas post documenta congruas subituros. si vero exhibere eos domini vel procuratores aut primates possessionis distulerint, tunc ad detinendos eos a rectore provinciae omnia civilia dirigantur auxilia.

1. Si autem propter multitudinem forte eorum, qui in praedio sunt, civile adminiculum sufficere non posse constiterit et memorati audaces exsecutoribus obiecerint manus vel alias parere distulerint, tunc iudex provinciae memor periculi sui a viro devoto tribuno seu primatibus militum qui in locis sunt auxilium postulet, ut per militarem manum correpti accusati sine damno atque laesione cuiuslibet legibus offerantur et convicti poenas subeant competentes: non ignaro iudice, quod, si adversus innocentes vel ob aliam causam praeter latronum vel aliorum nocentium investigationem militare auxilium postulaverit aut dispendiis adfici provinciales concesserit, commotione severissima, prout tua celsitudo iudicaverit, ferietur. 1a. Tribuni etiam seu primates numerorum, qui in locis sunt, admoniti per litteras iudicis si adminiculum militare praebere noluerint, aut si ab ipsis militibus damna provincialibus inflicta fuerint, et damna et laesiones restituent et acerrima condemnatione pro arbitrio virorum illustrium magistrorum militum ferientur.

2. Domini etiam praediorum seu procuratores vel primates possessionum impunes non manebunt, si praesentes et scientes ultro non obtulerint nocentes vel admoniti eos exhibere distulerint: nam dominus quidem possessionis dominio privabitur, procurator vero seu primates perpetuo exilio subiacebunt. ipsi quoque procuratori vel domino vel primatibus possessionis, si se ad comprimendam multitudinem rusticanorum sufficere non posse firmaverint et id provinciali iudicio palam fecerint, militare auxilium rector provinciae a tribuno vel primatibus numeri faciet dari, si civilia sufficere non posse perspexerit.

[2] Emperor M*ARCIAN* Augustus to Palladius, Praetorian Prefect. pr. If any bandits or those guilty of other criminal offenses live (openly) or hide out on a landed estate (possessio), the owner of the property, if present, or his procurators, if the owner is absent, or the overseers of the property shall turn them over of their own accord, or, if they knowingly do not do this of their own accord, they shall be summoned by the civil administrative staff so that they surrender those being sought to the provincial governor's court in order that, in accordance with the law, they shall be accused in a trial before a judge and suffer appropriate punishment following proof. But if the owners, procurators, or overseers of the property delay in producing them, then all civil assistance shall be directed by the governor of the province toward securing their detention.

1. If, however, on account of the numbers perchance of those who are on the property, the civil administration turns out to be inadequate, and the aforementioned, in their audacity, lay hands on those carrying out the orders of the civil authority or otherwise fail to obey, then the judge (governor) of the province, mindful of the danger to himself, shall demand assistance from the tribune appointed for this purpose or from the military commanders stationed in that place, in order that the accused shall be seized by military force without loss or damage to anyone at all and be handed over to the laws. Once convicted, they shall suffer the appropriate penalties. The judge shall not be unaware of the fact that if he summons military assistance against innocent parties or for any other reason aside from an enquiry into bandits or other guilty persons or allows the provincials to suffer financial loss, he will be struck with a very severe blow, in accordance with the judgment of your Highness. 1a. If, as well, the tribunes or the commanders of the military units stationed in that place, once instructed by a letter from the judge, refuse to furnish military assistance, or if loss is inflicted upon the provincials by the soldiers themselves, they will make good the loss and damage and will suffer a very harsh penalty to be decided by the viri illustres Masters of Soldiers.

2. Also the owners of the properties, their procurators, and the overseers of these properties will not remain unpunished if, being present and in the know, they do not of their own accord turn over the guilty or, when exhorted to do so, they fail to produce them. For the owner, certainly, will be deprived of title to his property, while the procurators and the overseers will be liable to permanent exile (perpetuum exilium). If, too, they affirm that they lack sufficient force to restrain the large number of peasants (rusticani) and make this clear to the provincial court, the governor of the province, if he discerns that civil assistance cannot suffice, will see to it that military assistance is provided by the tribune or the unit commanders to the procurator, owner, or overseers of the property themselves.

3. Si vero post exhibitionem eorum qui accusantur innocentes eos esse et nihil criminis admisisse patuerit, accusatores poenam quae in calumniatores exercenda est subire cogantur. exemplo autem grave est sic latronem requirere, ut innocentibus periculum fiat.

D. XII k. Ian. Constantinopoli Marciano A. cons.

XXXX De Requirendis

[1] Imp. Antoninus A. Rustico. pr. Cum absenti reo gravia crimina intentantur, sententia festinari non solet, sed adnotari, ut requiratur, non utique ad poenam, sed ut potestas ei sit purgandi se, si potuerit. 1. Postquam vero requirendus factus intra annum redierit, si se crimine purgaverit, res arbitrio iudicis signatas recipiat: sin vero intra id tempus reversus post intimationem suam fuerit defunctus, etsi necdum se purgaverit, ad heredes proprios res transmittit.

D. Gentiano et Basso conss.

[2] Imp. Constantinus A. ad Ianuarium. Quicumque ex eo die, quo reus fuerit in iudicio petitus, intra anni spatium noluerit adesse iudicio, res eius fisco vindicentur, et si postea repertus nocens fuerit deprehensus, saeviori sententiae subiugetur. sed et si argumentis evidentibus et probatione dilucida innocentiam suam purgare suffecerit, nihilo minus facultates eius penes fiscum remaneant.

D. id. Ian. acc. V k. Aug. Corintho Constantino A. V et Licinio C. conss.

[3] Impp. Honorius et Theodosius AA. Palladio pp. In pecuniariis causis edictum contra latentem propositum existimationem eius non laedit. criminalis vero programmatis tenor hanc tantum ferat de iure

3. If, however, it emerges after the production of those accused that they are innocent and have committed no crime, the accusers shall be compelled to suffer the penalty that is to be inflicted on those guilty of malicious prosecution. Moreover, it is a bad precedent to seek out a bandit in such a way as to expose the innocent to danger.

Given December 21, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Marcian Augustus (451).

Fortieth Title Wanted Persons[187]

[1] Emperor ANTONINUS Augustus to Rusticus. pr. When criminal charges of a serious nature are raised against a defendant who is absent, the usual practice is not to rush to judgment, but to make an official notation that he be sought out, not precisely for sentencing, but in order that the defendant have the opportunity of clearing himself, if possible. 1. In fact, after the person who is registered as wanted returns within a year, if he clears himself, he shall receive his property that had been under seal, at the discretion of the judge. But if, however, he returns within this time period and gives notice (of his return), and then dies, even if he has not cleared himself, the property passes to his own heirs.

Given in the consulship of Gentianus and Bassus (211).

[2][188] Emperor CONSTANTINE Augustus to Ianuarius.[189] Whoever refuses to be present in court within a year from the time when he is cited as a criminal defendant before the court, shall have his property claimed by the Treasury, and if afterwards the defendant is located and found guilty, he shall be subjected to a more severe sentence. But even if he succeeds, by manifest proofs and a clear demonstration of the evidence, in showing his innocence, his property shall remain nonetheless with the Treasury.

Given January 13 and received July 28, at Corinth, in the consulship of Constantine Augustus, for the fifth time, and Licinius Caesar (319).

[3][190] Emperors HONORIUS and THEODOSIUS Augusti to Palladius, Praetorian Prefect. In civil cases, the Edict promulgated against defendants concealing themselves does not compromise their reputation (existimatio; i.e., does not inflict legal infamy). But the sense of a criminal declaration (criminale

[187] See D. 48.17.
[188] = C.Th. 9.1.2.
[189] The addressee is more likely Januarinus: Haenel.
[190] = (in part, with changes) C.Th. 10.10.29. Combine with C. 10.1.10, 10.10.4; C.Th. 4.15.1.

censuram, ut inter reos adnotati non iam patrimonium debeat transferre, sed famae existimationem laedere.

D. VIII id. Iul. Ravennae Eustathio et Agricola conss.

XXXXI De Quaestionibus

[1] Impp. Severus et Antoninus AA. Spicio Antigono. pr. Quaestionem de servis contra dominos haberi non oportet, exceptis adulterii criminibus, item fraudati census accusationibus et crimine maiestatis, quod ad salutem principis pertinet. 1. In ceteris autem, quamquam ea, quae servus contra dominum dixit, iudicaturi sententiam formare non debeant, tamen si aliis quoque probationibus fides veritatis investigetur, praescriptionis invidia evanescit. 2. In pecuniariis vero causis nec inopia probationum servos contra dominum interrogari posse manifestum est.

PP. k. Ian. Dextro et Prisco conss.

[2] Idem AA. Catulo. Insolitum est et grave exemplo audiri servos adversus tutores vel matrem dominorum suorum, nisi tutelae agatur.

PP. III id. Sept. Cilone et Libone conss.

[3] Imp. Antoninus A. cum cognitionaliter audisset, dixit: Primum servi alieni interrogabuntur. si praestita fuerint ex tanto scelere argumenta, ut videantur accedere ad verisimilia causae crimina, ipsa quoque mulier torquebitur: neque enim aegre feret, si torqueatur, quae venenis viscera hominis extinxit.

PP. VII k. April. Sabino et Anullino conss.

programma) shall bring this legal sanction to bear only in such a way that it should not at this point transfer (to the Treasury) property of the person registered among criminal defendants, but rather harm his reputation (famae existimatio; i.e., inflict legal infamy).

Given July 8, at Ravenna, in the consulship of Eustathius and Agricola (421).

Forty-First Title Judicial Examination Under Torture[191]

[1][192] Emperors SEVERUS and ANTONINUS Augusti to Spicius Antigonus. pr. Judicial examination under torture of slaves ought not to be conducted against their masters, aside from charges of adultery, accusations of tax fraud, and a prosecution for treason (maiestas), which concerns the safety of the Emperor. 1. As for the rest, however, although what the slave has said against the master ought not to shape the decision of him who is going to deliver a sentence, nevertheless, if the foundation for the truth is also brought to light through other evidence, the ill will associated with the exclusion (praescriptio) fails. 2. But it is obvious that in civil cases slaves cannot be questioned to the detriment of their masters even where proof is lacking.

Posted January 1, in the consulship of Dexter and Priscus (196).

[2] The same Augusti to Catulus. It is unheard of and sets a bad precedent for slaves to be heard against the tutores or mother of their masters, except in a suit on tutelage.

Posted September 11, in the consulship of Cilo and Libo (204).

[3] Emperor ANTONINUS Augustus, when he had held a judicial hearing, declared: First, the slaves belonging to someone else (other than the defendant) will be questioned. If (in this way) proofs are furnished of such great wickedness that the proceedings seem to draw close to (the disclosure of) likely crimes, the woman herself will also be subjected to judicial examination under torture. For she will not take it badly if she, who ended someone's life through poison, is tortured.

Posted March 26, in the consulship of Sabinus and Anullinus (216).

[191] See D. 48.18. The references in this title to the torture and examination of slaves amount to the same thing: the judicial examination under torture of slaves (quaestio servorum). Blume: "Their testimony was normally taken by torture, and in fact it appears that it could not be taken in any other form." There are also instances where torture is invoked as a penalty or as a means of examining free persons judicially (below).

[192] See Ulp. D. 48.1.16.

[4] Pars ex rescripto imp. Antonini A. Sicuti convictis confessisque ad societatem scelerum vocantibus eos, a quibus apprehensi custoditive sunt, facile credi non oportet, ita, si evidentibus rationibus post commissum communiter facinus ad evitandam de se sententiam id fecisse fuerint probati, publicae vindictae non sunt subtrahendi.

PP. v k. April. Sabino et Anullino conss.

[5] Imp. Alexander A. Respecto. Nec si mors testatoris vindicanda est, quaestioni indiscrete subiciuntur hi, qui libertatem supremo iudicio acceperunt.

PP. vi id. Mart. Iuliano et Crispino conss.

[6] Imp. Gordianus A. Herodiano. Pridem placuit domestica servorum seu libertorum propriorum vel maternorum interrogatione in causis ad dominos vel patronos pertinentibus abstinendum esse, ut neque pro his neque adversus eos in capitalibus vel pecuniariis quaestionibus veritatis vim obtinere possit, quod in confessionem ab eis fuerit deductum.

PP. vii id. Mai. Sabino et Venusto conss.

[7] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. Urbanae. Servos, qui proprii indubitate iuris tui probabuntur, ad interrogationem nec offerente te produci sineremus: tantum abest, ut et invita te contra dominam vocem rumpere cogantur.

PP. k. Nov. Maximo ii et Aquilino conss.

[8] Idem AA. ad Sallustianum praesidem. pr. Milites neque tormentis neque plebeiorum poenis in causis criminum subiungi concedimus, etiamsi non emeritis stipendiis videantur esse dimissi, exceptis scilicet his, qui ignominiose sunt soluti. quod et in filiis militum et veteranorum servabitur.

1. Oportet autem iudices nec in his criminibus, quae publicorum iudiciorum sunt, in investigatione veritatis a tormentis initium sumere, sed

[4] Part of a Rescript by the same Augustus. Just as those who have confessed and been convicted ought not to be readily believed when they name as their accomplices those who have arrested and detained them, so, if the latter are shown by clear proofs to have acted thus after the joint commission of a crime in order to escape punishment for themselves, they shall not be exempted from the infliction of public vengeance.

Posted March 28, in the consulship of Sabinus and Anullinus (216).[193]

[5] Emperor ALEXANDER Augustus to Respectus. Not even if the death of the testator must be avenged are those who received their freedom in the testament indiscriminately subjected to judicial examination under torture.

Posted March 10, in the consulship of Julian and Crispinus (224).

[6] Emperor GORDIAN Augustus to Herodianus. It has long been the rule that, in cases relating to masters or patrons, one should abstain from the judicial examination under torture of their own slaves or freed-persons or those of their mother, so that what is drawn out of them by way of confession (during such examination) can furnish decisive evidence neither for or against masters and patrons in both civil and criminal trials.

Posted May 9, in the consulship of Sabinus and Venustus (240).[194]

[7] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti to Urbana. We would not permit slaves, who are shown to be yours by undoubted right, to be produced for questioning even if you were to offer this. So much the less, even against your wishes, shall they be compelled to raise their voices against their owner.

Posted November 1, in the consulship of Maximus, for the second time, and Aquilinus (286).

[8] The same Augusti to Sallustianus, Governor. pr. We permit soldiers to be subjected neither to (judicial examination under) torture nor to the penalties inflicted upon common people (plebeii) in criminal cases, even if they are deemed to have been discharged without having served a full term of service, unless, of course, they have been dishonorably discharged. This rule will also be observed for the children of soldiers and of veterans.

1. Moreover, judges, ought not, even in those criminal cases which are defined as public (iudicia publica), to begin their investigation of the truth with

[193] Blume: "See 9.2.17.1, which, in so far as confessed criminals are concerned, seems to be inconsistent with this law, unless it means, as it probably does, that all proof of the crime must come from other sources than the accusers."

[194] Other constitutions show that this was the second consulship for Sabinus.

argumentis primum verisimilibus probabilibusque uti. 2. Et si his veluti certis indiciis ducti investigandae veritatis gratia ad tormenta putaverint esse veniendum, tunc id demum facere debebunt, si personarum condicio pateretur. hac enim ratione etiam universi provinciales nostri fructum ingenitae nobis benevolentiae consequentur.

PP. Sine die et consule.

[9] Idem AA. ad Charisium praesidem Syriae. Super statu ingenuitatis per omnia interrogationum et quaestionum vestigia decurrendum est, ne alieni forte sordidae stirpis splendidis et ingenuis natalibus audeant subrogari, vel propria ac debita per compositam quaestionem quibus competit successio denegetur.

D. VI id. Mai. Hemesa ipsis IIII et III AA. conss.

[10] Idem AA. Ptolemaeo. Cum testamentum falsum esse proponas, ad illuminandam veritatem servos hereditarios, etsi libertas eis ab eo qui se heredem esse adfirmat praestita est, etiam per tormenta interrogari constitutionibus principum est permissum.

PP. VI k. Sept. ipsis IIII et III AA. conss.

[11] Idem AA. Boetho. pr. Divo Marco placuit eminentissimorum quidem nec non etiam perfectissimorum virorum usque ad pronepotes liberos plebeiorum poenis vel quaestionibus non subici, si tamen propioris gradus liberos, per quos id privilegium ad ulteriorem gradum transgreditur, nulla violati pudoris macula adspergit. 1. In decurionibus autem et filiis eorum hoc observari vir prudentissimus Domitius Ulpianus in publicarum disputationum libris ad perennem scientiae memoriam refert.

PP. V k. Dec. ipsis IIII et III AA. conss.

tortures, but ought first to rely on likely and probable evidence (of another sort). 2. And if, led by this, as it were, definite evidence, they think that they should resort to tortures for the sake of investigating the truth, then in the final analysis they ought to do this, if the status of the parties permits. For in this way too all Our provincials will reap the fruit of Our innate benevolence.

Posted without day or year.

[9] The same Augusti to Charisius, Governor of Syria. Resort shall be had, in an enquiry over free-born status (in a dispute over an inheritance), to all means of accumulating evidence through questioning of witnesses and judicial examination under torture, so that non-kinsmen, perhaps of low birth, do not dare to arrogate to themselves the benefits of high status and free birth, or a right to succession that is proper and owed is not denied, because of a contrived judicial investigation, to those entitled to it.

Given May 10, at Emesa, in the consulship of the Augusti, for the fourth and third time, respectively (290).

[10] The same Augusti to Ptolemaeus. Since you allege that the testament is forged, it is permitted by imperial enactments (constitutiones principum) that, for the purpose of shedding light on the truth, the slaves in the inheritance, even if they have been granted freedom by the person who claims to be heir, shall be examined judicially even under torture.

Posted August 27, in the consulship of the Augusti, for the fourth and third time, respectively (290).

[11] The same Augusti to Boethus. pr. A decision was made by the deified Marcus (Aurelius) that the descendants of men with the rank of eminentissimus, to be sure, as well as that of perfectissimus, down to great-grandchildren, shall not be subjected to the penalties or judicial examination under torture inflicted upon the common people (plebeii), provided that, however, the descendants of nearer degree, through whom this privilege is transmitted, are not stained by any blot of an outraged sense of sexual shame (violati pudoris macula). 1. Regarding decurions and their children, moreover, that most learned man Domitius Ulpian in his work on Public Disputations[195] holds that this rule be observed, redounding to the eternal commemoration of knowledge.

Posted November 27, in the consulship of the Augusti, for the fourth and third time, respectively (290).

[195] See Ulp. D. 50.2.2.2.

[12] Idem AA. Aspro. Quotiens de dominio mancipiorum tractatur, si aliis probationibus veritas illuminari non possit, de se ipsa esse cum tormentis interroganda iuris auctores probant.

PP. III id. Mai. Sirmi Tiberiano et Dione conss.

[13] Idem AA. et CC. Philippae. Hoc, quod placet, si de hereditate quaeratur, hereditarios servos interrogari, tibi opitulari non potest. ibi enim, dum de dominio incertum est, ad quem ex hereditate pertineat, merito per interrogationem hereditarii servi ad veritatis indaginem perveniatur. tu autem adseverando servum communem esse non dubitas portionem ad eum pertinere, contra quem interrogari eum cupis: quae res quaestionem ab eo haberi non permittit, cum nec communis servus adversus dominum, qui non occidisse socium suum dicatur, interrogari possit.

S. III k. Mai. Heracliae AA. conss.

[14] Idem AA. et CC. Constantio. Servos non solum pro dominis, sub quorum dominio sunt constituti, sed nec pro his quorum antea fuerunt interrogari posse constat.

S. VIII id. April. CC. conss.

[15] Idem AA. et CC. Maximo. Interrogari servos de facto suo non solum in criminali causa, sed etiam in pecuniaria (veluti quando per eum depositi vel commodati nomine vel in aliis causis legibus cognitis res aliis praestitae sunt) posse non ambigitur.

S. V id. April. CC. conss.

[16] Imppp. Valentinianus Valens et Gratianus AAA. ad Antonium pp. Galliarum. pr. Decuriones sive ob alienum sive ob suum debitum exsortes omnino earum volumus esse poenarum, quas fidiculae et tormenta constituunt. quod quidem capitale iudici erit, si in contumeliam ordinis exitiumque temptetur. 1. Maiestatis tantummodo reos et quae nefanda dictu sunt conscios aut molientes ex ordine municipali maneat tam cruenta condicio.

D. XV k. Oct. Treviris Valente V et Valentiniano AA. conss.

[12] The same Augusti to Asper. Legal experts (iuris auctores) hold that, whenever there is a question over the ownership of slaves, if the truth cannot be clarified by other proofs, they shall be subjected to judicial examination under torture about their own situation.

Posted May 13, at Sirmium, in the consulship of Tiberianus and Dio (291).

[13] The same Augusti and the Caesars to Philippa. The rule that, if an inheritance is disputed, the slaves in the estate are subjected to judicial examination (under torture), cannot help you. For (only) in cases where, regarding ownership, it is uncertain to whom a slave belongs through inheritance, shall it be right to proceed to a search for the truth through the examination of a slave in the inheritance. But you, in asserting that the slave in question is owned in common, have no doubt that a portion of this slave belongs to him against whom you wish the slave to be examined. This fact disallows such a procedure in this case since not even a jointly-owned slave, who is not said to have killed the co-owner, can be subjected to judicial examination (under torture).

Written April 29, at Heraclea, in the consulship of the Augusti (293).

[14] The same Augusti and Caesars to Constantius. It is settled law that slaves cannot be judicially examined under torture on behalf of their current nor even of their former masters.

Written April 6, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[15] The same Augusti and Caesars to Maximus. There is no doubt that slaves can be judicially examined under torture about their own behavior not only in criminal cases but also in civil ones – for example, when property is given by them to others in connection with a deposit, loan, or in other situations recognized by the laws.

Written April 9, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[16][196] Emperors V*ALENTINIAN*, V*ALENS*, and G*RATIAN Augusti to Antonius, Praetorian Prefect of the Gallic Provinces.* pr. We wish that decurions be entirely free from punishments of cords or racks on account of either someone else's debt or their own. This will indeed be the source of a capital charge (capitale) against a judge, if he should attempt it to the disrespect and destruction of the order (of decurions). 1. Such a bloody procedure shall be in store only for those of the municipal order (of decurions) who are guilty, either as accomplices or principals, of treason (maiestas) or of unspeakable practices.

Given September 17, at Trier, in the consulship of Valens, for the fifth time, and Valentinian, Augusti (376).

[196] = (in part) C.Th. 9.35.2.

[17] Impp. Arcadius et Honorius AA. Messalae pp. pr. Nihil sibi deflectens a iustitia indignatio cognitorum, nihil venalis exigentium terror in eas, quae aut innocentia securae aut principalis[xviii] sunt honore munitae, intellegat licere personas ad inferendas iniurias corporales. habeat hanc mercedem laboris multorum munerum testimoniis commendata devotio. 1. Idem est et si munia decurionatus quis deposuit: nam et ipse propter pristinam dignitatem quaestionem non patitur.

D. XII k. Sept. Theodoro cons.

[18] Imp. Iustinianus A. Demostheni pp. De tormentis hereditariorum servorum sancimus, nullo discrimine secundum anteriores leges et constitutiones interposito, sive de iure hereditatis aliqua moveatur inter heredes quaestio sive de corporibus tantum hereditariis sive de utroque eorum, servos de corporibus tantum hereditariis interrogari: et licere servos eos tantummodo, qui res regendas detinent, sive in servitute relicti sunt sive libertatem adipisci per ultimam testatoris voluntatem praecepti sunt, in quaestionem rerum hereditariarum deduci et ex his ea quae occultata sunt revelari: prius sacramento super his a nobis statuto praestando.

D. XV k. Oct. Chalcedone Decio vc. cons.

XXXXII De Abolitionibus

[1] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. Paternae. Praeses provinciae si perspexerit abolitionem ad omnia crimina quae mota sunt pertinentem a se impetratam, ne semel finita instaurentur, intercessione auctoritatis suae prospiciet. supplicatione vero porrecta nutui principali

[xviii] principalitatis

[17][197] Emperors ARCADIUS and HONORIUS Augusti to Messala, Praetorian Prefect. pr. While detracting nothing from their commitment to justice, those conducting judicial investigations in their outrage and those exacting payment (of taxes) in the venal terror they inspire shall understand that it is not permitted to inflict corporal injury on those persons who are either protected by their innocence or shielded by the office of leading municipal councilor. (Such) dedication, commended by evidence of many services, shall have this reward for its effort. 1. The same holds for someone who has laid down his duties as a decurion. For even he does not suffer judicial examination under torture, on account of his former official position.

Given August 21, in the consulship of Theodorus (399).

[18][198] Emperor JUSTINIAN Augustus to Demosthenes, Praetorian Prefect. Concerning the (judicial examination under) torture of slaves belonging to an inheritance, (but) without making the distinction drawn in earlier statutes (leges) and constitutions, We ordain that, whether some dispute arises among the heirs over the right to an inheritance, over just the disposition of individual items in the inheritance, or over both issues, the slaves shall be subjected to judicial examination (under torture) only with respect to items in the inheritance. And (We ordain) that the only slaves who shall be permitted to be subject to examination concerning the property in the estate are those in physical control of the items to be disposed of, whether they remain slaves or have been instructed to gain their freedom through the testator's last wishes, and through them those pieces of property that have been concealed shall be brought to light. Before this happens, the oath that We have established for such matters[199] shall be given.

Given September 17, at Chalcedon, in the consulship of the vir clarissimus Decius (529).

Forty-Second Title Dismissals of Prosecution[200]

[1] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti to Paterna. If the governor of the province ascertains that he has granted dismissal for all of the charges that had been raised, he will, by interposing his own authority, see to it that, once terminated, they do not resume. But a charge that has been suspended [197] Pr. = (with changes) C.Th. 9.35.6. Combine with C. 1.54.6, 4.44.17, 10.32.51.

[198] Combine with C. 2.58.1.
[199] C. 2.58.1.1.
[200] See D. 48.16.

praefata abolitione sopitum crimen ab eadem persona renovari potest.
PP. XV k. Dec. Diocletiano III et Maximiano AA. conss.

[2] Imp. Constantinus A. ad Ianuarinum pu. pr. Abolitio praesentibus partibus causa cognita non a principe, sed a competenti iudice postulari debet, id est si per errorem seu temeritatem seu calorem ad accusationem prosiluerit: hoc enim accusator explanans abolitioni locum faciet. 1. Sin autem per depectionem vel pecuniis a reo corruptus ad postulandam abolitionem venit, redemptae miserationis vox minime admittatur, sed adversus nocentem reum inquisitione facta poena competens exseratur. 2. Hi autem, qui suas suorumque iniurias defendunt et qui cognatos suos in accusationem deduxerunt, omnimodo abolitionem petere non prohibentur.
D. VI k. Dec. Serdicae Constantino A. V et Licinio C. conss.

[3] Imppp. Valentinianus Valens et Gratianus AAA. ad Probum pp. pr. Fallaciter incusantibus accusationis abolitio non dabitur. 1. Sin autem sincera mente accusationem instituerit et reus aliquid iniuriae inscriptionis illatae toleraverit, id est si vel carcerem sustinuerit vel tormenta vel verbera vel catenas, abolitio non petetur, nisi forte ille qui haec passus est suum consensum ad petendam abolitionem accommodavit. 2. Quando autem reus nihil tale passus est, postquam fuerit officii custodiae traditus, intra dies triginta accusatori petenti, etiam invito reo, dari permittitur. post hoc vero tempus, nisi reus consentiat, censemus non esse tribuendam.

3. Quod si ingenuorum, licet plebeiorum, qui conscii vel participes criminum non erant, testimonii gratia corpora fuerint lacessita verberibus tormentisque vexata, abolitionem etiam duarum partium through the aforesaid dismissal can be renewed by the same person by permission of the Emperor.

Posted November 17, in the consulship of Diocletian, for the third time, and Maximian Augusti (287).

[2][201] Emperor CONSTANTINE Augustus to Januarinus, City Prefect. pr. Dismissal of prosecution ought to be requested judicially not from the Emperor but from the appropriate judge in the presence of (both) parties and upon the holding of a hearing, that is, if (the accuser) has leapt forward to prosecute through mistake, rashness, or anger. For in making this kind of explanation, the prosecutor will provide a rationale for a dismissal. 1. But if, however, he comes to request a dismissal because he has made a sordid agreement or he is corrupted by payment from the defendant, the voice of a purchased pity shall not at all be heard, but, after a judicial enquiry has been made, an appropriate punishment shall be visited upon the guilty defendant. 2. Those, however, who prosecute wrongs done to themselves or their own family members and those who have accused their own blood relations (cognati) are not at all prevented from seeking a dismissal.

Given November 26, at Serdica, in the consulship of Constantine Augustus, for the fifth time, and Licinius Caesar (319).

[3][202] Emperors VALENTINIAN, VALENS, and GRATIAN Augusti to Probus, Praetorian Prefect. pr. Dismissal of prosecution will not be granted to those making false accusations. 1. But if, however, someone has begun a prosecution with sincere intentions, and the defendant has sustained some form of injury from the accusation directed at him or her, for example, has endured prison, torture, beatings, or chains, dismissal will not be sought unless by chance the person who has suffered these things has granted consent for the application of dismissal. 2. When, however, the defendant has suffered no such thing from the point he or she has been handed over to the custody of the administrative staff, if the accuser applies within thirty days, a dismissal is allowed, even if the defendant is unwilling. After this time period has passed, however, We ordain that it shall not be granted unless the defendant agrees.

3. But if, for the purpose of gathering evidence, the bodies of free-born albeit common persons (plebeii), who were not complicit or active participants in the crimes, have been abraded by blows or afflicted by torture, We order that dismissal, even when sought with the consent of the two parties, shall be energetically refused by the judge, and that the charge under way, [201] Pr. and 1 = (with changes) C.Th. 9.37.1, which lacks §2.

[202] Pr. = (in part, with changes) C.Th. 9.37.3 (dating to May 18, 382); 1 and 4 = (with changes) C.Th. 9.37.2; 2 and 3 = (in part, with changes) C.Th. 9.37.4 (dating to January 25, 409).

consensu petitam iubemus vigore iudicis denegari et crimen propositum, cuius examen tormentis iam coeperat, agitari.

4. Sin autem testibus tormenta minime sunt illata, et sic abolitio non dabitur in illis criminibus, ut in violata maiestate aut patria oppugnata vel prodita aut peculatus admisso aut sacramentis desertis, omniaque[xix] quae iuri veteri continentur: in quibus iudex non minus accusatorem ad docenda quae detulit, quam reum ad purganda quae negat debet urguere.

D. prid. id. Oct. Treviris Valentiniano np. et Victore conss.

XXXXIII De Generali Abolitione

[1] Imp. Antoninus A. Rutiliano consulari Lyciae. Qui potentatus et vis aliorumque criminum reum fecit, si post abolitionem ex forma solita reorum factam et edicta proposita intra diem statutum repetere supersederit, persequi crimina volens non est audiendus.

PP. VIII k. Mai. Laeto II et Cereale conss.

[2] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. Paulino. Cum eo tempore, quo indulgentia nostra crimina extinxit, accusatio a te instituta non fuerit, publicae abolitionis praescriptio cessat.

PP. VI id. Febr. Maximo II et Aquilino conss.

[3] Imppp. Valentinianus Valens et Gratianus AAA. ad senatum. Indulgentia, patres conscripti, quos liberat notat nec infamiam criminis tollit, sed poenae gratiam facit.

D. XIIII k. Iun. Treviris Gratiano A. II et Probo conss.

[xix] omnibusque

whose basis has already begun to be judicially examined under torture, shall be pursued to its conclusion.

4. But if, however, no tortures at all have been visited upon the witnesses, even so, dismissal will not be granted regarding certain charges, for example, when treason (maiestas) has been committed (against the Emperor), the homeland has been attacked or betrayed, public money or property has been embezzled, or soldiers have been unfaithful to their oath, and all (similar charges) embraced in the ancient law (ius vetus). In these cases the judge ought no less to compel the accuser to prove what he has alleged, than the defendant to clear him- or herself of what he or she denies.

Given October 14, at Trier, in the consulship of Valentinian, Most Noble Boy, and Victor (369).

Forty-Third Title General Dismissal

[1] Emperor ANTONINUS Augustus to Rutilianus, Consular Governor of Lycia. A person has accused another of abuse of power (potentatus), force (vis), and other criminal offenses. If, after a (temporary) dismissal has been granted to the defendants in the usual manner, the accuser omits to renew his stated intentions (to prosecute) within the established time period, should he wish to prosecute these charges he shall not be heard.

Posted April 24, in the consulship of Laetus, for the second time, and Cerealis (215).

[2] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti to Paulinus. If, at the time when Our mercy (indulgentia) cancelled criminal accusations, you had not (yet) begun your prosecution, the defense (praescriptio) of a public dismissal does not hold.

Posted February 8, in the consulship of Maximus, for the second time, and Aquilinus (286).

[3][203] Emperors VALENTINIAN, VALENS, and GRATIAN Augusti to the Senate. A pardon, Conscript Fathers, frees defendants but still stains (their reputation), as it does not remove the crime's legal infamy (infamia), but only remits the penalty.

Given May 19, at Trier, in the consulship of Gratian Augustus, for the second time, and Probus (371).

[203] = (in part) C.Th. 9.38.5. Combine with C. 9.16.9.

XXXXIIII Ut intra Certum Tempus Criminalis Quaestio Terminetur

[1] Imppp. Valentinianus Theodosius et Arcadius AAA. Desiderio vicario. Quisquis accusator reum in iudicium sub inscriptione detulerit, si intra certum tempus accusationem coeptam persequi supersederit vel, quod est contumacius, ultimo die adesse neglexerit, quarta bonorum omnium parte multatus aculeos consultissimae legis incurrat, scilicet manente infamia, quam veteres iusserant sanctiones.

D. IIII id. Iul. Treviris Arcadio A. et Bautone conss.

[2] Impp. Honorius et Theodosius AA. Caeciliano pp. pr. Noverint iudices cuilibet culmini honorive praesidentes, necessariis utrique parti, si petantur, dilationibus non negatis praecedentibus scilicet inscriptionibus, intra certum tempus criminales causas limitandas: quo emenso subeat accusator, quia destitit, poenam legibus constitutam, et si persona vilior fuerit, cui damnum famae non sit iniuria, poenam patiatur exilii, nisi forte intra statuti temporis metas consensus partium abolitionem poposcerit. 1. In iudicum autem debet esse diligentia, ut, si nulla rationabilis a reo vel accusatore dilatio postuletur, urgueant talium causarum notionem non expectatis moris.

D. XII k. Febr. Ravennae Honorio VIII et Theodosio III AA. conss.

[3] Imp. Iustinianus A. Menae pp. Criminales causas omnimodo intra duos annos a contestatione litis connumerandos finiri censemus nec ulla occasione ad ampliora produci tempora, sed post bienii excessum minime ulterius lite durante accusatum absolvi, scientibus iudicibus eorumque officiis, quod, si litigatoribus admonentibus ipsi litis introductionem vel examinationem distulerint, poena vicenarum librarum auri ferientur.

D. k. April. Decio vc. cons.

Forty-Fourth Title That a Criminal Trial Be Ended Within a Fixed Period of Time

[1][204] Emperors VALENTINIAN, THEODOSIUS, and ARCADIUS Augusti to Desiderius, Vicar. Whichever accuser brings a defendant into court through formal application, if he fails to conclude within a fixed period the prosecution once it is begun or, what is more insolent, omits to be present on the last day (of the trial), shall encounter the sharp edges of a most provident law through being fined a fourth part of all of his property, obviously with legal infamy (infamia) accruing, which the ancient penalties (veteres sanctiones) had ordered.

Given July 12, at Trier, in the consulship of Arcadius Augustus and Bauto (385).

[2][205] Emperors HONORIUS and THEODOSIUS Augusti to Caecilianus, Praetorian Prefect. pr. All presiding judges of whatever rank or official position shall know that, although necessary postponements are granted to either party upon request, obviously, when formal application to prosecute has been made, criminal trials must be restricted to a fixed time period. When this has passed, the prosecutor who has abandoned his accusation shall suffer the penalty established by the laws, and if he is a person of relatively low social status (vilior), for whom damage to his reputation (damnum famae, i.e., legal infamy) is no real loss, he shall suffer the punishment of capital exile (exilium), unless, by chance, a postponement within the limits of the fixed period is requested through mutual agreement of the parties. 1. It ought to be the responsibility of the judges, however, that if no postponement for good cause is requested by the defense or the prosecution they compel the judicial investigation of such cases to proceed without tolerating delay.

Given January 21, at Ravenna, in the consulship of Honorius, for the eighth time, and Theodosius, for the third time, Augusti (409).

[3] Emperor JUSTINIAN Augustus to Menas, Praetorian Prefect. We ordain that criminal cases shall be entirely concluded within two years, to be calculated from joinder of issue, and for no reason be extended over longer periods of time. Instead, after the two-year period has passed, the prosecution shall completely cease and the accused shall be acquitted. Judges and their staffs shall be aware that if, amid complaints of the litigants, they themselves delay the start or the continuation of the trial, they will each be afflicted with a penalty of 20 pounds of gold.

Given April 1, in the consulship of the vir clarissimus Decius (529).

[204] = (with minor changes) C.Th. 9.36.1, which gives the fixed time period as a year.

[205] = (in part, with changes) C.Th. 9.36.2, which gives the fixed time period as a year. Combine C. 1.4.9, 1.55.7–9, 4.20.11; C.Th. 9.2.6, 9.31.1, 9.37.4.

XXXXV Ad Senatus Consultum Turpillianum

[1] Imp. Antoninus A. Anniano. Is demum in senatus consultum incidisse videtur, qui crimen publici iudicii detulit et causa ordinata, id est inscriptionibus depositis et fideiussore de exercenda lite praestito eoque qui accusatur sub custodia officii facto, non impetrata abolitione ab exsecutione criminis destitit.

[2] Imp. Gordianus A. Appio. Si pro eo, qui in crimen subscripsit, fidem tuam adstrinxisti isque destitit et commissa stipulatio est, non ultra quantitatem quam spopondisti obligatus es: eo qui destitit infamia nihilo minus notando et extra ordinem secundum iudicialem motum puniendo.

PP. VI id. Iun. Gordiano A. et Aviola conss.

[3] Impp. Valerianus et Gallienus AA. Arcadio. Quamvis eum ordinem scriptura contineat, ut primo abolitio criminis posceretur, tunc de omnibus placitis obtemperaretur, non observantibus tamen adversariis pactorum fidem instaurare accusationem minime potes, a qua ipse destitisti.

PP. prid. non. Iul. Tusco et Basso conss.

[4] Idem AA. Patrophilo. Si is, de quo supplicas, contra parentes vestros desertam, ut dicis, accusationem coeperit persequi, praescriptio illi in iudicio praesidis destitutae rei poterit opponi.

PP. prid. non. Mai. Saeculare et Donato conss.

[5] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. et CC. Matronae. Si femina suam suorumque iniuriam exsequatur, cum ipsa pacto contra vetitum destitisse profiteatur, in senatus consulti Turpilliani poenam eam incidisse certi iuris est.

S. VI non. April. Pisi[xx] CC. conss.

[xx] III non. April Sirmi

Forty-Fifth Title The Senatus Consultum Turpillianum[206]

[1] Emperor ANTONINUS Augustus to Annianus. He alone is deemed to have violated the decree of the Senate, who brought a public criminal charge (crimen iudicii publici) and gets the case underway, that is, registers a formal application to prosecute, offers a surety for the conduct of the trial, and has the defendant placed in the custody of the administrative staff, but then without obtaining a dismissal (abolitio) abandoned prosecution of the charge.

[2] Emperor GORDIAN Augustus to Appius. If you stood surety for someone who made a formal (i.e., written) application to initiate a criminal prosecution and (then) abandoned the prosecution, and you are (now) bound to pay on the basis of the stipulation you made, you are not obligated beyond the amount for which you stipulated. For the prosecutor who has abandoned the accusation shall be nonetheless marked with legal infamy (infamia) and shall be punished moreover in extraordinary cognition (extra ordinem) at the behest of the judge.
Posted June 8, in the consulship of Gordian Augustus and Aviola (239).

[3] Emperors VALERIAN and GALLIENUS Augusti to Arcadius. Although the document contains an arrangement that first, the dismissal of the case would be requested, and then, that all the agreements would be carried out, nevertheless, if your opponents have not fulfilled their side of the agreements, you cannot at all renew the prosecution that you have abandoned.
Posted July 6, in the consulship of Tuscus and Bassus (258).

[4] The same Augusti to Patrophilus. If the person concerning whom you petition has begun to follow through with a prosecution of your parents that he, as you claim, had abandoned, he can be countered, in the court of the provincial governor, with a defense (praescriptio) of an abandoned prosecution.
Posted May 6, in the consulship of Saecularis and Donatus (260).

[5] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti and the Caesars to Matrona. If a woman pursues wrongs inflicted upon her and members of her family, and she admits that she has abandoned the prosecution of them after making an agreement forbidden (by law), it is a certain point of law (certum ius) that she is liable to the penalty of the SC Turpillianum.
Written April 3, at Sirmium, in the consulship of the Caesars (294).

[206] See D. 48.16. The SC dates to 61 CE.

[6] Idem AA. et CC. Luciliano. In exsecutionibus criminum obtinuisse videtur illos destitisse, qui animum accusationis implendae prorsus deseruerunt. cum igitur aliis ex causis vel simplicitatis ratione necdum te ad finem vindictae pervenisse preces tuae testentur, poteris postposita formidine impedimenti super aliquantulo silentio institutam accusationem secundum leges perferens quam probabis tibi debitam vindictam reportare.

PP. III k. Iul. Diocletiano VI et Maximiano AA. conss.

XXXXVI De Calumniatoribus

[1] Imp. Alexander A. Sabino. Calumnia eo tempore coerceri solet, quo de causa praesente accusatore iudicatur. ideoque posteaquam de causa iudicatum est, contra consuetudinem calumniam accusatoris puniri desideras.

[2] Idem A. Apolloniae. pr. Mater inter eas personas est, quae sine calumniae timore necem filii sui vindicare possunt: idque beneficium senatus consulti et in aliis publicis iudiciis servatum est. 1. Sed et extraneus heres, qui suspicionem, quam de morte sua habuisse defunctus cavit, exsequitur, hoc nomine a calumnia excusatus est, cum inter voluntariam accusationem et officii necessitatem heredis multum intersit.

PP. VI k. Iul. Iuliano et Crispino conss.

[3] Idem A. Eumeliano. Qui non probasse crimen quod intendit pronuntiatur, si calumniae non damnetur, detrimentum existimationis non patitur. non enim, si reus absolutus est, ex eo solo etiam accusator, qui potest iustam habuisse veniendi ad crimen rationem, calumniator credendus est.

[6] The same Augusti and Caesars to Lucilianus. It is deemed to have been the rule in prosecuting crimes that those who have absolutely given up their intentions of completing the prosecution are considered to have abandoned it. Since, therefore, your petition claims that for other reasons or out of naiveté you have not yet concluded your quest for vengeance, you will be able to lay aside your concerns of a legal obstacle on account of a minor delay, carry to its conclusion according to the laws the prosecution you have initiated, and gain the vengeance that you will prove is owed to you.

Posted June 29, in the consulship of Diocletian, for the sixth time, and Maximian Augusti (299, 303, or 304).

Forty-Sixth Title Malicious Prosecutors[207]

[1] Emperor ALEXANDER Augustus to Sabinus. It is the standard operating procedure to punish malicious prosecution at the point when the case is decided, in the presence of the prosecutor. For that reason your request to punish an accuser for malicious prosecution after the case has (already) been decided is contrary to usual practice.

[2] The same Augustus to Apollonia. pr. A mother ranks among those persons who, without fear of punishment for malicious prosecution, can avenge the death of her child. This privilege of the senatorial decree holds also in other public criminal trials (publica iudicia).[208] 1. But even an outside heir, who follows up the suspicion that the decedent expressed concerning his or her own death, is exempted from a charge of malicious prosecution for this reason, since there is a great difference between a voluntary prosecution and the obligation imposed by an heir's duty.

Posted June 26, in the consulship of Julian and Crispinus (224).

[3] The same Augustus to Eumelianus. Whoever is adjudged not to have proven the charge that he has brought, if he is not convicted of malicious prosecution, does not suffer any harm to his reputation (detrimentum existimationis, i.e., legal infamy). For if a defendant has been acquitted, it is not for this reason alone that the accuser, who might have had a good reason for coming forward to prosecute, shall be deemed as well to be a malicious prosecutor.

[207] See D. 48.16.

[208] The reference is to the SC Turpillianum: C. 9.45.

[4] Imppp. Carus Carinus et Numerianus AAA. Archelao. Calumniae poena in paternae mortis accusatione cessat.

PP. XI k. Dec. Caro et Carino AA. conss.

[5] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. Caesio. Qui calumniatores pronuntiantur, in publicorum dumtaxat iudiciorum quaestionibus, non etiam in liberalibus causis, quae privatas disceptationes continent, periclitari solent.

PP.

[6] Idem AA. et CC. Domitio. Dominis servorum per accusatoris calumniam tortorum adversus eum poena dupli lege Iulia providetur.

S. XVI k. Sept. ipsis AA. conss.

[7] Impp. Valentinianus et Valens AA. ad Valerianum. Non prius quemquam sinceritas tua ad tuae sedis examen iubebit adduci, quam sollemnibus satisfecerit, qui nititur fidem doloris adserere, cum iuxta formam iuris antiqui ei qui coeperit arguere aut vindicta proposita sit, si vera detulerit, aut supplicium, si fefellerit.

D. VII k. Dec. Remis Gratiano np. et Dagalaifo conss.

[8] Imppp. Gratianus Valentinianus et Theodosius AAA. Menandro vicario Asiae. pr. Nostris et parentum nostrorum constitutionibus comprehensum est eos, qui accusationem alienis nominibus praesumpsissent, delatorum numero esse ducendos. 1. Atque ideo calumniosissimum caput et personam iudicio irritae delationis infamem supplicium sequatur, quo posthac singuli universique cognoscant non licere in eo quod non possit ostendi iudicum animos commovere.

D. VIII id. Mai. Constantinopoli Arcadio A. et Bautone conss.

[4] Emperors Carus, Carinus, and Numerianus Augusti to Archelaus. The penalty for malicious prosecution does not hold in the case of a prosecution for a father's death.

Posted November 21, in the consulship of Carus and Carinus Augusti (283).

[5] Emperors Diocletian and Maximian Augusti to Caesius. The risk of conviction for malicious prosecution typically holds only for public criminal trials (publica iudicia), not also for cases concerning free status, which are private disputes.

Posted.

[6] The same Augusti and the Caesars to Domitius. A penalty for double damages arising out of the judicial examination of slaves under torture is given to masters by the lex Julia against an accuser guilty of malicious prosecution.[209]

Written August 17, in the consulship of the Augusti (290 or 293).

[7][210] Emperors Valentinian and Valens Augusti to Valerianus. Your Uprightness will not order anyone to be brought to trial before your court until the person who strives to prove the reasons for his grievance has carried out the formalities of beginning a prosecution, since, according to the rule of the ancient law (forma iuris antiqui), the one who took the initiative of prosecuting attained either vengeance if he told the truth, or punishment if he lied.

Given November 25, at Reims, in the consulship of Gratian, Most Noble Boy, and Dagalaifus (366).

[8][211] Emperors Gratian, Valentinian, and Theodosius Augusti to Menander, Vicar of Asia.[212] pr. It has been laid down in Our constitutions and those of Our predecessors (parentes) that persons who have presumed to bring accusations in the names of others shall be classed as informers (delatores). 1. And on that account punishment (evidently, capital exile) shall attend the very malicious source and person (who is) afflicted with legal infamy (infamis) by the verdict of a wrongful prosecution, in order that henceforth both individuals and people in general shall learn that it is not permitted to importune the minds of judges in a matter that cannot be proven.

Given May 8, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Arcadius Augustus and Bauto (385).

[209] The lex Iulia iudiciorum publicorum was passed together with the lex Iulia iudiciorum privatorum c. 17 BCE.
[210] = C.Th. 9.1.9, where Valerianus is Urban Prefect.
[211] = (with minor changes) C.Th. 9.39.2.
[212] In fact, in 383 Arcadius became emperor and Gratian died.

[9] Idem AAA. Floro pp. Fallaciter incusantibus, maxime post exhibitionem accusati, nullius iuris color velut derivata accusatione proficiat: non publica abolitio, non privata talibus prospiciat subveniatque personis: non specialis indulgentia, ne beneficium quidem eos generale subducat.

D. xv k. Iun. Constantinopoli Antonio et Syagrio conss.

[10] Impp. Honorius et Theodosius AA. consulibus praetoribus tribunis plebis senatui salutem dicunt. Quisquis crimen intendit, non impunitam fore noverit licentiam mentiendi, cum calumniantes ad vindictam poscat similitudo supplicii.

D. VIII id. Aug. Ravennae Asclepiodoto et Mariniano conss.

XXXXVII De Poenis

[1] Imp. Titus Aelius Antoninus A. Etiam in opus perpetuum damnati non dissimilis condicionis sunt ab his qui deportantur in insulam.

PP. sine die et cons.

[2] Imp. Antoninus A. Valerio. Procurator meus, qui vice praesidis non fungebatur, exilii poenam tibi non potuit inrogare, ac propterea frustra vereris sententiam, quae nulla iuris ratione subnixa est.

PP. VI k. Iul. duobus Aspris conss.

[3] Idem A. Geminio. Decurionem in opus publicum dari non oportere manifestum est.

[4] Idem A. Marinae. Si ante conceptus est puer, de quo libellos dedisti, quam mater eius in metallum daretur, natus condicionis eius est, cuius ante condemnationem mater eius fuit.

[9][213] The same Augusti to Florus, Praetorian Prefect. Especially after the production of the defendant in court, those making false accusations shall not benefit from any legal pretext, as though their accusation was discharged. For no general or particular grant of dismissal shall advantage and assist such persons.[214] No special pardon, not even a general grant of favor, shall free them from punishment.

Given May 18, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Antonius and Syagrius (382).

[10][215] Emperors HONORIUS and THEODOSIUS Augusti send greetings to the Consuls, Praetors, Tribunes of the Plebs, and Senate. Whoever initiates a charge shall know that the freedom to lie will not go unpunished, since symmetry of punishment summons malicious prosecutors to vengeance (for their act).

Given August 6, at Ravenna, in the consulship of Asclepiodotus and Marinianus (423).

Forty-Seventh Title Punishments[216]

[1] Emperor TITUS AELIUS ANTONINUS Augustus. The status even of those who have been condemned to perpetual forced labor is not dissimilar to that of those who are sentenced to capital exile (deportatio) on an island.

Posted without day or year.

[2] Emperor ANTONINUS Augustus to Valerius. My imperial procurator who was not acting as a substitute for the governor did not have the authority to inflict upon you a penalty of capital exile (exilium). And for that reason you have no grounds to fear a sentence which had no basis in law (iuris ratio).

Posted June 26, in the consulship of the two Aspri (212).

[3] The same Augustus to Geminius. It is clear that a decurion ought not to be sentenced to forced public labor (opus publicum).

[4] The same Augustus to Marina. If the child, concerning whom you have sent a petition, was conceived before its mother was sentenced to the mines, it enjoys at birth the status possessed by its mother before her condemnation.

[213] = (in part) C.Th. 9.37.3. Combine with C. 4.19.25.
[214] See Pap. D. 48.16.8 and 10.
[215] = (in part) C. 9.2.17.
[216] See D. 48.19.

[5] Idem A. Senecioni. Honor veteranis etiam in eo habitus est, ut liberi eorum usque ad primum dumtaxat gradum poena metalli vel operis publici non adficiantur, sed in insulam relegentur.

[6] Idem A. Apioni. Incredibile est, quod adlegas liberum hominem, ut vinculis perpetuis contineretur, esse damnatum: hoc enim vix in sola servili condicione procedere potest.

PP. III id. Febr. Messala et Sabino conss.

[7] Imp. Alexander A. Isidoro. Impunitas delictis propter aetatem non datur, si modo in ea quis sit, in quam crimen quod intenditur cadere potest.

[8] Idem A. Victorino. Deportatorum in insulam ab eo, cui id faciendi ius erat, bona fisco vindicantur, relegatorum autem non nisi sententia specialiter adempta fuerint.

[9] Idem A. Demetriano. Si matrem tuam decurionis filiam fuisse probatum fuerit, apparebit eam non oportuisse in ministerium metallicorum nec in opus metalli dari.

[10] Idem A. Catulino. Servus sub poena vinculorum sine temporis praefinitione domino reddi iussus sententia praesidis provinciae perpetuo vinctus esse debet.

PP. VIIII k. Sept. Iuliano et Crispino conss.

[11] Imp. Gordianus A. Attiano. Metalli supplicium tam ad personas liberas quam etiam ad serviles pertinet condiciones.

[12] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. in consistorio dixerunt: Decurionum filii non debent bestiis subici. Cumque a populo exclamatum est, iterum dixerunt: Vanae voces populi non sunt audiendae. nec enim vocibus eorum credi oportet, quando aut obnoxium crimine absolvi aut innocentem condemnari desideraverint.

Sine die et consule.

[13] Idem AA. Ursiano. Servo ex sententia damnato si quoquo modo ex sententia proprietatis ius amputatum non sit, domino suo obsequi eum par est.

[5] The same Augustus to Senecio. Veterans are eligible even for this privilege, that their descendants up to the first degree are not sentenced to the mines or forced public labor (opus publicum), but relegated (through non-capital exile) to an island.

[6] The same Augustus to Apio. What you assert is beyond belief, that a free person has been condemned to perpetual chains. For this can scarcely occur with persons of slave status, and only there.

Posted February 11, in the consulship of Messala and Sabinus (214).

[7] Emperor ALEXANDER Augustus to Isidorus. Immunity from punishment for offenses is not given on account of age, provided that the defendant is old enough to be capable of committing the criminal offense that is charged.

[8] The same Augustus to Victorinus. The property of those sentenced to capital exile on an island by a judge with authority to issue this sentence is claimed by the Treasury, but that of persons (merely) relegated is not taken from them unless there is a special sentence (to this effect).

[9] The same Augustus to Demetrianus. If it is proved that your mother is the daughter of a decurion, it will be clear that she ought not to have been sentenced to assist miners, much less to labor in the mines.

[10] The same Augustus to Catulinus. A slave ordered by the provincial governor to be returned to his master in chains, without any set time limit, ought to be bound perpetually.

Posted August 24, in the consulship of Julian and Crispinus (224).

[11] Emperor GORDIAN Augustus to Attianus. Free persons as well as slaves may be sentenced to labor in the mines.

[12] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti declared in their Council (consistorium): The children of decurions ought not to be thrown to beasts. When an outcry arose from the populace they declared a second time: The empty cries of the populace shall not be heard. For their views ought not to be trusted when they wish either a guilty person to be freed or an innocent to be condemned.

Without day or year.

[13] The same Augusti to Ursianus. When a slave has been condemned by a court sentence, if in any way the right of ownership has not been taken away by the sentence, it is fair that he remain in his master's service.

[14] Idem AA. et CC. Vitali. Si operis publici temporalis poenae sententia praefinitus necdum excessit dies, hunc expectari convenit, cum non remitti poenam facile publice intersit, ne ad maleficia temere quisquam prosiliat.

[15] Idem AA. et CC. Agathemero. Poenam sua dictam sententia praesidi provinciae revocare non licet.

[16] Imp. Constantinus A. ad Catullinum. Qui sententiam laturus est, temperamentum hoc teneat, ut non prius capitalem in quempiam promat severamque sententiam, quam in adulterii vel homicidii vel maleficii crimen aut sua confessione aut certe omnium, qui tormentis vel interrogationibus fuerint dediti, in unum conspirantem concordantemque rei finem convictus sit et sic in obiecto flagitio deprehensus, ut vix etiam ipse ea quae commiserit negare sufficiat.

D. III non. Nov. Treviris. accepta XV k. Mai. Hadrumeti Volusiano et Anniano conss.

[17] Idem A. Eumelio. Si quis in metallum fuerit pro criminum deprehensorum qualitate damnatus, minime in eius facie scribatur, cum et in manibus et in suris possit poena damnationis una scriptione comprehendi, quo facies, quae ad similitudinem pulchritudinis caelestis est figurata, minime maculetur.

D. XII k. April. Cabilluno Constantino A. IIII et Licinio IIII conss.

[18] Imp. Constantius A. Theodoro praesidi Arabiae. pr. Dum reis manifesta probatione convictis spatium ante sententiam temporis datur, facultas supplicandi vel quibusdam malignis artibus tam praesidum quam officiorum poenas evitandi criminosissimis patet, cum in homicidii crimine et in aliis detectis gravioribus causis ultio differenda

[14] The same Augusti and the Caesars to Vitalis. If the time limit in a sentence of forced public labor has not expired, it is appropriate to wait for this, since the easy remission of sentence is not in the public interest, to prevent people from rashly leaping into wrongdoing.

[15] The same Augusti and Caesars to Agathemerus. It is not permitted for a provincial governor to cancel a punishment imposed by his own sentence.

[16][217] Emperor CONSTANTINE Augustus to Catullinus. Whoever is about to pronounce sentence shall hold to this limitation, that he not lay down a capital (capitalis) or severe sentence against anyone before such person has been convicted on a charge of adultery, homicide, or sorcery by his or her own confession or at any rate on the evidence of all those who have been examined judicially under torture or (mere) questioning (leading) to one and the same well-aligned conclusion, and so he or she has been detected in the crime alleged, in such a way that even he himself or she herself can scarcely deny commission of the offense.

Given November 3, at Trier, received April 17, at Hadrumetum (Sousse), in the consulship of Volusianus and Annianus (314).[218]

[17][219] The same Augustus to Eumelius. If someone has been sentenced to the mines because of the gravity of the crimes of which he or she has been convicted, he or she shall not at all be tattooed on the face, since the penalty imposed by conviction can be set forth in a single inscription either on the hands or on the legs, in order that the face, which has been designed to resemble the beauty of heaven, shall not at all be disfigured.

Given March 21, at Cabillunus,[220] in the consulship of Constantine Augustus, for the fourth time, and Licinius, for the fourth time (315).[221]

[18][222] Emperor CONSTANTIUS Augustus to Theodorus, Governor of Arabia. pr. When time is given before the imposition of sentence to defendants convicted by clear proof, an opportunity lies open to the most criminal of persons to appeal or to evade, by certain evil machinations, the penalties imposed by governors as well as by their staffs, although in the case of the criminal offense of homicide and conviction for other, more serious, crimes, vengeance must not be delayed by this defect (in procedure). 1. In the future, therefore, the

[217] = C.Th. 9.40.1. Combine with C. 7.62.12; C.Th. 11.36.1.
[218] The year is more likely 313, and 314 for "received": Projet Volterra.
[219] = (with minor changes) C.Th. 9.40.2.
[220] Possibly Chalon-sur-Saône, but the location is uncertain. Tillemont suggests Cibalae.
[221] The year is more likely 316: Projet Volterra. Seeck gives March 31, 316.
[222] = (with changes) C.Th. 9.40.4.

non sit. 1. Igitur de cetero iuxta criminis qualitatem legem oportet servari et in scelerosos et in noxios proferri iuris sententiam.

D. id. Oct. Constantio A. IIII et Constante C. conss.

[19] Impp. Gratianus et Valentinianus AA. Olybrio pu. Ne quis pro coercitione delicti vel pistoribus vel cuicumque alteri corpori, cum alterius sit corporis, addicatur: sed unusquisque pro crimine, in quo fuerit deprehensus, motum congruae severitatis excipiat.

D. III id. April. Valentiniano et Valente AA. conss.

[20] Imppp. Gratianus Valentinianus et Theodosius AAA. Flaviano pp. Illyrici. pr. Si vindicari in aliquos severius contra nostram consuetudinem pro causae intuitu iusserimus, nolumus statim eos aut subire poenam aut excipere sententiam: sed per dies triginta super statu eorum sors et fortuna suspensa sit. 1. Reos sane accipiat vinciatque custodia et excubiis sollertibus vigilanter observet.

D. XV k. Sept. Veronae Antonio et Syagrio conss.

[21] Idem AAA. et Arcadius A. ad Principium pp. Ne diu apparitorum prava admodum venalisque perfidia in publica impune commoda desaeviret, censemus etiam in absentes eos[xxi] pro competenti ultione debere consurgi.

D. k. Iun. Arcadio A. et Bautone conss.

[xxi] reos

law ought to be observed consistently with the nature of the offense, and the legal sentence (iuris sententia) ought to be delivered (immediately) against the wicked and the guilty.

Given October 15, in the consulship of Constantius Augustus, for the fourth time, and Constans Caesar (346).[223]

[19][224] Emperors GRATIAN and VALENTINIAN Augusti to Olybrius, City Prefect.[225] No one shall, as punishment for an offense, be bound over to the bakers or any other professional group when he belongs to another one. But each and every one shall feel the impact of the severity appropriate to the crime of which he or she has been convicted.

Given April 11, in the consulship of Valentinian and Valens Augusti (365, 368, or 370).[226]

[20][227] Emperors GRATIAN, VALENTINIAN, and THEODOSIUS Augusti to Flavianus, Praetorian Prefect of Illyricum. pr. If We, contrary to Our usual practice, have commanded that certain persons be punished rather severely, in consideration of the nature of the case, We do not wish that they immediately either suffer their punishment or receive their sentence. Instead, fate and fortune regarding their status shall be in suspense for thirty days. 1. By all means defendants shall (in the meantime) be placed into custody and bound, where they shall be watched over carefully by competent guards.

Given August 18, at Verona, in the consulship of Antonius and Syagrius (382).[228]

[21][229] Emperors GRATIAN, VALENTINIAN, THEODOSIUS, and ARCADIUS Augusti to Principius, Praetorian Prefect.[230] In order that the entirely depraved and venal treachery of administrative staff members no longer rage furiously to the detriment of the common good, We ordain that action ought to be taken with an appropriate penalty even against defendants who are absent.

Given June 1, in the consulship of Arcadius Augustus and Bauto (385).

[223] Constans held the consulship for the third time in this year, though only in the East.
[224] = (with minor changes) C.Th. 9.40.9. Combine with C.Th. 14.3.9, perhaps also C.Th. 1.31.2, 14.5.1.
[225] The constitution may be attributed to these two emperors, to Valentinian and Valens, or to all three.
[226] Two of the C.Th. constitutions give Treviri (Trier) as the location. Seeck gives April 11, 370.
[227] = (with minor changes) C.Th. 9.40.13.
[228] The year is uncertain: 390 is the alternative, preferred by Seeck.
[229] = (with minor changes) C.Th. 9.40.14.
[230] In fact, Gratian died in 383.

[22] Impp. Arcadius et Honorius AA. Eutychiano pp. pr. Sancimus ibi esse poenam, ubi et noxa est. 1. Propinquos notos familiares procul a calumnia submovemus, quos reos sceleris societas non facit: nec enim adfinitas vel amicitia nefarium crimen admittunt. 2. Peccata igitur suos teneant auctores nec ulterius progrediatur metus, quam reperietur delictum. 3. Hoc singulis quibusque iudicibus intimetur.

D. VIII k. Aug. Constantinopoli Theodoro vc. cons.

[23] Impp. Honorius et Theodosius AA. ad Anthemium pp. pr. Omnes, quos damnationis condicio diversis exiliis destinatos metas temporis praestituti in carceris implesse custodia deprehendit, solutos poena vinculisque laxatos custodia liberari praecipimus nec formidare miserias ullas exilii. 1. Sit satis immensorum cruciatuum semel luisse supplicia, ne, qui diu privati sunt aurae communis haustu et lucis adspectu non intra breve spatium catenarum ponderibus praegravati, etiam exilii poenam sustinere iterum compellantur.

D. XIIII k. Mai. Constantio et Constante conss.

[24] Idem AA. Monaxio pp. Rectores provinciarum conveniri praecipimus, ut hi, qui pro suo crimine poenam exilii sub certo temporis spatio subire decreti sunt, exacto praefinito tempore nec claustris carceralibus nec in locis quibus exules versati sunt teneantur.

D. III k. Sept. Eudoxiopoli Theodosio A. VII et Palladio vc. conss.

[25] Idem AA. Monaxio pp. His, qui conficiendi naves incognitam ante peritiam barbaris tradiderunt, capitale supplicium proponi decernimus.

D. VIII k. Oct. Constantinopoli Monaxio et Plinta conss.

[22][231] Emperors ARCADIUS and HONORIUS Augusti to Eutychianus, Praetorian Prefect. pr. We lay down that where there is guilt, there shall also be punishment. 1. We decisively free from malicious prosecution close relatives, acquaintances, and friends whom complicity does not render guilty of wrongdoing. This is because neither family relationship nor friendship constitute an unspeakable criminal offense (in themselves). 2. Therefore the offenders themselves shall bear responsibility for their misdeeds, and fear shall proceed no further than where wrongdoing is found. 3. This rule shall be made known to each and every judge.

Given July 25, at Constantinople, in the consulship of the vir clarissimus Theodorus (399).

[23][232] Emperors HONORIUS and THEODOSIUS Augusti to Anthemius, Praetorian Prefect. pr. We instruct that all those who are found, following sentence to different forms of exile, to have fulfilled the terms assigned to them (for exile) in the confinement of a prison, shall be freed from their penalty, released from their bonds, and set free from custody – nor shall they fear any of the miseries of exile. 1. Let one atonement for crime be enough of immeasurable sufferings, in order that those who for a long time have been deprived of the breath of the air common to all and the sight of the light, and who have been burdened with the weights of chains for not a brief span of time, shall not also for a second time be forced to endure a penalty of exile.

Given April 18, in the consulship of Constantius and Constans (414).

[24][233] The same Augusti to Monaxius, Praetorian Prefect. We instruct that provincial governors be called upon to see that those who for a crime have been sentenced to exile for a fixed time period, once that time has ended, shall not be held either in prison or in those places in which they spent their exile.

Given August 30, at Eudoxiopolis, in the consulship of Theodosius Augustus, for the seventh time, and the vir clarissimus Palladius (416).

[25][234] The same Augusti to Monaxius, Praetorian Prefect. We decree that those who have taught barbarians how to build ships, a skill previously unknown to them, shall suffer the death penalty (capitale supplicium).

Given September 24, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Monaxius and Plinta (419).

[231] = C.Th. 9.40.18.
[232] = (with minor changes) C.Th. 9.40.22.
[233] = C.Th. 9.40.23.
[234] = (in part, with changes) C.Th. 9.40.24.

[26] Αὐτοκράτωρ Ἰουστινιανὸς Α. Μηνᾷ ἐπάρχῳ πραιτωρίων. pr. Θεσπίζομεν ... Ἡ διάταξις κελεύει τοὺς πεμπομένους ἐν ἐξορίᾳ μὴ διάγειν ἐν τῇ φυλακῇ τῶν τόπων, εἰς οὓς ἐπέμφθησαν, ἀλλὰ μηδὲ ἐξορίζεσθαί τινα εἰς τὸ φρούριον τῆς Γύψου ἢ εἰς ἑτέρας φυλακάς. 1. Ἀλλ' εἰ μὲν τὸ ἁμάρτημα ἄξιόν ἐστι θανάτου, ὑποκεῖσθαι τῇ τοιαύτῃ κολάσει, εἰ δὲ ἐξορίας ἢ διηνεκοῦς ἢ προσκαίρου, τότε ἐξορίζεσθαι αὐτοὺς μὴ κελευομένους ἐν ταῖς φυλακαῖς τῶν τόπων ἐν οἷς πέμπονται ἀποτίθεσθαι, ἀλλὰ πέμπεσθαι εἰς ἐπαρχίαν, εἰς ἣν ἂν ὁ δικάζων ὁρίζῃ, χωρὶς τῶν ὑπεξῃρημένων κατωτέρω ἐπαρχιῶν τε καὶ πόλεων, ἔχοντας αὐτοὺς ἐξουσίαν ἐν πάσῃ τῇ ἐπαρχίᾳ εἰς ἣν ἐπέμφθησαν διατρίβειν, μὴ δυναμένους ἐξιέναι τῆς ἐπαρχίας ἢ μένοντας ἐν τῇ ἐπαρχίᾳ ἄτακτόν τι ποιῆσαι.

2. Ἐὰν δέ τις ἢ τῆς ἐπαρχίας ἐξέλθῃ ἢ μένων ἐν τῇ ἐπαρχίᾳ ἄτακτόν τι ποιήσῃ, ἔστω ὑπὸ τὸν ἔσχατον κίνδυνον τιμωρούμενος ἢ παρὰ τοῦ ἄρχοντος τῆς ἐπαρχίας ἢ παρὰ τοῦ ἄρχοντος ἐκείνων τῶν τόπων, εἰς οὓς ἔφυγε. 3. Καὶ οἱ βαλλόμενοι δὲ ἐν δεσμωτηρίῳ ἐν τῇ βασιλίδι πόλει μὴ μενέτωσαν ὑπὲρ τὸν χρόνον τὸν ὁρισθέντα ἤδη ἐν τῷ ἀνωτέρω τίτλῳ περὶ τῶν φυλαττομένων.

4. Ὁμοίως δὲ καὶ ἐν ταῖς ἐπαρχίαις συντομωτέραν γίνεσθαι τὴν ἐξέτασιν τῶν ἐγκλημάτων· καὶ ἐὰν φανῇ τις ἄξιος ἐξορίας, ἐξορίζεσθαι αὐτὸν μὴ εἰς φυλακήν, ἀλλ' εἰς ἐπαρχίαν χωρὶς τῶν ἀπηγορευμένων, ἐπὶ τῷ πάλιν ὑποκεῖσθαι αὐτοὺς τῇ ἐσχάτῃ τιμωρίᾳ, ἢ ἐὰν ἐξέλθωσι τῆς ἐπαρχίας ἢ ἐκεῖσε διάγοντες ἄτακτόν τι ποιήσωσι.

5. Τοὺς δὲ ἄρχοντας Ἀλεξανδρείας καὶ Θηβαΐδος κελεύει μόνους εἰς Γύψον καὶ εἰς Ὄασιν ἐκπέμπειν αὐτοὺς ἢ ἕως ἓξ μηνῶν ἢ τὸ μήκιστον ἕως ἐνιαυτοῦ. 6. Εἰ δὲ διηνεκής ἐστιν ἡ ἐξορία, μήτε εἰς Γύψον πεμπέτωσαν μήτε εἰς Ὄασιν μήτε εἰς φυλακὴν ἑτέρας ἐπαρχίας, ἀλλ', ὡς εἴρηται εἰς τελείαν ἐπαρχίαν, ἐπὶ τῷ, εἴ τι πταίσουσιν ἢ παρεξέλθωσι τὰς κελεύσεις τῶν πεμψάντων αὐτοὺς ἀρχόντων, εἰς ἔσχατον τιμωρηθῆναι.

7. Κελεύει δὲ τοὺς ταξεώτας τοὺς ἐν ἑκάστῳ δικαστηρίῳ ὑπομιμνήσκειν τοὺς ἄρχοντας περὶ τούτου τοῦ νόμου, καὶ μηδὲ κατέχεσθαί τινα ὑπὲρ τὸν χρόνον τῆς ἐξορίας ἑαυτοῦ, ἀλλὰ παραχρῆμα ἀφίεσθαι ἀζημίως καὶ ἀδιαστρόφως, τὸν δὲ ἐπιχειρήσοντά τι λαβεῖν τὸ τετραπλάσιον ἀποδιδόναι. 8. Κεκώλυνται δὲ οἱ ἄρχοντες ἐξορίζειν εἰς τὰς ὑποτεταγμένας τῇ διατάξει ἐπαρχίας τε καὶ πόλεις.

[26][235] (Emperor JUSTINIAN Augustus to Menas, Praetorian Prefect. pr. We decree … This constitution forbids those who have been sent into exile to remain in custody in those places to which they have been sent or to be exiled to the prison of Gypsus or to any of the other prisons. 1. But if the crime in question merits the death penalty, (the constitution ordains) that such a penalty shall be inflicted upon them, while if it merits exile, whether permanent or temporary, then they shall be exiled, but not ordered to be placed in the prisons of the places in which they are sent. Instead, they shall be sent into the province that the judge determines, aside from the provinces and cities excepted below,[236] so that they are permitted to live in any part of the province to which they have been sent, without being able to leave the province or creating any disturbance while they reside there.

2. But if someone leaves the province or stays there and creates some disturbance, he shall suffer the death penalty, either at the hands of the governor of that province or the governor of the place to which he has fled. 3. And as far as concerns those who are thrown into prison in this imperial city (Constantinople), they shall not remain there beyond the time-limit laid down in the title above concerning those in custody.[237]

4. In the same way judicial investigation of criminal offenses in the provinces shall also occur in a briefer time-frame, and if anyone is deemed to merit exile he or she shall be exiled not to a prison, but to a province, apart from those forbidden, on the condition again that they shall be liable to capital punishment if they either leave the province or while residing there create some disturbance.

5. (The constitution) ordains that the governors of Alexandria and the Thebaid shall be the only ones permitted to send (convicts) to Gypsus or the Oasis, either for six months or a year at the longest. 6. In case of permanent exile, they shall be sent neither to Gypsus nor the Oasis, nor to a prison in another province, but instead, as said above, to a province as a whole, on the condition that if they commit some wrong or disobey the commands of the governors who have sent them into exile, they shall suffer the death penalty.

7. (The constitution) ordains that the officials of each and every court shall call this law to the attention of the governors. And no one shall be detained past the term of his or her exile, but shall immediately be let go without penalty or interference, while anyone who attempts to take something (i.e., a bribe) shall pay a fourfold penalty. 8. The governors, moreover, are forbidden to exile anyone to the provinces and the cities attached (in a list) to this constitution.[238]

[235] Combine with C. 1.4.22, 1.4.23, 9.4.6, 9.5.2. The inscription and subscription are restored from C. 1.4.22 and 23, the first word from Collectio Tripartita 1.3, Paratitlon 51. What follows is a summary taken from Bas. 60.51.63.

[236] This list does not survive.

[237] See C. 9.4.6.

[238] This list does not survive.

9. Οἱ κατὰ τόπον ἐπίσκοποι φροντιζέτωσαν παραφυλαχθῆναι ἐν τοῖς ἐξοριζομένοις διηνεκῶς ἢ ἐπί τινα χρόνον ῥητὸν τὰ ποστεταγμένα τῇ διατάξει.

D. xv k. Febr. Constantinopoli Decio cons.

XXXXVIII Ne sine Iussu Principis Certis Iudicibus Liceat Confiscare

[1] Imp. Theodosius A. et Valentinianus C. ad Hierium pp. Nulli iudicum liceat, exceptis his, qui in summa administrationis sunt positi potestate, proscriptionis tempestate totius substantiae aliquem percellere, nisi ad nostras aures hoc ipsum referatur.

D. x k. Febr. Constantinopoli Theodosio A. xi et Valentiniano C. conss.

XXXXVIIII De Bonis Proscriptorum seu Damnatorum

[1] Imp. Antoninus A. Marcello. pr. Servorum capitis crimine damnatorum peculia dominis non auferri notum est, sed quod servum dominus habuisse probaverit, recipiet pretiumque rerum, si quae ex eo distractae sunt. 1. Ipsius quoque praesentiae potestas ei dabitur, quoad rationes per eum administratae reddantur ac dispungantur. sed meminisse dominum oportebit instare, ut id velocius fiat, ut poenae suae reddi possit.

PP. iii k. Aug. Antonino A. et Balbino conss.

[2] Imp. Alexander A. Frontoni. Deportati nec earum quidem rerum, quas post poenam inrogatam habuerint, heredem habere possunt, sed hae publicantur.

PP. non. Febr.

[3] Idem A. Iuliano. Si filius tuus, cum esset in tua potestate, in insulam deportari meruit, peculium eius nec quod in castris adquisivit vel quod ei militaturo donasti auferri tibi debet.

9.[239] The local bishops shall take care that, in the case of those exiled permanently or for a specified time, what is laid down in this constitution shall be observed.

Given January 18, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Decius (529).

Forty-Eighth Title Without the Emperor's Order, Certain Judges Shall Not Be Permitted to Order Confiscations

[1][240] Emperor THEODOSIUS Augustus and VALENTINIAN Caesar to Hierius, Praetorian Prefect. It shall be permitted to no judge, apart from those possess the highest authority of administration, at the time of his condemnation (to exile) to inflict on anyone the confiscation of his entire estate, unless the matter is (first) brought to Our ears.

Given January 23, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Theodosius Augustus, for the eleventh time, and Valentinian Caesar (425).[241]

Forty-Ninth Title Property of the Exiled and the Condemned[242]

[1] Emperor ANTONINUS Augustus to Marcellus. pr. It is well known that the peculia of slaves convicted on a capital charge (capitis crimen) are not taken from their masters, but the master will receive back whatever he or she shows the slave to have possessed, or its value if property was alienated. 1. The power to demand the presence of the slave himself will also be given to the master until the accounts the slave managed are rendered and balanced. But the master ought to remember to press that this happens rather quickly, in order that he (the slave) can be turned over to his punishment.

Posted July 30, in the consulship of Antoninus Augustus and Balbinus (213).

[2] Emperor ALEXANDER Augustus to Fronto. Persons condemned to capital exile (deportatio) can have no heir even as to those things that came to them after the passing of sentence; but these (too) are confiscated.

Posted February 5.

[3] The same Augustus to Julian. If your son, while he was in your potestas, was sentenced to capital exile (deportatio) on an island, neither his peculium, nor [239] This is supplied from Coll. Tripartita 1.3, Paratitlon 51.

[240] = (in part, with changes) C.Th. 9.41.1. Combine with C. 9.49.10.
[241] The year is more likely to be 426, preferred by Seeck.
[242] See D. 48.20.

PP. IIII id. Sept. Alexandro II et Marcello conss.

[4] Imp. Gordianus A. Callimorpho. In metallum damnatus poenae servus efficitur et ideo eiusmodi sententiam passi bona vindicantur rationibus fisci. quare si quid rerum habuit is, quem postea indulgentia liberatum esse proponis, ad ius fisci potius quam ad ipsius dominium pertinet.

PP. X k. Nov.

[5] Imp. Philippus A. et Philippus C. Arruntiano. Si, ut proponis, bona eius, qui tutelam tuam administravit, sententiam passi ad fiscum sunt devoluta, procuratorem nostrum adire cura, qui, si quid iure posci animadverterit, non negabit.

[6] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. et CC. Gaudentio. De bonis matris deportatae filiis nihil deberi iuris absolutissimi est.

S. XII.

[7] Imppp. Valentinianus Valens et Gratianus AAA. ad Probum pp. pr. Si quis intra provinciam pro qualitate delicti stilum proscriptionis incurrerit, per ordinarii officii sollicitudinem bonorum eius indago diligentissime celebretur, ne quid rei privatae commodis per gratiam atque colludium furto subducatur. 1. Et plena descriptio comprehendat, quod spatium et quod sit ruris ingenium, quid aut cultum sit aut colatur, quid in vineis olivis aratoriis pascuis silvis fuerit inventum, quae etiam gratia et quae amoenitas sit locorum, quis aedificiis ac possessionibus ornatus, quotve mancipia in praediis occupatis vel urbana vel rustica vel quarum artium generibus imbuta teneantur, quot sint casarii vel coloni, quot boum exercitiis terrarum atque vomeribus instruentium,[xxii] quot what he acquired while on military service, nor what you gave him as a gift when he was about to enter service ought to be taken from you.

[xxii] inservientium

Posted September 10, in the consulship of Alexander (Augustus), for the second time, and Marcellus (226).

[4] Emperor GORDIAN Augustus to Callimorphus. A person condemned to the mines becomes a penal slave and for that reason the property of a person who has thus been sentenced is claimed for the accounts of the Treasury. Therefore, if he was later freed by a pardon, as you claim, any property that he had (previously) owned belongs to the Treasury rather than to himself.

Posted October 23.

[5] Emperor PHILIP Augustus and PHILIP Caesar to Arruntianus. If, as you allege, the property of your tutor, pursuant to a sentence pronounced upon him, has passed to the Treasury, be sure to approach Our Procurator (of the Privy Purse). If he decides that you have a right to request something, he will not deny it to you.

[6][243] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti and the Caesars to Gaudentius. It is very certain law (ius absolutissimum) that nothing is owed to her children from the property of a mother who has been condemned to capital exile (deportatio).

Written ...

[7][244] Emperors VALENTINIAN, VALENS, and GRATIAN Augusti to Probus, Praetorian Prefect. pr. If anyone within a province is proscribed (i.e., sentenced to capital exile) owing to the gravity of his offense, a most assiduous search shall be made of his property through the diligence of the regular administrative staff, in order that nothing be pilfered from the assets of the Privy Purse through exercise of undue influence or collusion. 1. And a full description shall include the size of an estate, the nature of the land, what has been and what is being grown, what is found in the vineyards, olive groves, ploughfields, pasturages, woodlands, also the charm and pleasantness of the property, the equipment of buildings and properties, how many slaves are kept on the properties being worked, whether urban or rural, and trained with what kinds of skills, how many cottagers or bound tenants (casarii vel coloni), how many oxen employed in cultivation or in plowing, how many herds of cattle and draft animals, and of what kind, how much gold and silver, clothing and necklaces, both as to kind, weight, and variety, and what has been found in store-chambers.

[243] See C. 3.44.11, dating to April 6, 290.
[244] = (with minor changes) C.Th. 9.42.7.

pecorum et armentorum greges et in qua diversitate numerati sint, quantum auri et argenti, vestium ac monilium vel in specie vel in pondere et in quibus speciebus, quidve in enthecis sit repertum. 2. Tum demum omnia ea, quae velle nos perspicis, inquisitione constricta rationalis rei privatae tradantur officio aut palatinis super hac causa missis nostro nectenda patrimonio.

3. Mox vero ad nos sub litteris publicis iudicis singillatim de omnibus nominatimque referatur, procul dubio neglegentia multanda. 4. Nam si quid post factam a praedicto officio investigationem rationalis rei privatae, cui inquisitio secunda mandata est, amplius fortassis invenerit, officium fraudulentum ea condemnatione ferietur, ut aliud tantum quantum fuerat subtractum ex propriis facultatibus inferat.

D. III non. Mai. Treviris Valentiniano np. et Victore conss.

[8] Imppp. Gratianus Valentinianus et Theodosius AAA. Eutropio pp. pr. Si deportatus suos et emancipatos filios habuerit, pars, quae ex bonis eius liberis concessa est, ad eos tantum qui in potestate erant transferatur, si emancipati ea, quae consecuti erant emancipationis tempore, damnose existimant conferenda. 1. Sin autem confusionem bonorum et donationis elegerint, omnia ea, quae fiscus liberis damnati concedit, aequae divisionis partibus sortiantur. 2. Quae regula etiam in dote filiae vel neptis ex filio deportati conferenda custodienda erit.

D. XV k. Iul. Thessalonicae Gratiano V et Theodosio AA. conss.

[9] Impp. Arcadius et Honorius AA. Caesario pp. pr. Si quis posthac stilum, quod absit, proscriptionis exceperit, uxor res proprias ex quocumque titulo sibi quaesitas veluti manu iniecta mox vindicet aut certe quoquo modo occupatas statim recipiat. dos etiam, non quae aliquotiens inaniter dotalium instrumentorum tenore conscribitur, sed

2. Then, at the end, all those things that, as you see, We want, after an inventory is completed, shall be handed over to the staff of the chief Comptroller (rationalis) of the Private Imperial Account or to the Palace officials sent for this purpose, in order to be added to Our property.

3. Next, in fact, an official report shall be sent to Us by the judge, in which all individual items are mentioned by name, any omission from which, it is far from doubt, shall be punished with a fine. 4. For if, after the inventory conducted by the staff mentioned above, the chief Comptroller of the Private Imperial Account, who is under instructions to carry out a second inventory, happens to find something more, the administrative staff guilty of fraud will have inflicted upon them a penalty to pay from their own resources that is twice the value of the property that was removed.

Given May 5, at Trier, in the consulship of Valentinian, Most Noble Boy, and Victor (369).[245]

[8][246] Emperors GRATIAN, VALENTINIAN, and THEODOSIUS Augusti to Eutropius, Praetorian Prefect. pr. If a man sentenced to capital exile (deportatio) has children both in his power and emancipated, the part of his property that is permitted to his children shall accrue only to those children he has in power (potestas) if those who are emancipated believe that the property they received at the time of emancipation would disadvantage them if put into hotchpot. 1. But if, however, they choose to mingle (in hotchpot) their property and what has been given them as a gift, all that which the Treasury permits to children of a person condemned to capital exile they shall receive through an equal division of the shares. 2. This rule (regula) shall be applied and maintained also in the case of the dowry of a daughter of a man condemned to capital exile, or a granddaughter through a son.

Given June 17, at Thessalonica, in the consulship of Gratian, for the fifth time, and Theodosius Augusti (380).

[9][247] Emperors ARCADIUS and HONORIUS Augusti to Caesarius, Praetorian Prefect. pr. If anyone henceforth receives – may it not happen! – a sentence of proscription (capital exile), his wife shall directly claim her own property, by whatever title she acquired it, as though she has seized it personally, or at any rate she shall receive it immediately by whatever means she has taken possession of it. Her dowry too shall be repaid immediately – not that which is sometimes emptily written into the text of dowry documents, but that which [245] Seeck gives March 5, 369; but Schmidt-Hofner retains the transmitted date.

[246] = (in part, with changes) C.Th. 9.42.8. Combine with C. 5.1.3 and the constitutions mentioned there. On hotchpot (collatio), see D. 37.6; C. 6.20.

[247] Pr. = (in part, with changes) C.Th. 9.42.15; 1–3 = (with changes) C.Th. 9.42.1, by Constantine, dating to February 27, 321. Combine with C.Th. 9.1.8.

quam se corporaliter tradidisse docuerit, repraesentetur. ea etiam, quae ab innoxio adhuc marito ante nuptias titulo donationis acceperit, vel durante matrimonio largitione viri ad eam ante proscriptionem pervenerint, apud eam firmiter permaneant.

1. Si quid etiam in emancipatos liberos ante tempus criminis ac reatus patrem contulisse claruerit, integrum isdem citra inquietudinem reservetur. quod vero nec uxor nec emancipati liberi potuerint vindicare, captum a publicis personis ita ad me referri specialiter censeo, ut illud quoque addatur, utrum filios habeat qui damnatus est, simulque adiciatur, utrum idem apud se ex causa donationis aliquid vindicaverint.

2. Sed in his, qui fiscalibus actibus nexi sunt et pro ratiociniis proscribuntur et condemnantur, placuit, si quid proprium uxor habuit vel a marito datum ante init*um* actum, ex quo origo fraudis ac vitii in iudicium deducta est, si quid deinde in emancipatos filios donatione collatum est, antequam crimen oriatur, intemeratum apud accipientium iura persistere: nec quicquam fisco in qualibet causa teneatur obnoxium, nisi quod in dominio proprio cum obligari ortus est habuit vel quod agens tam suo quam uxoris vel filiorum vel cuiuscumque praeterea nomine comparavit. 3. Exceptis dumtaxat Caesarianis, id est catholicianis, qui ab omni iuris beneficio excluduntur, nisi probata a me purgataque ratiocinia fuerint, ut, quod innoxie habuerint, transmittendi copiam habeant.

D. III non. Aug. Constantinopoli Arcadio IIII et Honorio III AA. conss.

[10] Impp. Theodosius et Valentinianus AA. Hierio pp. pr. Quando quis quolibet crimine damnatus capitalem poenam vel deportationem sustineat, si quidem sine liberis mortuus sit, bona eius ad fiscum perveniant: si vero filii vel nepotes ex defunctis filiis relicti erunt, dimidia parte aerario vindicata alia eis reservetur. idem est et si postumos dereliquerit.

she proves was physically handed over. That too, which she received from her still innocent husband before the marriage under the title of a gift, or which came to her from the generosity of her husband during the marriage before his proscription, shall steadfastly remain with her.

1. If anything too is shown to have been given by a father to his emancipated children before the time of the accusation and crime, it shall remain wholly theirs, without disturbance. But that which neither a wife nor emancipated children can claim for themselves, I ordain shall be seized by public officials so that it be specially delivered to me, in such a way that a note shall be also added as to whether the condemned has children and at the same time a further note shall be attached as to whether they have claimed any property for themselves under title of a gift.

2. And in the case of those who are in debt to the Treasury, and because of their tax obligations are proscribed and condemned, it has been decided that if the wife had anything of her own or that has been given to her by her husband before the beginning of court proceedings, at the point at which the origins of the fraud and wrongdoing were brought before a court, and next, if anything has been given to emancipated children as a gift before the charge arises, it shall remain undisturbed with respect to the rights of the recipients. Nor shall anything in any case be deemed bound to the Treasury, except what he had as his property when his obligation to the Treasury arose or what he has acquired thereafter in conducting his business operations either in his own name, or in that of his wife, children, or anyone else. 3. An exception is made for subordinate fiscal officials (Caesariani), i.e., the holders of seized property (Catholiciani),[248] who are excluded from every benefit under this law (ius) unless their accounts have (first) been inspected and cleared by me so that they have the opportunity of passing on what they have innocently acquired.

Given August 3, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Arcadius, for the fourth time, and Honorius, for the third time, Augusti (396).

[10][249] Emperors THEODOSIUS and VALENTINIAN Augusti to Hierius, Praetorian Prefect. pr. Whenever someone is condemned on any charge whatsoever and is sentenced to death or capital exile (deportatio), should he die, to be sure, without children, his property shall pass to the Treasury. But if children or grandchildren through decedent sons are left behind, one-half shall be claimed by the Treasury and the rest set apart for them. The same holds even if he leaves behind posthumous children.

[248] Reference is to the regional accountants (rationales) responsible for carrying out seizures for the Imperial Treasury.

[249] = (with changes) C.Th. 9.42.24. Combine with C. 9.48.1.

1. Decurioni vero, qui hoc incurrerit, si liberos non habeat, succedat curia bonaque universa detineat aut ipsa per se aut suo ordinatura periculo munera subiturum. 2. Sin autem erit suboles curiali, etsi ea necdum procreata est, integris patris fortunis fulciatur. 3. Si filia vel filiae fuerint, pars dimidia ad eas deveniat facultatum, pars ad curiam. 4. Sin mares curiales fuerint intermixti, dimidia pars eis curiae nomine deferatur, et aliam, quam in commune omnibus tribuit indulgentia principalis, pro virili dividant portione. 5. Excepta sola maiestatis quaestione: quam si quis sacrilego animo adsumpserit, iuste poenam ad suos etiam posteros mittit.

D.ix k. Febr. Constantinopoli Theodosio XII et Valentiniano II AA. conss.

[11] Ἐάν τις ὡς ἐπὶ τυραννίδι ἐλεγχθεὶς δήμευσιν ὑπομείνῃ, οἱ μὲν ἔχοντες αὐτοῦ πράγματα καὶ διάγοντες ἐν τῇ βασιλίδι πόλει εἴσω δύο μηνῶν ὀφείλουσιν αὐτὰ προσαγγεῖλαι, οἱ δὲ μὴ διάγοντες ἐν τῇ βασιλίδι πόλει εἴσω ὀκτὼ μηνῶν. εἰ δὲ μὴ τοῦτο ποιήσουσι, μετὰ τῶν πραγμάτων τὸ τετραπλάσιον παρέχουσι.

L De Bonis Mortem Sibi Consciscentium

[1] Imp. Antoninus A. Aquilae. pr. Eorum demum bona fisco vindicantur, qui conscientia delati admissique criminis metuque futurae sententiae manus sibi intulerint. 1. Eapropter fratrem vel patrem tuum si nullo delato crimine, dolore aliquo corporis aut taedio vitae aut furore aut insania aut aliquo casu suspendio vitam finisse constiterit, bona eorum tam ex testamento quam ab intestato ad successores pertinebunt.

PP. XII k. Ian. duobus Aspris conss.

1. But in the case of a decurion who thus runs afoul of the law, if he does not have children, his town council shall succeed to him and take physical control of his entire estate and either itself undertake the civic duties (incumbent upon such property) or shall appoint someone to do this at his own risk. 2. But if, however, the decurion has any (male) children, even if not yet born, they shall be supported by the entire estate of their father. 3. If there are one or more daughters, half of the (father's) resources shall accrue to them, and the rest to the town council. 4. But if some of the children are males (and some females), a half shall be made over to them as councillors, in the name of the council, and the remainder, which imperial benevolence grants to all in common, they shall divide equally among them.

5.[250] An exception is made only for a trial for treason (maiestas). If someone commits this offense with an impious intention, he justly passes his penalty onwards even to his descendants.

Given January 23, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Theodosius, for the twelfth time, and Valentinian, for the second time, Augusti (426).

[11][251] If someone convicted of treason suffers confiscation of property, those who possess their property here and live in the imperial city (Constantinople) ought to turn this over within two months and, if they do not live in the imperial city, within eight months. But if they do not do this, they pay a fourfold penalty along with their property.

Fiftieth Title The Property of Suicides[252]

[1] Emperor ANTONINUS Augustus to Aquila. pr. Forfeit to the Treasury is precisely the property of those who, out of their consciousness of a crime that has been committed and has begun to be prosecuted, and out of their fear of a sentence hanging over them, take their own lives. 1.[253] On that account, if it is established that your brother or father, accused of no crime, but (only) out of some bodily pain, weariness of life, raging insanity, instability of mind, or some mischance, took his life by hanging, his property will accrue to his heirs either under a will or on intestacy.

Posted December 21, in the consulship of the two Aspri (212).

250 = (in part) C.Th. 9.42.6, by Valentinian and Valens, dating to November 25, 364.
251 This constitution derives from Bas. 60.52.17.
252 See D. 48.21.
253 See Marcian, D. 48.21.3.4.

[2] Imp. Alexander A. Rustico. Eorum, qui in reatu diem suum functi sunt, si non perduellionis causam sustinuerunt nec ob metum criminis mortem sibi consciverunt, bona ad successores transmittuntur.

D. id. Mai. Alexandro A. iterum et Marcello conss.

LI De Sententiam Passis et Restitutis

[1] Imp. Antoninus A. cum salutatus ab Oclatinio Advento et Opellio Macrino praefectis praetorio clarissimis viris, item amicis et principalibus officiorum et utriusque ordinis viris et processisset,[xxiii] oblatus est ei Iulianus Licinianus ab Aelio Ulpiano tunc legato in insulam deportatus, Antoninus Augustus dixit: Restituo te in integrum provinciae tuae. Et adiecit: Ut autem scias, quid sit in integrum: honoribus et ordini tuo et omnibus ceteris.

[2] Idem A. Quieto. Cum patrem tuum in metallum damnatum fuisse proponas eiusque bona merito a fisco occupata sunt, non ideo, quod ex indulgentia mea poena tantummodo metalli liberatus esset, etiam bonorum restitutionem impetravit, nisi speciale beneficium super hoc fuerit impetratum.

[3] Imp. Alexander A. Stratoniciano. pr. Si debitor poenam sententiae passus est, quam bonorum ademptio secuta est, quamvis postea civitati Romanae restitutus non totam substantiam, sed aliquid ex indulgentia principis ut haberet impetravit, aeris tamen alieni ex praecedente tempore poena liberatus est. 1. Sin vero partem bonorum accepit, pro rata portione eius tenetur. quod si ob pecuniam debitam fisco bona eius occupata sunt, mansit una cum fideiussoribus propriis creditoribus obligatus.

[4] Idem A. Valentinae. Tutor filiorum, quorum te bonorum possessionem accepisse dicis, in metallum damnatus et postea ex indulgentia

[xxiii] processisset et

[2] Emperor ALEXANDER Augustus to Rusticus. The property of those who have taken their own lives while under accusation, if they were not being prosecuted for treason (perduellio) and have not committed suicide out of fear over the charge, passes to their heirs.

Posted May 15, in the consulship of Alexander Augustus, for the second time, and Marcellus (226).

Fifty-First Title Those Who Have been Sentenced and Restored[254]

[1] Emperor ANTONINUS Augustus. After (the emperor) had received formal greetings from Oclatinius Adventus and Opellius Macrinus, Praetorian Prefects and viri clarissimi, likewise from his friends (amici) and the chiefs of staff, as well as from men of both the senatorial and equestrian orders, and had (then) stepped forward, and Julian Licinianus was presented to him, (a man) who had been sentenced to capital exile (deportatio) on an island by Aelius Ulpianus, then a governor. Antoninus Augustus declared: I restore you to your province with rights. And he added: Moreover, so that you know what "with rights" means: political office, membership in your ordo, and all the rest.

[2] The same Augustus to Quietus. Although you allege that your father had been condemned to the mines and that his property was rightly seized by the Treasury, he was not also entitled to recover that property, since he was released, through my grant of pardon, only from the penalty of forced labor in the mines (and nothing more), unless he obtained a particular remission beyond that one.

[3] Emperor ALEXANDER Augustus to Stratonicianus. pr. If a debtor has received a sentence which is accompanied by the confiscation of his goods, although he has subsequently been restored to Roman citizenship and did not receive his entire estate back, but only certain items through the Emperor's kindness, he has all the same been freed from the prior penalty for debt. 1. But if, on the other hand, he has recovered a portion of his estate, he is liable (for repayment of his debts) proportionately. But if his property was seized on account of a debt that he owed to the Treasury, he, together with his sureties, remains obligated to his private creditors.

[4] The same Augustus to Valentina. Your children's tutor was condemned to the mines and later released by a general pardon. You claim that you acquired generali regressus, quamquam locupletior sit, actione tutelae administratae tibi non tenetur, si non gratia sententiae facta specialiter statum pristinum cum bonis recuperaverit.

[254] See D. 48.23.

[5] Idem A. Iuliano. Si ademptis bonis in insulam datus sis, quamvis ex indulgentia communi redisti, actiones tamen, quascumque habuisti, remanent in causa bonorum publicatorum, nec ex ordine est quod petis, ut contra heredes tutorum actiones tibi praestentur.

[6] Imp. Gordianus A. Fabiano. In insulam filio deportato hacque ratione vinculo paternae potestatis exempto, si postea ex indulgentia divi Alexandri, ut proponis, reditus in patrium solum praecedensque dignitas restituta sit, potestas tamen patria repetita non videtur.

[7] Imp. Philippus A. et Philippus C. Cassio. Generalis indulgentia nostra reditum exsulibus seu deportatis tribuit, non etiam loca militiae pridem adempta concessit neque integram atque illibatam existimationem reservavit.[xxiv]

[8] Impp. Valerianus et Gallienus AA. Seleuco. Frustra adhuc servum esse tui iuris existimas, qui in metallum datus poena eius postea liberatus est. per huiusmodi enim indulgentiae occasionem integrari dominium prius non placuit. verum idcirco tamen impune tibi eum praeses provinciae iniuriosum esse non patietur. quod si quid rerum tuarum tenet, procurator vobis iudex erit: fisci enim coepit esse mancipium.

[9] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. Restitutae et aliis. Si pater vester in insulam deportatus generali indulgentia restitutus est nec, ut liberos in potestatem reciperet, specialiter impetravit, in dubium non venit hereditatis commodum per vos ei adquiri, quos sententia contra eum prolata patres familias effecit, nequaquam potuisse.

[10] Idem AA. Demetrio. Cum indulgentia nostra interveniente sis reversus ad lares tuos, frustra vereris, ne ex adnotatione praesidis quae iam abolita est calumniam patiaris.

[xxiv] reseravit

possession of their property. Although he may be wealthier, he is not liable to you in an action over the tutelage he managed if he did not, thanks to a special remission of the sentence, recover both his prior status and his property.

[5] The same Augustus to Julian. If your property was confiscated and you were sent to an island, although you have returned because of a general pardon, whatever rights of action you held nonetheless remain bound to the property that was confiscated, and it is not appropriate for you to request that you be granted actions against the heirs of your tutores.

[6] Emperor GORDIAN Augustus to Fabianus. If your son was sentenced to capital exile (deportatio) on an island, and for this reason was freed from paternal power (potestas), if he subsequently, as you declare, thanks to a pardon granted by the deified Alexander (Severus), returned to his hometown and had his prior rank (dignitas) restored to him, nevertheless paternal power (patria potestas) is not deemed to have been restored.

[7] Emperor PHILIP Augustus and PHILIP Caesar to Cassius. Our general pardon granted the right of return to exiles and those sentenced to capital exile (deportatio), but it did not also restore the military ranks that were taken away some time ago, nor (by removing legal infamy) did it render their reputation (existimatio) whole and unimpaired.

[8] Emperors VALERIAN and GALLIENUS Augusti to Seleucus. You vainly entertain the belief that you are still the owner of the slave who was sentenced to work in the mines and later released. For it has been the rule that ownership is not restored through a grant of pardon of this kind. But all the same the governor of the province will not allow him for this reason to inflict affront with impunity on you. And if he is in possession of any of your property, the procurator will act as judge for you, since he begins to be a slave of the Treasury.

[9] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti to Restituta and others. If your father was sentenced to capital exile (deportatio) on an island and was later restored by a general pardon, and he did not obtain a particular dispensation that he receive his children back into his power (potestas), there is no doubt that the benefit of an inheritance could not at all be acquired for him through you, since the sentence inflicted upon him made you of independent legal status (patres familias).

[10] The same Augusti to Demetrius. Since you have been restored to your home thanks to Our grant of pardon, you are needlessly concerned that you will endure a malicious prosecution arising from the registration (of your [11] Idem AA. et CC. Philippo. Casus eius, qui fundi moverat quaestionem, et ex benignitate nostra facta cum bonis restitutio statum pristinum causae non immutavit.

[12] Idem AA. et CC. Tryphoni. Si deportationis sententiae veniam indulgentia nostra consecuta recepit substantiam, se protegere sceleris poena contra creditores, quo minus iure debitum solvat, improbe conatur.

[13] Imp. Constantinus A. ad Maximum pu. pr. In quaestione testamenti, quod deportati filius remeante patre fecisset, remotis Ulpiani atque Pauli notis Papiniani placet valere sententiam, ut in patris sit filius potestate, cui dignitas ac bona restituta sunt.

1. Ita tamen, ut gesta per filium, cuius consilia legitima aetas firmaverat, rata sint eodem in potestate patria redeunte, ne eorum rescissio efficiat, quod est maxime absurdum, eodem tempore nec in patris nec in sua quemquam fuisse potestate. 2. Minores enim aetate iure quicquam agere prohibentur. quibus si damnato patre tutor datus est, necesse est, ut ab officio suo recedat regresso eo, quem non solum nomine redire, sed etiam officium suum nulla pravitate corruptum liberis praebere oportet, ut eorum bona tueatur et augeat. 2a. Nam si patria potestate ad corrumpendi atque effundendi patrimonii licentiam abutetur, ut furioso ac dementi, item prodigo, libidinum omnium vitiorumque servo non est eorum pecunia committenda. 2b. Ab administratione fugiat name on the list of accused persons) by the governor of the province, since it has now been deleted (through the pardon).

[11] The same Augusti and the Caesars to Philippus. The misfortune (i.e., capital exile) of a man who had initiated a suit over a farm, and who has then been restored with his property thanks to Our generosity, has not altered the original status of the lawsuit.

[12] The same Augusti and Caesars to Trypho. If a woman, whose sentence of capital exile (deportatio) has been commuted by Our pardon, has had her property restored to her, she is wrong to attempt to defend herself against her creditors, by asserting the penalty for her wrongdoing, so as not to pay what she lawfully owes.

[13][255] Emperor CONSTANTINE Augustus to Maximus, City Prefect. pr. In a dispute over a will made by the son of a man who had been sentenced to capital exile (deportatio) and then restored, after discarding the annotations of Ulpian and Paul, We ordain that the opinion of Papinian shall have validity, with the result that the son is in his father's power (potestas) when social rank and property have been restored to the latter.

1. This shall be so, nevertheless, such that the legal acts of the son, who is of sufficient age that they would be legally valid, shall be confirmed, even though he returns to his father's power, so that abrogating them does not produce an especially absurd situation in which someone is neither in his father's power nor in his own.[256] 2. For minors are prohibited by law from transacting any business. If a tutor has been appointed for them after their father was condemned (to capital exile), it is necessary that he steps down if the father returns, since he (the father) ought not only to return in name, but also to perform his duty, unspoiled by any impropriety, toward his children, so that he safeguards and increases their property. 2a. For if he misuses his paternal power to exercise an unbounded opportunity for despoiling and wasting their property, then, just as though he were an insane or unstable person, (or) likewise a prodigal who is a slave to every lust and vice, their money shall not be entrusted to him. 2b. (If so,) he shall flee from management of their property, and there shall not cease

[255] ≐ (with minor changes) C.Th. 9.43.1. Combine with C.Th. 1.4.1. As the latter notes, Ulpian's and Paul's original notae on Papinian's Quaestiones were subsequently altered and came to be considered suspect authority.

[256] While the father was in exile, his son wrote a will, which he was legally entitled to do if of age. The father was then pardoned and, possibly for avaricious reasons, now seeks to resume power over the son and thereby also invalidate the son's will; that is, he wants his resumption of power to be retrospective. The Emperor threads the needle.

neque tutor esse desinat omniaque minoris dispendia suis ipse damnis praestet.

2c. Sententia vero deportationis nullo patrem praeiudicio deminuat. quem si comperta integritas ut natura, ita officio liberis restituerit, ei gubernacula rerum tradenda sunt, cuius ad imitationem publici iuris provisa custodia est. quae nisi bonis patribus detur, luctuosior erit reditus quam discessus.

3. Ideoque tantum ad restitutionem indulgentia valeat, quantum ad correctionem sententia valuit, utque deportationis ipsum per se nomen rerum omnium spoliatio est, ita indulgentiae restitutio bonorum ac dignitatis uno nomine amissorum omnium sit recuperatio. et filii emancipationem a patribus officiis petant, ut libertatem non damnationis, sed lenitatis paternae testem habeant.

D. XVIII k. Oct. Sirmi Crispo II et Constantino II CC. conss.

to be a tutor (for this purpose), while he himself shall pay at his own cost for all losses accruing to the minor's property.

2c. But a sentence of capital exile shall not impair a father's status by prejudicing his future claims. If his good character (integritas), when ascertained, restores him to his children on the basis of both their duty and biological bond, the management of their property shall be turned over to him, after whom the protection (i.e., the institution of guardianship) afforded by public law (ius publicum) is modeled. Unless this is granted to good fathers, there will be more grief at their return than at their departure.

3. On that account the pardon shall count for restoration, as much as the sentence did for castigation, and insofar as the concept of capital exile itself entails the confiscation of all property, so the concept of pardon shall entail the restoration of property and rank, in a word, the recovery of everything that was forfeited. And children shall seek emancipation from their fathers by their services to them, so that they have their freedom as a witness not of a father's condemnation (to capital exile), but of his generosity of spirit.

Given September 14, at Sirmium, in the consulship of Crispus, for the second time, and Constantine, for the second time, Caesars (321).

Liber Decimus

I De Iure Fisci

[1] Impp. Severus et Antoninus AA. Attico et Severo. Si prius, quam fisci rationibus pater vester obligaretur, perfectam praediorum donationem fecisse fuerit probatus, quod citra fraudem creditorum gestum est, non rescinditur.

[2] Imp. Gordianus A. Sereno. Instar obtinere minime potest rei iudicatae computatio a tabulariis facta, nisi sententia procuratoris fuerit comprobata.

[3] Idem A. Atticae. Si minori pretio, quam res est, aperta fraude emptoris vel gratia quae obligata sunt a fisco venierunt, aditus procurator meus debitam quantitatem inferenti restitui ea praedia iubebit.

[4] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. Mucatraulo. pr. Certa forma super metoecis data est, qui iussu principis in aliam civitatem translati sunt. nam praedia eorum, quae antequam demigrarent habuerint, si ab his distracta non essent, fisci rationibus vindicari iam pridem decretum est, nisi aliud speciali praecepto augusta maiestas decreverit. 1. Ut igitur a principibus salubriter statutum est, ita salvis his, quae utiliter placuerunt, parentibus heredes eos exsistere minime oportere nulla legis sanctione statutum est.

Tenth Book

edited by Dennis P. Kehoe

First Title The Right of the Treasury[1]

[1] Emperors Severus and Antoninus Augusti to Atticus and Severus. If it is proved that, before he became obligated to the accounts of the Treasury, your father completed a donation of properties (praedia), what has been transacted without defrauding creditors is not rescinded.

[2] Emperor Gordian Augustus to Serenus. A computation made by tax officials (tabularii) of a case that has been adjudicated cannot produce a balancing of accounts (instar) unless it has been approved by verdict of the procurator.

[3] The same Augustus to Attica. If properties (praedia) that were obligated have been sold by the Treasury for a lower price than they are worth by clear fraud or influence of the buyer, my procurator, when approached, will order them to be restored when (you) proffer the amount owed.

[4] Emperors Diocletian and Maximian Augusti to Mucatraulus. pr. A definite rule has been given for resident foreigners (metoeci) who by order of the Emperor have been transferred into another city. For it was decreed long ago that the properties that they had before they emigrated, if they have not been sold by them, be claimed for the accounts of the Treasury, unless Our August Majesty has decreed something else by a special instruction. 1. Therefore as it has been advantageously established by the Emperors, so without prejudice to these matters that have been usefully decided, it has not been established by any sanction of the law that they must not be heirs of their parents.[2]

[1] See D. 49.14.

[2] Blume: "Metoici were colonists who were transferred from one place to some other. The transfer could not be made except by order of the emperor. The property which they left behind upon their transfer became that of the fisc, unless a special order to the contrary was made. The right of succession mentioned in the last part of this law referred … to the property of their parents who did not migrate."

[5] Exemplum sacrarum litterarum Diocletiani et Maximiani AA. ad Flaccum. pr. Prohibitum est cuiuscumque bona, qui fisco locum fecisse existimabitur capi prius, quam a nobis forma fuerit data. 1. Et ut omni provisionis genere occursum sit Caesarianis, sancimus licere universis quorum interest obicere manus his, qui ad capienda bona alicuius venerint, qui succubuerit legibus, ut, etiamsi officiales ausi fuerint a tenore datae legis desistere, ipsis privatis resistentibus a facienda iniuria arceantur. 2. Tunc enim is, cuius interest bona alicuius non interpellari, officialibus volentibus ea capere debet adquiescere, cum litteris nostris cognoverit non ex arbitrio suo Caesarianos ad capiendas easdem venisse facultates, sed iustitiae vigorem id fieri statuisse.

[6] Imp. Constantinus A. ad provinciales. Iustas etiam et quae locum habent fisci actiones praecipimus concremari ob hoc solum, quod suis temporibus prolatae non sunt. iam calumniae privatorum eo saltem arceantur exemplo, quo iustas fisci lites silere praecipimus.

D. III k. Iun. Constantino A. V et Licinio C. conss.

[7] Idem A. pr. Defensionis facultas danda est his, quibus aliquam inquietudinem fiscus infert, cum facultates eorundem adhuc controversia pendente inquietari describique fas non sit. 1. Ubi ergo controversia extiterit fisco alicuius patrimonium vindicante, apud eum omnibus facultatibus constitutis cognitio ventiletur, ut, cum rei exitus debere eas vindicari probaverit, tum demum res persequi liceat et super modo facultatum ac rerum interrogationem haberi, quae per condicionales servos investiganda est, ut, si quid subtractum fuerit, exigatur et extrinsecus tantum aliud multae nomine, quantum fuerat per fraudem ablatum. 2. Sane in huiuscemodi quaestione si Caesariani nomen inciderit, ad usurpationem constitutionis istius non debebit

[5] Copy of a sacred letter of DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti to Flaccus. pr. It is prohibited that property of any person who was judged to have "made a place" for the Treasury (i.e., to be subject to seizure by the Treasury) be seized before a rule has been given by Us. 1. And in order that by every type of provision the Caesariani (officials of the Treasury) be resisted, We ordain that all who have an interest be permitted to interpose their hands against those who have come to seize the property of anyone who has submitted to the laws, so that, even if officials have dared to depart from the terms of the law that has been given, they might be prevented from committing an injustice by the resistance of private persons themselves. 2. For the person who has an interest that someone's property not be disturbed should acquiesce in the officials' wish to seize it at that time, when he has learned from Our letter that the Caesariani have not come to take the same property on their own judgment, but that the vigor of justice has established that this happen.

[6][3] Emperor CONSTANTINE Augustus to the provincials. We instruct that even proper causes of action and those that have a place for the Treasury be "burned" (i.e., barred) for this reason alone, that they were not brought in their due time. For vexatious litigation (calumniae) of private persons should be prevented at all events by this example, whereby We instruct that (even) lawful cases of the Treasury be put to rest.

Given May 30, in the consulship of Constantine Augustus, for the fifth time, and Licinius Caesar (319).

[7][4] The same Augustus. pr. The opportunity (facultas) of a defense is to be given to those to whom the Treasury affords some disquiet, since it is not proper that the same people's property be disturbed and inventoried while a dispute is still pending. 1. Therefore when a dispute arises upon the Treasury's claim of someone's property, a hearing shall be aired while all the property is established with him, so that, when the outcome of the matter proves that this property is owed, only then would it be permitted to pursue the things and to conduct an inquiry over the amount of resources and property, which is to be investigated through slaves whose ownership is conditional (condicionalis, since the outcome of the proceedings may result in their ownership passing to the Treasury), so that, if anything has been withdrawn, it should be demanded and in addition, by way of a fine, as much again as had been taken away by fraud. 2. Certainly if the name of a Caesarianus (official of the Fiscus) turns up in such an investigation, he should not undertake to benefit from

[3] = C.Th. 10.1.3.
[4] = C.Th. 10.1.5.

accedere, si quidem consuetudo fraudium, quibus praedicti omnia temerare consueverunt, exceptionem eorundem meruerit.

D. prid. k. Ian. Sirmio Constantino A. VII et Constantio C. conss.

[8] Impp. Valentinianus et Valens AA. ad Dracontium vicarium Africae. Qui in contractibus scelestis ac fisco perniciosis interversorum maculosis se fraudibus implicuerunt, in quadrupli redhibitionem teneantur.

D. XV k. Dec. Hadrumeto Valentiniano et Valente AA. conss.

[9] Impp. Honorius et Theodosius AA. Patricio comiti rerum privatarum. Super creandis susceptoribus periculo procuratorum rei dominicae dispositionem tuae sublimitatis firmam esse praecipimus, ita ut, omni ambitione cessante, quae statuta sunt quaeque antiqua consuetudine commendantur, in pabulis vel sumptu familiae ministrando intemerata permaneant: super irenarcho et optione omni antiqua consuetudine observanda.

D. III k. Ian. Constantinopoli Theodosio A. VIIII et Constantio III conss.

[10] Idem AA. Palladio pp. Eorum patrimonia mortuorum, qui vitae suae tempore diversis conscientiam suam dicuntur polluisse criminibus, fisci rationibus nequaquam competere vel ab eo alienari censemus, nisi post publicam accusationem eos constiterit fuisse convictos.

D. VIII id. Iul. Ravennae Eustathio et Agricola conss.

[11] Πᾶσα δημοσία δίκη ἐντὸς ἓξ μηνῶν μετὰ τὴν προκάταρξιν μετρουμένων πληρούσθω, εἰ μὴ ἄρα συμβῇ κατὰ τὸ ἀναγκαῖον ἢ πρόσωπα ἢ δικαιώματά τινα ἕτερα ἐξ ἐπαρχιῶν ἀχθῆναι κατὰ τὴν βασιλίδα πόλιν, ἢ αὐτοὶ οἱ ἐναγόμενοι τὴν αἰτίαν ὑπερθέσεως παράσχωσιν ὡς ἀπαράσκευοι.

this constitution, if indeed the habitual frauds, by which the above-mentioned (Caesariani) have been wont to spoil everything, merit an exception for the same persons.

Given December 31, at Sirmium, in the consulship of Constantine Augustus, for the seventh time, and Constantius Caesar (326).

[8][5] Emperors VALENTINIAN and VALENS Augusti to Dracontius, Vicar of Africa. Those who, in contracts that are criminal and harmful to the Treasury, have involved themselves in the filthy fraud of embezzlers (interversi), shall be held liable for fourfold restitution.

Given November 17, at Hadrumetum, in the consulship of Valentinian and Valens Augusti (365).

[9][6] Emperors HONORIUS and THEODOSIUS Augusti to Patricius, Count of the Privy Purse. We instruct that the disposition of Your Sublimity be firm concerning the appointment of tax collectors (susceptores) at the risk of the procurators of the Privy Purse (res dominica), so that, with all ambition ceasing, what has been legislated and is commended by ancient custom concerning fodder and providing expenses for the slave staff remain unchanged. Every ancient custom is to be observed concerning the peace officer (irenarchus)[7] and the optio (a military officer responsible for supplies).

Given December 30, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Theodosius Augustus, for the ninth time, and Constantius, for the third time (420).

[10][8] The same Augusti to Palladius, Praetorian Prefect. We decree that the patrimonies of those dead persons who are said during their lifetimes to have polluted their own conscience with diverse crimes, by no means shall be seized (competere) for the accounts of the Treasury or be alienated by it, unless it has been established that they had been convicted after a public accusation.

Given July 8, at Ravenna, in the consulship of Eustathius and Agricola (421).

[11][9] Every trial involving the Treasury should be completed within six months measured after joinder of issue, unless it should happen that either persons or some other proofs are by necessity summoned from the provinces to the Imperial City, or the defendants themselves provide, as the reason for delay, that they are not prepared.

[5] = C.Th. 10.1.10, which dates the constitution's being given to November 17, 364, which Seeck prefers; Schmidt-Hofner argues for November 17, 365. Krüger suggests that the date and place in the text describe when the constitution was accepted, not given.

[6] = C.Th. 10.1.17.

[7] On irenarchae, see C. 10.77.

[8] = C.Th. 10.10.30, with different wording; combine with C. 9.40.3, 10.10.4; C.Th. 4.15.1, 10.10.29. C.Th. 10.10.30 adds "Constantius Augustus" to the emperors.

[9] From Bas. 56.2.55.

II De Conveniendis Fisci Debitoribus

[1] Imp. Gordianus A. Saturnino et aliis. Non iniusta ratione desideratis repromissa fisco indemnitate eos principali loco conveniri, qui reliqua contraxerunt, mox ad vos perveniri, qui ab his quaedam mercati estis.

[2] Impp. Valerianus et Gallienus AA. et Valerianus C. Patrophilo. Fisco quidem contra te manet actio, quod argentum, quod inferre debebas, rationibus fuit relatum, si cautioni, quae tibi super eo exposita est, tabularius non subnotavit. aequum est tamen, ut prius de bonis eius qui exactor fuit, si solvendo est et conveniendi eius facultas datur, indemnitati fisci satisfiat, tunc a te, si servari hic modus non possit, reposcatur.

[3] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. Ianuario. pr. Quoniam Augurio ac filio eius ad exigenda reliqua consortes vos atque sociatos esse dicatis eisque certorum dumtaxat nominum exactionem mandatam nec inter eum et ceteros, qui exactores fuerant nominati, confusae exactionis mutuum periculum constitutum, sed separato muneris obsequio discretam sollicitudinis rationem fuisse adseveratis, a iure non discrepat, ut prius ex bonis exactorum, qui principali loco ad exactionem fuerant destinati, indemnitati fiscali satisfiat, postque eos, si solidum debitum exsolutum non sit, nominatores conveniri. 1. Rationalis igitur noster iuris ordinem sequetur, excussisque exactorum facultatibus nec non etiam nominatorum, si fiscus in universi debiti quantitate securitatem indemnitatis consecutus non fuerit, etiam vos ad restituenda fiscalia debita adstringet.

[4] Imppp. Valentinianus Valens et Gratianus AAA. ad Archelaum comitem Orientis. Hi, qui fisco nostrae mansuetudinis obnoxii sunt, omissa frustratione teneantur, ut, quod suis nominibus debent, de suis

Second Title Suing Debtors to the Treasury

[1] Emperor Gordian Augustus to Saturninus and others. Not for an unjust reason do you desire, after making a formal promise of indemnity to the Treasury, that those persons who have contracted arrears be sued as principals (principali loco), and that recourse (only) then be had to you, who have purchased certain items from them.

[2] Emperors Valerian and Gallienus Augusti and Valerian Caesar to Patrophilus. An action remains to the Treasury against you since the silver, which you were obligated to pay, was credited on the (tax) accounts, if the tax official (tabularius) did not countersign the written receipt (cautio) that was issued to you over this matter. However, it is fair that the indemnity of the Treasury be satisfied first from the property of the one who was the exactor (of the revenues due to the Treasury), if he is solvent and the opportunity to sue him is provided, and then for it to be demanded from you, if this method cannot be maintained.

[3] Emperors Diocletian and Maximian Augusti to Januarius. pr. You (pl.) say that you were partners (consortes) and were allied with Augurius and his son to exact arrears, (and) that the exaction of only certain debts was mandated to them, and that a mutual risk for the whole task of exacting arrears (confusae exactionis mutuum periculum) was not established between him (Augurius) and the others who had been nominated as exactors. You also assert that the account under your care was distinct, since your obedience to the liturgy was separate. This does not differ from the law, so that the Treasury's indemnity may be satisfied first from the property of the exactors who were appointed as principals to exact payments, and that after them, if the entire debt has not been paid, their nominators may be sued. 1. Our Comptroller (rationalis),[10] therefore, will follow the order of the law, first investigating the resources of the exactors as well as of their nominators, (and) if the Treasury has not gained security for its indemnity for the amount of the entire debt, he will oblige you as well to the payment of the debts to the Treasury.

[4][11] Emperors Valentinian, Valens, and Gratian Augusti to Archelaus, Count of the East. Those who are indebted to the Treasury of Our Clemency shall be bound without evasion, such that they are compelled to pay what they

[10] Blume: "The ordinary judge was the rationalis, translated comptroller, in a preceding period called simply procurator. The fisc was also represented by the advocate of the fisc. C. 2.8."
[11] = C.Th. 10.16.2; combine with C. 11.9.1, where Archelaus is Count of Imperial Finances. C. 11.9.1 has "Given July 3, at Nebiodunum, and received July 18, at Marcianopolis."

facultatibus cogantur exsolvere, servatis, cum compleverint, adlegationibus propriis, si quas adversus quoscumque ex suis contractibus debitores competere sibi ex iure crediderint, ita ut adversus eos, quos sibi obnoxios adseverant, legibus et iudiciis experiendum esse cognoscant.

D. III non. Iul. Novioduno Valentiniano np. et Victore conss.

[5] Impppp. Valens Gratianus et Valentinianus AAA. Fortunatiano comiti rerum privatarum. pr. Inter chartulas confiscati brevis quidam adseveratur inventus, qui nomina continebat debitorum seu contractorum. 1. Cum tamen neque testibus credita pecunia probaretur neque cautionibus ea quae brevi inserta sunt ostendantur, iniquum esse perspeximus, ut sub propriae adnotationis manu unusquisque faciat debitorem. 2. Occasionis igitur huius calumniam praesenti volumus iussione cohiberi, ut brevis vanitate reiecta nullus ad redhibitionem de his, quorum nomina conscripta sunt, urgeatur. 3. Quod et in aliis similibus causis observandum esse censemus.

D. prid. non. Iul. Hierapoli Gratiano A. IIII et Merobaude conss.

III De Fide et Iure Hastae Fiscalis et de Adiectionibus

[1] Imp. Antoninus A. Agortiae. Quod in libellum contulisti, procuratori meo, ad cuius officium desiderium tuum pertinet, adlega. cui si probaveris non auctore procuratore vel eo, cui vendendi fuit facultas, neque habitis hastis nec omni ordine peracto venditas res esse, et id quod ex causa iudicati debes exsolveris, rescissa venditione mala fide facta easdem res recipies cum fructibus, quos ad emptorem mala fide pervenisse vel pervenire debere constiterit.

PP. non. Ian. Antonino A. IIII et Balbino conss.

[2] Imp. Gordianus A. Heracleoni. Duplex ratio desiderium tuum iuvat, et quod praetermissa hastarum sollemnitate possessiones tuas ex officio distractas suggeris, et quod pretii vilitate ob exiguum debitum gratiosam emptionem in fraudem tuam utilitatemque rationum mearum owe for their debts from their own property, while maintaining, after they have completed this, their own claims, if they believe that any are available to them by law against any debtors from their own contracts, in such a way that they recognize that they must pursue these against those who they assert are indebted to them through the laws and the courts.

Given July 5, at Noviodunum, in the consulship of Valentinian, Most Noble Boy, and Victor (369).

[5][12] Emperors VALENS, GRATIAN, and VALENTINIAN Augusti to Fortunatianus, Count of the Privy Purse. pr. Among the papers (chartulae) of someone whose property has been confiscated[13] it is asserted that a list (brevis) was discovered that contained the names of debtors or contractors. 1. Since, however, it was not proved by witnesses that money was loaned and those debts that are inserted in the list are not demonstrated by written promises, We have seen that it is unfair that anyone might create a debtor by the signature (manus) of his own annotation. 2. By this order, We want the vexatious litigation arising from this situation to be prevented, so that, since We reject the list's presumption, no one from among those whose names have been written (in it) be pressed for repayment. 3. We decree that this also be observed in other similar cases.

Given July 6, at Hierapolis, in the consulship of Gratian Augustus, for the fourth time, and Merobaudes (377).

Third Title The Faith and Law of Auctions by the Treasury, and Higher Bids

[1] Emperor ANTONINUS Augustus to Agortia. Disclose to my procurator, to whose office your desire pertains, what you have included in your petition. If you prove to him that the property was sold not under the authority of the procurator or of one who had the right to sell, and without holding an auction (hastae) or observing every procedure, and you pay what you owe as a result of an adverse verdict (ex causa iudicati), a sale conducted in bad faith will be rescinded, and you will regain the same property with its fruits that are established to have accrued or that ought to accrue to the buyer in bad faith.

Posted January 5, in the consulship of Antoninus Augustus, for the fourth time, and Balbinus (213).

[2] Emperor GORDIAN to Heracleo. A twofold rationale supports your desire, both because you allege that your properties (possessiones) were sold officially although the customary auction was omitted, and because you say that your [12] = C.Th. 10.16.3 (where the final sentence is lacking).

[13] C.Th. 10.16.3 reads "of someone deported."

adversarium commentum fuisse dicis. quapropter illicita ista redargue, tam indemnitati fisci consulturus quam tuae securitati opem laturus.

PP. v k. ... Gordiano A. et Aviola conss.

[3] Idem A. Crispo. Etsi instrumenta emptionis non extent, quibuscumque tamen probationibus uxor tua ostenderit ad se eam domum pertinere, quam a fisco eius nomine dicis comparatam, pretiumque ab ea exsolutum et in eam dominium translatum, frustra fiscum ex persona matris eius referre quaestionem procurator meus non sinet.

PP. v k. Nov. Gordiano A. et Aviola conss.

[4] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. Marcellinae. Si tempora, quae in fiscalibus hastis statuta sunt, patiuntur, cum etiam augmentum te facturam esse profitearis, adi rationalem nostrum, ut iuxta ius pretii uberioris oblationem admittat.

PP. III id. Ian. Sirmi ipsis IIII et III AA. conss.

[5] Imppp. Valentinianus Valens et Gratianus AAA. ad Viventium pp. Galliarum. pr. Quaecumque pro reliquis prodigorum in annonario titulo ceterisve fiscalibus debitis in quibuscumque corporibus sub auctione licitanda sunt, fisco auctore vendantur, ut perpetuo penes eos sint iure dominii, quibus res huiusmodi sub hastae sollemnis arbitrio fiscus addixerit. 1. Et si quid umquam, ut a fisco facta venditio possit infringi, auctoritate rescripti fuerit impetratum, nullus obtemperet, cum etiam minoribus, si quando aliquid ex rebus eorum pro fiscalibus debitis adiudicatur emptoribus, repetitionis facultas in omnem intercipiatur aetatem.

D. III id. Nov. Treviris Valentiniano np. et Victore conss.

[6] Idem AAA. ad Felicem comitem sacrarum largitionum. Si qui proscribente ac distrahente fisco debitorum fiscalium emerint facultates, pro earum rerum tantum pretio obnoxii sint, quas eos patuerit decursis adversary contrived, through a cheap price for a small amount owed, a corrupt sale to defraud you and the interests of my accounts. For this reason, prove these unlawful actions, both to serve the indemnity of the Treasury and to bring support for your security.

Posted on the fifth day before the Kalends ... in the consulship of Gordian Augustus and Aviola (239).

[3] The same Augustus to Crispus. Even if the documents for the purchase should not exist, by whatever proofs your wife shows that that house belongs to her, which you say was bought from the Treasury in her name, and (for which) the price was paid by her and ownership was transferred to her, my procurator will not allow the Treasury mistakenly to raise a question on the basis of her mother's person (whose property was sold to her daughter).

Posted October 28, in the consulship of Gordian Augustus and Aviola (239).

[4] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti to Marcellina. If the dates that have been established in auctions by the Treasury allow (it), since you claim that you are going to offer a higher bid, approach Our comptroller, so that he admit an offer of a more substantial price in accordance with the law.[14]

Posted January 11, at Sirmium, in the consulship of the Augusti themselves, for the fourth time and for the third time, respectively (290).

[5][15] Emperors VALENTINIAN, VALENS, and GRATIAN Augusti to Viventius, Praetorian Prefect of the Gauls. pr. Whatever properties are to be auctioned for the arrears of spendthrifts for the land tax (in annonario titulo) or for other debts to the Treasury, in whatever physical form, should be sold with the Treasury as guarantor (auctor), so that they be under perpetual right of ownership with the persons to whom the Treasury has assigned such property under the outcome of the customary auction. 1. And if any measure is ever obtained by the authority of a rescript that a sale carried out by the Treasury be voided, no one shall obey this, since the right to reclaim (property) is precluded at every age, even for those less than 25, if ever something from their property should be adjudicated to buyers for debts to the Treasury.

Given November 11, at Trier, in the consulship of Valentinian, Most Noble Boy, and Victor (369).

[6][16] The same Augusti to Felix, Count of Imperial Finances. If any persons have bought the property of debtors to the Treasury when the Treasury is publicly [14] For the rule, see D. 49.14.50 and C. 11.32.1.

[15] = C.Th. 10.17.1; Frag. Vat. 37.
[16] = C.Th. 10.17.2. Seeck dates to March 9, 368; Schmidt-Hofner, to March 9, 368 or 370.

hastis et proscriptione habita comparasse. nam ita eos munimus, ut nullius conventioni reliquorum fiscalium nomine patiamur extrinsecus subiacere.

D. VII id. Mart. Marcianopoli Valentiniano et Valente AA. conss.

[7] Αὐτοκράτωρ Ζήνων τῷ Δομνίκῳ. Ἐὰν δημευθέντος τινὸς ἡ οὐσία πιπράσκηται, ἔξεστι καὶ τῷ κόμιτι τῶν ἰδιοκτήτων τοῦ βασιλέως καὶ τῇ σχολῇ τῶν παλατίνων καὶ τῷ τοῦ δημοσίου συνηγόρῳ ἀγοράζειν τινὰ πράγματα ἐκ ταύτης τῆς οὐσίας, μηδενὸς διαβάλλοντος τὸ συνάλλαγμα.

PP. III k. Aug. post consulatum.

IIII De Venditione Rerum Fiscalium cum Privatis Communium

[1] Imp. Alexander A. Victorio. pr. Forma est, quotiens ad fiscum vel minima portio rei pertineat, ut universa a procuratoribus meis distrahantur, sed pretium partis tantum in fiscum redigatur, reliquum dominis partium restituatur. 1. Emptorem igitur praediorum, de quibus libellum dedisti, apud suum iudicem conveni usurum defensionibus, si quae sibi competunt.

PP. VII k. Oct. Fusco et Dextro conss.

V Ne Fiscus Rem Quam Vendidit Evincat

[1] Pars epistulae imp. Alexandri A. ad rationales. pr. Gravissimum verecundia mea duxit, ut, cuius rei pretium, cum bona fide esset addicta, semel fiscus acceperit, eius controversiam referat. 1. Non solum ergo emptorem ab eadem statione, sed ne ab alia quidem quaestionem pati debere aequum est, cum et in his venditionibus emptore non inquietato officia inter se possint experiri.

D. XV k. Mai. Modesto et Probo conss.

advertising and selling it, they should be liable only for the price for those things that it is clear they have purchased after the auction has run its course and the public announcement has been made. For We protect them in this way, that We not allow them to be subject additionally to anyone's lawsuit for arrears owed to the Treasury.

Given March 9, at Marcianopolis, in the consulship of Valentinian and Valens, Augusti[17] (370).

[7][18] Emperor ZENO to Dominicus. If the property of someone whose goods have been confiscated should be sold, it is permitted for the Count of the Privy Purse and (the Count) of the Palatine Corps and the Advocate of the Treasury to buy some items from this property, and no one should object to the contract.

Posted July 30, in the post-consulate of...

Fourth Title The Sale of Property Belonging to the Treasury and Owned in Common with Private Citizens

[1] Emperor ALEXANDER to Victorius. pr. The procedure, whenever even the smallest portion of a property belongs to the Treasury, is that the whole thing be sold by my procurators, but only a part of the price be claimed for the Treasury, and the rest restored to the owners of the (other) shares. 1. Therefore sue the buyer of the properties about which you have given a petition before his own judge, and he will use any defenses that are available to him.

Posted September 25, in the consulship of Fuscus and Dexter (225).

Fifth Title The Treasury Should Not Evict From Property That It Has Sold

[1] Part of a letter from Emperor ALEXANDER Augustus to the Comptrollers. pr. My modesty has considered it most burdensome to raise a controversy about property once the Treasury has accepted its price, when it has been assigned (to the highest bidder at an auction) in good faith. 1. It is therefore fair not only that the buyer should not suffer any inquiry, not only from the same department (statio, where the buyer bid for the property), but also from any other, since even in these sales the offices (of the Treasury) can dispute among themselves without disturbing the buyer.

Given April 17, in the consulship of Modestus and Probus (228).

[17] It should be "Consuls for the third time."
[18] Taken from Bas. 56.6.7. Krüger adds "Augustus" to Zeno's title. Lounghis et al. date the constitution to between 474 and 491.

[2] Imp. Marcianus A. Palladio pp. Orientis. Retractare fiscum, quod semel vendidit, aequitatis honestatisque ratio non patitur.

D. v k. Ian. Constantinopoli Marciano A. cons.

VI De His Qui Ex Publicis Rationibus Mutuam Pecuniam Acceperunt

[1] Impp. Valentinianus et Valens AA. ad Probum pp. Si quis ab exactoribus tabulariis arcariis officiisve rationum fenebrem pecuniam sumpserit, detectus in eodem ad quadrupli poenam ex hac auctoritate teneatur.

D. IIII id. Mart. Treviris Valentiniano et Valente AA. conss.

[2] Imppp. Gratianus Valentinianus et Theodosius AAA. pr. Palladio comiti sacrarum largitionum. Sciant omnes accipiendi mutuo ex largitionibus sacris auri non patere cuiquam facultatem. 1. Quod si quis aurum ex nostro aerario privatis commodis profuturum occulte aut cautionis aut sponsionis fide ut debitor redditurus sine nostra auctoritate acceperit, ablatis bonis omnibus perpetuae deportationis subdetur exilio. 2. Is etiam, qui ex memoratis thesauris sub specie publici creditoris aurum cuiquam commodarit ac dederit, capitali sententia subiugetur.

D. XII k. Aug. Heracleae Eucherio et Syagrio conss.

VII Poenis Fiscalibus Creditores Praeferri

[1] Imp. Alexander A. Marcello. Rem suam persequentibus poenae exactio postponitur. sicut itaque in sortis quantitate fisci persecutio potior est, ita in triplo quod poenae nomine adiectum est propria forma ferenda est.

PP. k. Iul. Iuliano et Crispino conss.

[2] Emperor Marcian Augustus to Palladius, Praetorian Prefect of the East. Considerations of fairness and honesty do not allow the Treasury to reconsider once it has sold something.

Given December 28, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Marcian Augustus (451).

Sixth Title Those Who Have Received Money on Loan from the Public Accounts

[1][19] Emperors Valentinian and Valens Augusti to Probus, Praetorian Prefect. If anyone has received money lent at interest from exactors (officials of the Treasury), tax officials (tabularii), treasurers (arcarii), or offices of the accounts (rationes), when he is discovered in this same act, he shall be held by this authority to a fourfold penalty.

Given March 12, at Trier, in the consulship of Valentian and Valens Augusti (368 or 370).

[2][20] Emperors Gratian, Valentinian, and Theodosius Augusti to Palladius, Count of Imperial Finances. pr. All should know that the ability to receive gold on loan from the Imperial Finances is not open to anyone. 1. But if anyone without Our authority receives gold from Our Treasury to serve private purposes either secretly or on the faith of a formal promise or of a surety (aut cautionis aut sponsionis fide) to pay it back as a debtor, he will be subject to an exile of perpetual deportation after all his property is taken away. 2. Also that person who has loaned and given anyone gold from the aforementioned treasures in the guise of a public creditor shall be subjected to capital punishment.

Given July 21, at Heraclea, in the consulship of Eucherius and Syagrius (381).

Seventh Title Creditors Have Priority over Penalties Owed the Treasury

[1][21] Emperor Alexander Augustus to Marcellus. The exaction of a penalty (poena) is postponed for those pursuing their own property. Just as the Treasury's claim (persecutio) takes precedence in the amount of the principal, so in a triple amount that has been added as a penalty the special rule is to be followed.

Posted July 1, in the consulship of Julianus and Crispinus (224).

[19] = C.Th. 10.24.1, which adds to the list of lenders "or anyone else to whom the care over fiscal treasures might be assigned." Seeck dates to March 12, 368; Schmidt-Hofner, to March 12, 368, 370, or 373.

[20] = C.Th. 10.24.2, with a different wording and holding ("not" is omitted in §1); combine with C. 4.61.8, whose date reads "Given July 6, at Constantinople, and received July 21."

[21] Blume refers to Papinian, D. 49.14.37, and Paul, D. 49.14.48.1, for the principle that creditors seek satisfaction before the Treasury exacts a penalty.

VIII De Fiscalibus Usuris

[1] Imp. Antoninus A. Antiocho. Eius summae, quam tibi poenae nomine inflictam probaturus es, usurae non exigentur: nec enim multam tibi procurator meus inrogavit ultra quam placitum est, sed poenam te iussit inferre.

PP. XV k. Dec. Sabino et Anullino conss.

[2] Imp. Alexander A. Victorino. Si sub pignore creditum fuit, etiam fiscum, qui successit in locum debitoris, usuras praestare oportet, si eas dependi saltem pacto placuit.

PP. III non. Sept. Iuliano et Crispino conss.

[3] Imp. Iustinianus A. Menae pp. Fiscum etiam nostrum parere sanctioni nostri numinis iubemus, per quam usque ad dimidiam centesimae usuras stipulari creditoribus exceptis certis personis permisimus, ut ipse etiam fiscus ultra dimidiam centesimae partem a debitoribus suis minime exigat, sive principaliter ei promiserunt sive a prioribus suis creditoribus actiones ad eum quocumque modo devolutae sunt.

D. VIII id. April. Constantinopoli Decio vc. cons.

VIIII De Sententiis Adversus Fiscum Latis Retractandis

[1] Imp. Antoninus A. Aristaeo. Causas, in quibus contra fiscum iudicatum est, intra triennium retractari posse, et post id tempus, si praevaricatio arguatur vel manifesta fraus probetur, notum est.

PP. non. Iul. duobus Aspris conss.

[2] ...

X De Bonis Vacantibus et de Incorporatione

[1] Impp. Diocletianus et Maximianus AA. Scyrioni rationali. Scire debet gravitas tua intestatorum res, qui sine legitimo herede decesserint, fisci nostri rationibus vindicandas nec civitates audiendas, quae

Eighth Title Interest Rates of the Treasury

[1] Emperor ANTONINUS Augustus to Antiochus. Interest will not be exacted for that sum that you will prove was inflicted on you as a penalty. For my procurator has not imposed a fine on you beyond what has been decided, but he has ordered you to pay a penalty.

Posted November 17, in the consulship of Sabinus and Anullinus (216).

[2] Emperor ALEXANDER Augustus to Victorinus. If a loan was made with a pledge, the Treasury, which has succeeded into the place of the debtor, must also provide interest, as long as it was agreed in the (original) pact that it be paid.

Posted September 3, in the consulship of Julian and Crispinus (224).

[3][22] Emperor JUSTINIAN Augustus to Menas, Praetorian Prefect. We order the Treasury to obey the ordinance of Our Divine Majesty,[23] through which We have permitted creditors, with the exception of certain persons, to take stipulations for interest up to 6 percent, so that the Treasury itself should not exact interest over 6 percent from its debtors, whether they have promised this at the outset or whether claims (actiones) have devolved to it by whatever means from its previous creditors.

Given April 6, at Constantinople, in the consulship of the vir clarissimus Decius (529).

Ninth Title Reconsidering Verdicts Issued against the Treasury

[1] Emperor ANTONINUS Augustus to Aristaeus. It is well known that cases in which a judgment has been made against the Treasury can be reconsidered within a three-year period, and (also) after that time, if an accusation of collusion (praevaricatio) should be made or manifest fraud be proved.

Posted July 7, in the consulship of the two Aspri (212).

[2][24]

Tenth Title Ownerless Property and Its Incorporation (into Imperial Property)

[1] Emperors DIOCLETIAN and MAXIMIAN Augusti to Scyrio, Comptroller. Your Eminence should know that the property of the intestate, who have died without a lawful heir, are to be claimed for Our accounts and that cities are not to be heard if they strive to claim the right to claim this for themselves on

[22] Combine with C. 7.54.2.
[23] C. 4.32.26.
[24] A second law is cited by Theodorus ad Nov. 128.14.

sibi earum vindicandarum ius veluti ex permissu vindicare nituntur: et deinceps quaecumque intestatorum bona a civitatibus obtentu privilegiorum suorum occupata esse compereris, ad officium nostrum eadem revocare non dubites.

D. prid. id. April. Hannibaliano et Asclepiodoto conss.

[2] Imp. Constantinus A. ad Aemilium rationalem. Si quando adnotationes nostrae contineant possessionem sive domum, quam donaverimus, 'integro statu' donatam, hoc verbo ea vis continebitur, quam ante scribebamus 'cum adiacentibus et mancipiis et pecoribus et fructibus et omni iure suo': ut ea, quae ad instructum possessionis vel domus pertinent, tradenda sint.

D. VI id. Mart. Mediolani Constantino A. III et Licinio conss.

[3] Imppp. Valentinianus Valens et Gratianus AAA. ad Florianum comitem rerum privatarum. pr. Si quando aut alicuius publicatione aut ratione iuris aliquid rei nostrae addendum est, rite atque sollemniter per comitem rerum privatarum, deinde rationales in singulis quibusque provinciis commorantes incorporatio impleatur et diligens stilus singillatim omnia adscribat. 1. Tituli vero, quorum adiectione praedia nostris sunt consecranda substantiis, non nisi publica testificatione ponantur: gravissimis statim subdendis suppliciis, qui huiusmodi aliquid propria usurpatione temptaverint.

D. IIII k. April. Valentiniano np. et Victore conss.

[4] Impp. Honorius et Theodosius AA. Palladio pp. Vacantia mortuorum bona tunc ad fiscum iubemus transferri, si nullum ex qualibet sanguinis linea vel iuris titulo legitimum reliquerit intestatus heredem.

D. VIII id. Iul. Ravennae Eustathio et Agricola conss.

the theory of (an imperial) dispensation (permissu). And henceforth whatever goods of the intestate you discover have been seized by the cities under the pretense of their privileges, you shall not hesitate to recall the same to Our office.

Given April 12, in the consulship of Hannibalianus and Asclepiodotus (292).

[2][25] Emperor CONSTANTINE Augustus to Aemilius, Comptroller. If ever Our annotations (written responses to petitions) should include an estate (possessio) or house of which We have made a gift (with the designation) given "with its status intact" (integro statu), this term will have the same force as when We used to write "with its appurtenances (adiacentia), slaves, livestock, crops, and every right it has," so that those things that pertain to the furnishing (instructus) of the estate or house are to be conveyed.[26]

Given March 10, at Milan, in the consulship of Constantine Augustus, for the third time, and Licinius (313).

[3][27] Emperors VALENTINIAN, VALENS, and GRATIAN Augusti to Florianus, Count of the Privy Purse. pr. If ever anything is to be added to Our property, either because of the confiscation of someone's goods or by reason of law, its incorporation shall be completed with due observance and solemnly by the Count of the Privy Purse, then by the Comptrollers dwelling in the various individual provinces, and a diligent pen should note everything individually. 1. But notices, by whose addition properties (praedia) are to be consecrated among our resources, shall not be included unless witnessed in public. Those who try some such thing by acting on their own are to be subjected at once to the most serious punishments.[28]

Given March 29, in the consulship of Valentinian, Most Noble Boy, and Victor (369).

[4][29] Emperors HONORIUS and THEODOSIUS Augusti to Palladius, Praetorian Prefect. We order ownerless property (vacantia bona) of decedents to be transferred to the Treasury[30] at that time, if the person dying intestate has not left behind any lawful heir from any lineage by blood or consideration of law.

Given July 8, at Ravenna, in the consulship of Eustathius and Agricola (421).

[25] = C.Th. 10.8.1.

[26] Classical Roman law distinguished between a legacy of a fundus cum instrumento and a fundus instructus. The former term refers to a farm with the equipment, animals, and slaves needed for its cultivation, whereas the latter term in addition includes furnishings and other amenities that would serve the owner during his residence there.

[27] = C.Th. 10.9.1.

[28] Blume: "the affixing of notices on properties, either to secure imperial protection or to harm a property-owner, is addressed in C. 2.14–16."

[29] = C.Th. 10.10.30, with fuller wording and with Constantius included as emperor; combine with C. 9.40.3, 10.1.10; C. Th. 4.15.1, 10.10.29.

[30] C.Th. has "We order the escheated property (caduca bona) of dead persons to be transferred to claimants (competitores) from Our Finances (nostra largitate) then ..."

[5] Impp. Theodosius et Valentinianus AA. Hermocrati comiti rerum privatarum. pr. Si vacantia vel alio modo bona delata legibus ad aerarium perhibeantur, certi palatini electi et iureiurando obstricti mittantur, ut eorum instantia praeses provinciae praesente fisci patrono diligenter inquirat, cuius vacans cadensque fuerit patrimonium, quantumque vel quale videatur. 1. Et cum data reclamandi copia nullum id iure possidere vel vindicare constiterit locumque aerario factum esse tam ipsius relatione quam publicorum monumentorum fide constiterit, rerum nobis notitia intimetur, ut iussu nostro vacantia vel aliae res nomine occupentur aerarii. 2. Quae forma etiam in parte bonorum vel in una alterave re seu actione una vel etiam pluribus servetur. nam si quid per fraudem in dispendium aerarii fuerit admissum, missi quidem exsecutores non evitant indignationem, praeses autem facultatum parte dimidia multabitur, fisci vero patronus detrimentum quod vitio eius fisco ingeritur resarcire urguebitur.

D. VII id. Oct. Constantinopoli Theodosio XV et Valentiniano IIII AA. conss.

XI De Delatoribus

[1] Imp. Alexander A. Basso. Si ei qui capere potest tacitum fideicommissum relictum est, cessat delatio. his enim prohibetur tacite relinqui, qui palam relictum capere non possunt.

PP. XIII k. Mai. Maximo II et Aeliano conss.

[2] Imp. Gordianus A. Eutychemo. pr. Monente officii sollicitudine, quin immo iussu procuratoris, ut causam ab alio delatam convenienti diligentia instrueres, non ipsum voluntarium delationis munus suscepisse te actorum lectio, quae precibus intexta sunt, manifeste declarat. 1. Eapropter

[5][31] Emperors Theodosius and Valentinian Augusti to Hermocrates, Count of the Privy Purse. pr. If ownerless properties or ones that have in accordance with the laws devolved (delata) to the Imperial Treasury in any other way should be reported, certain Palatine officials chosen for the task and bound by oath should be sent, so that at their instance the provincial governor diligently inquire, in the presence of an Advocate (patronus) of the Treasury, to whom the ownerless and escheating (cadens) patrimony had belonged, and how large and of what sort it might seem to be. 1. And when, after the opportunity to reclaim it has been given, it is established that no one possesses it or claims its ownership lawfully, and it is also established that a place has been made for the Treasury both by its own report and by the faith of public records, the notification of the matters should be communicated to Us, so that by Our order the ownerless property or other goods should be seized in the name of the Treasury. 2. This procedure should also be maintained in the case of part of the property or in one or another item or in one or several claims. For if something has been admitted fraudulently at the expense of the Treasury, the executors (exsecutores, officials who enforced debts to the Treasury) who have been sent do not avoid wrath, but the governor will be fined half of his property, while the Advocate of the Treasury will be compelled to make good the loss that has accrued to the Treasury by his failing.

Given October 9, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Theodosius, for the fifteenth time, and Valentinian, for the fourth time, Augusti (435).

Eleventh Title Informers (Delatores)

[1] Emperor Alexander Augustus to Bassus. If a tacit trust[32] has been left to a person who is able to receive it, there is no place for informing. For it is prohibited for a bequest to be made tacitly to those persons who cannot openly take what has been left to them.

Posted April 19, in the consulship of Maximus and Aelianus (223).

[2] Emperor Gordian Augustus to Eutychemus. pr. A reading of the records, which have been included in your petition, manifestly shows that you have not undertaken the voluntary duty itself of informing, since the care of the office, not to mention the order of the procurator warns you to apply appropriate diligence to a case reported by another person. 1. For that reason, the vir clarissimus

[31] = C.Th. 10.8.5, with somewhat different wording. The C.Th. version includes the term caduca, and refers to the Treasury in Achaia.

[32] Fideicommissum tacitum: a trust involving a secret agreement between the testator and a nominal heir to circumvent the law by passing property to someone legally ineligible to receive it.

ne quid in persona tua quod est sectae temporum meorum alienum attemptetur, praeses provinciae vir clarissimus ad sollicitudinem suam revocabit.

PP. VIII id. Sept. Pio et Pontiano conss.

[3] Idem A. Caecilio. Nulla macula vel crimine delatoris adspergitur is, qui, cum ab officialibus fundum seu domum fisci possidere contenderetur, non se sed alium eius rei possessorem esse monstravit.

PP. prid. k. Iul. Gordiano A. II et Pompeiano conss.

[4] Impp. Carinus et Numerianus AA. Candido. Ex varia statutorum diversitate ad id decursum est, ut hi, qui rei publicae causas defendunt, delatorum criminibus non teneantur, cum omnibus notissimum est eos solos exsecrabiles nuntiatores esse, qui fisco deferunt.

PP. III k. Sept. Carino et Numeriano AA. conss.

[5] Imp. Constantinus A. ad provinciales. pr. Omnes iudices invigilare praecipimus delatores sine fisci advocato denuntiantes poenis adficere. apertissimi enim iuris est, ut, quod ex cuiuscumque patrimonio ceciderit in casum, et legibus et retro iuris ordine fisci advocatis agentibus vindicetur. 1. Sed quia nonnulli praecipites secundum ius possessa patrimonia deferre non cessant, damus omnibus qui se laesos existimant contra delatores severitatem iudicum implorare ferro destrictam.

D. XI k. April. Constantinopoli Constantio et Albino conss.

[6] Imppp. Gratianus Valentinianus et Theodosius AAA. Panhellenio consulari Lydiae. Servum domini delatorem iubemus in exemplum omnium proditorum severissimae sententiae subiugari, etiamsi obiecta probaverit, excepto crimine maiestatis.

D. VII k. Nov. Constantinopoli Antonio et Syagrio conss.

provincial governor will recall his care that nothing be attempted in connection with your person that is foreign to the principles of my times.[33]

Posted September 6, in the consulship of Pius and Pontianus (238).

[3] The same Augustus to Caecilius. A person who has shown that not he himself but someone else was the possessor of that property, when officials contended that he was in possession of a house or farm belonging to the Treasury, is not sullied with any stigma or charge of an informer.

Posted June 30, in the consulship of Gordian Augustus, for the second time, and Pompeianus (241).

[4] Emperors CARINUS and NUMERIAN Augusti to Candidus. As a result of the multifarious diversity of the statutes, it has come to this, that those who defend cases for a municipality should not be subject to the charges of (being) informers, since it is very well known to everyone that the only detestable informers (nuntiatores) are the ones who inform to the Treasury.

Posted August 29, in the consulship of Carinus and Numerian Augusti (284).

[5][34] Emperor CONSTANTINE Augustus to the provincials. pr. We instruct all judges to take care to inflict punishments on informers making denunciations without an Advocate of the Treasury. For it is quite clearly the law that whatever from someone's property has not passed to an heir (cadere in casum), should, both according to the statutes and to the precedents of law, be claimed by the Treasury when its advocates pursue the case. 1. But since some rash individuals do not cease informing about patrimonies possessed in accordance with the law, We give to everyone who consider themselves harmed (the right to) to implore a severity of the judges made inexorable by the sword.

Given March 22, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Constantius and Albinus (335).

[6][35] Emperors GRATIAN, VALENTINIAN, and THEODOSIUS Augusti to Panhellenius, Consular Governor of Lydia. We order that a slave who is an informer on his master be subject to the most severe verdict as an example to all betrayers, even if he proves his accusations, except for a charge of treason (maiestas).

Given October 26, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Antonius and Syagrius (382).

[33] As Blume points out, someone prosecuting a case as a duty and not at his own initiative would not suffer the penalties connected with failing to obtain a conviction.

[34] = C.Th. 10.10.3, which omits the phrase "making denunciations without an Advocate of the Treasury."

[35] = C.Th. 10.10.17, which omits the phrase "except in a charge of treason."

[7] Οὔτε οἰκέτῃ οὔτε ἐλευθέρῳ ἔξεστι καταμηνύειν, ὅθεν μηδεὶς εὐλαβείσθω μήτε θάνατον μήτε οὐσίας ἀφαίρεσιν. εἰ δέ τις ἢ ἄλλως πως καταμηνύσει τινὰ ἢ ὡς εὑρόντα θησαυρὸν διαβαλεῖ, οἰκέτης μὲν ὢν παραχρῆμα διδόσθω πυρί, καὶ μάλιστα εἰ τοῦ δεσπότου κατηγορεῖ, ἐλεύθερος δὲ ὑπάρχων καὶ τῆς οὐσίας ἐκπίπτων καὶ τῆς πολιτείας ἔξω τῶν ὅρων τῆς Ῥωμαϊκῆς γινέσθω βασιλείας.

[8] pr. Μὴ ἐξέστω τοῖς τοῦ δημοσίου συνηγόροις λέγειν, ὡς περιηχήθησάν τινα κατέχειν δημόσια καὶ διὰ ταύτης τῆς ἀφανοῦς κατηγορίας ἐπιβουλεύειν ἑτέροις, ἀλλὰ καὶ ὁ καταμηνυτὴς παρέστω καὶ ἡ ποιότης αὐτοῦ σκοπείσθω. 1. Καὶ μηδὲ υἱὸς πατέρα ἢ μητέρα ἢ ἀπελεύθερος πάτρωνα ἐπὶ δημοσίοις καταμηνυέτω, μηδὲ ὁ ἐξορίαν ὑπομείνας ἢ ἐπὶ συκοφαντίᾳ κατακριθεὶς ἢ πληγὰς παρὰ τοῦ ἄρχοντος δεξάμενος μηδὲ ἕτερον πρόσωπον ἀπὸ νόμου εἰργόμενον ἀκουέσθω. 2. Οἰκέτης δὲ ἢ ἐπὶ δημοσίᾳ αἰτίᾳ ἢ ἐπὶ ἄλλῃ τινὶ τοῦ δεσπότου κατηγορῶν ἐν αὐτῷ τῷ φθέγγεσθαι τὴν κατηγορίαν ἀποτεμνέσθω, εἰ καὶ ἀληθεύει κατὰ τοῦ δεσπότου.

3. Καὶ ἡ σχολὴ δὲ τῶν παλατίνων ἐὰν καταμηνύσῃ τινός (μόνη γὰρ αὕτη καὶ δύναται καταμηνύειν καὶ ἀναγκάζεται), ἢ καὶ ἕτερος ὁ ἐκ τοῦ νόμου συγχωρούμενος, μνημονευέτω τοῦ καταμηνύοντος ὁ τοῦ δημοσίου προεστώς. 4. Καὶ εἰ μὲν ἐπὶ τῆς βασιλίδος πόλεώς ἐστιν ὁ καταμηνυθείς, ἐκ διαλαλίας τοῦ κόμητος τῶν ἰδικῶν ὑπομιμνησκέσθω καὶ μηδὲν πλέον πάσῃ τῇ τῶν παλατίνων σχολῇ καὶ τῷ κατὰ καιρὸν πριμικηρίῳ καὶ τοῖς τοῦ δημοσίου συνηγόροις διδότω τῶν τεσσάρων νομισμάτων μήτε ὑπὲρ τῆς ὑπομνήσεως μήτε ὑπὲρ προβολῆς τοῦ ἐντολέως. 4a. Καθ' ἑκάστην δὲ διάγνωσιν τὰ νενομισμένα δαπανήματα ἐν τῷ εἰρημένῳ δικαστηρίῳ παρεχέτω καὶ ὑπὲρ τῆς διαγνώσεως αὐτῆς καὶ ὑπὲρ τῆς τῶν πεπραγμένων ἐκλήψεως. 4b. Καὶ ἀνεύθυνος μὲν ὢν ἀπαλλαττέσθω τῆς δίκης. εἰ δὲ ὑπεύθυνος φανείη, μὴ αὐτὰ μόνα ἅπερ ἔχων εὑρίσκεται πράγματα ἢ τὸ χρέος ὅπερ ἐχρεώστει ἀποδιδότω, ἀλλὰ καὶ τὰ συμβάντα τῷ ταμείῳ δαπανήματα ἐκ διπλασίων διδότω, ὑπὲρ οὗ μάτην ἐδικάσατο.

5. Ἐὰν δὲ πράγματα μόνα καταμηνύηται ὡς διαφέροντα τῷ ἱερωτάτῳ ταμείῳ, ἀγνοεῖται δὲ ὁ ταῦτα διακρατῶν, καὶ ἐν τῇ βασιλίδι πόλει τὰ πράγματα ἢ ὑπὸ τὴν αὐτῆς ἐνορίαν ᾖ, ἀκινήτοις μὲν οὖσιν αὐτοῖς μὴ ἐπιβαλλέτω τίτλους ἡ σχολὴ τῶν παλατίνων μηδὲ ἐπιβαινέτω αὐτοῖς,

[7][36] It is allowed neither for a slave nor a free person to inform, so that no one should fear death or the confiscation of property. But if someone for any reason should inform against someone or accuse him of finding a treasure, if he is a slave he should be immediately given over to fire, and especially if he accuses his master. A free person is to lose his property and citizenship and be outside the boundaries of the Roman Empire.

[8][37] pr. It must not be permitted for the Advocates of the Treasury to say that people have been reported as occupying some properties belonging to the Treasury and through this anonymous accusation to plot against others, but the informer must be present and his quality examined. 1. And a son shall not inform against his father or mother concerning Treasury properties, nor shall a freedman against his patron, nor shall one be heard who has endured exile, been condemned for false accusation, received blows from the magistrate, or is any other person excluded by the law. 2. A slave accusing his master on a public charge (i.e., involving the Treasury) or any other kind shall be cut off in the very act of uttering the accusation, even if he speaks the truth about the master.

3. In addition, if the Palatine Corps (schola Palatinorum) should accuse someone – it alone by itself both can and is compelled to inform – as well as (if) anyone else allowed by the law (does so), the Patron (proestos) of the Treasury shall note the informer. 4. If the accused is in the Imperial City, he shall be summoned in accordance with an interim order of the Count of the Privy Purse, and he shall give no more than (a total of) 4 solidi (nomismata) to the entire Palatine Corps, the temporary superintendent, and the Advocates of the Treasury, either for the accusation or for appointing a procurator. 4a. For each hearing he shall provide the expenses established by law in the aforementioned court, both for the trial itself and for the recording of the protocol. 4b. If he (the accused) is not guilty he shall be absolved of the charge. If he should appear guilty, he must give back not only the property that he is found to have or the loan that he has borrowed, but pay double the expenses that accrued to the Treasury for what he litigated over in vain.

5. If it should only be reported that property belongs to the Most Sacred Treasury, but that it is unknown who possesses it, and this property should be in the Imperial City or within its territory, if the property is immovable the Palatine Corps shall not impose signs (indicating title to the property) or enter upon it, but the Count of the Privy Purse of the Emperor must post placards in the most visible places in the Imperial City as well as where the property is situated,

[36] From Bas. 56.7.7; Lounghis et al. date to between 491 and 518. Blume: "All informers were suppressed in connection with any matters which involved the loss of life or property of anyone, unless, as stated in the next law, the information was given in connection with treason."

[37] From Bas. 56.7.8, giving a Greek synopsis of the original constitution. In 4b, οὗ is accepted for ᾧ in the manuscripts.

ἀλλὰ προγράμματα προτιθέτω ὁ κόμης τῶν ἰδιοκτήτων τοῦ βασιλέως ἐν τοῖς περιφανέσι τόποις τῆς βασιλίδος καὶ ἐν οἷς τὰ πράγματα διάκειται, ἐπιτρέπων ἑκάστῳ ἀντιποιουμένῳ τούτων τῶν πραγμάτων εἴσω τριάκοντα ἡμερῶν καταλαμβάνειν τὸ αὐτοῦ δικαστήριον καὶ συνίστασθαι τοῖς ἑαυτοῦ δικαίοις ἐπὶ ταῖς εἰρημέναις δαπάναις, εἴτε αὐτὸς ὁ κατέχων τὰ πράγματα βούλεται ἀπαντῆσαι εἴτε φίλος αὐτοῦ εἴτε οἰκέτης εἴτε ἀπελεύθερος, ὅταν ἄπεστιν ὁ τῇ ἀληθείᾳ ταῦτα κατέχων, πληρουμένων καὶ ἐπὶ αὐτῷ πάντων, ὅσα περὶ τοῦ φύλακος τῆς νομῆς νενομοθέτηται. 5a. Ἐὰν δὲ μήτε αὐτὸς ὁ τῆς ὑποθέσεως κύριος μήτε ἐντολεὺς αὐτοῦ νεμόμενος μήτε φύλαξ τῆς νομῆς φανείη εἴσω τριάκοντα ἡμερῶν καὶ τοῦτο αὐτὸ γένηται δῆλον ἐν ὑπομνήμασι, γινέσθω μὲν ἐπὶ νομῆς τῶν πραγμάτων τὸ ταμεῖον, μηδενὸς προκρίματος ἐπαγομένου τῷ κυρίῳ τῶν πραγμάτων ἐν ταῖς ἁρμοζούσαις αὐτῷ περὶ τούτων δικαιολογίαις. 5b. Εἰ δὲ κινητὰ ἢ αὐτοκίνητα εἴη τὸ καταγγελθέντα πράγματα, μηδὲ ταῦτα κατεχέτω τις προπετῶς, ἀλλ' ἀναζητείσθω ὁ ταῦτα νεμόμενος καὶ ὑπομνησθεὶς ἀγωνιζέσθω τὴν δίκην ἐπὶ τοῖς εἰρημένοις δαπανήμασι καὶ ὅροις. 5c. Διὰ δὲ πάντων τῶν ἐννόμων τρόπων καὶ ἀποδείξεων ἐγγράφων ἢ καὶ ἀγράφων ἀνερευνάσθω τὰ πράγματα, καὶ διὰ τῶν δυναμένων εἰδέναι τὸ ἀληθὲς προσώπων· εἰδότος τοῦ ἐναγομένου, ὡς, ἐὰν ἡττηθῇ, οὐ μόνον τὰ περὶ τὴν δίκην γινόμενα δαπανήματα ἀπαιτηθήσεται, ἀλλὰ καὶ αὐτὰ τὰ πράγματα παρ' αὐτῷ φανέντα καὶ τὴν τούτων διατίμησιν.

6. Ταῦτα καθόλου περὶ τῶν δημοσίων πραγμάτων ἡ διάταξις νομοθετήσασα ἐπιφέρει λοιπὸν ἰδικὴν νομοθεσίαν περὶ τῶν διὰ τυραννίδα δημευομένων, λέγουσα τὸν ἐπὶ τούτοις καταμηνύοντα μηδὲ μηνυτὴν καλεῖσθαι, ἀλλὰ ἑτοίμως προσδέχεσθαι, καὶ εἰ μὲν συκοφαντήσωσιν οἱ προσαγγείλαντες, ὁμοίως τοῖς ἄλλοις μηνυταῖς αὐτοὺς τιμωρεῖσθαι, ἐὰν δὲ διελέγξωσι τὰ μηνυθέντα, μὴ μόνον ἀπαλλάττεσθαι τῆς τιμωρίας, ἀλλὰ καὶ ὀγδόην μοῖραν τῶν προσαγγελθέντων πραγμάτων αὐτοὺς κομιεῖσθαι. 7. Τοὺς δὲ καταγγελθέντας, ἐὰν μὲν τὰ παρ' αὐτῶν κατεχόμενα πράγματα ἤτοι ἡ οὐσία πᾶσα ἐλάττων εἴη τῶν πεντήκοντα τοῦ χρυσίου λιτρῶν, πρὸς τὴν διατίμησιν αὐτῶν τὰς ἐγγύας διδόναι. εἰ δὲ ὑπερβαίνει τὰς πεντήκοντα λίτρας, ἄχρι μὲν τῶν πεντήκοντα παρέχειν καὶ αὐτοὺς τὰς ἐγγύας, ἐπὶ δὲ τῇ λοιπῇ ποσότητι διόμνυσθαι, προστιθέντας ἐν τῇ ἐξωμοσίᾳ, ὡς προσεδρεύσουσι τῷ δικαστηρίῳ αὐτοὶ ἢ οἱ τούτων ἐντολεῖς καὶ οὐκ ἀπολειφθήσονται τοῦ δικαστηρίου τῶν θείων ἰδικῶν τοῦ βασιλέως. 7a. Ἐὰν δὲ μετὰ τὴν ἐξωμοσίαν ἀπολειφθέντες τρίτον κληθεῖεν ἑκάστης κλήσεως ὑπὲρ δέκα ἡμέρας γενομένης, γένηται δὲ καὶ τρία κατ' αὐτῶν κηρύγματα, καὶ μηδὲ οὕτως φανεῖεν αὐτοὶ ἢ οἱ ἐντολεῖς αὐτῶν ἢ διεκδικηταί, ἐπιβαινέτω μὲν τοῖς πράγμασι τὸ ἱερώτατον ταμεῖον, φυλάττεσθαι δὲ τὸ ἀπόκριτον τοῖς ἀπολιμπανομένοις.

allowing each person who within thirty days makes a claim for the property to approach the same court and to defend his claims on the basis of the aforesaid expenses, whether the very person who possesses the property wishes to take up the case, or (instead) his friend or a slave or freedman when the person who truly possesses it (the property) is absent; and all will be fulfilled in connection with this that has been established by law for someone defending possession. 5a. If neither the author of the controversy himself should appear within thirty days nor his procurator managing it nor a guardian of his possession, and this very matter appears manifest in the record, the Treasury shall be put in possession of the property, with no prejudice accruing to the owner of the property in the court proceedings available to him concerning it. 5b. If the property under denunciation is movable or self-moving (i.e., animals or slaves), no one shall occupy it rashly, but its possessor must be sought out and, when informed, plead his case in accordance with the aforesaid expenses and terms. 5c. The property should be investigated through all lawful methods and written and unwritten proofs, as well as through persons capable of knowing the truth. The defendant will know that, should he be defeated, he will be required to provide not only the expenses that occurred in connection with the trial, but also all the property found with him and its estimated value.

6. The constitution legislating these things generally concerning properties belonging to the Treasury also includes a special provision concerning property confiscated as a result of treason (tyrannis), saying that the person who reports about it is not called an informer, but that he is readily received, and if those who have made a report engage in a false accusation, they will be punished in a manner similar to informers. But if they should prove their revelations, they will not only escape punishment, but they will take a one-eighth share of the reported property. 7. Those who are accused, if the property in their possession or indeed their entire estate (ousia) should be worth less than 50 pounds of gold, shall offer sureties in accordance with its valuation. If it (the property's value) exceeds 50 pounds (of gold), they shall themselves provide sureties for up to 50 pounds, and then swear on the remaining amount, including in the oath that they or their procurators will be present at the trial and will not leave the trial involving the divine Privy Purse of the Emperor. 7a. But if after their oath they should be absent and, having been summoned three times with each summons occurring after a ten-day interval, there should be three declarations made against them, and if they, their procurators, or their advocates should still not appear, the Most Sacred Treasury shall enter upon their property, but the right of defense is maintained for those who are absent.

8. Εἰ δὲ τὰ προσαγγελθέντα πράγματα ἐν ἐπαρχίᾳ διάκεινται, καὶ ἢ ἀφ' ἑαυτοῦ κινούμενος ὁ τῆς ἐπαρχίας ἄρχων ἢ ἐκ προστάξεως τοῦ κόμητος τῶν ἰδικῶν τοῦ βασιλέως ἐξετάζει τὴν ὑπόθεσιν, μηδὲν ταραχῶδες μηδὲ βίαιον γινέσθω, ἀλλὰ τὰ μὲν δαπανήματα τῆς δίκης εἰς τὸ τρίτον μέρος τῶν ἐν τῇ βασιλίδι πόλει γινομένων παρεχέσθω. 9. Ἕκαστος δὲ προσαγγέλλων ἢ τῷ κόμητι τῶν θείων ἰδικῶν τοῦ βασιλέως ἢ τῇ σχολῇ τῶν παλατίνων ἢ τοῖς λαμπροτάτοις τοῦ δημοσίου συνηγόροις ἢ τοῖς λαμπροτάτοις ἄρχουσι τῶν ἐπαρχιῶν γινωσκέτω, ὡς, εἴτε ἐπιμείνας τῇ δίκῃ φανείη συκοφάντης εἴτε ἀποστῇ τῆς κατηγορίας καὶ ἀφανὴς γένοιτο, σύμμετρον μὲν ἔχων περιουσίαν καὶ μὴ δεδιὼς τὴν ἐν αὐτῇ τιμωρίαν καὶ πληγὰς βαρυτάτας ὑπομένει καὶ διηνεκῶς ἐξορίζεται· ἐὰν δὲ στρατείαν ἔχῃ ἢ σεμνὸν ἐπιτήδευμα ἢ περιουσίαν ἀρκοῦσαν, ἐκπίπτει καὶ τῆς στρατείας καὶ τῆς οὐσίας καὶ οὐδὲ τὴν βασιλίδα πόλιν οὐδὲ τὴν ἐπαρχίαν οἰκῆσαι συγχωρεῖται.

10. Παραφυλαττόντων τὸν νόμον τοῦ τε κόμητος τῶν ἰδικῶν τοῦ βασιλέως καὶ τῆς πειθομένης αὐτῷ σχολῆς, καὶ τοῦ παραβαίνοντος αὐτὸν ἐφ' ἑκάστῳ κεφαλαίῳ πεντήκοντα χρυσίου λίτρας πρόστιμον ἀπαιτουμένου. 11. Εἰ δὲ ἐν ἐπαρχίᾳ παραβαθείη τι τούτων, ἐφ' ἑκάστῃ αἰτίᾳ ἀνὰ τριάκοντα χρυσίου λιτρῶν καὶ οἱ τῶν ἐπαρχιῶν ἄρχοντες καὶ αἱ πειθόμεναι τάξεις αὐτοῖς ἀπαιτείσθωσαν. 12. Ἵνα δὲ τὰ τῶν προστίμων τούτων μὴ λανθάνῃ, ἔξεστι καὶ αὐτοῖς τοῖς ἠδικημένοις καταμηνύειν τὸν παραβάντα τὸν νόμον καὶ προσαγγέλλειν τῷ εὐσεβεστάτῳ βασιλεῖ ἢ τῷ ἐνδοξοτάτῳ μαγίστρῳ ἀζημίως, ἵνα ταῦτα δι' αὐτοῦ μανθάνων ὁ βασιλεὺς αὐτῷ τῷ μαγίστρῳ τὴν τῶν προστίμων εἴσπραξιν ἐπιτρέψῃ.

XII De Petitionibus Bonorum Sublatis

[1] Imppp. Gratianus Valentinianus et Theodosius AAA. Eutropio pp. pr. Quisquis in crimine maiestatis deprehensus fuerit et punitus bonaque eius, sicut plectendi consuetudo criminis habet, fiscus invaserit, nullus eadem sub spe munificentiae principalis audeat proprio iuri poscere. qui contra legem id ausus fuerit sperare, quod non licet, reus violatae legis habeatur. 1. Sed quoniam plerumque ita in nonnullis inverecunda petentium inhiatione constringimur, ut etiam non concedenda tribuamus, nec rescripto quidem nostro adversus formam latae legis loci aliquid relinquatur. 2. Si quid autem ex bonis talibus nostro

8. If the reported properties are situated in a province, and the provincial governor, either on his own accord or at the instruction of the Count of the Emperor's Privy Purse, examines the case, nothing must transpire in a disorderly or violent fashion, but the expenses for the trial shall be provided on a one-third proportion to ones that happen in the Imperial City. 9. And each person, announcing either to the Count of the Divine Privy Purse of the Emperor, to the Palatine Corps, or to the viri clarissimi Advocates of the Treasury or to the viri clarissimi governors of the provinces, shall know that if, when he persists in his case, he should appear guilty of false accusation, or if he should withdraw from the accusation and hide, if he has a modest patrimony and so does not fear a monetary punishment, he endures a most grievous scourging and is exiled immediately. If he should hold a service post (militia) or an honorable profession or sufficient wealth, he loses his service and his property and is not permitted to live either in the Imperial city or in the province.

10. The Count of the Emperor's Privy Purse and the Corps that obeys him will observe the law, and from the person who violates it 50 pounds of gold will be exacted as a fine on each occasion. 11. If any of these measures should be violated in a province, for each offense the provincial governors and the offices obeying them shall be fined 30 pounds of gold. 12. So that the details of the fines not escape anyone's notice, it is permitted also for those who have been wronged to report the person violating the law, and without fear of punishment to make this announcement to the Most August Emperor or to the Master (of Offices), vir illustris (endoxotatos), so that, upon learning these things through him, the Emperor might entrust the Master himself with the exaction of the fines.

Twelfth Title The Abolition of Petitions for (Escheated) Property

[1][38] Emperors Gratian, Valentinian, and Theodosius Augusti to Eutropius, Praetorian Prefect. pr. No one who has been caught in a crime of treason, (and who) has been punished and, as is customary in punishing a crime, has had the Treasury seize his property, should dare to ask for the same property back to be his own under the hope of imperial munificence. Whoever, contrary to the law, dares to hope for what is not permitted, shall be considered accused of violating the law. 1. But since We are commonly bound in some cases by the immoderate greed of people petitioning that We provide even things that cannot be conceded, no place should be left for Our rescript against the rule of a promulgated law. 2. If, however, We wish, in Our judgment, that iudicio, nullo tamen desiderante atque poscente, concedi cuiquam voluerimus, huiusmodi tantum valeat liberalitas.

[38] = C.Th. 10.10.15.

D. XVI k. Dec. Thessalonicae Gratiano V et Theodosio AA. conss.

[2] Impp. Theodosius et Valentinianus AA. Zoilo pp. pr. Omne semen alienas appetendi fortunas stirpitus eruere cupientes nulli deinceps volumus petitionis rerum esse licentiam, etsi intestatus quisquam quaeve ac nullis e numero propinquorum extantibus vel uxore vel marito fati munus impleverit et cuiuscumque sit condicionis aut sectae, seu quolibet titulo res fuerit fiscalis. 1. Nemo audeat ad petitionem rerum defuncti defunctaeve, cuiuscumque fortunae aut sectae sit, etsi fisco nostro locus pateat, adspirare, cum nec illis quidem, quorum actu atque officio petitionem procedebat effectus, impune liceat nostris sanctionibus adversari. 1a. Sed vir illustris quidem cuiuscumque temporis quaestor, si oblatae petitioni subscripserit vel etiam responsum dederit, virque illustris comes rerum privatarum, si vel instrui permiserit vel petitionem, si qua insinuatur, admiserit, indignationem nostri numinis sustinebunt, ceterisque fient vindictae temeritatis exemplum. 1b. Memoriales vero, qui excipienda eiusmodi rescripta vel implenda curaverint, et palatinos, qui instruxerint vel gesta admissae petitionis ediderint, bonorum proscriptione puniri decernimus. 2. Pari forma res etiam civiles et ad ius publicum pertinentes ab omni petitione muniendas esse censemus, scilicet nec pragmatica iussione vel sacra adnotatione vel quolibet oraculo divino seu mandatis, si qua contra hanc sanctionem nostram fuerint impetrata, quodcumque roboris habere valituris.

D. X k. Mai. Constantinopoli Theodosio A. XVIII et Albino conss.

XIII De His Qui Se Deferunt

[1] Imp. Constantinus A. rationalibus Hispaniarum. pr. Is, cuius tacite fidei commissa fuerit hereditas, statim officio gravitatis tuae nuntiet et gesta prodat et continuo quod actum fuerit renuntiet, et post someone receive a grant from such properties, when no one is desiring it and asking for it, only liberality of this sort shall be valid.

Given November 16, at Thessalonica, in the consulship of Gratian, for the fifth time, and Theodosius, Augusti (380).

[2][39] Emperors THEODOSIUS and VALENTINIAN Augusti to Zoilus, Praetorian Prefect. pr. Desiring to dig out by the roots every seed of seeking other people's fortunes, We wish henceforth that no one have the right (licentia) of petitioning for property, even if some man or woman fulfills the duty of fate (passes away) with no survivors from among the number of his or her relatives (propinqui) or a wife or a husband, whatever his or her condition or sect (secta, i.e., whether Catholic or heretic) might be, or if the property belongs to the Treasury under any title. 1. No one should dare to aspire to a petition for the property of a deceased man or woman, of whatever fortune or sect he or she might be, even if a place should be open for Our Treasury, since opposition to Our ordinances with impunity is not even permitted to those persons from whose action and office the effect of petitions would proceed. 1a. But the vir illustris Quaestor at any time, if he has signed a petition that has been offered or even given a response, and the vir illustris Count of the Privy Purse, if he has permitted a petition to be drawn up, or, if one should be introduced, has admitted it, will sustain the indignation of Our Divine Majesty, and to others they will be an example of temerity avenged. 1b. We determine that the record-keepers (memoriales) who have the responsibility to record and implement such rescripts, and the Palatines, who draw them up or publish the record (gesta) of an admitted petition, are to be punished with the proscription of their property. 2. We decree that civil matters too as well as ones pertaining to public law be protected from every petition, so that neither a pragmatic sanction (pragmatica iussio), nor an emperor's sacred response to a written petition (adnotatio), nor any divine imperial enactment (oraculum) or orders, if any have been obtained contrary to Our ordinance, will have any authority.

Given April 22, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Theodosius Augustus, for the eighteenth time, and Albinus (444).

Thirteenth Title Those Who Inform on Themselves

[1][40] Emperor CONSTANTINE Augustus to the Comptrollers of the Spains. pr. The person to whose tacit faith an inheritance was entrusted shall at once announce to the office of Your Eminence, reveal what has been done (gesta), [39] = Nov.Theod. 17.2, with slightly different wording.

[40] = C.Th. 10.11.1. On tacit fideicommissa, see C. 10.11.1.

hanc fidem tertiam ab omnibus defuncti bonis percipiat portionem. 1. Quod si ab uxore defuncti istud officio devotionis tuae fuerit revelatum, ipsa etiam, quam defunctus esse voluit heredem, si gesta aperuerit, tali praemio mancipetur, ut ex omni patrimonio medium consequatur et cum fisco nostro celebret divisionem, id etiam habitura privilegium, ut prior eligat portionem: et tunc occultator ille gestorum, fisci et mulieris pariter inimicus, exutus omni patrimonio suo ac fisco vindicato in insulam deportetur.

D. id. Mart. Gallicano et Basso conss.

XIIII Si Liberalitatis Imperialis Socius sine Herede Defecerit

[1] Imp. Constantius A. Orioni comiti rerum privatarum. Iubemus, ut, si quis forte ex his, quibus communiter a nobis aliquid donatum sit, nullo herede relicto decesserit, ad consortem potius solacium quam ad personam aliam pars perveniat decedentis.

D. xv k. Iul. Mediolani Philippo et Salia conss.

XV De Thesauris

[1] Impp. Leo et Zeno AA. Epinico consulari. pr. Nemo in posterum super requirendo in suo vel alieno loco thesauro vel super invento ab alio vel a se effusis precibus pietatis nostrae benignas aures audeat molestare. 1. Nam in suis quidem locis unicuique, dummodo sine sceleratis ac puniendis sacrificiis aut alia qualibet arte legibus odiosa, thesaurum (id est condita ab ignotis dominis tempore vetustiore mobilia) quaerere et invento uti liberam tribuimus facultatem, ne ulterius dei beneficium invidiosa calumnia persequatur, ut superfluum sit hoc precibus postulare, quod iam lege permissum est, et imperatoriae magnanimitatis videatur praevenire liberalitas postulanda. 2. In alienis vero terrulis nemo audeat invitis, immo nec volentibus vel ignorantibus dominis opes abditas suo nomine perscrutari. 3. Quod si nobis super hoc aliquis crediderit supplicandum aut praeter huius legis tenorem in alieno loco thesaurum and immediately renounce what has been enacted, and after this (display of) faith he shall receive a one-third portion of all the property of the deceased. 1. But if this has been revealed to the office of Your Devotion by the wife of the deceased, she herself, whom the deceased wanted to be heir, if she reveals what has been done, shall be redeemed by such an award that she gain half from the entire patrimony and share a division with Our Treasury, and she will also have this privilege, that she choose her portion first. And then the hider of the record (gesta), an enemy equally of the Treasury and the wife, shall be deported onto an island after being stripped of all his property, which is claimed by the Treasury.

Given March 15, in the consulship of Gallicanus and Bassus (317).

Fourteenth Title If a Partner in Imperial Generosity Dies Without an Heir

[1][41] Emperor CONSTANTIUS Augustus to Orion, Count of the Privy Purse. We order that, if any of those persons to whom We have given something as common property dies by chance without leaving an heir, the share of the decedent should pass to the partner (consors) as a solace rather than to another person.

Given June 17, at Milan, in the consulship of Philippus and Salia (348).

Fifteenth Title Treasure Troves

[1] Emperors LEO and ZENO Augusti to Epinicus, Consular (Governor).[42] pr. No one henceforth should dare to bother the kindly ears of Our Piety with effusive prayers about seeking a treasure trove (thesaurus) on his own or another's property, or about one found either by another or by himself. 1. For We grant the free right (facultas) to everyone, as long as it is done so without criminal and punishable sacrifices or some other art hateful to the laws, to find on his or her own property a treasure – that is, movable property hidden by unknown owners in an older time – and to use it when it is found, in order that invidious calumny no longer follow a benefit of God, it be unnecessary to request by prayers what has long been permitted by the law, and the generosity of imperial magnanimity be seen to anticipate what is to be requested. 2. But in other persons' plots no one should dare, against the owners' wills, let alone when they do not (positively) wish it or are unaware, to ferret out hidden wealth in his own name. 3. But if someone thinks to supplicate Us about this or searches out and finds a treasure in a place

[41] = C.Th. 10.14.2, with different wording. The constitution was probably issued by Constans (Projet Volterra).

[42] Krüger writes comiti sacrarum largitionum, "Count of Imperial Finances."

scrutatus invenerit, totum hoc locorum domino cedere compellatur et velut temerator legis saluberrimae puniatur. 4. Quod si forte vel arando vel alias terram alienam colendo vel quocumque casu, non studio perscrutandi, in alienis locis thesaurum invenerit, id quod repertum fuerit dimidia retenta altera data cum locorum domino partiatur. ita enim eveniet, ut unusquisque suis fruatur et non inhiet alienis.

D. VI id. Oct. Leone iuniore A. cons.

XVI De Annona et Tributis

[1] Αἱ σχολάζουσαι τὸ λοιπὸν ἀννόναι καὶ αἱ κεφαλιτιόναι τῷ δημοσίῳ διεκδικείσθωσαν καὶ μὴ διαιρείσθωσαν παρὰ τῶν ἀρχόντων ἑτέροις ἢ εἰς δημόσια ἔργα δίχα θείου τύπου καὶ τὴν δόσιν καὶ τὸν τρόπον τοῦ δαπανήματος διορίζοντος. ἀλλὰ μηδὲ ἐκ τοῦ δημοσίου κανόνος εἰς ἰδιωτικὸν ἢ δημόσιον ἔργον ὕλαι μεταφερέσθωσαν ἢ εἰς ἀγορασίαν ὑλῶν χρήματα διδόσθωσαν ἄνευ θείου τύπου. τοῦ παραβαίνοντος οἴκοθεν τὸ δημόσιον πληροῦντος, καὶ τοῦ προσφόρου σκρινίου βαρυτάτοις ἐπιτιμίοις ὑποκειμένου.

[2] Impp. Valerianus et Gallienus AA. et Valerianus C. Antiocho. Aes quidem alienum pro portionibus, ex qua quisque defuncto heres extitit, praestare oportet, annonas autem is solvere debet, qui possessiones tenet et fructus percipit.

PP. ... Saeculare et Donato conss.

[3] Imp. Decius A. Citicio. Indictiones non personis, sed rebus indici solent: et ideo, ne ultra modum earundem possessionum quas possides conveniaris, praeses provinciae prospiciet.

PP. XVII k. Nov. Aemiliano et Aquilino conss.

[4] Imp. Constantinus A. ad Proclianum. Omnes pensitare debebunt, quae manus nostrae delegationibus adscribuntur, nihil amplius exigendi. nam si quis vicarius aut rector provinciae aliquid iam cuiquam belonging to another in violation of the terms of this law, he shall be compelled to cede this whole thing to the owner of the place and be punished as a violator of a most advantageous law. 4. But if by chance he finds a treasure on property belonging to another by plowing or by otherwise cultivating another's land or by some chance, not out of a desire to search for it, he shall retain half of what is found and, giving away the other half, share (the treasure) with the owner of the property. Thus it will come about that each person enjoys his own things and does not gape longingly at those belonging to other people.

Given October 10, in the consulship of Leo the Younger, Augustus (474).

Sixteenth Title The Annona (Tax on Land)[43] and (Other) Taxes

[1][44] Unused food taxes (annonae) and personal assessments (capitatio) are henceforth to be claimed for the state and shall not be divided by the governors among other persons or assigned to public works without an imperial rescript (theios typos) that defines both the amount given and the type of expense. But wood is not to be transferred from the tax (canon) accruing to the Treasury for a public or private purpose, nor are funds for the purchase of wood to be given without a divine rescript. Anyone who violates this will compensate the Treasury from his private resources and the appropriate department will be subject to the gravest punishments.

[2] Emperors Valerian and Gallienus Augusti and Valerian Caesar to Antiochus. Each heir must pay (the decedent's) debts in proportion to the share he has inherited from the deceased, but the one who holds the properties (possessiones) and obtains the fruits should pay the land taxes.

Posted ... in the consulship of Saecularis and Donatus (260).

[3] Emperor Decius Augustus to Citicius. Indictions[45] are customarily imposed not on persons, but on property. Therefore the provincial governor will see to it that you are not sued beyond the amount assessed on the same properties (possessiones) that you possess.

Posted October 16, in the consulship of Aemilianus and Aquilinus (249).

[4][46] Emperor Constantine Augustus to Proclianus. All should pay the charges that are ascribed in the tax assessments (delegationes) made by Our hand, with nothing more to be exacted. For if any provincial Vicar or governor

[43] The annona was a tax in kind, beginning in the third century, but at times it could be commuted to cash.

[44] From Bas. 56.8.1. This passage should perhaps be restored at C 1.26.6; see the note there.

[45] For indictions, see Title 17 below.

[46] = C.Th. 11.1.1, a fuller version; Seeck attributes this constitution to Constantius and dates it to January 18, 360.

crediderit remittendum, quod aliis remiserit, de propriis dare facultatibus compelletur.

D. XV k. Iul. Constantino A. IIII et Licinio IIII conss.

[5] Imp. Constantius A. ad Uranium. Omnes omnino ad oblationem functionum publicarum oportet urgueri. lege enim nostra signatum est nec esse extraordinaria nec vocari, quae sollemniter a provincialibus devotissimis conferenda sunt.

D. III non. Febr. Constantio A. II et Constante conss.

[6] Impp. Valentinianus et Valens AA. ad Dracontium vicarium Africae. Pro locis ac proximitate possessionum annonam ad limitem transvehi praecipimus.

D. XV k. Iul. Mediolani Valentiniano et Valente AA. conss.

[7] Imppp. Gratianus Valentinianus et Theodosius AAA. ad Principium pp. In fraudem annonariae rei ac devotionis publicae elicitum damnabili subreptione rescriptum manifestum est vires non posse sortiri. circa omnes igitur par atque aequalis illationis forma teneat.[1]

D. VIII k. Oct. Aquileia Arcadio A. et Bautone conss.

[8] Imppp. Valentinianus Theodosius et Arcadius AAA. Cynegio pp. Nemo possessorum ad instruendas mansiones vel conferendas species longius delegetur, sed omnis itineris ac necessitatis habita ratione delegentur.

D. X k. Ian. Constantinopoli Arcadio A. et Bautone conss.

[9] Idem AAA. Cynegio pp. Mediterraneae civitates antea maritimis et maritimae mediterraneis onerabantur expensis, ut plus haberet dispendii believes that any remittance should be made to anyone, he will be compelled to pay out of his own resources what he has remitted to others.

[1] teneatur (C.Th.)

Given June 17, in the consulship of Constantine Augustus, for the fourth time, and Licinius, for the third time (315).

[5][47] Emperor CONSTANTIUS Augustus to Uranius. Everyone in every case must be pressed to the payment of public tax charges (functiones). For it has been set out by Our law that they (taxes) that are customarily to be paid by the most devoted provincials are not extraordinary charges and are not so called.

Given February 3, in the consulship of Constantius Augustus, for the second time, and Constans (339).

[6][48] Emperors VALENTINIAN and VALENS to Dracontius, Vicar of Africa. We instruct that the land tax (annona) be transported to the frontier in accordance with the locations and the proximity of properties (possessiones).

Given June 17, at Milan, in the consulship of Valentinian and Valens, Augusti (365).

[7][49] Emperors GRATIAN, VALENTINIAN, and THEODOSIUS Augusti to Principius, Praetorian Prefect. It is manifest that a rescript elicited by damnable trickery to defraud the collection of the land tax and the public devotion (i.e., the payment of taxes) cannot obtain any validity. Therefore the equal and fair rule for payment shall be maintained in connection with everyone.

Given September 24, at Aquileia, in the consulship of Arcadius Augustus and Bauto (385).

[8][50] Emperors VALENTINIAN, THEODOSIUS, and ARCADIUS Augusti to Cynegius, Praetorian Prefect. No landowner shall be assigned to build post stations (mansiones) or to deliver supplies (species) at too great a distance, but they are to be assigned with consideration taken of the entire journey and of necessity.

Given December 23, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Arcadius Augustus and Bauto (385).

[9][51] The same Augusti to Cynegius, Praetorian Prefect. Towns located inland were previously burdened with maritime expenses, and towns on the sea with [47] = C.Th. 11.1.5, with some changes in wording.

[48] = C.Th. 11.1.11; combine with C.Th. 11.1.10. Both date to May 17, which Seeck accepts.
[49] = C.Th. 1.2.9, 11.1.20.
[50] = C.Th. 11.1.21, which adds "with the exception of the supply for the border troops," and omits delegentur at the end of the sentence. Seeck dates to December 18, 385.
[51] = C.Th. 11.1.22.

translatio quam devotionis illatio. hoc non solum in praesens, verum etiam in posterum prohibemus ea lege, ut se ultimo noverint supplicio puniendos, qui ista commiserint.

D. III non. Sept. Valentiae Honorio np. et Euodio conss.

[10] Impp. Arcadius et Honorius AA. Minervio comiti rerum privatarum. Obsistere commodis publicis et statutis necessitatibus non possunt privilegia dignitatum. unde ut quisque praedii emolumenta consequitur, si non is evoluto anni spatio intra sex menses omnem cui esse constrictus dicitur reliquorum intulerit cumulum, ad ipsos qui sunt domini praedii exactionem volumus pertinere.

PP. Romae Honorio A. IIII et Eutychiano conss.

[11] Idem AA. Hadriano pp. Iudices, quos circa profliganda aerarii nostri compendia neglegentes ac desides fuisse constiterit, omnia quae in administratione positi perceperunt emolumenta reddere compellantur.

D. III k. Mart. Mediolani Vincentio et Fravito conss.

[12] Imp. Theodosius A. Isidoro pp. Illyrici. pr. Id ab unaquaque provincia censuimus expetendum, quod ab isdem nuper esse promissum tua sublimitas indicavit. 1. Ut nullus vero de cetero ad possessiones eorum (quod maxime formidant) inspector accedat, Macedonum reliqui exemplum secuti mediae quantitatis, ut obtulisse noscuntur, tributa suscipiant. 2. Sed Achivi, qui protestati sunt nihil a se ultra tertiam partem posse conferri, illud exsolvant, ad quod se indubitanter fore idoneos pollicentur. 3. Quae dispositio in perpetuum observabitur: sacrosancta Thessalonicensis ecclesia civitatis excepta, ita tamen, ut aperte sciat propriae tantummodo capitationis modum beneficio mei numinis inland ones, so that the transport had a greater expense than the payment of devotion (i.e., taxes). By this law We prohibit this not only for the present, but also for the future, so that those who commit such things know that they are to be punished with the ultimate penalty.

Given September 3, at Valentia, in the consulship of Honorius, Most Noble Boy, and Euodius (386).

[10][52] Emperors Arcadius and Honorius Augusti to Minervius, Count of the Privy Purse. Privileges of rank cannot stand in the way of public interests and established requirements. Thus as each person gains the emoluments of an estate (praedium), if, after the passage of a year, he has not within six months paid the entire total of the arrears to which he is said to be bound, We want the exaction to fall on the very people who are the owners of the estate.

Posted[53] at Rome, in the consulship of Honorius Augustus, for the fourth time, and Eutychianus (398).

[11][54] The same Augusti to Hadrian, Praetorian Prefect. Governors (iudices) who it is clear have been negligent and lazy in wasting the incomes (compendia) to Our Treasury shall be compelled to return all the emoluments that they have obtained while placed in administration.

Given February 27, at Milan, in the consulship of Vincentius and Fravitus (401).

[12][55] Emperor Theodosius Augustus to Isidorus, Praetorian Prefect of Illyricum. pr. We have decreed that what Your Sublimity has indicated has been recently promised by them should be sought from each and every province. 1. So that henceforth no inspector approach their properties (possessiones, to re-assess their tax liability) – which they especially fear – the remaining ones, following the example of the Macedonians, should undertake (to pay) taxes (tributa) at half the amount, as they are known to have offered. 2. But the Achaeans, who have protested that nothing can be paid by them beyond the third part (of what they nominally owe), should pay that amount, which they promise they without doubt will be capable of doing (idonei). 3. This disposition will be observed in perpetuity, with the exception of the sacrosanct Church of Thessalonica, under this condition, that it know clearly that only the amount of its own capitation tax may be relieved by the benefit of My Imperial [52] = C.Th. 11.1.25. Seeck dates to February 11, 398.

[53] C.Th. includes the phrase "posted in the proclamation of vir clarissimus Varus, Vicar of the City of Rome."
[54] Combine with C.Th. 1.10.6.
[55] = C.Th.11.1.33; par. 3 = C. 1.2.8. Seeck dates to October 10, 423.

sublevandum, nec externorum gravamine tributorum rem publicam ecclesiastici nominis abusione laedendam.

D. VI id. Oct. Constantinopoli Victore vc. cons.

[13] Αὐτοκράτωρ Ἀναστάσιος Α. Ἀνθεμίῳ ἐπάρχῳ τῶν πραιτωρίων. pr. Ἐὰν μὲν αἰτήσῃ ἐπαρχία ἢ πόλις κουφισμὸν λαβεῖν τυχικῆς συντελείας ἢ ἐπόπτην ἢ ἐξισωτὴν πεμφθῆναι, ἀναφερέσθω μὲν ἡ δέησις αὐτῶν εἰς βασιλέα, καὶ ἐξ ἐπιλογῆς αὐτοῦ ὁ ἐπιτήδειος πρὸς τοῦτο πεμπέσθω ὅρκον πρότερον διδούς. καὶ ἐάν τι μηνύσῃ οὗτος τοῖς ἐπάρχοις, μηδεὶς τύπος διδόσθω ἐπὶ τὴν μήνυσιν αὐτοῦ, εἰ μὴ αὐτοὶ οἱ ἔπαρχοι ἀναδιδάξωσι βασιλέα πάντα τὰ παρ᾽ αὐτοῦ ἀναδιδαχθέντα καὶ ζητηθέντα, καὶ οὕτως θεῖος ἐκφωνηθείη τύπος ὀφείλων πᾶσι τρόποις παραφυλάττεσθαι. ὁ δὲ καθεὶς ἄνθρωπος δεήσεις περὶ τοιούτων ἐννοιῶν μὴ ἐπιδιδότω· μήτε δὲ κουφισμὸς ἢ μείωσις διηνεκῶς ἢ προσκαίρως μήτε ἐποψία μήτε ἐξίσωσις γινέσθω χωρὶς βασιλικῆς ἐγγράφου κελεύσεως.

1. Ἀλλὰ μήτε ἐκταγὰς ποιείτωσαν οἱ ἔπαρχοι ὑπὲρ χρόνων προλαμβανόντων τὴν αὐτὴν ἀρχήν, μήτε σιτηρέσιά τισιν ἀφοριζέτωσαν ἢ ἄλλως πως χρήματα ἢ μὴ παρεχόμενα τὴν ἀρχήν, ἢ παρεχόμενα μέν, διὰ δὲ τὴν ἔλλειψιν τῶν ταῦτα κομιζομένων σωμάτων ἀργήσαντα ἢ διὰ τὸ παυθῆναι τὴν αἰτίαν σχολάσαι, δι᾽ ἣν παρείχοντο τὴν ἀρχήν· ἀλλὰ ταῦτα πάντα ἐκ βασιλικῆς μόνης αὐθεντίας γινέσθω κατὰ τὸν θεῖον ἔγγραφον τύπον. οἱ δὲ μὴ τοῦτο παραφυλάττοντες καὶ τὸ διδόμενον οἴκοθεν ἀποδιδότωσαν καὶ πᾶσαν ἄλλην ζημίαν, ἣν ἂν ὑποστῇ τὸ δημόσιον.

2. Μήτε δὲ ὑπερθέσεις ἢ προθεσμίας ἐπὶ τούτοις ὀφειλομένοις δημοσίοις ἐνδιδότω τις ἢ τὰς νενομισμένας προθεσμίας χωρὶς ἐγγράφου θείας κελεύσεως. ὁ δὲ τοῦτο κατὰ αὐθεντίαν οἰκείαν ποιῶν οἴκοθεν καταβαλλέτω τὰ κεχρεωστημένα τῷ δημοσίῳ.

3. Μήτε δὲ τὰ πολιτικὰ χρήματα, ὅσα ἢ τῷ δημοσίῳ εἰσφέρεται ἢ τοῖς πόλεσιν ἀφώρισται, εἰς ἑτέρας μεταφερέσθω χρείας ἢ προσώποις τισὶν ἀφοριζέσθω χωρὶς θείας κελεύσεως. 4. Καὶ ἡ τάξις δὲ τῶν ἐπάρχων, εἰ μὴ πάντα τὰ περιεχόμενα τῇ διατάξει ταῦτα παραφυλάξει καὶ διδάξει τοὺς

Majesty, and that the State must not be harmed by the weight of unrelated exemptions through misuse of the name of the Church.[56]

Given October 10, at Constantinople, in the consulship of vir clarissimus Victor (424).

[13][57] Emperor ANASTASIUS Augustus to Anthemius, Praetorian Prefect. pr. If a province or a city should request an abatement of its capitation tax or that an inspector or a tax adjuster be sent, their petition is to be brought to the Emperor, and upon his (the Emperor's) choice a suitable person be sent having previously taken an oath. And if this person should report something to the (Praetorian) Prefects, no rescript shall be given in response to his report, unless the Prefects themselves inform the Emperor of all that has been learned and investigated by him, and in this way an imperial rescript be shall be issued that is to be observed in every way. The person dispatched is not to present requests concerning such intentions. No lightening, reduction either immediately or temporarily, examination, or adjustment should take place without a written imperial command.

1. But the Prefects are not to make tax assignments for the times preceding their own office, nor are they to provide grain rations to anyone or funds in any other way, unless they were provided from the beginning, or, if provided, have been unused because of the failing of the persons that took them, or they have lost the reason for which they were originally given because they have been stopped. But all these things are to take place only through the Emperor's authority in accordance with a written imperial rescript. Those who do not observe this must pay back what has been given out from their own resources, as well as every other loss that has accrued to the Treasury.

2. No one should offer extensions or delays for what is owed to the Treasury, or those extensions established by law, without a written imperial order. The person who does this on his own authority must pay what is owed to the Treasury.

3. City funds, either those that are paid to the Treasury or have been reserved for the cities, must not be transferred to other needs or reserved for any persons without a divine order. 4. The office of the Prefects, if it does not observe all these things encompassed in this constitution and does not inform the Prefects, as well as the provincial governors and those bureaus obeying them, and the other public officials, if they should not obey such orders as these, must

[56] Blume, taking Gothofredus' emendation of lexamine for gravamina, translates as follows: "and that the state shall not be injured by the exemption of other property along with its own through the abuse of the ecclesiastical name."

[57] From Bas. 56.8.13; apparently combined with C. 10.19.9.

ἐπάρχους, καὶ οἱ ἄρχοντες τῶν ἐπαρχιῶν καὶ αἱ πειθόμεναι τάξεις αὐτοῖς καὶ οἱ λοιποὶ δημοσιεύοντες, εἰ[ii] ταῖς τοιαύταις κελεύσεσιν ὑπουργήσαιεν, οἴκοθεν διδότωσαν τὴν συμβαίνουσαν τῷ δημοσίῳ βλάβην καὶ ὡς τοῦ νόμου καταφρονήσαντες πεντήκοντα χρυσίου λίτρας προστιμάσθωσαν. 5. Τριμερῶς δὲ πάντα τὰ δημόσια εἰσφερέσθω, τά τε ἄλλα καὶ τὰ λεγόμενα Ἀρμενιακά, τουτέστι καλάνδαις Ἰανουαρίαις καὶ καλάνδαις Μαΐαις καὶ πρὸς τῷ τέλει τῆς ἐπινεμήσεως, ἐξ ἴσων τριῶν μερῶν διαιρουμένων τῶν δημοσίων, καὶ μηδεμιᾶς καινοτομίας ἐν τῷ μέσῳ γινομένης κατὰ τῶν συντελῶν.

6. Ἐπειδὴ δὲ τὰ Ἀρμενιακὰ τελέσματα ἐν δύο καταβολαῖς συνετελεῖτο, ἔξεστι τοῖς ταῦτα συντελοῦσιν, εἰ βούλονται, τὴν προτέραν συνήθειαν προτιμᾶν καὶ ἐν δύο καταβολαῖς ἀνὰ ἥμισυ καταβάλλειν, καὶ τὸ ἕτερον ἥμισυ ἐν τῷ Σεπτεμβρίῳ τῆς μελλούσης ἐπινεμήσεως καταβάλλειν. 7. Εἰ δὲ καὶ τριμερῶς βούλονται τὰ Ἀρμενιακὰ δημόσια καταβάλλειν, ἐχέτωσαν τὸν Σεπτέμβριον μῆνα τῆς μελλούσης ἐπινεμήσεως πρὸς ὑπέρθεσιν αὐτοῖς δεδομένον. 8. Τὸ δὲ προαπεσταλμένον κατὰ σύνθεσιν εἰσφερέσθω ἐν τῷ προνομίῳ ἑκάστης ἐπινεμήσεως, ἐπειδὴ τοῦτο δηλοῖ καὶ ἡ προσηγορία αὐτοῦ.

D. k. April. Paulo vc. cons.

XVII De Indictionibus

[1] Impp. Honorius et Theodosius AA. Palladio pp. pr. Omnes omnino quocumque titulo possidentes, quod delegatio superindicti nomine videtur amplexa, velut canonem cogantur inferre: et ne qua sit dubietas, hac aperta definitione decernimus, ut id potius canonis vocabulo postuletur. 1. Nulla igitur domus vel sacri patrimonii vel emphyteutici iuris vel hominum privatorum, etiamsi privilegium aliquod habere doceantur, ab hac necessitate seiuncta sit, quae iam non extraordinarium, ut hactenus, sed ipsis facientibus canonicum nomen accepit.

D. VII id. Ian. Ravennae Theodosio A. VII et Palladio conss.

[2] Impp. Theodosius et Valentinianus AA. Dario pp. Particulari delegationum notitia ante indictionis exordium singulis transmissa provinciis, collationis modum a possessoribus multo ante prospectum devotionis pay from their private resources the loss accruing to the Treasury, and in addition must be assessed a fine of 50 pounds of gold as ones who have scorned the law. 5. All the pubic taxes are to be paid in three installments, both the others and those called "Armenian," that is, January 1 and May 1, as well as at the end of the indiction,[58] with the public taxes divided into three equal parts, and no innovation will take place in the midst (of this process) for the taxpayers.

[ii] εἰ <μή>

6. Since the "Armenian" imposts were paid in two installments, it is permitted for those paying these, if they wish, to observe the previous custom and to pay (the charges) in two installments of one-half each ... [59] and to pay the other part in September at the beginning of the following indiction. 7. If they wish to pay the "Armenian" public charges in three parts, they are to consider the month of September of the ensuing indiction as given to them as an extension. 8. But the taxes previously assigned must be paid according to custom at the beginning of each indiction, since even its name shows this.

Given April 1, in the consulship of the vir clarissimus Paul (496).

Seventeenth Title Indictions[60]

[1][61] Emperors Honorius and Theodosius Augusti to Palladius, Praetorian Prefect. pr. Absolutely all those possessing (land) under any title should be compelled to pay, like a tax (canon), what the assessment (delegatio) is seen to have encompassed under the title of a an extraordinary charge (superindicti nomine); and, lest there be any doubt, We resolve by this clear definition that it should rather be demanded under the term "tax" (canon). 1. Therefore no household, whether belonging to the Sacred Patrimony, or under emphyteutic right,[62] or belonging to private persons, even if they should be shown to have some privilege, shall be severed from this necessity, which is no longer extraordinary (i.e., a special tax imposed on an ad hoc basis), as (it has been) up to now, but has taken the title of "tax" from those who pay it.

Given January 7, at Ravenna, in the consulship of Theodosius Augustus, for the seventh time, and Palladius (416).

[2][63] Emperors Theodosius and Valentinian Augusti to Darius, Praetorian Prefect. After transmitting the specific notification of the assessments (delegationes) to the individual provinces before the beginning of the indiction, not

[58] For indictions, see Title 17 below.
[59] A reference to the first payment has apparently fallen out of the text.
[60] In the third century, indictiones were occasional taxes imposed on agricultural land, but in the later Empire the term referred more generally to the land tax, which was revised in fifteen-year cycles.
[61] = C.Th. 11.5.2.
[62] On the emphyteutic right, see C. 4.66.
[63] = C.Th. 11.5.4; combine with C.Th. 11.1.37.

solitae, non subitis calumniis, tua sublimitas faciat imputari, ut et provincialibus subeundi dispendii necessitas auferatur et officiis ingerendi damna licentia denegetur.

D. v k. Sept. Apameae Isidoro et Senatore conss.

XVIII De Superindicto

[1] Imppp. Gratianus Valentinianus et Theodosius AAA. ad proconsules vicarios omnesque rectores. Nihil superindictorum nomine ad solas praefecturae litteras quisquam provincialis exsolvat, neque ullius omnino indictionis titulus etiam sollemnis immineat, nisi eum nostro confirmata iudicio et imperialibus nexa praeceptis sedis amplissimae deposcat indictio et cogat exactio.

D. vii k. Iun. Mediolani Antonio et Syagrio conss.

XVIIII De Exactionibus Tributorum

[1] Imp. Constantinus A. ad Aelianum proconsulem Africae. Ducenarii et centenarii sive sexagenarii non prius debent aliquem ex debitoribus convenire, quam a tabulario civitatis nominatim breves accipiant debitorum. quam quidem exactionem sine omni fieri concussione oportet.

D. k. Nov. Treviris Constantino A. iiii et Licinio iiii conss.

[2] Idem A. ad populum. pr. Nemo carcerem plumbatarumque verbera aut pondera aliaque ab insolentia iudicum reperta supplicia in debitorum solutionibus vel a perversis vel ab iratis iudicibus expavescat. carcer poenalium, carcer hominum noxiorum est: officialium et cum denotatione eorum iudicum, quorum de officio coercitiores esse debebunt, with sudden chicanery (subitis calumniis), Your Sublimity will see to it that the amount of the tax-payment (collatio) be reckoned as the one long before foreseen by the possessors as their customary devotion (devotio, i.e., tax payment), so that the necessity of undergoing an expense be removed from the provincials and permission be denied to the bureaus to inflict losses.

Given August 28, at Apamea, in the consulship of Isidorus and Senator (436).

Eighteenth Title Extraordinary Charges

[1][64] Emperors GRATIAN, VALENTINIAN, and THEODOSIUS Augusti to the Proconsuls, Vicars, and all governors. No provincial is to pay anything as an extraordinary charge in response to letters of the (Praetorian) Prefecture, nor shall even the customary proclamation of any tax liability whatsoever (ullius omnino indictionis titulus) threaten, unless an indiction from the highest seat (of government), confirmed by Our judgment and bound with Imperial orders, should demand it and its enforcement should compel it.

Given May 26, at Milan, in the consulship of Antonius and Syagrius (382).

Nineteenth Title Tax Collecting

[1][65] Emperor CONSTANTINE to Aelianus, Proconsul of Africa. Procurators with a salary of 200,000 sesterces, 100,000 sesterces, or 60,000 sesterces[66] should not sue a (tax) debtor before they expressly receive the lists (breves) from the tax official (tabularius) of the city. This exaction must proceed without any extortion.

Given November 1, at Trier, in the consulship of Constantine Augustus, for the fourth time, and Licinius, for the fourth time (315).[67]

[2][68] The same Augustus to the people. pr. No one should be terrified by prison or the lashes or weights of leaded whips or any other punishments devised by the insolence of judges, whether they are bribed (perversis) or wrathful, for the payment of (tax) debts. The jail is for those found guilty, for people who are harmful; it is also for officials and, with a censure, for those judges, from whose office those persons, when they have allowed something contrary to this law, [64] = C.Th. 11.6.1. Seeck gives December 26, 382.

[65] = C.Th. 11.7.1; combine with C. 2.8.3, 12.61.1; C.Th. 1.12.1, 9.34.2, 11.1.2.

[66] The salaries designated the ranks of procurators of equestrian rank in the early Empire; as Blume points out, in the fourth century the titles refer to Imperial officials called agentes in rebus, couriers: C. 12.20.

[67] The other versions of this law have other dates; Krüger, based on C. 1.12.1, 12.61.1, suggests: "in the consulship of Constantine Augustus, for the third time, and Licinius, for the third time (313), received February 15, at Carthage." Likelier is November 1, 314 (Projet Volterra), but Seeck had November 8, 313.

[68] = C.Th. 11.7.3; combine with C. 8.34.3, 8.57.1; C.Th. 4.11.3(?). Seeck gives January 31, 320.

qui contra hanc legem admiserint. 1. Securi iuxta praesidem transeant solutores: vel certe, si quis tam alienus ab humano sensu est, ut hac indulgentia ad contumaciam abutatur, contineatur aperta et libera et in usum hominum instituta custodia militari. 2. Si in obdurata nequitia permanebit, ad res eius omnemque substantiam eius exactor accedat solutionis obsequio cum substantiae proprietate suscepto. qua facultate praebita omnes fore credimus proniores ad solvenda ea, quae ad nostri usus exercitus pro communi salute poscuntur.

D. k. Febr. Constantino A. VI et Constantino C. conss.

[3] Imp. Constantius A. Nemesiano comiti largitionum. Quotiens quis et privati debitor invenitur et fisci, et abreptus ab uno officio teneatur, ad universi debiti solutionem qui eum abstulit coartetur ac totius summae exactionem in se suscipiat, qui eundem avellendum subtrahendumque crediderit.

D. IIII id. Mai. Nizibi Amantio et Albino conss.

[4] Idem A. ad Eustathium pp. Actores ceterique rei privatae nostrae ad solutionem specierum sollemnium debiti vigoris auctoritate cogantur, ne provinciales rei privatae nostrae fatiget immunitas.

D. VIII id. Mart. pp. Romae Limenio et Catullino conss.

[5] Imppp. Theodosius Arcadius et Honorius AAA. Rufino pp. Apparitores, quicumque in collatione auri praecepti fuerint officii sui adhibere servitium, titulorum debita et collationum summas relationis suae fide et adnotatione praescribant, sitque ex officialis instructione officium conscium, quid exactum quidve perlatum esse videatur, ne ought to be subject to greater punishment.[69] 1. The payers should pass before the governor in security; or certainly, if someone is so removed from human sensibility that he abuses this indulgence to persist in stubbornness (i.e., by refusing to pay taxes owed), he should be confined by a military watch that is open and free and established for the use of people. 2. If he persists in his obdurate wickedness, the collector shall approach his goods and all his property, with the duty to pay assumed along with ownership of his property. With this opportunity provided We believe that everyone will be readier to pay what is asked for the uses of Our army for the common safety.

Given February 1, in the consulship of Constantine Augustus, for the sixth time, and Constantine Caesar (320).

[3][70] Emperor Constantius Augustus to Nemesianus, Count of Imperial Finances. Whenever someone is found to be a debtor of both the Privy Purse (privati) and the Treasury, should he also be dragged off and held by one office, the one (official) who has taken him away shall be bound to the payment of the entire debt, and anyone who believes that the same person should be pulled away and withdrawn (from this custody) shall take upon himself the exaction of the whole amount.[71]

Given May 12, at Nisibis, in the consulship of Amantius and Albinus (345).

[4][72] The same Augustus to Eustathius, Praetorian Prefect. Managers and other personnel of Our Privy Purse shall be compelled by the authority of the law (vigor) to pay what is owed for customary supplies, lest the immunity of Our Privy Purse wear out the provincials.

Given March 8, posted at Rome, in the consulship of Limenius and Catullinus (349).

[5][73] Emperors Theodosius, Arcadius, and Honorius Augusti to Rufinus, Praetorian Prefect. Subordinate officials, whichever ones have been instructed to provide the service of their office in collecting gold, shall list the debts of the accounts (tituli) and the sums of the payments with the fidelity and annotation (adnotatio) of their report, and, on the basis of the instruction by the official. the office should be aware of what is seen to have been exacted or carried over,

[69] Following Mommsen's emendation of coercitores.
[70] = C.Th. 11.7.5.
[71] Blume: "This law … shows that delinquent taxpayers could be arrested and kept in custody. In order to facilitate the collection of debts due to the government, whether owing to the Privy Purse or to the fisc, and to make it more certain that the whole debt should be collected, it was made the duty of the official who arrested the debtor to hold him until the whole debt was paid; in fact such official was made responsible for the whole debt. This method avoided conflict between the officials of the fisc and those of the Privy Purse."
[72] = C.Th. 11.7.6; combine with C.Th. 2.1.1.
[73] = C.Th. 11.7.14; combine with C. 10.32.43.

longinqui itineris diversitate susceptor abductus et curiae suae desit et rei familiaris detrimenta sustineat.

D. prid. id. April. Constantinopoli Theodosio A. III et Abundantio conss.

[6] Impp. Arcadius et Honorius AA. Theodoro pp. In fiscalibus debitis, hoc est annonariis ceterisque titulis, qui ad arcam eminentissimae pertinent praefecturae, nec non in iis debitis, quae rationalis usurpat officium, rectores provinciarum constringantur et eos necessitas maneat exigendi, a quibus expectatur auctoritas.

D. VIII k. Iun. Mediolani Honorio A. IIII et Eutychiano conss.

[7] Idem AA. Hadriano pp. pr. Missi opinatores cum delegatoriis iudicibus eorumque officiis insistant, ut intra anni metas id quod debetur accipiant: nihil his sit cum possessore commune, cui non militem, sed exactorem, si sit obnoxius, convenit imminere. 1. Iudices itaque, qui provinciales passi fuerint opinatoribus delegari, eiusdem quantitatis duplex poena retinebit: et apparitores ex quolibet officio sententiam deportationis excipient, si per semet exigendos voluerint delegare militibus: et curiales temporale manebit exilium, si eos quos sollemniter exigere consuerunt opinatoribus putaverint esse tradendos, cum iudicem oporteat inquirere debitores, tabularios fideliter providere nomina debitorum, apparitores sive curiales consuetudine servata regionum convictis debitoribus imminere: ut perceptis congruis emolumentis opinatores impleto anno ad proprios numeros valeant remeare.

2. Qui si ultra annum protracti fuerint, iudices et officia absque ulla mora de proprio cogantur exsolvere militibus quod debetur, ipsis adversus obnoxios repetitione servata. 3. Quod si ad nos aliqua de retentis opinatoribus querella pervenerit, in duplum ab his lest the collector (susceptor), drawn away by the diversion of a long journey, be absent from his own (city) council and sustain harm to his property.

Given April 12, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Theodosius Augustus, for the third time, and Abundantius (393).

[6][74] Emperors ARCADIUS and HONORIUS Augusti to Theodorus, Praetorian Prefect. In debts to the Treasury, that is, for the taxes in kind (annonariis titulis) and other categories that belong to the Treasury (arca) of the Most Eminent Prefecture, as well as in those debts that the office of the Comptroller claims, the provincial governors shall be bound (to exact them) and the necessity to do so shall await them, from whom authority is expected.

Given May 25, at Milan, in the consulship of Honorius Augustus, for the fourth time, and Eutychianus (398).

[7][75] The same Augusti to Hadrian, Praetorian Prefect. pr. Military tax assessors[76] (opinatores), having been sent with tax judges (delegatorii iudices) and their offices, should insist that they receive what is owed within a year; they should have nothing in common with a landowner (possessor), who, if he is delinquent, is fittingly pressed not by a soldier, but by a civil collector. 1. And a double penalty for the same amount will restrain the governors (iudices) who have allowed the provincials to be assigned to the military tax assessors. Subordinate officials (apparitores) from any office will receive a sentence of deportation if on their own initiative they willingly assign to soldiers the people to be pressed for payment. Temporary exile will await decurions, if they think that the people from whom they customarily have exacted taxes are to be turned over to the military tax assessors, since the governor is supposed to inquire about the debtors, and the tax officials (tabularii) must faithfully provide the names of the debtors, while the subordinate officials or the decurions, maintaining the custom of the regions, should press convicted debtors for payment, so that, when they have gained appropriate emoluments, the military tax assessors at year's end might be able to return to their own units.

2. If they are delayed beyond a year, the governors and the offices shall be compelled without any delay to pay the soldiers what is owed out of their own resources, while maintaining for themselves the right to seek this back from those liable. 3. But if any complaint comes to Us concerning military tax assessors who have been held back, a double amount shall be exacted right away from them (the governors and their staffs) so that the soldiers receive the part [74] Combine with C.Th. 2.1.11; see also C. 11.74.1; C.Th. 1.11.2, both addressed to Firminus, Count of Imperial Finances. These constitutions date to May 24.

[75] = C.Th. 11.7.16.

[76] This is Krüger's interpretation of the term opinator.

protinus exigetur, ut partem debitam miles, reliquum fiscus accipiat. 4. Iudicibus quoque eorumque officiis eatenus subvenimus, ut in contumaces debitores cuiuslibet dignitatis auctoritatem suam exserant ac, si impudenter solutio differatur, actores procuratores eorumque praedia persequantur, de eorum quoque nominibus ad nostram scientiam relaturi.

D. III id. Iul. Mediolani Vincentio et Fravito conss.

[8] Impp. Leo et Anthemius AA. Nicostrato pp. Si divina domus aut quilibet cuiuscumque dignitatis atque fortunae re vera fundos extra metrocomias non patrocinii gratia, sed emptionis iure vel quolibet alio titulo legitimo possederit et non impositas rei publicae functiones agnoverit, quemadmodum prior dominus dependebat, omnibus modis possessiones eorum publico vindicentur et curiae eiusdem civitatis sub qua vici siti sunt adsignentur, ut publicis commoditatibus circa tributarias functiones undique nostra provisione videatur esse consultum.

D. k. Sept. Anthemio A. II cons.

[9] Αὐτοκράτωρ Ἀναστάσιος Α. Ἀνθεμίῳ ἐπάρχῳ τῶν πραιτωρίων. pr. Ἵνα μὴ πολλῶν ἀπαιτούντων τὰ δημόσια καὶ οἱ συντελεῖς βλάπτωνται καὶ αὐτὸς ὁ δημόσιος λόγος, εἷς μόνος κανονικάριος εἰς ἑκάστην ἐπαρχίαν ἐκ τοῦ προσφόρου πεμπέσθω σκρινίου, ὀφείλων κατεπείγειν τὴν ἐξάνυσιν τῶν κεχρεωστημένων τίτλων τῷ ἰδίῳ σκρινίῳ. 1. Ἐξπελευστὴς μέντοι μὴ πεμπέσθω, εἰ μὴ μετὰ παραδρομὴν τῆς ὡρισμένης προθεσμίας καὶ ἑτέρου μηνός. τούτου δὲ τοῦ χρόνου διατρέχοντος πεμπέσθω ὁ ἐξπελευστής, προστιμωμένου καὶ τοῦ ἄρχοντος καὶ τῆς τάξεως αὐτοῦ καὶ τοῦ κανονικαρίου πρὸς τὸν οἶκον τῶν μὴ ἀπαιτηθέντων χρημάτων καὶ πρὸς τὴν τῆς ῥᾳθυμίας ποσότητα, ὥστε τὸν αὐτὸν ἐξπελευστὴν καὶ τὰ λοιπαζόμενα δημόσια καὶ τὸ πρόστιμον μεθοδεύειν. 2. Μόνῳ δὲ τῷ ἄρχοντι καὶ τῇ τάξει καὶ τῷ κανονικαρίῳ ὁ ἐξπελευστὴς ἐπικείσθω, ἀφοριζομένης αὐτῷ παραμυθίας καὶ πρὸς τὴν ἐπαρχίαν τὴν χρεωστοῦσαν καὶ πρὸς τὰ διαστήματα. τὴν δὲ παραμυθίαν ταύτην ὁ ἄρχων ἐπιγινωσκέτω καὶ ἡ τάξις αὐτοῦ καὶ ὁ κανονικάριος ὡς αἴτιοι γενόμενοι τοῦ πεμφθῆναι τὸν ἐξπελευστήν.

owed, and the Treasury the rest. 4. We provide help to governors and their offices to this extent, that they avail themselves of their authority against stiff-necked debtors of any rank, and, if payment should impudently be delayed, that they should pursue their managers, procurators, and their properties, and bring a report concerning their names to Our knowledge.

Given July 13, at Milan, in the consulship of Vincentius and Fravitus (401).

[8][77] Emperors LEO and ANTHEMIUS Augusti to Nicostratus, Praetorian Prefect. If the Divine Household or anyone of any rank and fortune has genuinely possessed farms outside of chief villages (metrocomiae), not for the sake of legal representation (patrocinium), but under right of purchase or any other lawful title, but has not acknowledged the payments (functiones) imposed on the municipality in the way that the previous owner paid them, their possessions are to be claimed in all ways for the public and shall be assigned to the council of the same town in which the districts (vici) are situated, so that by Our forethought consultation be seen to have been made for the public interests in connection with tax payments.

Given September 1, in the consulship of Anthemius Augustus, for the second time (468).

[9][78] Emperor ANASTASIUS Augustus to Anthemius, Praetorian Prefect. pr. So that the taxpayers and the Public Treasury itself not be harmed by the multitude of those exacting public taxes, one tax collector (canonicarius) alone is to be sent to each province from the appropriate bureau, with the obligation to exact the payment of the accounts (tituli) owed to his own bureau. 1. An enforcer is not to be sent except after the completion of the defined extension and an additional month; when this time is completed, the enforcer shall be sent, with the governor and his office as well as the tax collector being fined in accordance with the amount (?) of money not exacted and with the degree of their negligence, so that the same enforcer exact both the arrears to the public treasury as well as the fine. 2. The enforcer shall only press the governor, the office, and the tax collector for the expenses allotted to him commensurate with both the province that owes and its distance. The governor, along with his office and the tax collector, are to acknowledge the expenses, since they are responsible for the tax enforcer's being dispatched.

[77] From Bas. 56.8.23; combine with C. 11.54.1, 11.56.1.

[78] From Bas. 56.8.24. There are apparently two Greek constitutions of the Emperor Anastasius addressed to the Praetorian Prefect Anthemius, and their subscriptions may have been confused with the subscription of this constitution. Krüger emends the addressee to Euphemius, Praetorian Prefect, and restores the date as March 31, based on C. 10.16.13, with which the present constitution should perhaps be combined. In 1, possibly ὄγκον for οἶκον (mommsen).

3. Ἐξπελευστὴς δὲ ἕτερος μηδέποτε πεμπέσθω μηδὲ ἄλλος τις μετὰ τὸν ἐξπελευστήν. ἐὰν δὲ νομίσωσιν οἱ ἔπαρχοι χρειῶδες εἶναι τὸ καὶ ἕτερον ἐκπέμψαι μετὰ τὸν ἐξπελευστήν, τὰ αὐτὰ καὶ ἐπὶ τούτῳ κρατείτω, καὶ τὴν ὁριζομένην αὐτῷ παραμυθίαν ὁ αἴτιος τοῦ πεμφθῆναι αὐτὸν παρεχέτω, τουτέστιν ὁ τῆς ἐπαρχίας ἄρχων καὶ ἡ τάξις αὐτοῦ καὶ ὁ κανονικάριος καὶ ὁ ἐξπελευστής. 4. Ἡ γὰρ ἀφορισθεῖσα τῷ κανονικαρίῳ παραμυθία πᾶσι τοῖς μετ᾽ αὐτὸν πεμπομένοις ἀπαιτηταῖς ἀρκεῖ, καὶ μηδὲν περαιτέρω μήτε τὰ συστήματα τῶν πόλεων μήτε οἱ συντελεῖς ἀναπείσθωσαν, εἰ καὶ πλείονες πρὸς ἀπαίτησιν ἐκπεμφθείησαν, προστιμωμένων ἑκάστοτε πάντων τῶν ἐκπεμπομένων καὶ μὴ ἀνυόντων τὰ δημόσια. 5. Καὶ ὅσαι δὲ γίνονται ἐκταγαί, τῷ κανονικαρίῳ πεμπέσθωσαν, ὥστε δι᾽ αὐτοῦ καὶ ταύτας ἀνύεσθαι, μὴ αὐξάνεσθαι δὲ διὰ τοῦτο τὴν ἀφωρισμένην αὐτῷ παραμυθίαν. 6. Ἐνδοματικὰ δὲ μηδεὶς λαμβανέτω, ἀλλὰ καὶ αὐτὸ τὸ ὄνομα παντελῶς ἀπαλειφέσθω. 7. Εἰ δὲ κατά τι παραβαθείη τὰ νομοθετηθέντα, πεντήκοντα χρυσίου λιτραὶ ἐπιτίμιον ἔστω καὶ κατὰ τῆς τάξεως τῶν ἐπάρχων καὶ κατὰ τῶν ἀρχόντων τῶν ἐπαρχιῶν καὶ τῶν τάξεων αὐτῶν καὶ κατὰ τῶν λοιπῶν τῶν δημοσιευόντων προσώπων.

D. XII k. Aug. Paulo vc. cons.

[10] [Ὁ αὐτὸς βασιλεύς.] ... Θεσπίζομεν ... Περὶ τῶν προσφευγόντων ταξεωτῶν ἢ πολιτευομένων, ὅπως δεῖ αὐτοὺς ἀπαιτεῖσθαι τὰς δημοσίους εἰσφοράς, φησὶν ἡ διάταξις παρακελευσαμένη μηδένα καταβάλλειν ἐπ᾽ αὐτοὺς τὰς συντελείας, εἰ μὴ δημοσιεύσωσιν. ἐπὶ γὰρ τοὺς προσφεύγοντας ἢ ἄλλως κρύπτοντας ἑαυτοὺς οὐδεμίαν βούλεται γίνεσθαι παρὰ τῶν συντελεστῶν ἐπ᾽ αὐτοὺς καταβολήν.

D. prid. k. April. Iohanne et Paulino conss.

XX De Superexactionibus

[1] Impp. Arcadius et Honorius AA. Apollodoro proconsuli Africae. pr. Quidquid ultra debitum elicitum fuerit a curialibus vel cohortalibus vel aliis exactoribus, in duplum eruatur, quod provincialibus restitui protinus oportebit. 1. Si quis autem exactorum in superexactionis crimen

3. Another tax enforcer is never to be sent out nor anyone else after the enforcer. If the prefects should deem that it is necessary that another person be sent out after the enforcer, he shall enjoy the same arrangements in this circumstance, and the person responsible for his being sent out must provide the established expenses, that is, the governor of the province, his office, and the tax collector, as well as the (first) enforcer. 4. The expenses established for the tax collector suffice for all the exactors sent out after him, and nothing further is to be demanded whether from the guilds (systemata, corpora) of the cities or from their taxpayers, even if several people have been sent out to exact tax arrears, since each time all the people are fined who are sent out and do not expedite the public taxes. 5. And as many tax assessments take place, they shall be sent out to the tax collector, so that through him these matters be expedited and that, as a result of this, the allotted expenses not be increased for him. 6. No one shall take housing expenses; rather, this category is to be completely abandoned. 7. But if in any way these enactments should be violated, there is to be a fine of 50 pounds of gold both for the offices of the prefects and for the governors of the provinces and their offices, as well as the remaining persons in public service.

Given July 21, in the consulship of the vir clarissimus Paul (496).

[10][79] The same emperor ... We ordain ... The constitution addresses subordinate officials (taxeonton; cohortales or apparitores) and officials (politeuomenon) who are in flight, that they must be pressed for the payment of public taxes, ordering that no one make payments to them unless they should be performing a public function. It does not want any payment to be made by the taxpayers to those who have fled or are otherwise in hiding.

Given March 31, in the consulship of John and Paulinus (498).

Twentieth Title Excessive Exactions

[1][80] Emperors Arcadius and Honorius Augusti to Apollodorus, Proconsul of Africa. pr. Whatever has been elicited by decurions or their subordinate officials (cohortales) or other tax collectors beyond what is owed must be rooted out in twice the amount, and this will have to be restored to the provincials immediately. 1.[81] If, however, any tax collector has been convicted on a charge

[79] Krüger restores the address on the basis of the subscription. For the date, see the preceding note. Blume: "The apparitors of the governor of a province were known as cohortalini or cohortales, originally a military term, meaning members of a cohort. The apparitors here mentioned were members of the official staff of an officer of higher rank than the governor."

[80] = C.Th. 11.8.2, with briefer wording.

[81] Section 1 = C.Th. 11.8.1, dated to March 6, 397.

fuerit confutatus, capitali periculo cupiditas eius amovenda atque prohibenda est, si in isdem sceleribus perseveret.

D. prid. id. Mart. Mediolani Stilichone et Aureliano conss.

XXI De Capiendis et Distrahendis Pignoribus Tributorum Causa

[1] Imp. Constantinus A. ad Afros. Res eorum, qui fiscalibus debitis per contumaciam satisfacere differunt, distrahantur: comparatoribus data firmitate perpetua possidendi.

D. XV k. Iun. Serdicae Constantio et Maximo conss.

[2] Idem A. Restituto praesidi Sardiniae. Satis sit debitorem annonarum ad solvendi necessitatem capione pignorum conveniri.

D. VIII id. Dec. Thessalonicae Constantio VI et Constante III AA. conss.

XXII De Apochis Publicis et Descriptionibus Curialium

[1] Impp. Honorius et Theodosius AA. Anthemio pp. pr. Ad inferiorum curialium relevandas fortunas et impressionem potentium itidem curialium cohibendam placuit, ut descriptiones, si quae per singulos ordines cogentibus diversis negotiis agitantur, non sumant ante principium, quam apud acta provinciarum rectoribus intimentur et ex eorum fuerint receptae sententiis. 1. Sed et aurum, quod ex huiusmodi contributione redigitur, ita debet susceptori aurario consignari, ut securitatibus nomen inferentis, dies consul mensis causa et summa comprehendatur, quo et descriptionis aequitas illustretur et descriptus of making an excessive exaction, his greed is to be removed and prevented by the risk of capital punishment if he should persevere in the same crimes.

Given March 14, at Milan, in the consulship of Stilicho and Aurelianus (400).

Twenty-First Title Seizing and Selling Pledges on Account of Taxes

[1][82] Emperor CONSTANTINE Augustus to the Africans. The property of those people who put off satisfying their debts to the Treasury out of contumacy shall be sold, with the purchasers given perpetual security of possession.

Given May 18, at Serdica, in the consulship of Constantius and Maximus (327).

[2][83] The same Augustus to Restitutus, Governor of Sardinia. It should be enough that a debtor for land taxes (annonarum causa) be pressed by the seizure of his pledges in order to compel payment.

Given December 6, at Thessalonica, in the consulship of Constantius, for the sixth time, and Constans, for the third time, Augusti.

Twenty-Second Title Public Receipts (Apochae) and Tax Assessments of Decurions

[1][84] Emperors HONORIUS and THEODOSIUS Augusti to Anthemius, Praetorian Prefect. pr. To relieve the fortunes of the lower decurions and at the same time to restrain the aggression of the powerful ones, it has been decided that tax assessments, if they are conducted among individual orders as diverse business compels, shall not take their beginning before they are entered into the records for the provincial governors and have been received with their verdicts (sententiae).[85] 1. But the gold that is exacted from a contribution of this type should be signed over to the gold collector (susceptor aurarius) in such a way that the name of the contributor is included in the receipts (securitates), as well as the day, the consul, the month, the reason, and the amount, so that the fairness of the assessment be made clear and the person assessed be protected by [82] = C.Th. 11.7.4, with different wording. Seeck dates to May 18, 328.

[83] = C.Th. 11.7.7, the address of which reads: "Emperors Constantius and Constans Augusti to Bibulenius Restitutus, Governor of Sardinia." The consular date is erroneous. Krüger suggests 320 as a possible date, which would mean that the attribution of the law to Constantius and Constans is also wrong. The preferred date is June 12, 346 (Projet Volterra); Seeck argued for 337.
[84] = C.Th. 12.1.173, with somewhat different wording. Seeck dates to August 26, 409.
[85] C.Th 12.1.173 has "have been affirmed with their authority."

documentis evidentibus fulciatur. 2. Hoc etiam observando, ut in quadrimenstruis quoque brevibus, qui ad excellentiae tuae officium sollemniter diriguntur, celebratae descriptionis dispunctio societur, ut omnes vestrae potestatis scientiam formidantes nihil ad relevationem locupletum atque inopum perniciem audeant pertemptare. 3. Quod et tunc optimum est custodiri, cum lucrativae facultates ex bonis curialium curiae obvenerint, ut et inopes et locupletes fructu provisionis simillimae potiantur. 4. Quam dispositionem si quis iudicum numerariorum vel curialium mutilandam esse crediderit, interminationi quam vestra sedes statuerit subiacebit.

D. VII k. Sept. Constantinopoli Varane cons.

[2] Impp. Theodosius et Valentinianus AA. Celeri proconsuli Africae. Semel securitatem de refusione munerum emissam ab alio iudice non liceat refricari. et ideo spectabilitas tua saluberrimae ac iustissimae praeceptionis formam secuta prohibebit in posterum eos ad discussionem transacti muneris constringi, quos claruit accepta securitatis prosperitate laetari.

D. V k. Mai. Ravennae post consulatum Felicis et Tauri vv. cc.

[3] Imp. Marcianus A. Constantino pp. Quicumque de provincialibus et collatoribus decurso posthac quantolibet annorum numero, cum probatio aliqua ab eo tributariae solutionis exposcitur, trium cohaerentium sibi annorum apochas securitatesque protulerit, superiorum temporum apochas non cogatur ostendere, neque de praeterito ad illationem functionis tributariae coartetur, nisi forte aut curialis aut quicumque apparitor vel optio vel actuarius vel quilibet publici debiti exactor sive compulsor possessorum vel collatorum habuerit cautionem, aut id quod deposcit deberi sibi manifesta gestorum adsertione patefecerit.

D. XV k. Aug. Varane et Iohanne conss.

[4] Ὁ μὴ προσθέμενος ταῖς ἀποχαῖς τὸ τῶν ἰουγῶν ποσὸν κʹ λίτρας χρυσίου προστιμᾶται.

transparent documents. 2. This too is to be observed, that in the four-monthly reports that are customarily directed to Your Excellency's office, an itemization of the aforementioned assessment be included, so that no one, fearing the knowledge of Your power, should dare to attempt anything for the relief of the wealthy and the ruin of the weak. 3. It is best to maintain this practice, when bequeathed resources come to the council[86] from the goods of the decurions, so that both the weak and the wealthy gain the profit of a very similar provision. 4. If any governor (iudex), auditor (numerarius), or decurion thinks this ordinance is to be mutilated, he will be subject to the threats that Your office has decided.

Given August 26, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Varanes (410).

[2][87] Emperors Theodosius and Valentinian Augusti to Celer, Proconsul of Africa. It should not be permitted for a receipt once issued for payment for public services (munera) to be erased by another governor (refricari, i.e., so that the person involved be called upon to perform more service or to make a further payment). And for this reason Your Visibility (spectabilitas tua), following the rule of the most beneficial and just order, will prohibit those who, it has become clear, rejoice when they have received the good fortune of a receipt, henceforth to be bound to an investigation of a completed public service.

Given April 28, at Ravenna, in the post-consulate of the viri clarissimi Felix and Taurus (429).

[3] Emperor Marcian Augustus to Constantine, Praetorian Prefect. Whoever from among the provincials and taxpayers, after the lapse in the future of however many years, when any proof is requested from him of a tax payment, has produced receipts and documents for three consecutive years, shall not be compelled to show receipts for earlier times, nor may he be pressed for the provision of a tax payment for a past period, unless by chance a decurion, any subordinate official, a supply officer (optio), a bookkeeper (actuarius), or any exactor of a public debt or enforcer of landowners or taxpayers has a written promise (cautio), or it is apparent from a manifest entry in the records that what he demands is owed to him (the official).

Given July 18, in the consulship of Varanes and John (456).

[4][88] Anyone who does not include in the receipts the number of iuga (the units of land used for tax assessments) is fined 20 pounds of gold.

[86] C.Th. 12.1.173.3 has a somewhat different version: "It is best to maintain this practice for those to whom bequeathed wealth comes from the property of the decurions, so that they themselves gain the profit of a very similar provision."
[87] = C.Th. 12.1.185; combine with C. 11.59.16, and possibly C.Th. 11.1.34, 11.30.68 (both dated to February 25, which Seeck accepts).
[88] This is restored from Nov. Theod. 17.13.

[5] Imp. Iustinianus A. Menae pp. Securitatibus, quae publicarum functionum gratia sive in solidum sive ex parte solutae esse conscribuntur, nullam exceptionem non numeratae pecuniae penitus opponi concedimus.

D. k. Iun. Constantinopoli dn. Iustiniano A. II cons.

XXIII De Canone Largitionalium Titulorum

[1] Imppp. Gratianus Valentinianus et Theodosius AAA. Lolliano. Omnem summam auri vel argenti reliquarumque specierum, quae sacris largitionibus ex more penduntur, statim ut exactio fuerit celebrata, ad thesauros uniuscuiusque provinciae vel ad proximos referri sub obsignatione tabularii ceterorumque, quos sollicitos esse debere praecedentia iussa decreverant, et thesaurorum praepositis consignari praecipimus, ut exinde ad sacrum comitatum integer omnium titulorum numerus dirigatur.

D. XII k. Aug. Merobaude II et Saturnino conss.

[2] Impp. Honorius et Theodosius AA. ad Anthemium pp. pr. Neque sacrarum privatarum vel largitionum palatina officia ex quacumque causa ex quocumque titulo fiscalis debiti, cum ad provinciam mittuntur, possessores per se audeant convenire, sive id ex praeterito reliquum trahatur seu praesentis temporis tributo solvi conveniat: sed rectores provinciarum frequenter adeundo commoneant eorumque officiis incumbant. 1. Quod si rector provinciae imminentem sibi memoratorum declinare molestiam quaerens vel qualibet alia ratione isdem propria auctoritate publicae exactionis permiserit curam, tam ipse quam officium eius vicena auri pondo fisco dependent.

D. VII id. Dec. Constantinopoli Basso et Philippo conss.

[5][89] Emperor JUSTINIAN Augustus to Menas, Praetorian Prefect. We do not allow any defense whatsoever of money not paid (exceptio non numeratae pecuniae) to be opposed for (tax) receipts, which are written to show that money was paid for public charges (publicae functiones), either for the whole amount or in part.[90]

Given June 1, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Our Lord Justinian Augustus, for the second time (528).

Twenty-Third Title The Tax for Categories of the Imperial Finances

[1] Emperors GRATIAN, VALENTINIAN, and THEODOSIUS Augusti to Lollianus. We instruct that every sum of gold or silver and of other commodities that are customarily paid to the Imperial Finances, as soon as their exaction has been performed, be brought to the (imperial) treasuries (thesauri) of each province or to the nearest ones under the signature of a tax official (tabularius) and of the others whom the preceding orders had decreed ought to be concerned with this, and be signed over to the chiefs (praepositi) of the treasuries, so that then the entire number of all the accounts (tituli) may be directed to the Sacred Council (sacer comitatus).

Given July 21, in the consulship of Merobaudes, for the second time, and Saturninus (383).

[2][91] Emperors HONORIUS and THEODOSIUS Augusti to Anthemius, Praetorian Prefect. pr. The palace offices of the Sacred Privy Purse or of the Imperial Finances shall not dare by themselves to sue landowners (possessores) for any cause resulting from any category of debt to the Treasury when they are sent to the provinces, whether the arrears are carried over from a past period or it is agreed that they be paid as tax for the present time; but they should warn the governors by frequently approaching them and should press their offices. 1. But if the provincial governor, seeking to avert imminent trouble from the aforementioned people, or for any other reason, has on his own authority permitted these same ones the responsibility for the exaction of public taxes, both he himself and his office will each pay 20 pounds of gold to the Treasury.

Given December 7, at Constantinople, in the consulship of Bassus and Philippus (408).

[89] = C. 4.30.14.1, with a fuller holding; combine with 1.4.21, 4.2.17, 4.20.18, 4.21.17, possibly 4.30.15, and 5.15.3.

[90] For the exceptio non numeratae pecuniae, see C. 4.30.

[91] = C.Th. 11.7.17.

[3] Impp. Leo et Anthemius AA. Heliodoro comiti sacrarum largitionum. pr. Praecepit nostra serenitas neque veloci cursui neque alii praeter veterem consuetudinem gravamini subiacere chartularios, qui de cohortalibus officiis uniuscuiusque provinciae largitionales titulos retractare constituuntur, cum et idem amplissima praefectura disposuisse perhibeatur, ut his necessitatibus liberati fideliter largitionales titulos valeant retractare. 1. Quod si aliquo tempore nostra iussio temerario ausu ex aliqua parte fuerit violata, tam rector provinciae quam apparitio eius triginta librarum auri condemnatione plectentur. 2. Insuper virum spectabilem Orientis comitem eiusque officium licentiam habere conatus nefarios inhibendi tam moderatorum quam cohortalis officii, cum de hac re admoniti fuerint a palatinis et eandem poenam formidantibus, si non omnibus modis pietatis nostrae decreta congruum mereantur effectum. 3. Illud etiam generali forma sancimus, ut in omnibus provinciis tam nominatio specialium susceptorum largitionalium titulorum quam defensio tractatorum non tantum per viros clarissimos moderatores provinciarum, sed etiam per viros spectabiles proconsules et praefectum Augustalem ac laudabiles vicarios una cum eorum officiis, admonentibus semper nec non imminentibus palatinis procuretur providentibus, ut post nominationem etiam specialium susceptorum largitionalium titulorum nulla minuendae exactionis ad sacrum pertinentis aerarium aut transferendi ad arcarios aut quoslibet alios extraneos titulos rectoribus provinciarum aut eorum officiis, sed etiam curialibus licentia permittatur: quadrimenstruis brevibus per idoneum tractatorem eorundem titulorum super commendandis ratiociniis publicis periculo rectorum provinciarum ad sacratissimam urbem transmittendis. 4. Nam quacumque ex parte, quam iussit nostra tranquillitas, si minus fuerit procuratum, poena superius designata tam ipsi iudices quam eorum officia se noverint esse plectendos.

D. VIII k. Aug. Constantinopoli Anthemio A. II cons.

[4] Idem AA. Heliodoro comiti sacrarum largitionum. Praecipimus, ut, si forte delegatio, quae ab amplissima praefectura in diversas provincias ex more quotannis emittitur, minus contineat omnes largitionales titulos aut quo modo exactio eorum debet procedere, nihilo minus competentem a viris spectabilibus tam proconsulibus quam vicariis et viro spectabili comite Orientis et praefecto Augustali nec

